"The Crock of Gold" is a story of two philosophers who live in a forest. They become husbands at the outset. One of them and his wife come to an early and interesting death; the other and his family live fascinatingly through to the end of the book. Subterranean elves, who make crocks of gold with pieces clipped from coins belonging to the inhabitants of the country, kidnap the philosopher's children. Somebody's young and beautiful daughter takes a walk and falls into the keeping of Pan. He talks life to her. The philosopher also wanders into the realm of this sylvan god in search of another god, Angus Og. This is the architecture of the story.

The irresistible charm of the book is that enrapturing beauty which life at the highest poetic pitch gives to the children of the earth. Philosophy, humor, satire, idealism, fantasy and allegory make "The Crock of Gold" assay superfine—the purest literary metal that has ever been produced in the Emerald isle. We could not conventionally recommend it to others—we imperatively enjoin its reading upon all who worship beauty and love life. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.

Various Religious Books

The Very Elect: Sermons and Addresses, by President Matthew Henry Buckham of the University of Vermont. It would probably shock many New England people to realize how little President Buckham was known throughout the country. This volume will be, therefore, peculiarly valuable as revealing a character of rare beauty, and a history of exceptional influence. Nearly forty years of presidency saw the University of Vermont lifted from a third rate institution to a university of first rank. It is characteristic that the only building which was not changed or rebuilt during his administration was the president's house, in which he himself lived. President Buckham was never a minister, but twice received the divinity degree because of his Christian scholarship. The book takes its title from one of his baccalaureate addresses, with which he welcomed a new class into the university. He reminded his audience that they were chosen out of a great host, that college and university men are the very elect. This is a book for ministers and educators and all thoughtful readers. Those who produced it after President Buckham's death deserve our gratitude. [Pilgrim Press. Boston. $2 net.

Why Does Not God Intervene? and Other Questions, by Frank Ballard. Dr. Ballard, who has a long list of apologetic writings to his credit, in this latest work faces candidly a number of the most perplexing questions of the Christian faith. Most of them are old questions which have been so often and so ably discussed that it would seem there can be nothing more to say. The merit of this book lies not in its originality, for its author has drawn freely from other sources, but in the clearness and directness of its presentation. There is abundant evidence of careful and fair-minded study of the problems which he seeks to elucidate, and he succeeds in making a satisfactory and intelligible presentation of each within a necessarily restricted compass. Among the questions discussed are the mystery of pain, the modern standing of the Bible, the attitude of the churches toward a modern appreciation of the Bible, the hereafter and immortality, the worth of the Christian churches to the modern world and the revival most needed in Christendom. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.50 net.

The Riverdale Hymn Book, edited by Ira Seymour Dodd and Lindsay B. Longacre. In the storied Hudson river region not far above New York lies the charming village of Riverdale. The little Presbyterian church there brings together only a comparatively small group of earnest worshipers, for the handsome estates of the neighborhood are spacious and the population is scattered; but that group can command what it wishes, so far as money has power. Contrary to what may be thought the general rule, this "wealthy" church, for one, is decidedly favorable to congregational singing, and since none of the hymnals extant seemed exactly to fit its needs the pastor was authorized to proceed, in conjunction with Mr. Longacre, to provide a special publication. The result has been the production of what appears to be a most admirable book, not only for the little congregation at Riverdale, but for congregations anywhere which desire to improve the power and quality of an important part of worship. The selection of 450 hymns covers well the wide range of songs that express Christian thought and emotion, and the tunes will be found possible for any average group of persons. The typography is distinct, both as to music and letter press, and the weight of the book is less than that of most standard hymnals. Effective criticism of a songbook is a wellnigh impossible task, since judgments are specially subject to individual prejudices and the only true test lies with the congregation itself. But it may certainly be said that "The Riverdale Hymn Book" deserves to be carefully considered when a choice is to be made. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1.25 net.

Miscellaneous

The English Scene in the Eighteenth Century, by E. S. Roscoe. It is a very interesting picture Mr. Roscoe gives us of life in England during the eighteenth century. The first half of the book is devoted to three cities—London, "the capital"; Bath, "the city of pleasure," and Liverpool, "the seaport." The latter half is devoted to conspicuous groups of the nobility, the middle class, the industrial class, the country clergy, the peasant, etc. The volume is, of course, entirely retrospective, and the reader is taken quite out of the hurly-burly of the present and into the quiet, reminiscent atmosphere of the past. He meets many old-time friends whom he has known and loved in other books—Goldsmith, Fielding, Johnson, Garrick, Fanny Burney and others. There are numerous illustrations, mostly of people and places with whose names we have long been familiar. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

The Home University Library of Modern Knowledge, edited by Herbert Fisher, Gilbert Murray, J. Arthur Thompson and William T. Brewster, adds to its increasing number of volumes the following: The Making of the New Testament, by Benjamin W. Bacon, is a concise and comprehensive treatise on New Testament problems, characterized by the brilliant critical work which always distinguishes Dr. Bacon. Ethics, by G. E. Moore, is an attempt to cover in one small volume the whole subject of ethics. Mr. Moore handles his difficult task with a considerable measure of success, giving special emphasis to the questions of utilitarianism, the objectivity of moral judgments and free will. Making of the Earth, by J. W. Gregory, presents briefly the latest and best accredited results on the physiography of the earth in such simple terms that even the imperfectly educated layman may read with interest. Missions, by Louise Creighton, not only covers the mission field and gives a clear account of the rise and development of Christian missions, but also furnishes some illumining glimpses into the movement that lend vitality and interest to world evangelism. [Henry Holt and Company, New York. Each 50 cents.

The Family: An Historical and Social Study, by Charles Franklin Thwing and Carrie F. Butler Thwing. The publication, after more than a quarter of a century, of a revised and enlarged edition of President Thwing's standard work is a real service to students of social science. The authors have made use of the latest results of sociological study and research as they bear upon the family. Among the newer things considered are eugenics and the family under a socialized society. [Lothrop, Lee and Shepard Company, Boston. $1.60 net.

Books Received

Prompt Aid to the Injured, including a chapter on hygiene and disinfection, by Alvah H. Doty. New revised edition. D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.50 net.

The Golden Key Book, by E. H. Sneath, George Hodges and E. L. Stevens. Macmillan Company, New York. 55 cents net.

Car Troubles: Their Symptoms and Their Cure, by Harold Whiting Slauson. Harper and Brothers, New York. 25 cents net.

Harper's Household Handbook: A Guide to Easy Ways of Doing Woman's Work. Harper and Brothers, New York. $1 net.

Door-Step Evangelism, by W. F. Newton. American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia. 15 cents net.

The Voice of a Child, by Sophie Bronson Titterington. American Tract Society, New York. 35 cents net.

How to Play Baseball, by the greatest baseball players. Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York. $1 net.

True Wealth; or, What Is He Worth? by J. Sherman Wallace. Griffith and Rowland Press, Philadelphia.

A Catechism of Life, by Alice Mary Buckton. E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. 50 cents net.

The Tudor Shakespeare. New volume: Julius Cæsar. Macmillan Company, New York. 35 cents net.

The Heart of Prayer, by Charles W. McCormick. Eaton and Mains, New York. 25 cents net.

King-Errant, by Flora Annie Steel. Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. $1.30.

Pancho McClish, by Herbert Coolidge. George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.25.

Worcester Polytechnic Institute, 1912-1913. Published by the Institute, Worcester, Mass.

The Care of the Body, by R. S. Woodworth. Macmillan Company, New York. $1.50 net.

The Gateway of Life, by David James Burrell. American Tract Society, New York.

Life Here and Hereafter, by J. A. Houser. Published by the author. Paper.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

April 13, 1913—Jacob at Bethel

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 28:10-22. Golden Text, Genesis 28:15: I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest.

Jacob was the son of his mother. Her characteristics good and bad found their succession in him. For this reason she loved him with peculiar tenderness. The one ambition of her life was to advance his interests, but in the matter of the birthright she had gone too far. Isaac was easily pacified, but Esau had reached the limit of all endurance. In those days blood answered to blood and Jacob's life was in danger. The patriarch was apparently approaching his end and when the seven days of mourning had passed there would be a terrible reckoning in the home at Beer-sheba. Sin entails its own punishment. The mother's resources were put to the test. Should Esau slay Jacob, according to the law of the times someone must slay him, and thus Rebekah would be deprived of both sons in a single day.

There was but one door of escape. Jacob must flee the country and remain in exile while the fire of his brother's wrath burned itself out. The mother knew Esau. He was impulsive, and impulse is incapable of long continued hate. Within a few days he would forget that which had been done to him.

Jacob Must Find Wife from Among Daughters of Laban

Esau, it will be remembered, had married two wives, both of whom were of the families of Canaan. This was a grief of mind to both Isaac and Rebekah. That the line of promise lay through his father's house had been burned into Isaac's very soul. Isaac was receptive. Rebekah approached him on the possibility not of Jacob's death, but of his life. "I am weary of my life because of the daughters of Heth; if Jacob take a wife of the daughters of Heth . . . what good shall my life do me?" That plea went straight to the patriarch's heart. It awoke the sleeping energies within him like an oracle from God. The recollection of Eliezer came back and brought the realization that a similar mission lay before Jacob. He, too, must go to Haran and there find a wife from among the daughters of Laban, even as Abraham's steward had done for him. Esau now for the first time appears to have realized his mistake. He, too, would form an alliance with his father's house, so he married a daughter of Ishmael as an offset to Jacob's prospects. But as usual he was too late; besides, the Egyptian strain in her blood would vitiate any claim to the promise. There are a few things in life that admit of no compromise. This was one.

The Stream of Jacob's Life Turns Into a New Channel

The stream of Jacob's life from now on runs in a very different channel from what it did. He is the same man, but his face is turned toward Haran. Life is largely made up of tendencies. Genuine reform is never spasmodic; it is a steady growth. Jacob is not going to reach Haran in a day, but each sunset will find him farther on his way. There is so much in being in the way of things. Jacob can never reach Bethel by remaining in Beer-sheba. He must go out from his father's house and meet the angels by the wayside. When a young man leaves home he needs God as never before. The latent tendencies of his nature awake to their activities, and he is compelled to act for himself.

It is the latent man that God sees and judges. The external Jacob had little to commend him. He was selfish and dishonest. Sometimes we wonder why God selected him for a position among the great; but it was the Jacob of Bethel, not the Jacob of Beer-sheba, that he honored. Faults are sometimes virtues misdirected. Jacob was a reacher. He reached and grasped his brother by the heel. He reached again and drew to himself the blessing that belonged to another, and then he reached once more and touched God.

In our extreme moments we best reveal ourselves. It was night when God appeared to Jacob. Jacob's experience was that which comes to everyone on his first absence from home. There was a sense of loneliness that words fail to express. The memory of it seems to have lingered in after years as Jacob recalled that with a shepherd's staff alone he had crossed the river in his flight from Esau. On the second or third day, tired and worn, he threw himself upon the earth and with a stone for a pillow sought the relief that comes from sleep. The desolate hills of Bethel were all about him, and nothing could have seemed familiar save the stars above. If it be that dreams are the interpreters of our waking thoughts one can readily imagine what it was that last occupied his soul. The rocky ledges assumed the form of stairs, on which he saw ascending and descending the angels of God. This might have been simply a dream, a visionary picture formed to vanish at the coming of day. But no mere picture could assure the sleeper what he wanted most to know—if God would be with him, or whether his sins had separated him from God forever. The natural Jacob was asleep, but the spiritual Jacob was awake, and to him God appeared above the crest of those rugged hills. This was no dream, but the very God of Abraham and Isaac, who had come to assure the sleeper that the promises to the fathers were to be fulfilled in him.

A Vision of God Always Has Transforming Effect on Character

No one who has ever seen God, whether in dreams or by day, remains as he was. God is truth, and to come in contact with a great truth has its transforming effect on character.

Jacob awoke a different man from the one who had set out on his journey but two days before. The world about him pulsated with a new life. The stony hills of Bethel had been consecrated by the presence of the Almighty. Nothing is common when it is properly understood. The stone on which Jacob rested his head he would not forget. By prayer and oil it was consecrated into a monument of gratitude. The whole place was transformed. It ceased to be Luz, or "almond"; it became Bethel, or "house of God."

Jacob is still far from perfect. No one ever completed his sanctification in a single night. His vows and covenants were still colored by the commercial spirit of his former self; but he faced a different future. The human within him began to die, while the spiritual awoke to an existence not possible before.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—We need in such a world as this a faith that can meet disaster with courage, exile with fortitude. The good man is not necessarily the man who has "arrived" but the man whose face is turned in the right direction. The wilderness may give us visions of heaven, but the vision should be followed by a vow.

Even in the "unchanging East" quick reversals of fortune are not unknown. Abraham, rich in cattle, servants and every form of Oriental wealth, came to Palestine a sheik among sheiks; but the lesson for today opens with the picture of Abraham's grandson a fugitive, friendless, penniless, seeking protection and work among those distant kinsmen from whom Abraham had long ago separated himself.

This world is a poor world for any man who has not the support of a fine creed. Such a faith Jacob possessed. He believed that he should return (vs. 20-22). He believed that there was a future for himself and his posterity, and for this land which seemed so inhospitable now. Adverse fortune cannot keep the child of God forever depressed. What rekindled in Jacob's heart his old-time cheerfulness was the reawakening of his sense of the divine companionship. No raven brought him a crust. No impoverished widow divided with him her last handful of meal. But he had had a vision of God, and his soul had drunk anew of the fountains of immortal youth. With all his faults he possessed redeeming graces, and his faith in the purpose of God to bring in a new era of divine life among men was strong.

Verse 10—It was a long, long journey from Beer-sheba, on the extreme southern border of Palestine, to Haran, on the upper waters of the Euphrates; but it was toward the land of his kinsmen that Jacob turned his face. Whatever might happen—and much might befall him on a trip that even to this day needs a guard and a dragoman and governmental protection—Jacob would not do as Esau did, ally himself with the heathen tribes about his home and cloud his ancestral faith with pagan superstition.

Verse 11—Jacob had man enough in him to "make the best of a bad job." Many an old soldier today remembers with a thrill of pleasure his first night's sleep under the open sky following a hard day's march. Jacob needed a little toughening and he got it. He was man enough to take his medicine without whimpering. Had he been less a man he would have been less a saint.

Verse 12—Jacob had doubtless climbed the rocky ridge which was to constitute his couch, by one of those rude ascents of steps which are common to the country. In his dream the ascent did not stop where he lay but went on up to heights where its invisible top was lost in heavenly light. Nor was this a mere possibility offered him. It showed itself as a highway between earthly needs and heaven's resources.

Jacob, Distrustful of Own Powers, Heartened by Vision of God

Verse 13—Best of all, there was accorded him a vision of the God of his fathers talking with him as he had talked with those greater ones whom Jacob revered. There doubtless had been days when he, conscious of his own humbler traits, had wished himself a powerful personality such as Abraham was, or a man of imposing wealth, as his father had once been. Perhaps some such thoughts had lain at the bottom of the eagerness with which he seized the opportunity to put his claim to the birthright beyond dispute. He knew that he lacked Esau's aggressiveness. But now he found God talking to him as familiarly as with his great forbears, and it heartened him. To him, so oft distrustful of his own powers, Jehovah promised all that he had promised to Abraham and to Isaac. And that was surely enough!

Verse 14—Not only should his personal and direct descendants be a vast host, but they should be the source of benediction to nations not of their own blood. So those promises which were early given (ch. 17:1-8) were renewed, and thus we are once more reminded how the Old Testament hope always contained within itself the vital principle of the New. Professor Steiner tells us that if he were dropped down in any town or village of Poland or Galicia, Dalmatia or Albania, he could tell by walking through it whether there was any man in it who had ever lived in America. The spirit of freedom, like the yeast germ, multiplies and diffuses itself. So Judaism affected surrounding nations, so Christianity affects today the Balkan states, Persia, China, Korea.

Jacob Makes a Vow That He May Not Forget the Vision

Verse 16—Jacob did not try to shake off the impression made by his dream. He had plenty of other things to engage his attention, that is true. He was still far from the land he sought and not yet out of reach of Esau's pursuit. The dream brought with it no material sustenance. It had not removed one of the enemies through whose hostile territory he was yet to pass. But Bethel was the gate of heaven. If the dream had not banished his foes it had banished his fears.

Verse 18—Immediately he sanctified the place by holy rites. What disciple is there who does not cherish some spot as "holy ground" because there he had an early glimpse of God's face and lived a new life ever after? The old Romans used to build an altar wherever anything out of the ordinary routine of nature occurred. They erected a temple where the lightning struck or snow fell in summer. But Jacob vowed that a house of prayer should be built in his prosperous future on the spot where he heard God's voice and found new courage and went on in new strength. Happy the man who can thus raise Bethels out of stony griefs and remember lonely nights not by his fears but by his celestial visions.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning April 6, 1913

TOPIC—The sower. Mark 4:3-8.

The Master was sitting in the prow of the boat which was drawn up on the beach. The multitude was gathered along the curving shore and listening to his teaching. The husbandman was walking to and fro across the field on the upward sloping plain of Gennesaret and, as he walked, he sowed his seed broadcast. The multitude and the disciples and Jesus had the sower in full view; and the scene, the soil and the seed became woven into his discourse.

—

Why was there so much preaching and so little result? The disciples were ready to ask this question; and the preacher was Jesus. Surely, after all that he had said, it must now be time to see more visible effects in the establishment of the kingdom. Could it be possible that the Master's preaching was at fault? That it was not intellectual enough? Or not practical enough? Or not attractive enough? None of these answers seemed to fit. The theological opponents of Jesus could not meet the might of his powers of reasoning. And the unjust and dishonest traffickers could not endure his lash.

—

Jesus himself supplies the answer to the question. When you consider the business of seed time and harvest, you take account not only of the quality of the seed but also of the condition of the soil. Preaching the kingdom is of the nature of seed-sowing. The seed may be of the very best quality; but if the soil is not right the harvest will not be considerable.

—

There are four kinds of soil, three of which are defective, and one good.

—

There is the highway which runs across the fields, and though generally unmarked by fences, remains the same through ages. An Oriental path is practically indestructible. It is pressed by the commerce of the world through untold generations, and any seed falling upon its surface lies there, is trodden under foot of men and is picked up by the birds.

—

Like to this soil are the hard-hearted hearers. They are impervious to the word; it never penetrates them. It falls upon them, and then, because it has no affinity whatever with their life and thought, it remains unfertilized upon the surface until Satan snatches it away. We may give men truths which should profoundly stir them and move them to action, but they produce no result of any kind because these men have never taken them in.

—

But Satan fears the truth sown even on impervious hearts; because, while it may sometimes lie inoperative on the surface for a time, later the sun and the rain, the experience of earth's joys and sorrows, may open a tissue in the soul, and the seed which seemed dead may suddenly germinate and blossom into life. So Satan is at hand to pick up this seed, that it may not lie too long.

—

There is the stony ground. This does not mean ground thickly strewn with loose stones, for ground of this kind is often very productive. But it means ground that has a continuous substratum of stone lying but a little beneath the surface. This kind of soil is characteristic of Palestine, which has one great backbone of mountainous rock running the entire length of the country, north and south. In some places the ledges of stone crop out and are seen in their grey and yellow nakedness. In other places they hold little pockets of soil in their shallow hollows. As the sower takes his way across the field some seed falls into one of these little basins, where the soil, though good enough as far as it goes, is shallow. As the roots cannot strike deeply downwards, the stock grows at once toward the surface. But the plant without deep root is without strength. And the sun, which would have caused the stock of a more propitiously sown seed to strike its roots deeper into the earth and draw its nourishment from the hidden sources of the subsoil, now only burns and withers this plant with the short roots.

This sort of soil represents the shallow hearer of Jesus. He receives the word quickly and, as he is not occupied with the necessity of understanding it and of bringing it into relations with all the details of life and duty, he exclaims at once and enthusiastically over its virtue. He receives it with joy, because at the first view he sees only the comfort of the word for his injured feelings, only the freedom of the word for his hampered spirit. Then he fails in the first hour of temptation, and, in consequence of his personal failure, he turns against the word itself. Every Christian worker has seen men converted amid the contagious excitement of a revival who had endured but a little time, and as soon as they had had experience of the necessity of denying their appetites, making sacrifices and suffering ridicule for the sake of their profession, have fallen away and gone back into the old life of indifference and sin.

—

The third kind of soil is that in which thorns are growing with the wheat. This is a soil of natural fertility; it is so fertile that it cannot be idle. If not occupied by wheat, it must grow weeds. It needs only that the weeds should be cleared out of it, that it may become the most productive of all the estate. But while the weeds are in possession, their rank growth will stunt and strangle every promise of a bountiful harvest.

In this modern American life of ours there are multitudes of men whose lives could bear a rich harvest from the seed of the word, but they are already occupied with weeds. They are naturally rich of spirit and strong of soul; but they are consuming their full strength in the production of the things that perish. "The cares of this world" are the poor man's form of the problem of living, "the deceitfulness of riches" are the rich man's form. But on highland or lowland, among rich men or poor men, the thronging of the things of the material world chokes the good fruits of the increase of the spirit.

—

The fourth kind of soil is good and well prepared for the seed. It has been broken by the plowshare, and is deep and rich and free from weeds. It is all good, though some is better than the rest. There is a threefold division in excellence. Some yields thirtyfold, some sixtyfold, some an hundredfold. "The soil yielding an hundredfold" was a Jewish expression for the maximum of productivity.

—

And thus when the good word falls upon the souls of men prepared for its reception, its full efficiency is realized. The eager heart of man is in correspondence with the living word of God. His word satisfies our deepest longings and evokes our largest powers.

—

The solemn lesson to be learned from this parable is summed up by St. Luke in a single sentence: "Take heed therefore how ye hear; for whosoever hath, to him shall be given; and whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

April 13, 1913

THE FAITH THAT MAKES POWER

TOPIC—"I can do all things." Philippians 4:4-13.

"Shun ambition!" cries the poet. But that depends altogether on the ambition. The greatest boon that could come to a few million persons would be an attack of ambition. They do not achieve because they do not aspire. They sorely need to be aroused from their self-complacency in living little lives for little ends. Wherever the New Testament has had free course in the minds of people it has incited them to nobler character and nobler activity. Beyond question, Christianity has been the greatest spur ever applied to mortal minds. This is the explanation of the obvious fact that Christians rule the world today. The civilization that is attuned to the keynote of the apostle Paul's magnificent declaration, "I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me," is headed straight for the kingdom of heaven.

—

A Christian should ever be content with his lot, but never satisfied with himself.

—

Not all the actions of dynamite are outrages. The Greek original of that word "dynamite" is a favorite with New Testament writers. Commonly it is translated "power." The gospel is dynamite. It has blown over most of the institutions of heathendom. Where is slavery today? Blown up by the gospel. Where are the class lines of glorious Greece and powerful Rome? Blown up by the gospel. Where is the universal illiteracy of mankind? Blown up by the gospel. Where are the oppressions and cruelties toward the toilers, and the subjugation of womankind, which once were general? Blown up by the gospel. And, more constructively, what has made the slave over into the Christian freeman? The power of the gospel. What has liberated minds as well as bodies, so that the world's great literature today is a Christian literature? The power of the gospel. What has written into the statute books of nations the world around new laws of liberty, education and human well being? The power of the gospel. The warrant that the gospel of Christ will accomplish the great tasks which remain for it is the historical evidence of its past accomplishments.

—

There is no task on earth that is beyond the power of one man leagued with God.

The very genius of Christianity had been caught by Carey when he wrote, "Expect great things from God; attempt great things for God." This spirit of high emprise, this daring devotion to difficult deeds, has ample New Testament warrant. It is apostolic. When God finds a man or woman who is willing to venture mighty tasks for the Name's sake, he fills his hands and his life—and continually enlarges the capacity of both.

—

Mottoes sometimes explain careers. One man who had risen from lowliness to a position of really worldwide influence was asked to give, in confidence, the reason. For he had possessed no education, no influential friends, and no special opportunities. The answer, spoken in the frankness of intimate friendship, and not for the public ear, was this: "As a boy, I got hold of the truth, 'I can do all things in him that strengtheneth me.' That became my life motto. Everything I have dared or done has been in vindication of that truth. I have trusted Christ greatly, and have found him greatly true."

—

Strength is one thing, and power is another. The giant of Gath had strength, but David had power.—Moody.

—

We have a supernatural work to do, and we must have supernatural power with which to do it.—A. J. Gordon.

—

So great is the work of the kingdom that only they who are conscious of limitless power imparted from God would dare undertake it. Spiritual service, even in its elemental forms, is far beyond mere human capacity. Unless helped from above, we labor in vain below. "Except Jehovah build the house, they labor in vain that build it."

—

"What man has done man can do." That familiar epigram has spurred many a youth's ambition. It is profoundly true. What Christians have done Christians may do. The power that made Paul also made Whitefield and Wesley and Moody. A Christian may be helped by God to become as great a servant as he dares to be.

—

In the "pidgin English" of the China coast one of the commonest phrases is, "Can do." The master says to the servant, "Can do?" The servant answers, "Can do." A good worker is a "can do" man. He has efficiency. To lift the figure up to a high plane, we say that the faithful disciple of Christ is a "can do" servant.

MISSIONARY WORK

United Church Inevitable in China

The Continent has already referred to the remarkable conference held by Dr. John R. Mott in Canton in his capacity as chairman of the continuation committee of the Edinburgh conference. Three provinces were represented by seventy-five delegates, of which number twenty were Chinese pastors and leaders. Further details of this conference The Continent is very happy to have from Dr. A. A. Fulton of China, who writes:

"The opening address by Dr. Mott was a strong, clear-cut statement of facts that confront the church in this and other non-Christian lands. The opening years of this century see the non-Christian world restless, and the people of these nations are beginning to agitate for larger measures of liberty and for a deliverance from oppressive conditions. Over against this fact stand the unprecedented opportunities afforded to the church in China. This is due to the homogeneity of the people, their accessibility and the willingness on the part of those high in authority to consider conditions by which alone permanent prosperity of the republic can be maintained. Dr. Mott was intense in his belief that the long period of sowing in India and China will speedily bring harvests and that we must rise to the greatness of the responsibilities that meet us in the many tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of cities, towns and villages that lie wide open in these great countries. The object of the continuation committee in holding these meetings is to get at bottom facts as to needs and opportunities, and this can best be done by getting together men and women of long experience, including the ablest Chinese leaders, and by thorough discussion try to reach the very best plans for prosecution of work in all departments. Some incontestable facts came to light.

The first fact brought out by discussion is the desire and purpose of the Christians to have a united national church, supported and propagated by Chinese, wholly independent of any denominational control, but rooted and grounded in the vital truths of Christianity. Discussion also brought to light the fact that with the denominational differences and their separative tendencies the vast mass of the Christians have absolutely no interest whatsoever, and that these distinctions will be ignored as fast as the churches become independent and self-propagating. Not that the Christians do not appreciate the aid given by such sympathy and support, but that a powerful, united church cannot exist in close alliance with bodies so dissimilar in views, and with somewhat divergent tendencies. This is eminently wise, and by sympathetic aid given at this time we shall retain the affection and gratitude of the national church, while reluctance to grant a wider measure of control will aleniate the progressive leaders and greatly weaken our influence in the future.

"One of the most important topics discussed was 'How to Discover and Enlist the Ablest Young Men and Women in the Service of Christian Leadership.' Here is a most vital question. The evangelization of the country depends very largely on the right solution of this problem. The solution of the problem lies in recognition of two incontrovertible facts. The first fact is the inadequacy of salaries paid to preachers as compared with support given to graduates of medical schools and to teachers. Not that young men do not prefer evangelistic work, but the low salaries were insufficient to support their families, and they were forced into government employ to enable them to live. The conference strongly disapproved of such a policy and urged the payment of salaries sufficient to secure the ablest young men and to enable them to meet higher cost of living, as well as to permit them to purchase books and to concentrate their energies to the work of preaching without disturbing or oppressive financial anxieties.

"But adequate salaries alone will not secure and retain for permanent leadership the highest type of leaders. The fact remains that such men demand a share of control in corporate bodies, and while very willing to assume heavy responsibilities, they can do so only on condition that they have some share in management of funds. Strong and progressive men cannot be restricted to any particular locality at the request of the missionary in charge. The Chinese will never contribute largely to churches and institutions over which they have very little or no control."

Instructing Immigrants in Citizenship

Professor Alberto Clot

The American Waldensian Aid Society, in which many Presbyterians are interested, was in its origin concerned only with financing the wonderful home mission work which the dozen Waldensian churches of the Vaudois valleys in northwest Italy promote and man in more than 200 Italian towns and cities. But Rev. Alberto Clot, whom the Waldensians sent a few years ago to reside in America as their fraternal ambassador to the American churches, has been deeply impressed since his coming here, with the problem which the gigantic Italian immigration makes for this country. He has therefore in a very magnanimous spirit induced the Waldensian Aid Society to raise a certain sum for what is in practical effect a home mission work for the United States.

Under the auspices of the aid society Professor Clot has formed an immigrant bureau which proposes to put religious and patriotic American literature into the hands of immigrants sailing from Italian ports to the new world. The bureau has already employed colporteurs at Naples, Palermo and Genoa; and as an unexpected sign of official favor, it has received from the Italian government passes which permit these colporteurs to go freely on the docks and decks of the immigrant steamships as they are preparing to sail. Testaments and portions of the Scriptures are, of course, distributed; but perhaps an even more direct influence is the distribution of a little pamphlet in Italian called "Guide to America," which the society's agents hand out even to those who will not accept Bibles.

This guide contains a high-minded analysis of the free government maintained by America. Constitutional provisions are explained, but special emphasis is put upon the fact that liberty in America does not mean freedom from law. Respect for public authority is charged on the immigrants as their fundamental duty when they arrive at their new homes. Naturalization regulations are given in summary. All of this is supplemented by an explanation of the religious status of the country, showing that church and state are entirely separate. Finally there is given a list of all the Italian Protestant congregations of all denominations in the United States, with an invitation for the immigrant to attach himself to one of them.

Waldensian Colporteur Distributing Guides to America on an Immigrant Dock at Genoa, Italy

To put all this material into the hands of the departing Italian to be carried with him on his sea voyage is strategic. In the long days at sea he is almost certain to read and reread the guide through and through, and also is likely to pay much attention to his Testament. But Professor Clot is not satisfied simply with his influence at the start of the journey. An arrangement has been put into effect for giving counsel and advice to incoming Italian strangers at New York and also to Italians returning home. In the first six months that the bureau was in operation seventy-eight arriving Italians have been directed to Italian Presbyterian churches in this country, and of men and women helped on their return to Italy fifty-nine were identified with American Presbyterianism.

The School for Boys, Teheran, Persia

"One of the features of our school that has been deemed impracticable by most of the other schools in Persia," writes Mrs. S. M. Jordan, "is the fact that we have never paid any attention to race, rank or religion. A Kajar prince is treated as well as the son of the corner grocer, and no better. Since we are working for the whole of Persia, and not for any particular fraction of it, we have always accepted without distinction Moslems, Armenians, Nestorians, Jews and Zoroastrians. That they can be put together in the same school and the same classes without clashing is a never-ending source of surprise to those who have not grasped the fact that the Persian is naturally a liberal-minded man. Not only have they not clashed but the young men of different race and creed have come to know and appreciate each other and have become firm friends. This mixing of the races has been a fine thing for the young men, developing in them a true national spirit in distinction from a racial one. While there is perfect religious liberty, yet our schools are conducted on Christian principles, and Christian ideals and standards are those inculcated."

Detroit Makes Good on China Campaign

The promoters of the China emergency fund feel that the campaign in Detroit was, all things considered, the most satisfactory in results yet held. At the end of the campaign the subscriptions already taken amounted to $20,600, with the canvass still proceeding. In this amount the largest individual gift was one from a Detroit Presbyterian, which provides for the building of an institutional church in Peking. The daughters of the same giver have also provided for a missionary residence. The dinner on Monday evening, March 17, was unusually successful. The capacity of the dining hall, 450 seats, was sold out very early, and many who desired to attend could not find accommodations. The China team as organized for Detroit was unquestionably the strongest body of missionaries ever assembled for campaign purposes in the United States. The roster of the team now includes the names of Hayes, Bible, Williams, Luce, Garrit, Locke and Yerkes.

Board Notes and Announcements

—The secretary of literature led the meeting at Room 48, Chicago, on Good Friday morning with appropriate lessons from Hebrews 10 and John 19. Rev. H. W. Luce and Rev. J. E. Williams of Shantung and Nanking Universities told a little of what Christian education is accomplishing in China, the former illustrating by examples of church unity and the latter by instances of personal holiness. Professor Luce likened the university, which, when its various schools have been brought together in Tsinanfu, the capital of Shantung, with its 65,000,000 people, to a situation such as would exist if one college stood in the center of the United States. Having gone to Asia years ago with no great admiration for the Chinese, he has learned to love and honor them, especially trusting those of Shantung province as people of strong moral fiber. He spoke to the heart, as did also the testimony of a student in Nanking University, read by Mr. Williams, and his description of Pastor Ding, whose life reminds him of Mr. Moody's saying, "It remains to be seen what a man who would commit himself entirely to God could accomplish." The treasurer reported over 5 per cent advance in the year's receipts, exclusive of legacies. Greetings from Peoria Presbyterial Society were brought by the president, Miss Julia H. Johnston.

The Open Hearth

Thinks Mr. Tumulty a Jesuit

In the issue of March 6 there is a short editorial that I greatly regret to see. It is the one in which the editor deplores the anxiety which a great many people feel because President Wilson's secretary is a Roman Catholic educated in a Jesuit college.

My regret is that The Continent seems to be joining in the lullaby that puts to sleep the Protestant American patriot. It is impossible for me to understand how an editor familiar with the policy and history and claims of Rome can be willing to defend the President in his course. Certainly the history of the Jesuits teaches us that it is to be expected that one of their number may serve a public official faithfully and be "nonleakable and influence proof" until the crucial time has come. Then he will serve his real master, the pope of Rome. It is possible that such a time may not come for years, but the public fear is well grounded, for the danger is a real one and always present when a Romanist is put in a confidential position.

Let me suggest that instead of such editorials it would be far more appropriate for The Continent to publish a series of articles exposing the dangers of Romanism, such as the masterful series recently given by Mr. Ellis laying bare the faults of Russellism. Certainly, when it comes to real danger to the church and the state, millennial dawn's vagaries are not to be considered for a moment in comparison with Catholicism. The secular papers of the country are already largely under the control of the Roman hierarchy. Have we not a right to expect the religious press to be awake and active in our defense?

THOMAS F. GALLAHER.

No Presidential Sabbath-Breaking

Doubtlessly you have not forgotten that jab given Mr. Wilson and Mr. Marshall the week following Mr. Wilson's speech delivered on a Saturday night to the business men's organization at Chicago. Well, whether it had any effect or not, I notice that our President and vice-president have become real Presbyterians. I knew the way to reach a Presbyterian was to call him a Sabbath breaker. A good Presbyterian would, I think, rather be called a thief than a Sabbath breaker. Anyway, we Presbyterians can now be proud of their stand on the Sabbath. It looks as if the pendulum was beginning to start Presbyterian way, and that we may yet be able to save our Sabbath.

JAMES P. L. WEEMS.

Masonry and Spiritual Life

My experience and observation are that the sister who made the complaint as to the worldliness of Masonry is right. I expected the replies in defense of the order and they came. My father subscribed for The Interior when it was first established and I read it as a child and consider it a part of my education. In my own home The Continent (and The Interior) has taken precedence over all other periodicals. And I believe it to be a fact of my life's observation that the Masonic order, not as an order but by its individual influence, is against any truly spiritual life.

A. S. K.

Lodges and Churches—A Last Word

A good many things have been said in The Continent in the past few weeks concerning lodges, especially Masonry. I agree with what D. D. says in the issue of March 6. I have been a Mason for some years, but have not been in lodge for five years, except one time. I must say, according to my experience, that a Christian will get but little help from Masonry, although the teaching is all good, but the men who compose the majority of the lodges are a lot of godless men, who care nothing for the church or the religion of Christ. I have been in the ministry for thirty years and have taken into the church over 500 people, and of this number only three were Masons and one of these had quit the lodge many years before he joined the church. The fact is that very many Masons regard the lodge as their church. They say, "Masonry is good enough church for me."

Recently I was called upon to attend the funeral of a Mason of forty-four years' standing. I asked his daughter, who is a very intelligent woman, if her father was a member of any church. She replied by saying, "No, he always believed that Masonry was good enough religion for him." This I have heard over and over again from Masons. I have only one reason why a minister should join the Masons, and that is this—he can tell the truth about the institution and no Mason can say, "You don't know what you are talking about." It is utterly useless for a minister to go into the lodge that he may have influence over members. They may have some influence over him, but he will have but little over the members. That I have learned from experience.

MERCHANT S. RIDDLE.

[Owing to lack of space, we cannot further continue this discussion.—THE CONTINENT.]

First Filipino Foreign Missionary Is Ordained

The first foreign missionary to be sent out from the Philippine islands was recently ordained by Manila Presbytery. He is Rev. Simon Igloria and is a graduate of the Union Bible Seminary of Manila. He has served as an evangelist in his native province of Tayabas, and when an appeal came from the Evangelical Union of Honolulu for young men to work among the Filipinos there he decided to volunteer. He spent six months in the United States during the St. Louis exposition. At the installation Rev. C. N. Magill, moderator of Presbytery, presided. Others who took part were Reverends George William Wright, C. R. Hamilton and Estrella.

Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, who is conducting an evangelistic campaign at Williamsport, Pa., has engaged Fred S. Goodman, Bible secretary international Y. M. C. A., to conduct an eight-day campaign in Bible study in connection with the revival.

Ways of Working

Business Manager for a Church

A pastor's assistant who shall be a layman, preferably an elder who has been engaged in business, is about to be employed by First church, Long Beach, Cal., Dr. O. L. H. Mason pastor. This man will be called business manager of the church and will have charge of the financial details in addition to care of the property, which is valued at $150,000. The church will adopt the budget system for next year and the many details of this plan of finances will be in the hands of this officer. The church has 1,100 members, with an expenditure of nearly $40,000 a year. This is perhaps the first time that a Presbyterian church has employed a business manager.

Making Presbytery Interesting

Rochester Presbytery for the meeting this spring invited someone from each congregation to tell on the floor of the meeting what is the real spiritual condition of the church. Three minutes will be given for a response from each church during roll call for this sort of report. Rev. J. L. Jewell of Caledonia, New York, is given credit for originating this plan. Notice of what is required was issued with the statistical blanks.

Hints on Church Advertising

—Next time you print a card of invitation to church services have it imitate a railway pass, good for the month to all services in your church. Men will take them more readily and retain them longer than a stereotyped invitation.

—Some pastors say that the usual picture of a church with no people in sight typifies a deserted church. They insist on having the steps filled with people, showing that the building is intended for use.

What We Desire Is a Rest

In answer to a letter sent by the general secretary of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation, in which there was no request for money, but an appeal for a prayerful interest in the welfare of the aged and disabled servants of the church, a prominent woman in an eastern church sent back the letter, writing upon its margin the following illuminating answer:

"We have use for all the money we can get and more too. What we desire is a REST."

This woman surely needs a rest, but Ministerial Relief and Sustentation was not chartered to relieve her sort of disability. "What we desire is a rest." Do not the aged ministers, and the widows of deceased ministers, deserve a rest, too? Have they not earned their right to the rest that you want so earnestly for yourself, Presbyterian woman? They also need all the money they have and more, too, and what they want now is rest.

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation is grateful to the woman who wrote the letter about rest.

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation will also be grateful to those who will help to provide rest for those who at the end of the day's toil are waiting for release.

Do you want to give some of the heroes and heroines of the church their fully earned rest?

Consult your pastor or address,

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building :: :: Philadelphia, Pa.

Thinks Mormon Growth Exaggerated

When opposition to any evil is carried beyond a certain point it is called persecution. Religious persecution of any sect more generally helps than hinders its propagation. Condemning Mormonism without emulating its zeal is not striking very heavy blows at the enemy. Exaggerated and untruthful statements as to the growth and power of the Mormon Church are too common. Statistical statements in some cases are so far from the truth that they ought to be contradicted publicly. For example, take some figures in a book recently published under the title of "Mormonism, the Islam of America," indorsed and recommended for missionary study classes. I quote from pages 82-83: "So thoroughly have they colonized the states from the Rocky mountains west, that The Cosmopolitan, April, 1911, gives the Mormon population of these states as follows: California 40,000, Washington 61,000, Colorado 83,000, Oregon 58,000, Montana 87,000, Utah 212,000, New Mexico 24,000, Idaho 81,000, Arizona 39,000, Wyoming 46,000, Nevada 22,000.

"These figures [the author says] may be large from the religious point of view but they are perhaps not too large from the political point of view; for thousands who have given up Mormonism as a personal system of salvation are Mormons, nevertheless, when it comes to politics. The government report on religious bodies published in 1909 gives the information that 87 per cent of all the members of religious organizations (not population) in Utah are members of the Mormon Church; in Idaho 43 per cent, in Arizona 13 per cent, in Nevada 7 per cent, with smaller percentage in the rest of these states."

Now compare the above with the United States religious report of 1906, which is the latest published in detail:

COMPARATIVE STATEMENTS OF MORMON POPULATION

	According to "Islam of America"	U. S. Census Total	Per Cent
California	40,000	2,834	0.5
Washington	61,000	461	0.2
Colorado	83,000	2,755	1.3
Oregon	58,000	1,187	1.5
Montana	87,000	510	0.5
Utah	212,000	151,525	87.7
Mexico	24,000	738	0.5
Idaho	81,000	32,425	43.5
Arizona	39,000	6,175	1.3
Wyoming	46,000	5,211	21.8
Nevada	22,000	1,105	7.4

The reader can draw his own conclusions, but the United States census bureau ought to be as good authority as The Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Going back to The Cosmopolitan of April, 1911, the reader will there find an article by Alfred Henry Lewis, who says: "As balance of power it controls Nevada, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Arizona and New Mexico. Aside from these it is of convincing political weight in both Oregon and Washington."

How the Mormons could be a controlling factor in some of the above mentioned states is a mystery, especially where they represent not more than one in 200 of the religious population, as in Montana, for example. It is my mission to travel over the greater part of Montana, and I ought to know something of the religious conditions. I do not hesitate to assert that Mormonism in this state has made little or no progress, although for more than twenty-five years Mormon missionaries have been working here. Mormonism either politically or religiously is not a factor to be reckoned with, so little is its influence. Mr. Lewis, who wrote the article from which the above statistics were quoted, cites as his authority a nameless man, who claims to have lived in Utah, who he says is as well able as any other to give "a guess" at Mormon strength.

In spite of all that has been said of the wonderful progress of the Mormon Church its gains have been very slow in any of the states except Utah. We would not underestimate the evil influence of the Mormon Church, but to do this it is not necessary to overestimate its strength and power. According to the religious census reports of 1912 the total number of Mormons in the United States is only 350,000. The reorganized church has 50,650, making a total in both branches of 400,650. Subtract from this number the membership in Utah alone and it can be readily seen that the growth of the Mormon Church is not remarkable, and certainly not alarming in any of the states except Utah and Idaho. Perhaps no church has been so zealous in religious propaganda, and certainly none has put forth such missionary efforts and employed so many missionaries with so little success and such meager results.

Its largest success has been not in converting Americans but in missionary work in foreign lands and colonizing converts on American soil. The Mormon Church represents a money and political power not to be ignored, yet not a dominant power in opposition to the propagation of the Christian religion. Its own inconsistencies reveal its weakness. Its manifest hypocrisy condemns it. Its political attitude is unpatriotic. It has no commanding appeal to intelligent citizenship. If Christian people of all denominations emulate Mormon enthusiasm, we shall have no fear of the final results. W. N. SLOAN.

Anti-Mormon Petitions

Forms Suggested to Be Signed and Forwarded to Washington in Fight on Political Mormonism.

The petition forms prepared by The Chicago Journal to initiate a new anti-Mormon movement, as alluded to in the editorial columns of this week's issue of The Continent, are as follows:

"TO THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES:

"Whereas, the Mormon Church procured from the United States a return of its formerly escheated property upon its covenant to use said property solely in accordance with law and with the purpose of Congress in granting said return; and

"Whereas, the Mormon Church continues to teach and practice polygamy in violation of law and its own pledge; and

"Whereas, the Mormon Church is utilizing its returned property in the establishment and maintenance of commercial monopolies in defiance of the antitrust statutes of the United States;

"Now, therefore, be it resolved, That we, as citizens of the United States, do respectfully urge upon the department of justice a prompt investigation of the commercial investments, alliances and monopolies of the Mormon Church hierarchy; and a rigorous prosecution of its property trusteeship, as a combination in restraint of trade."

"TO THE POSTMASTER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES:

"Whereas, the official book of commandments to the Mormon Church contains a pretended revelation from God authorizing and requiring the practice of polygamy;

"And, whereas, the evidence taken and the report made by the committee on privileges and elections of the United States senate con-

To the woman who bakes, Royal is the greatest of time and labor savers. Makes home baking easy, a pleasure and a profit.

ROYAL Baking Powder

The only Baking Powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar

With minimum trouble and cost biscuit, cake and pastry are made fresh, clean and greatly superior to the ready-made, dry, found-in-the-shop variety.

Tusculum Bulletin No. 7

Tusculum's Financial Statement

You have read Tusculum bulletins 1-6 and know what Tusculum is and is doing.

Tusculum is dependent upon outside sources for its maintenance.

The average student last year was able to pay but $50, while the total cost to the college per student was $150.

Or, in other words, for every dollar that the student is able to pay the college must obtain $2 from some other source.

Tusculum's endowment hitherto has been $35,000.

Invested as it is at 6 per cent, it still leaves about $14,000 to be secured from personal contributions, to avoid a deficit this year.

Tusculum is raising a permanent endowment of $250,000 to give a stable income of $15,000.

$171,250 of this has already been pledged, or is in hand, leaving $78,750 still to be raised.

How much will you contribute toward this?

C. O. GRAY, President,
Greeneville, Tennessee.

(See next week's bulletin.)

clusively shows that the Mormon Church teaches and its priests practice the crime of polygamy; and that the church inculcates disloyalty to the civil government;

"Now, therefore, we as citizens of the United States do respectfully urge upon the postmaster general that he deny all privileges of the mails to the Mormon Church and its responsible authorities, so long as they practice, teach, or encourage crime and treason."

"TO THE PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

"Whereas, the committee on privileges and elections of the United States senate recommended, in its report (senate report 4253, part 1, Fifty-Ninth Congress), that Reed Smoot, apostle of the Mormon Church sitting as senator from Utah, be excluded from the senate on the ground that he was a responsible authority and representative of a church which teaches and practices polygamy and teaches and practices disloyalty to the government of the United States;

"And, whereas, the crimes and treasons of the Mormon kingdom are growing in magnitude and danger, while its apostolic ambassador still sits in the senate in defiance of the committee's report and the clear evidence upon which it is based;

"Now, therefore, we as citizens of the United States do protest against the retention of a seat in the United States senate by Reed Smoot, Mormon apostle; and we respectfully petition the senate to reopen the Smoot case and to act thereupon in accordance with the evidence and the report of the senate committee on privileges and elections."

Churches Observe Civic Sunday

St. Louis Pastors Call Attention to Good Citizenship Before Election—Religious Census Taken in an Afternoon.

ST. LOUIS—The Federation for Good Citizenship asked the churches to observe March 30, two days before the election, as "civic Sunday." About sixty churches complied with the request, and their pastors preached on some phase of civic life. A dozen Presbyterian churches were among the number that observed the day.

A two weeks' series of evangelistic services was begun in Lafayette Park church March 24, the pastor, Rev. W. F. McMillan, preaching every night. The singing has been in charge of Erskine Reed, with a chorus of sixty voices. A chorus of 300 children sang at the Easter evening service.

Colonel James G. Butler of Second church, for whose liberality the churches and educational institutions of this city and the synod have cause to be profoundly grateful, has recovered from a long and rather serious illness from a cancerous growth on his face.

A religious census of this city was taken Tuesday afternoon, March 25, between 2 and 4 o'clock. About 8,000 visitors were enlisted in the enterprise and pastors, priests and rabbis, business men, educators and leading church and society women gave the movement the right of way.

John L. Roemer, D. D., passed the eighth anniversary of his pastorate at Tyler Place church March 15. The offering on Easter Sunday amounted to $1,000, besides pledges for an equal sum for a fund to pay the indebtedness of the church.

Dr. W. H. Black, president of Missouri Valley College, Marshall, was a visitor in the city March 24 on his way to New York to attend a meeting of the College Board.

On the first page of the Easter number of The Markham Church Bulletin a message was given to the church by Rev. Charles L. Stelzle, its first pastor. Rev. George W. King, the present pastor, and Albert Wenzlick, superintendent of the Sabbath school, presented the pupils of the school with a souvenir photogravure of Miss Bethann Faris, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. John T. Faris. Mr. Faris succeeded Mr. Stelzle as pastor of Markham church.

The men's club of First church, Fort Wayne, Ind., has decided to give each man in the Indiana penitentiary a carnation on Mother's Day in May. The chaplain recently told the club of the uplifting influence of flowers given to the prisoners a year ago.

Cut Your Coal Bill ½ to ⅔ THE UNDERFEED DOES IT

What did you pay for coal last winter? Figure it up—then divide the amount by two or even three—that will give the cost for next winter, provided you put in an Underfeed—either Warm Air Furnace or Steam or Hot Water Boiler. And the difference saved will soon pay for the Underfeed. Send for our Free Book and we will convince you, as we have thousands of others.

THE PECK Williamson Underfeed FURNACES BOILERS

Economy and Efficiency both are Underfeed certainties. The Underfeed way of burning coal insures FOUR big savings:

1. Cheaper grades of hard or soft coal—slack, pea or buckwheat sizes—which would smother fire in other heaters, are pumped into the firepot from below, burn perfectly and yield in the Underfeed more clean, even heat than highest priced coal burned in the ordinary way.

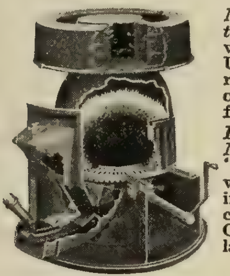
2. Smoke and gases (representing 25% to 40% heat value of coal), which go to waste up chimneys of other heaters, must pass through the fire, are consumed, and make more heat.

3. In the Underfeed the fire glow plays upon heat-responsive clean metal, because heating surfaces are always kept clean; in other heaters the fire glow is upon soot-coated surfaces which retard heat.

4. Instead of being blanketed under fresh coal, live coals are always on top close to the heating surfaces. This explains the even Underfeed temperature, while top feed heaters invariably show less heat after fresh fuel is added.

The Underfeed is the ONE heater built on scientific principles that, through years of constant use, has fulfilled every claim of its makers. Hundreds of fac-simile testimonials bear enthusiastic witness to the saving qualities of the Underfeed. Get the Underfeed Book for further description of this practical money saving heating system.



Mr. A. C. Brefeld, Trenton, Ill., writes: "Last winter, coldest in 25 years, Underfeed took care of 10 rooms for us for $22 worth of slack. Fire never out from Oct. 15 to March 15."

Dr. W. A. Daugherty, Massillon, O., writes: "My Underfeed Boiler—with 11 radiators—is doing all you claim for it. Is certainly a money saver. Cost me only $14 for slack last winter"

Write for FREE Book, giving full information. Heating plans and estimates of cost—free.

The Peck-Williamson Co.
316 West Fifth Street, Cincinnati, O.

Send me UNDERFEED Furnace Book............ Boiler Book............
[Indicate by X Book you desire]

Name..

Address..

Name of my dealer..

M. P. MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS

Builder of the large electric organs in Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, Ohio (2 organs); Russell Sage Memorial Presbyterian Church, Far Rockaway, N.Y., and Bedford Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N.Y.; the three-manual organs in Westminster Presbyterian Church, Detroit, Mich., Presbyterian Church, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and instruments in almost 200 other Presbyterian Churches alone. Specifications and estimates on application. For catalogues and particulars,

Address, M. P. MÖLLER,
HAGERSTOWN, :: MARYLAND

CHURCH MONEY

Is being raised in large amounts by churches which ship to us all their

OLD NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS MAGAZINES, OR WASTE PAPER

This is a splendid plan to raise church money or pay off the church debt; and it is the long-sought "something out of nothing" plan, as the material is usually thrown away.

Write us at once for information and prices.

THE WESTERN PAPER STOCK CO.
1452-60 Indiana Ave., :: CHICAGO

CHAUTAUQUA ORIENTAL TOURS

Egypt and Palestine May 10, $470. Leadership, Dr. Geo. L. Robinson of McCormick Seminary. Other tours to Central Europe, British Isles and Scandinavian countries.

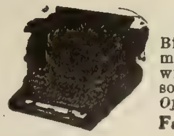
The Chautauqua Tours (Inc.)
1521 Marquette Building :: Chicago, Ill.

HARRY W. JONES
Minneapolis, Church Architect Minnesota.

TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED

Samples at Wholesale

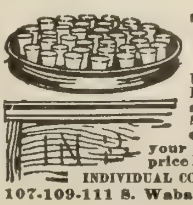
Get in Business for Yourself



Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.

Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.

MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE



The Best Way

The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago

Dr. Weaver Before Joint Body

Author of Charges Against Home Board Confers with Two Committees—Union Seminary Directors Discuss Stand.

NEW YORK—The special committee of the Executive Commission appointed at its last meeting to make inquiry in regard to statements of Dr. Joseph L. Weaver of Rocky Ford, Colo., as to what he terms "extravagance in administration and usurpation of authority" in the Board of Home Missions held a two days' session with the special committee of the Home Board in this city March 27 and 28. Dr. Weaver came East and at the request of the joint committees appeared before them. Dr. W. P. Fulton of Philadelphia presided most of the time. It was voted that no report of the proceedings should be made public at present.

The board of directors of Union Theological Seminary held a special meeting March 28 to hear and act on the letter the board received from the special committee of the General Assembly to restore harmonious relations between the Assembly and the seminary. The letter asks that the seminary submit to the committee to be placed before the Assembly in May at Atlanta a definite statement of its position in regard to the deity of Jesus Christ, the authority of the holy Scriptures, the bodily resurrection and the atonement.

URGE DR. WYLIE FOR MODERATOR

Friends of Dr. David G. Wylie of Scotch church are urging him to let them put his name forward as a candidate for moderator of the Atlanta Assembly. His friends are agitating the matter on the basis of his many years of service to the church as a whole. They point out that he has been frequently a commissioner from New York Presbytery, that he has served on important committees for over a decade, that only recently he succeeded in getting the Board of Church Erection to put $500,000 of the invested Kennedy fund out, making it possible to erect about 200 churches at once; that he introduced the now famous Union Seminary "peace pipe" resolution and has aided vastly in the amicable negotiations. Dr. Wylie has just completed twenty-two years at Scotch church. He has been preaching in New York the twenty-eight years of his ministerial life.

The new Presbyterian church on Upper Washington Heights to be erected by the corporation of West-Park church was organized the evening of March 27 with between seventy-five and 100 charter members. The foundation for the $300,000 edifice is well under way and the corner stone will be laid very shortly. Worship is now held in the church house.

Persistent rumor has it that Dr. Francis L. Patton will shortly resign as president of Princeton Theological Seminary. Rumor furthermore has it that his successor may be Dr. Ethelbert Warfield, president of Lafayette College.

Dr. Joseph N. Hallock, for thirty-seven years editor and proprietor of The Christian Work, died March 24, as elsewhere referred to in The Continent. He was born in 1834 at Franklinville, N. Y., and was a graduate of Yale University and Yale Divinity School.

FLY TO PIECES

The Effect of Coffee on Highly Organized People

"I have been a coffee user for years, and about two years ago got into a very serious condition of dyspepsia and indigestion. It seemed to me I would fly to pieces. I was so nervous that at the least noise I was distressed, and many times could not straighten myself up because of the pain."

Tea is just as injurious, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.

"My physician told me I must not eat any heavy or strong food and ordered a diet, giving me some medicine. I followed directions carefully, but kept on using coffee and did not get any better.

"Last winter my husband, who was away on business, had Postum served to him in the family where he boarded. He liked it so well that when he came home he brought some with him. We began using it and I found it most excellent.

"While I drank it my stomach never bothered me in the least, and I got over my nervous troubles. When the Postum was gone we returned to coffee, then my stomach began to hurt me as before and the nervous conditions came on again.

"That showed me exactly what was the cause of the whole trouble, so I quit drinking coffee altogether and kept on using Postum. The old troubles left again and have never returned."

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

Tells of the Ford Hall Meetings

George W. Coleman of Boston Addresses Philadelphians — More Endowment for Second Church.

PHILADELPHIA—The March meeting of the Presbyterian Social Union was most enjoyable. The exercises following the banquet were of a double character. The address of George W. Coleman, founder and director of the Ford hall Sunday evening meetings in Boston, in which he told the origin of the meetings and growth to present large proportions, held the close attention of the 300 men present. It was felt that here truly was an instance of reaching the masses through wise devices and kindly human treatment. "The meetings are a safety valve for the pent up feelings of the outraged and oppressed," said Mr. Coleman. "They have become as a church to those who will have nothing to do with organized religion or any recognized church." The second part of the union's evening was devoted to a testimonial to Dr. C. A. R. Janvier, in view of his departure later in the year to India to assume the presidency of Allahabad (Ewing) College. In addresses of some length Dr. M. A. Brownson, a close associate of Dr. Janvier in his first pastorate, and Dr. J. R. Davies, a seminary classmate, gave eloquent testimony to his character and work and spoke feelingly of the regret over his departure. Dr. Janvier told how he was influenced in his action by a sense of duty and in answer to much prayer. In a few appropriate words William T. Ellis presented, to be sent to Mrs. Janvier from the union, a beautiful basket of roses. Walter F. Hagar was chosen president for the coming year and H. G. Goodrich, E. J. Cummings, A. Percival Smith and Dr. J. Thorington vice-presidents. Five, who have been waiting for three years, were elected to fill vacancies in the membership of the union and ninety-four were reported still waiting.

At the Easter communion the congregation packed First church, Germantown, Dr. W. B. Jennings pastor. A large number of members were received.

Rev. Alexander MacColl of Second church announced Easter that a member of the congregation had given $25,000 to the church's endowment fund. During the day and the week previous there had been contributed by members $8,000 toward paying off a debt.

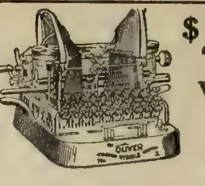
The funeral services of Dr. A. A. Willits at the residence of his son-in-law, William Findlay Brown, assistant district attorney, Chestnut Hill, were conducted by Rev. C. C. Tyler of Trinity church. Dr. Willits was at one time pastor of Arch Street church and very prominent as preacher and lecturer.

Dr. Francis L. Patton of Princeton will address the Presbyterian ministers of the city in Bethlehem church the evening of April 7. This church, of which Dr. Davies is pastor, is thus honored in connection with the fortieth anniversary, which will be observed in a special manner.

Gaston church will give a reception April 3 to the 125 persons who united with the church during the past year. A blue ribbon will be sent to each one to wear on the occasion.

At the annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society in McDowell Memorial church March 28 Miss Helen K. Strain spoke on the Japanese, Rev. William Muir Auld on David Livingstone, Mrs. E. O. Faries on "New China" and Rev. W. C. Isett on "Christianity and the Chinese Republic." The erecting and equipping of a Bible institute in Korea to the memory of Mrs. B. B. Comegys was considered.

W. P. WHITE.



$4 Per Month Buys This Visible Oliver Typewriter
NOTHING DOWN—FREE TRIAL

Less Than Agents' Prices

We put the best typewriter in the world right in your home or office. Shipped on approval. Use it without charge. If you want to keep it, send us $4 a month. You get the same value as though you paid $100 for this No. 3 Visible Oliver machine. Buying from us saves the agency profits others have paid. Our booklet is worth sending for because it tells you how to save a lot of money. It's FREE. Tell us where to send your copy

TYPEWRITERS DISTRIBUTING SYNDICATE
166 F7 N. Michigan Blvd., Chicago (168)

D. L. MOODY AND YOUR WILL

D. L. MOODY, in 1894, founded the Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago, an evangelical agency for the publication, sale and gift of the Gospel in print. It has issued millions of books and tracts—true to the fundamentals of the Bible, besides millions of Scripture portions. It deserves and invites the cordial support of all Christian believers to whom evangelism by means of the printed page (in various languages) strongly appeals.

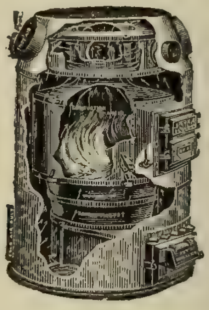
Thoughtful and Provident people, during their active life, take measures by will to make a sensible and intelligent disposition of their means available at death. In view of such provision, those who desire to assist in promoting a spread of the Gospel in print are earnestly invited to consider the purposes and work of this Association.

THE BIBLE INSTITUTE COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION
826 La Salle Avenue
CHICAGO

President: WILLIAM H. HOLDEN, Attorney
Vice-Pres.: HENRY P. CROWELL, Pres. Quaker Oats Co.
Secretary: WILLIAM NORTON
Treas.: A. F. GAYLORD, Business Mgr. Moody Bible Ins't

LEGAL FORM OF BEQUEST

"I hereby give, devise and bequeath unto The Bible Institute Colportage Association of Chicago, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of________________ dollars, to be paid out of any real or personal estate owned by me at my decease."



BOVEE FURNACES

At Manufacturers' Prices

THE BOVEE FURNACE HAS DOUBLE THE HEATING CAPACITY OF OTHER FURNACES FOR AMOUNT OF FUEL CONSUMED. They are made very heavy, of the best of material.

Measure the fire pots and combustion chamber and then note the long travel of heat through the compound radiator before reaching the chimney. Compare these measurements with those of all other first-class furnaces, and you will see WHY the Bovee Furnaces require so little fuel and last longer.

Send plans for our special winter prices. We save you about one-half on the price of a first-class heating plant.

BOVEE FURNACE WORKS
315 8th St. :: Waterloo, Iowa

Pulpit Gowns
and Choir Vestments

Custom Tailoring
for Clergymen. Suits from $20.00
Pulpit Hangings

COX SONS & VINING
72-74 Madison Ave. New York

WE SHIP ON APPROVAL
without a cent deposit, prepay the freight and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL.
IT ONLY COSTS one cent to learn our unheard of prices and marvelous offers on highest grade 1913 model bicycles.

FACTORY PRICES Do not buy a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you write for our large Art Catalog and learn our wonderful proposition on first sample bicycle going to your town.

RIDER AGENTS everywhere are making big money exhibiting and selling our bicycles. We Sell cheaper than any other factory.
TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, repairs and all sundries at half usual prices.
Do Not Wait; write today for our special offer.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. S-304 CHICAGO

STEREOPTICONS
CHRISTIAN EDUCATION - MISSIONS - EVANGELISM
THE CHRISTIAN LANTERN SLIDE AND LECTURE BUREAU, 30 W. LAKE ST. CHICAGO

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

Get this one (3)
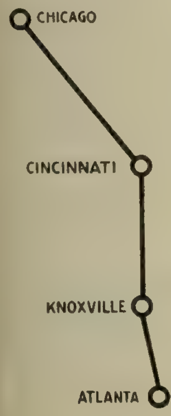
idea

The modern Christian desires a wide horizon, for he is interested in the whole world.

Our readers have caught the significance of the fact that THE CONTINENT has already won a position of authority upon the international aspects of Christianity.

In a new sense THE CONTINENT is a journal of the Kingdom.

The Continent



To Atlanta
FOR THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

A sunshine trip—ideal at this time of year. See the Southland in bloom; blue-carpeted Kentucky; the wonderful Cumberland mountains. Atlanta—the thriving and beautiful southern metropolis.

$25.80
Round Trip from Chicago
May
11, 12, 13, 14, 18 & 19

Proportionately low fares from other points on

PENNSYLVANIA LINES

Tickets good for stopover at Knoxville—going, returning, or both—for a period not more than five days.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY SPECIAL TRAIN
From Chicago Through to Atlanta

Leaves Chicago 9:50 p. m. Tuesday, May 13. Get particulars from nearest agent of Pennsylvania Lines, or address

C. L. KIMBALL
Assistant General Passenger Agent,
Chicago.

The International
The most practical Communion Service made.
Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg, Columbus, O.

Professors, Teachers and Others

Join Archaeological and Geological Exploration Expedition on Horseback under the distinguished Geologist, Professor James Perrin Smith of Stanford University, from the Cliff-Dwellings in S. W. Colorado by Great Natural Bridges in S. E. Utah, thence down Colorado River and through Grand Canyon, Arizona—the expedition covering the region of the World's Greatest Natural Wonders, July 1 to August 20. For particulars and Reservations address R. R. Smith, Cortez, Colorado.

The World's Masterpieces in Granite
Smith Granite Monuments
Send for Booklets.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO. :: Westerly, R. I.

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

Paralyzed Worker Writes Book

Chinese Missionary Delves Into Origin of Language in Spite of Hindrances—Organize for Better Sabbath Observance.

PITTSBURG—This city is to have the honor of producing one of the most elaborate and scientific treatises on the origin of the Chinese language ever written. The author is Dr. F. A. Chalfant, who for twenty-five years was an active missionary in China. Dr. Chalfant is suffering from total paralysis of the limbs and for several months has been confined to the home of his father, Dr. George Chalfant, who has retired from the active ministry. Notwithstanding his sickness and infirmity, Dr. Chalfant is spending four hours a day investigating Chinese inscriptions which have been preserved on tortoise shell and bones of animals, many of which date back to 800 B. C. When completed the book will be published by the British museum or the Carnegie library of Pittsburg, both of which have expressed a desire to undertake the work. Dr. Chalfant was stationed at Weihsien, Shantung, until stricken.

Pittsburg is to have a local branch of the Lord's Day Alliance. Monday, March 24, a committee of ministers representing the leading denominations met in the U. P. Publication building. A committee was appointed to draw up a constitution, which will be acted on next Monday. Each ministerial association was asked to appoint a committee of ministers to cooperate in effecting the organization.

P. W. SNYDER.

Additions to Mission Plant

Two Chicago Centers Have Increased Facilities—First Church Raises Large Fund Quickly—Italian Workers Will Cooperate.

CHICAGO—Presbyterians are better able to care for the home mission problems of this city through the completion of Jefferson Park church and the Bohemian settlement house. The Jefferson Park church was dedicated last Sunday by Dr. G. N. Luccock and Dr. E. P. Hill. It is an institutional church under the joint direction of Oak Park church and the Church Extension Board rebuilt at a cost of $15,000 to meet the needs of the community. It has a large gymnasium. The Bohemian settlement house will probably be occupied next Sunday for the first time. It cost $40,000 and will be a complete home for the Presbyterian activities in the so-called Little Pilsen. This work has been growing rapidly during the six years it has been established.

Nearly all the churches took special offerings for the flood victims last Sunday.

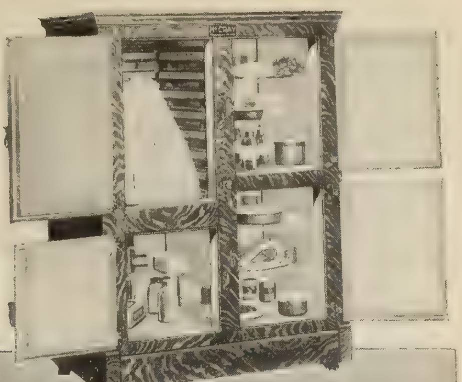
There was a meeting of all the Italian Presbyterian workers Wednesday afternoon, March 26—Rev. and Mrs. P. A. Fant of First Italian church, Rev. and Mrs. Filippo Grilli of Taylor Street mission, Rev. and Mrs. E. DeLuca, Antonio Scorza of the Church of Our Saviour and Misses Ethel MacKenzie and Mary Weir of the training school. It was planned to have special Italian meetings every month of the year to last at least three days, in which all the pastors will take part. The first meetings are to be held this month in Chicago Heights church, the next in May in First church and in June in Taylor Street mission.

Eleventh church has sustained a great loss in the death of an elder, John Burkhardt, who was connected with the church for a quarter of a century and was a charter member.

Vigorous work for a week by men of First church has resulted in pledges for nearly the entire cost of the contemplated extensive improvements. The balance will be raised within a few days. Definite plans for the additional facilities for work of the men and young people have not been made. Premature newspaper reports concerning the annex and its uses conveyed an impression directly contrary to facts.

The Woman's Presbyterial Society for Home Missions will hold its annual meeting Thursday, April 10, in Kenwood Evangelical church, opening at 10:30 a. m. Take Indiana avenue car on Wabash avenue to Greenwood avenue and walk one block north. Luncheon will be served for 25 cents.

Howard B. McAfee, who for nineteen years associated with Park College, has been chosen director of the Chicago Presbyterian



Modern Housekeeping Demands

that food be kept fresh, healthful and appetizing no matter how hot the weather. Modern kitchens should include in their equipments, modern and sanitary which have a perfect circulation of pure, dry, cold air that keeps food in perfect condition. They have scientifically insulated walls and sanitary, easily cleaned interiors lined with opal glass, enamel, porcelain or odorless white wood. No zinc is used. Their convenience, economy of ice and food and perfect refrigeration are unequaled. They are used by the U. S. Pure Food Laboratories and in thousands of the better class of clubs, hotels and private residences.

McCRAY Refrigerators

McCray Refrigerators are made in a large number of regular sizes and built to order to suit special requirements. They can be arranged to be iced from the outside They can be equipped with ice-water cooler, and special racks for cooling bottled beverages

Write For Free Book "How to Use a Refrigerator" and any of the following catalogs:

No. 90—Regular sizes for Residences. No. 73—For Florists. No. 49—For Hotels, Clubs, Institutions. No. 69—For Grocers. No. 60—For Meat Markets. No. A. H.—Built to order for Residences.

McCRAY REFRIGERATOR CO.
583 Lake St., Kendallville, Ind.

Salesrooms in the Following Cities

Chicago, 158 No. Wabash Ave. New York, 231 W. 42nd St. Philadelphia, 206 S. 11th St. Boston, 52 Commercial St. Cleveland, 1915 Euclid Ave. Detroit, 239 Michigan Ave. Milwaukee, Water and Sycamore Sts. Minneapolis, 103 N. Sixth St. St. Louis, 404 N. Third St. New Orleans, 225 Barronne St. San Francisco, Geary and Stockton Sts. Washington, 611 F St., N. W. Louisville, 643 S. Fourth Ave. Pittsburgh, 114 Market St. Columbia, S. C., Main St. Atlanta, Ga., 82 Marietta St. Cincinnati, 303 E. Fourth St. Indianapolis, 1116 Prospect St.

For Branch salesrooms in other cities see your local phone directory

To Churches Considering New Hymnals

Don't decide until you have seen the new

Hymns of the Centuries

(Church and Chapel Editions)

Includes the hymns which ought to be there and omits those that no one wants to use.
Representative churches in thirty-one states already using it.

Words printed with the music
Send To-day for Returnable Copies

THE A. S. BARNES COMPANY
Publishers of Hymn Books since 1855
381 Fourth Avenue (27th St.), New York

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

Training School for Christian workers. Some promising developments are planned, including a temporary affiliation with Chicago Methodist Training School. A building next to this institution will be occupied, and there will be partial interchange of instruction.

The committee of arrangements for the international Sunday school convention met March 25 and elected W. G. Shearer of Evanston chairman. The vice-chairmen are Bishop McDowell, Dr. O. S. Davis and Lindsay T. Woodcock. David R. Forgan is treasurer and Hugh Cork is to act as executive secretary, while C. D. B. Howell of Evanston heads the finance committee.

A special train leaving Chicago on the evening of May 13 will probably carry most of the Atlanta commissioners of the Middle West passing through Chicago. The train will leave over the Pennsylvania, going direct to Atlanta via Cincinnati.

An adjourned meeting of presbytery will be held in assembly hall April 7.

A week's evangelistic campaign in Popular hall will begin next Sunday evening. This is the rescue mission of the Chicago Christian Industrial League, a Presbyterian enterprise which is attracting attention. E. R. Dow will be the speaker during the week. Gospel services have been held in the hall for some months.

Easter collection at Garfield Boulevard church amounted to $1,167, with $229 in the Sunday school. Rev. R. K. Ryan is pastor.

Presbyterians in Storm and Flood

Thrilling Tales of Rescue Work by Pastors and Laymen—Fort Wayne Churches Are Flooded—Rev. A. R. Evans at Oars Over Two Days

FORT WAYNE—Presbyterians are passing through a most trying experience in common with their neighbors. The reports of these awful days have filled the daily papers. Presbyterians are among both the suffering and the rescuing.

Care for Orphans in Church

First church, Rev. H. B. Master pastor, has opened its beautiful building to the orphans, about fifty in number, who were rescued from the Orphan Home by a life saving crew brought down by special train from Chicago. The church is caring for them beautifully, providing beds and comforts and food. The pastor is giving his personal attention to their needs, in connection with the teachers from the home.

Westminster church has had its share in rescuing the suffering through the heroic efforts of the pastor, Rev. Alexander R. Evans. He took charge of a rescue boat Tuesday morning and never rested nor slept till Thursday afternoon.

Open Building for Sufferers

Third church, Rev. Edward Montgomery pastor, has made provision in its building for families driven out of their homes and the church is caring for them splendidly with beds, warmth and provisions.

Bethany church is in one of the flooded districts and about 80 per cent of its people, including the pastor and family, were driven from their homes. The members of the church who are out of the flooded portions threw open their homes and made room for those members who were driven from their own homes. One of the trustees of the church, Robert Miller, had a narrow escape and saved himself by swimming to a place of safety. The church building is flooded to the grief of the members, who remodeled it last summer at large expense.

C. O. SHIREY.

Open Church in Massillon

At Massillon, Ohio, the Presbyterian church was thrown open to the sufferers. Many were fed, housed and clothed.

Four Omaha Pastors Suffer Loss in Severe Windstorm

OMAHA—The cyclone that Easter Sunday evening swept across this city traversed a district three miles in length and for an average width of three blocks. About 110 lives were lost, more than 350 injured and upward of 1,600 homes demolished or greatly damaged.

Six church buildings were in the track of the tornado, three of these being almost wholly destroyed. None of this number were Presbyterian, except the First German, which will suffer a loss to its fine stone structure of upward of $600.

Four Clergymen Losers

Homes of four Presbyterian clergymen were harmed by the storm. That of Rev. Walter N. Halsey was damaged but slightly. Those of Melvin V. Higbee, D. D., and Daniel E. Jenkins, D. D., were unroofed and valuable furnishings sucked out by the wind and scattered. The library of the latter was in part carried into the street and rendered useless by the rain.

Rev. Julius F. Schwarz, superintendent of the southwest district of Nebraska, was the severest loser. Within two months he had bought his home and into it had put his all. It was destroyed.

The congregations of Castellar Street, Dundee, First, First German, Lowe Avenue, North and Westminster each had members who lost properties in the storm, the people of First and North churches suffering the more severely. The pastor of First church, Dr. Jenks, spent the entire week assisting his people to right their homes or become settled in new ones.

Relief in Church Basement

Lowe Avenue church opened its basement to lodgers and gave much time to distributing clothing. The woman's aid societies of all the churches assisted with clothing and sewing.

Among Presbyterian church members and Sunday school pupils many were injured, but only one fatally. Of those receiving the most severe injuries was Miss Anna Picard, manual training instructor of Farnum school. The one losing her life was a member of Lowe Avenue, Mrs. E. C. Sawyer. When the total number killed is taken into account Presbyterians are grateful that no more of their number were removed by the storm. The total property loss to Presbyterians will run over $200,000.

R. H. H.

Bellevue College Suffers

Bellevue College, near Omaha, has been working for a support fund of $30,000 to carry it through a larger campaign for an endowment of $300,000. About half of this support fund had been subscribed when Omaha was devastated by tornado and fire. All local benevolence must now be turned to the help of homeless sufferers. Omaha gave over $30,000 to Bellevue last year to clear up an old debt. Now the college must appeal to those outside Nebraska. It needs prompt relief.

Church Merger Is Discussed

Three committees of General Assembly met in Philadelphia on Wednesday, March 26. One was the committee on church union and cooperation, of which Stated Clerk Roberts is chairman. This committee conferred with two other committees, one from the Reformed Church in the United States and one from the Church of the Disciples. The representatives of the Disciples had no special proposal of cooperation to offer, but only wished to cultivate a fraternal association with Presbyterians and to make known their own views on the paramount importance of church unity. With the Reformed committee the pending proposition for the union of the two churches was again gone over, but since both committees wish to allow ample time for discussion in both denominations, no attempt was made to hasten the consummation of the plan for merger.

Assembly's committees on spiritual life and work and on Presbyterian brotherhood held a joint session. Each committee had been ordered to make a report on the proper relation of the brotherhood to general church organization and to eliminate conflict met together to agree upon an identical report. This will recommend that hereafter the national council of the Brotherhood shall be appointed by the Assembly instead of being elected by the Brotherhood's own national convention.

WHERE TO INVEST WITH SAFETY AND GOOD PROFIT

The famous Corn Belt of Eastern Kansas offers the best possible field for safe and profitable mortgage investments. This territory was settled 60 years ago and during that time has been thoroughly tested as a fine agricultural and stock raising country. We have been in this field for 40 years and during that time have never lost a dollar for an investor. Loans negotiated by us exceed $25,000,000. Your money when placed in our First Farm Mortgages will be absolutely safe and net you excellent interest return. Write us for particulars and references.

J. L. Pettyjohn & Company
Olathe, Kansas

These Will Fit YOUR Pocket Book

I can offer you a very profitable and safe investment to fit your particular circumstances, whether you have large or small funds, or only desire to lay by from month to month small sums as savings. These investments are backed by the IDAHO TITLE & TRUST COMPANY, and the NATIONAL TRUST & SAVINGS COMPANY. Look over the following and tell me about which one you would like to have full information. No. 1. First Farm Mortgages, $1,000 to $15,000; 6% interest payable annually; also First City Mortgages, $300 to $5,000; will net you 7% per annum. No. 2. Guarantee Capital fund certificates, $100 to $5,000, 8% annual interest and as much more as the earnings of the company will justify. No. 3. Guarantee Investment Certificates, $3.00 per month or any multiple thereof for 24 months, or as long as you like. You can draw out your money and 8% per annum interest compounded semi-annually any time after 24 months. Write for full information.

CHARLES B. COXE
BOISE President IDAHO

REAL ESTATE LOANS

6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%

During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet B UNIONVILLE, MO.

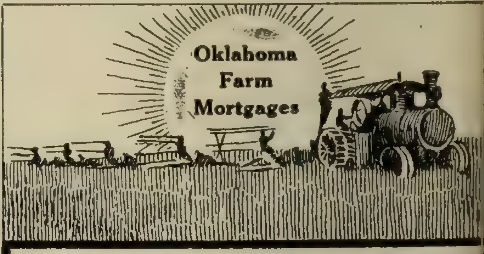
6% We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request 7%

JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma



Let your money make 6 per cent—NET

The three or four per cent the savings bank pays does not fairly represent your money's earning ability. It is simply the small end of the profits. The bank keeps the big share as their fee for re-investment—re-investing your money in mortgages—something you refuse to do for yourself. By investing direct you can at least double the profits of your savings as they now accrue to you. Oklahoma first mortgages—amply secured by two to four times the amount of the loan—make this possible—the same kind banks and insurance companies buy.

Why Insurance Companies Buy Oklahoma Mortgages

Experience showed them that in order to meet competition they must secure as high a rate per dollar as sound business judgment allowed. Investigation proved that Oklahoma offered the best field for investments of this kind. Approximately $415,000,000.00 is now invested by the insurance companies in farm mortgages—and a good share of this in Oklahoma mortgages.

Surely you can't do better than follow the example of these trained buyers of conservative investments. So decide now to give your money a chance to make good for you.

Write now for interesting booklets describing our comprehensive investment service and mortgage list No. 715

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Company
143 West Main, Oklahoma City, U. S. A.

Financial Situation

Have the Ohio Floods a Lesson for Investors? –Western Farms Better Looking than They Were Twenty Years Ago.

The influence of the windstorm which centered in Omaha and the great floods in Ohio and Indiana will be large on the financial interests of the country. Among the minor results has been the closing of many steel mills and blast furnaces in the Ohio district. The washing away of half the railway bridges of Ohio will call for still more structural steel, on top of the present large orders. The cessation of manufacturing of many kinds in the two states has in itself occasioned a large loss, but the destruction of property by the water has been still greater. Until the water recedes and an accurate estimate of the damage has been made it will be impossible to tell what industries have suffered the heaviest losses.

In the Omaha storm the small property owner seemed to suffer the greatest loss. The insurance companies will be somewhat affected, although most of the loss was from wind, and not much tornado insurance was carried. In Dayton there was fire, but the greatest loss in the flooded region was by water, against which insurance is not usually thought necessary. It is probable that farmers have suffered considerable loss in the flood, and in some cases it is possible that streams will change their course and property values be wholly destroyed.

Earth Will Remain After Flood

Whatever else is damaged or washed away, however, most of the earth will remain. The railways will be forced to expend large sums to repair track and rebuild bridges before traffic can be resumed. Industrial enterprises will have to replace machinery before product can be turned out. The farmer can gather the driftwood and repair his fences and soon begin to plant his crop. If the flood had come a month or two later the damage in the farming regions would have been much greater. If there is a lesson for investors in this disaster it may be in the old saying that the best security on earth is earth.

The difference in the present prosperity of the farms of the West compared with years ago is well put by Bonds and Mortgages:

"To the average eastern investor it would be a revelation to travel overland over any of our western states and see the kind of farms on which mortgages are written today. Compared with the conditions twenty years ago, when every farm had a dilapidated appearance, and it was clear that the farmer was having a struggle for his own and his family's existence, the farm of today is a picture of prosperity. Big barns, silos and excellent equipment in every respect for tilling the soil to the benefit of the owner are manifest on every hand, and this is as true twenty miles back from any railroad as in the more thickly settled sections of the Middle West. If any investor has a doubt concerning the real prosperity of the western farmer, it would pay him to take a cross-country tour and see the country at first hand."

Asks Recognition of China

Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, accompanied by Bishop Earl Cranston and Dr. Wallace Radcliffe of Washington, D. C., waited on President Wilson recently and also upon representatives of both houses of Congress. They submitted two documents. One urged the federal government to take early action toward recognizing the republic of China; the other petitioned for an increased number of chaplains in the United States navy and army. They pointed out that although there were 53,375 officers and men in the navy, there were only twenty-one chaplains, and that although there were more than 95,000 men in the army there were only sixty-seven chaplains.

FARM MORTGAGES
Yielding 6% and 6½% net

A FARM MORTGAGE is a thoroughly safe investment. The security cannot be destroyed and is not affected by panics, strikes or depressions.

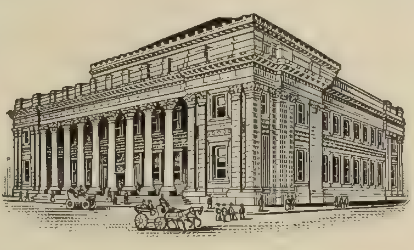
The first mortgages we sell represent loans made with our own funds upon improved farms worth at least two and one-half times the amount loaned. This insures absolute safety to our customers.

The investor in one of our mortgages has possession of all the papers comprising the loan, including the actual mortgage itself, together with the note and Abstract of Title. We guarantee the Title and will collect and remit interest in New York Exchange without charge.

We invite correspondence and will submit lists of mortgages and pamphlet explaining in detail our service to investors.

Bank references upon request.

THE DEVEREAUX MORTGAGE COMPANY
1014 Spalding Building :: PORTLAND, OREGON



Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency
Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the Illinois Trust & Savings Bank
Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidation of Other Banks

Capital and Surplus
$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. &
JACKSON BLVD.

ILLINOIS TRUST SAFETY DEPOSIT COMPANY
Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS
6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. 6%
SEND FOR BOOKLET.
PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%
Write for particulars regarding our investment service
Highest references.
R. C. KITTEL & CO., 108 So. La Salle St. Chicago.

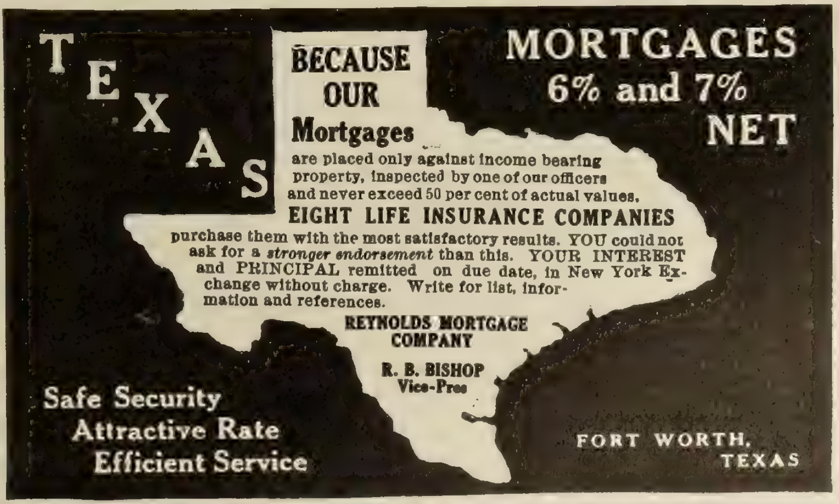
GOOD 6% Farm Mortgages
The BEST and SAFEST Investment on Earth.
Write us for information regarding our Farm Mortgages on lands located in the fertile James River Valley, North Dakota. We guarantee to look after collection of interest so that the investment will net you 6%. Write us for lists.
H. J. JOHNSON LAND AND CATTLE CO.
OAKES, - - NORTH DAKOTA

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS
Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.
BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

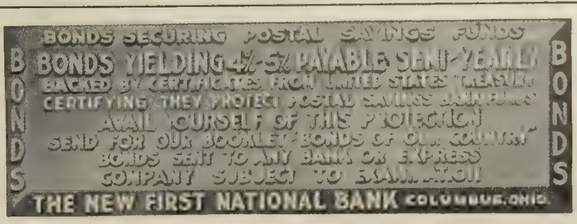
$33,000,000 INVESTED IN ALBERTA MORTGAGES
by insurance, trust and loan companies. The Associated Mortgage Investors, Inc., has applied the FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE of its Officers to making Alberta loans, which yield 6% NET and have many advantages, including GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED TITLES. Inquiries are welcomed and imply no obligation.
ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

6½% Net First Mortgages
on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.
GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT
¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075
WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA



TEXAS
BECAUSE OUR Mortgages are placed only against income bearing property, inspected by one of our officers and never exceed 50 per cent of actual values.
EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES purchase them with the most satisfactory results. YOU could not ask for a stronger endorsement than this. YOUR INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date, in New York Exchange without charge. Write for list, information and references.
REYNOLDS MORTGAGE COMPANY
R. B. BISHOP
Vice-Pres
MORTGAGES 6% and 7% NET
Safe Security
Attractive Rate
Efficient Service
FORT WORTH, TEXAS



4 Per Cent
BONDS SECURING POSTAL SAVINGS FUNDS
BONDS YIELDING 4%-5% PAYABLE SEMI-YEARLY
BACKED BY CERTIFICATES FROM UNITED STATES TREASURY
CERTIFYING THEY PROTECT POSTAL SAVINGS BANK FUNDS
AVAIL YOURSELF OF THIS PROTECTION
SEND FOR OUR BOOKLET "BONDS OF OUR COUNTRY"
BONDS SENT TO ANY BANK OR EXPRESS
COMPANY SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION
BONDS BONDS
THE NEW FIRST NATIONAL BANK COLUMBUS, OHIO
5 Per Cent

From Various Fields

Washington

What Tacoma Churches Are Doing

The people of First church were greatly alarmed lest Dr. McLeod should leave them. There was great rejoicing when he finally assured them that he would remain. He is president of the board of trustees of Whitworth College.

Helpful services were held in several of the Presbyterian churches during passion week. Union noonday services were held in one of the theaters and a general union service was held Friday afternoon in First M. E. church.

Dr. W. H. Foulkes of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation had planned to meet the Tacoma ministers and elders at a banquet in First church. Storms in the Central West delayed his train so that he had to cancel the engagement by telegraph.

Rev. William E. Bates of Montesano will move to Tacoma April 1 and take up the work in Sprague Memorial church.

The Presbyterian Union has secured from the Board of Church Erection a loan of $1,600. This will liquidate indebtedness on mission property and allow for some improvements.

O. T. M.

Ohio

Toledo Churches Are Active

First-Westminster church, which has been for over a year pastorless, is now taking hold with a new life grip under the leadership of its newly installed pastor, Rev. John S. Edenburn. He was installed March 13. Mr. Edenburn came to Toledo from Little Rock, Ark., where he served as pastor of First church for nine years. Previous to that charge he occupied pulpits at Cincinnati, Hamilton and Xenia. First-Westminster church is one of the oldest in the city and has a membership of 600.

The building fund of Dorr Street church is growing. A gift of $100 was made to it by the Collingwood brotherhood last week.

It is estimated that $50,000 is needed to provide better housing for the religious and social work of the Church of the Covenant, Cincinnati.

California

Welsh church, San Francisco, was dedicated March 16 by simple ceremonies.

Dr. Frank Dickson, formerly associated with Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and other members of his evangelistic party, is meeting with splendid success as pastor of Glenside church in San Francisco. He has been assisting other pastors in evangelistic meetings.

The new brick structure of the Church of the Redeemer, Los Angeles, was dedicated recently. It takes the place of a small wooden building in which the congregation had worshiped since its organization sixteen years ago. The pastor is Rev. John D. Habbick. In the evening the new pipe organ was dedicated.

Michigan

Warren Avenue church, Saginaw, has started a new Sunday school in Buena Vista, one of the suburbs of the city. The school is only two weeks old, but has an enrollment of ninety-one. The Maccabee hall was given free by members of the order.

There were 269 additions to churches in Detroit on Easter, besides over sixty at Scovel Memorial on the previous Sabbath, making a total of 331 in fourteen of the eighteen churches. The others—Jefferson Avenue, Trumbull Avenue, Central and Forest Avenue—will not have their communion and reception of members until April.

New York

A dinner for Dr. Charles C. Albertson, retiring pastor of Central church, Rochester, was held in Powers hotel shortly before he left the city for Brooklyn, where he is pastor of Lafayette church.

A committee is at work planning the erection of a manse at Oneida.

All Presbyterian churches of Binghamton are receiving large accessions to membership on account of the Biederwolf uplift campaign just closed. In all churches evangelistic services will be continued by local pastors for five weeks.

New Jersey

It is expected that the corner stone of the new Third church, Newark, will be laid before summer.

Rev. John McDowell has notified Trumbull Avenue church, Detroit, Mich., that he has made up his mind his duty still is in Newark, where he is pastor of Park church.

Wisconsin

Rev. D. C. Jones, First church, La Crosse, held two weeks of pre-Easter services, with good success.

Rev. Richard Pughe, pastor at North Bend, underwent a serious operation at Rochester, Minn., March 20. He is getting on as well as could be expected.

A Year with Mother Partridge

(Continued from page 466)

itself, which they rarely touched, but for the worms and grubs and insects and small weeds which grew among the stalks. They liked, too, fresh young shoots, and ripening berries, and grasshoppers, and seeds, and grains.

One day passed about like another for the Partridge family. At the first streak of dawn they opened their eyes and went to dust themselves on the nearest sandy bank or roadway. This dust helped to keep them from wet and chill till the sun came up to warm the world. This done, they went to the fields for their breakfast, and when the morning was pretty well advanced retired to some clover or turnip field to bask quietly in the sun until late afternoon, when they went out for their supper.

At dusk they went to roost, with many cluckings and chirpings—not on a fence or tree but in the open field, where they could hear the slightest noise, and bunched together in a circle, their heads pointing outwards, so that no wild animal could steal upon them unawares.

When they were three months old the little Partridges were about grown and began to look very much like their parents; and although they were very plain of color they were none the less rather proud of their feathers and enjoyed preening themselves.

They didn't like the winter, but they managed to live through it; for the snow was never so deep that it completely covered all the ground, and there were places where they could burrow for wild seeds. But they early felt the approach of spring, and began gladly to make preparations for setting up housekeeping for themselves. Probably they are out this moment seeking their mates among neighboring Partridges.

"Partridges will be Partridges," the little brown mother no doubt sighs sadly as she sees her household breaking up. But presently she, too, will make a nest, and lay within it other wee drab eggs. And by and by, with the coming of more tiny chicks, Mother Partridge will once more be comforted.

S. C. R.

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 464)

various kinds. His preaching in Minnesota during his second summer vacation was so acceptable that it has secured him a call to an important Presbyterian church in St. Paul, and he has accepted it."

"Yes, I know. There is no question in my mind about Mr. Sleighton."

"But there is about me, professor?"

"Well——"

What Professor Dragham's answer might have been must be surmised. The wife of the

The Only Self-Help College in Illinois
BLACKBURN COLLEGE HAS $23,000 TO EDUCATE YOUNG MEN FOR THE PRESBYTERIAN MINISTRY
WRITE President Hudson, Carlinville, Illinois

Gail Borden
EAGLE
BRAND
CONDENSED
MILK
THE ORIGINAL
Has no Equal for Infant Feeding

Farm Mortgages 6%
Our Investments
Appeal to Conservative Investors
Send for pamphlet "C" and list of offerings. 30 yrs. experience Highest refs.
E. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%
Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.
The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

6 and 7 % Sure
When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."
Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS
The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth. - - Texas.

5½% and 6% Interest
The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.
G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

Ripe Berries In 4 Months
This wonderful EVERBEARING Tree Raspberry is a valuable variety; nothing like it grows; a strong handsome bush literally loaded with berries and should be grown in every garden in the country. It yields a crop of fruit the same summer and fall from plants set in April or May. Plants set in April, gave ripe fruit July 4th and continued to produce ripe berries until the end of October.
Berries are large and beautiful, as large as the largest Red Raspberries, brilliant crimson color, firm, and fine flavor. The plants are perfectly hardy even in the coldest regions and do well on any soil. A dozen plants are worth several dollars in any garden, and we want every reader of this paper to try them. Strong plants which we guarantee will fruit this summer, now ready to set in Garden, 15c each —3 for 30c—12 for $1.00, postpaid.
QUICK GROWING PEANUT
With every order for plants of this great BERRY, (If you enclose M. O. or Silver) we will send FREE FOR TRIAL a sample of our NEW EARLY QUICK GROWING SPANISH PEANUT. Earliest of all, will grow in North or South, an interesting novelty for your garden.
Order Quick For This Offer Will Not Appear Again.
Mills Seed House Dept. 15, Rose Hill, N. Y.

dean heard the conversation, and she took the direction of the matter summarily.

"Pardon me, Professor Dragham," she said; "after dinner you and Professor Horton can go to the library and talk out your differences; can talk till midnight if you desire. But just now there are others of us who want to talk with you. We do not often have an opportunity, and I can't allow Professor Horton to monopolize you any more. Are you going to Canada as usual this summer?"

So the conversation drifted away from serious subjects and the discussion was never finished. Before Bradford assumed his duties as a member of the faculty the senior professor had made his last fight.

In the starlight on the evening following the dinner Sleighton and Horton had their last pull together on Orsina lake of happy memories. Horton was to leave for Glencoe on the early morning train. Standing before the gate of the Jickers house, both men realized with emotion that their three years together as fellow students were forever past.

"Come in with me, Brad."

"No, I won't go in, A. S. It's too late. I'll say good-by here." There was a quiver of affection in the strong voice. "We met by the St. James with a handshake; we'll part with one here. Give Lucy my love. Stay single till I come back in November and I'll see you at the wedding. Good-by, old boy."

The welcome of the Glencoe home was warm and loving. Barney O'Toole was still in the town, a permanent resident now, acting as teller of the reorganized bank. Coming to supper one night during Bradford's visit, he sat with him on the porch till a late hour talking over Prestonbury experiences, especially the early part of their acquaintance.

"Barney," said Bradford frankly, at last, "what made you hate me so when I first landed there?"

"Don't know. Your good looks and good manners, probably, and a feeling I had that you were finer-grained than I—that you were by nature the kind of thing I was pretending to be."

"Queer. Do you remember where you saw me first?"

"Yes; you came to the drug store and bought a lamp. I told 1827 after you'd gone out that you were a Nancy-boy. And I saw you fall and break that nonbreakable bit of junk that Jickers put off on you. Then next day you took the indexing job for $25, and Maxwell must have thought I was a robber. I think I began then really to hate you. So it went. You sang me out of the choir job at the 'Old Furnace,' and then I had it in for you. I'm glad the luck was on your side, Horton."

"It came near not being. If I'd attended Miss Elmore's party I'd likely be serving my term now." (To be continued)

Ministerial Obituary

Rev. Benjamin Morgan, Ph. D.

Rev. Benjamin J. Morgan, Ph. D., departed this life at Washington, N. J., March 8. He was born in Scranton, Pa., Feb. 22, 1869. He learned the plumber's trade, working in the daytime, and attending school at night. Removing to Baltimore, he prepared for college and graduated from New Windsor College, Maryland, in 1894, and at Auburn Theological Seminary in 1897. He served the following churches as pastor: Circleville, N. Y.; Stanhope, N. J.; Fowlerville, N. Y., and Nunda, N. Y. He was compelled to resign, on account of failing health, in January, 1911. Though feeble and suffering much at times, so eager was he to preach the gospel he supplied vacant churches.

Rev. John W. Stitt

Buffalo, N. Y., has lost one of its most faithful ministers in the death of Rev. John W. Stitt, pastor for the last thirteen years of South church. On the 1st of February the church voted its pastor a vacation, with salary, of four months, hoping that the rest would restore strength to the overworked minister. The Presbyterian clergymen of the city, as an expression of regard for Mr. Stitt and as a mark of appreciation of the action of the church in arranging the vacation, planned a four months' preaching schedule whereby they were to take turns in supplying the pulpit.

The funeral services were held in the church, the Buffalo ministers attending in a body.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Aberdeen—Britton, April 8, 7:30. Woman's Missionary Society, April 9.
Adams—Hallock, April 15, 11 a. m.
Alton—Carrollton, April 8, 2 p. m.
Amarillo—Plainview, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Bellingham—Harbor, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Bloomington—Hoopeston, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Brownwood—Blanket, April 8, 10 a. m.
Butler—Butler Second, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Carlisle—Carlisle Second, April 8, 3 p. m.
Central Dakota—Woonsocket, April 16, 8 p. m.
Central Washington—Toppenish, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Chester—Darby Borough, April 8, 10 a. m.
Cimarron—Alva, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Cleveland—Cleveland Old Stone, April 15, 8:30 a. m.
Columbia River—Woodland, April 15, 7:30.
Corning—Villisca, April 15, 2:30 p. m.
Council Bluffs—Casey, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Des Moines—Indianola, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Duluth—Cloquet, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Ebenezer—Newport, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Elizabeth—Elizabeth First, April 15, 10 a. m.
Emporia—Newton, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Florida—Eustis, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Kittanning—Rural Valley, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Fort Dodge—Jefferson, April 8, 7:30. Women's societies, April 9 and 10, same place.
Grand Rapids—Grand Rapids Westminster, April 8, 2 p. m.
Grande Ronde—Union, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Gunnison—Grand Junction, April 8, 8 p. m.
Highland—Axtell, April 8, 3:30 p. m.
Houston—Port Arthur First, April 8, 7:30.
Huntingdon—Huntingdon, April 7, 7:30 p. m.
Huron—Norwalk, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Kalispell—Libby, April 8-10.
Kirksville—Granger, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
La Crosse—Galesville, April 8, 8 p. m.
Lansing—Dimondale, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Larned—Tribune, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Lima—Rockford, April 14, 3:30 p. m.
Lincoln—Louisville Knox, April 8, 7:45 p. m.
McAlester—Atoka, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
McGee—Brookfield, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Mankato—Marshall, April 8, 5 p. m.
Mattoon—Bethany, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Maumee—Tontogany, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Milwaukee—Milwaukee Berean, April 15, 7:30.
Minot—Stanley, April 8, 4 p. m.
Muskogee—Afton, April 18, 8 p. m.
New Brunswick—Lawrenceville, April 8, 9:30.
Oakes—Edgeley, April 8, 2:30 p. m.
Olympia—Olympia First, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Ottawa—Aurora, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Paris—Honey Grove, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Peona—Galesburg First, April 15, 9:30 a. m.
Providence—Worcester, April 15.
Red River—Brainerd, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Redstone—Uniontown First, April 14, 10:30.
Reserve—Kadoka, April 9, 2 p. m.
Rock River—Geneseo, April 8, 7:30 p. m. Woman's Presbyterial Society in connection.
Rushville—Good Hope First, April 8, 7:30.
Sacramento—Roseville, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Saginaw—Saginaw Washington Avenue, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Santa Barbara—Santa Maria, April 8, 3 p. m.
Seattle—Seattle University, April 15, 8 p. m.
Sedalia—Holden, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Sheridan—Sheridan First, April 9, 7:30 p. m.
Sioux Falls—Sioux Falls First, April 8, 7:30. Missionary society same time and place.
Solomon—Belleville, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
St. Paul—St. Paul House of Hope, April 8, 9:30 a. m.
Topeka—Junction City, April 8, 8 p. m.
Transylvania—Greensburg, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Union—White Pine Westminster, April 8, 11.
Walla Walla—Moscow, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Wellsborough—Nelson Beecher's Island, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Wenatchee—Waterville, April 8, 7:30 p. m.
Westminster—Wrightsville, April 7, 7:30 p. m.
West Jersey—Gloucester City, April 15, 10 a. m.
Yellowstone—Fairview, April 8, 7:30 p. m.

Accessions

California—San Francisco Trinity, 14, March 4, W. K. Howe; Newark, 6, March 2, James Curry.
Colorado—Antonito, 7, March 16, W. H. Hyatt.
Illinois—Sheldon, 8, March 9, W. D. Smith; Chicago Windsor Park, 14, March 23, W. E. Shirey; Chicago Rogers Park, 30, March 23, J. L. McBride; Joliet First, 18, March 23, C. M. Brown; Chicago Central Park, 31, March 21, F. A. Hosmer; Evanston Second, 33, March 23, A. S. C. Clarke; Petersburg, 10, March 21, H. M. Hildebrandt.
Indiana—Newcastle First, 7, March 23, T. W. Maguire; Indianapolis Meridian Heights, 6, March 23, Alfred Martin; Remington, 15, March 23, E. H. Bull; Elkhart, 22, March 23, C. M. Herrick.
Iowa—Birmingham, 6, March 16, D. W. Cassat; Hopkinton, 14, March 23, S. T. Foster; Jefferson, 18, March 23, C. W. Caldwell; Marion, 19, March 23, C. F. Ensign; Paullina, 47, March 23, W. S. Harris; Clarinda, 53, March 23, W. H. Wilson; Meriden, 7, March 23, J. W. Little.
Kansas—Fort Scott, 26, March 23, J. A. Smith; Kingman First, 16, March 23; Wichita Grace, 26, March 16.
Maryland—Baltimore Walbrook, 16, March 23, H. A. Grubbs.
Minnesota—Mankato, 16, March 23, T. Ross Paden; Minneapolis Stewart Memorial, 50, since December, C. D. Darling; Albert Lea, 12, March 23, James B. Lyle; St. Paul Central, 27, March 23, H. N. Wilson.
Michigan—Detroit churches as follows, all March 23, First 47, Woodward Avenue 42, Immanuel 32, Covenant 28, Highland Park 25, Bethany 24, Cadillac Avenue 17, Westminster 11, St. Andrews 11, Calvary 10, Gratiot Avenue 10, Fort Street 10, Fort Wayne 3; Ishpeming, 23, March 23, M. M. Allen.
New York—Cohocton, 10, March 23, S. H. Beshgetour.
North Dakota—Jamestown, 14, March 23, G. W. Simon.
Ohio—Delaware, 59, March 23, E. M. Wylie.
Oklahoma—Claremore, 26, March 23, W. E. Loucks.
Pennsylvania—Pittsburg Avalon, 65, March 23, S. W. McKelvey; Pittsburg Fourth, 55, March 21, Samuel Callen; New Salem, 32, March 16, W. H. Sloan.
Wisconsin—Stevens Point, 17, March 23, John A. Stemen.

SLIDE STEREOPTICONS.
RENTING. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES.
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE.

WANTS AND HELPS

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR CHURCH WORKERS—LADIES' AID AND MISSIONARY Societies are raising money without donations selling Valentine's Absorbent Dusters and Dust Mops. The only fifty-cent mop. Special offer by letter. Agents and societies should write. Valentine Duster Company, Urbana, Ohio.

PRESBYTERIANS: CARPINTERIA VALLEY, SANTA Barbara county, Cal., "The American Italy," claims attention. Wonderful combination, ocean, mountains. Warm winters. Cool summers. Paved roads. Lemons, walnuts, olives, winter vegetables. Literature furnished. Presbyterian Manse, Carpinteria, Cal.

OLD LANTERN SLIDES (4x3¼ INCHES) WOULD BE of great service in Mission work. Few or many welcome. C. M. Eames, care Presbyterian Mission Press, Shanghai.

WOOSTER SUMMER SCHOOL OFFERS GREAT OPportunities to those who wish vacation study of any kind. Its instructors are able, its work accepted everywhere by normal schools and colleges. $150,000 worth of positions placed every year. Catalog. J. H. Dickason, Prin., Wooster, O.

EVANGELIST MISS LUDGATE MAY BE SECURED to conduct Evangelistic missions during May, June and September. Address Wheaton, Ill.

WANT TO BUY SECOND HAND PEWS AND PULPIT furniture. Address A. E. Nash, 1910 Fremont street, Rockford, Ill.

WANTED—YOUNG WOMAN, UNIVERSITY TRAINED, desires position of responsibility; secretarial work preferred; stenography. Highest references. Address N, care of Continent.

HEALTH RESORTS

ADIRONDACK SUMMER RESORT, ESSEX, N. Y., ON Lake-Champlain, offers to families of refinement, at moderate rates, the attractions of a beautiful lake shore in a locality with a remarkable record for healthfulness. The boating is safe, attractive walks and drives, points of interest in the Adirondacks are easily accessible. References required. For information address, Rev. S. R. Bigger, pastor of Essex Presbyterian church, Essex, N. Y.

PENNOYER SANITARIUM (ESTABLISHED 1857), Chicago suburb, Northwestern Railway. Grounds (100 acres) fronting Lake Michigan. Modern, homelike. For rest, recreation, treatment. Booklet. Address Pennoyer Sanitarium, Kenosha, Wis.

EUROPE MEDITERRANEAN ROUTE $370
Sails July 1 from New York. Party limited.
University Man, Conductor.
The Shelton Tours, 222 Old South Bldg., Boston, Mass.

It is good to be sure
Better to be insured
Best to be insured in
The Hartford

SparksMarionE †jan14
1205 Springfield av

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, HARTFORD, CONN.

AGENTS EVERYWHERE

THE CONTINENT

APRIL 10, 1913

A Maiden Mother to the Blind: Miss Winifred Holt

ADA PATTERSON

On Guard for Arbitration

EDITORIAL

One Year's Changes in China

CHARLES L. OGILVIE

Unreported Tragedy in Mexico City—Missionary Page

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

A BOY'S WHOLE TIME

Must be profitably occupied if he is to receive the best kind of education: the kind that stands for moral strength, intellectual alertness, physical fitness. LAKE FOREST ACADEMY merits the serious consideration of those who understand the manifold needs of a boy.

Address WILLIAM MATHER LEWIS,
LAKE FOREST, ILLINOIS

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy. Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Tennessee

Ward Seminary

For Girls and Young Women

42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports. For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres.. Nashville, Tenn.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY

College of Arts and Sciences.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN

OXFORD, OHIO
FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.

W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalogue of Valparaiso College and Northern Indiana Normal School, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is the largest Training School in the United States, and the expenses are much less than at any other place' Catalogue mailed free. Address

H. B. BROWN. President.

Kansas

Oswego College

Oswego, Kansas

Vocational-Cultural for young women

Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD

A Cultural and Practical School

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.

M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Fellowship Inspiration Cooperation

By Men and for Men a Great

Brotherhood Conference and Supper

ATLANTA

Kimball Hotel, Tuesday Evening, May 20, 13 19

5:30—ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE in dining room of hotel, on "The Best Methods of Men's Work in the Local Church."

6:30—BROTHERHOOD SUPPER to be marked by rich fellowship by the men of the different Assemblies.

Price of Supper is $1.00, which admits to Conference. Reservations should be made AT ONCE, as capacity of hotel is limited to 400. Requests for tickets, accompanied by check, draft, or money-order, should be sent to Mr. Walter Getty, General Secretary, Presbyterian Brotherhood of America, 509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois

---

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES. MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

FOR CHURCH WORKERS—LADIES' AID AND MISSIONARY Societies are raising money without donations selling Valentine's Absorbent Dusters and Dust Mops. The only fifty-cent mop. Special offer by letter. Agents and societies should write. Valentine Duster Company, Urbana, Ohio.

PRESBYTERIANS: CARPINTERIA VALLEY, SANTA Barbara county, Cal, "The American Italy," claims attention. Wonderful combination, ocean, mountains. Warm winters. Cool summers. Paved roads. Lemons, walnuts, olives, winter vegetables. Literature furnished. Presbyterian Manse, Carpinteria, Cal.

OLD LANTERN SLIDES (4x3¼ INCHES) WOULD BE of great service in Mission work. Few or many welcome. C. M. Eames, care Presbyterian Mission Press, Shanghai.

SEVERAL VACANCIES IN ABERDEEN PRESBYTERY Salaries, $900 or $1,000. Manses on some fields. Address C. C. Todd, Aberdeen, S. D.

PASTORS AND PARENTS WRITE TO US ABOUT young men who have come to Chicago to enter business or school life. We endeavor by personal invitation and influence to bring them into church relationship. Details gladly furnished. Rev. Francis M. Fox, Presbyterian Brotherhood, 509 South Wabash avenue, Chicago.

WANTED—A MAN, MARRIED PREFERRED, FOR gentleman's place in Wisconsin. Must be total abstainer and furnish satisfactory references of good character. Must be competent to take charge of cow barn, horse barn, chicken house and do general work. Also must be able to handle men under him. Give age, experience, number in family if married, and references and wages expected. Address "Wisconsin," care Continent, Chicago, Ill.

WOOSTER SUMMER SCHOOL OFFERS EIGHT weeks of study in all lines of work. It has no aim to to be a cheap school, but offers very moderate expenses in return for remarkable advantages. 227 classes daily by faculty of 85 men and women. Beautiful surroundings. Optimism regnant. Catalog. J. H. Dickason, Principal, Wooster, O.

REAL ESTATE

BEST LAND VALUES IN AMERICA—FARMS $10 AN acre up; easy terms in the Southeastern states bordering Southern Railway lines. Big crops, excellent markets; annual profit $50 to $200 an acre; best social and school privileges. Land lists, subscription to "Southern Field," all services free. M. V. Richards, Land & Industrial Agent, Room 22, Washington, D. C.

HEALTH RESORTS

ADIRONDACK SUMMER RESORT, ESSEX, N. Y., ON Lake-Champlain, offers to families of refinement, at moderate rates, the attractions of a beautiful lake shore in a locality with a remarkable record for healthfulness. The boating is safe, attractive walks and drives, points of interest in the Adirondacks are easily accessible. References required. For information address, Rev. S. R. Bigger, pastor of Essex Presbyterian church, Essex, N. Y.

TOURS

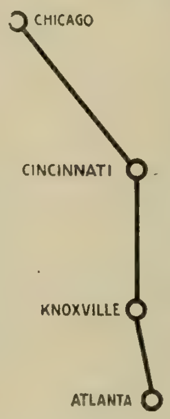
EUROPE MEDITERRANEAN ROUTE $370

Sails July 1 from New York. Party limited.
University Man, Conductor.

The Shelton Tours, 222 Old South Bldg., Boston, Mass

To Atlanta

FOR THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY



A sunshine trip—ideal at this time of year. See the Southland in bloom; blue-carpeted Kentucky; the wonderful Cumberland mountains. Atlanta—the thriving and beautiful southern metropolis.

$25.80

Round Trip from Chicago

May
11, 12, 13, 14, 18 & 19

Proportionately low fares from other points on

PENNSYLVANIA LINES

Tickets good for stopover at Knoxville—going, returning, or both—for a period not more than five days.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY SPECIAL TRAIN

From Chicago Through to Atlanta

Leaves Chicago 9:50 p. m. Tuesday, May 13. Get particulars from nearest agent of Pennsylvania Lines, or address

C. L. KIMBALL
Assistant General Passenger Agent,
Chicago.

CHURCH MONEY

Is being raised in large amounts by churches which ship to us all their

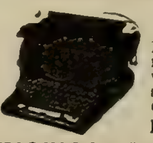
OLD NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS MAGAZINES, OR WASTE PAPER

This is a splendid plan to raise church money or pay off the church debt; and it is the long-sought "something out of nothing" plan, as the material is usually thrown away.

Write us at once for information and prices.

THE WESTERN PAPER STOCK CO.
1452-60 Indiana Ave., .: CHICAGO

TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED



Samples at Wholesale

Get in Business for Yourself

Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.

Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.

MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE

CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
Everett Sisson, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber· otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 1913

On Guard for Arbitration 485
Editorial—
What Is the Use? 488
Assembly Reduction in a Nutshell 488
Contest Between Progress and Reaction 488
Loyalty That Has Come to Be Costly 488
Dubious Partnership Better Dissolved 488
What Three Students Said of City Churches 489
The World 486
Religious World 487
Changing the Man First of All ....Robert Francis Coyle 490
Winifred Holt, Mother to the Blind (with Portrait) ....Ada Patterson 491
How John Chinaman Has Turned About ....Charles L. Ogilvie 492
Bradford Horton, Man. Chapter XXII.—Continued ....Richard S. Holmes 493
Plague and Anti-Plague..The Wayfarer 494
The Home Council—Sentimentalism of Mrs. Moss ....Elizabeth Price 495
Young America—The Sleepy Witch (with Illustration....Pauline Frances Camp 496
When Baby Bear Visited the Beavers ....Frances Margaret Fox 496
The Sunday School ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 497
Devotional Service ....E. A. Wicher 498
Young People's Service ......W. T. Ellis 498
New Books 499
Missionary Work—
Another Slaughter of the Innocents (with Illustration) 500
"A Little Nursing Baby" of an Engine 500
The Open Hearth 501
Ways of Working 502
News from Religious Field—Beginning 503
Financial Situation 509

Around the Shop

This is the way the story originally appeared in an eastern newspaper. It was credited to Senator Burton of Ohio, who got it from a man on a train who had heard it in New Orleans:

> A train on the Denver and Rio Grande railroad stopped for lunch, ice and water and in a few minutes the through passengers were walking up and down the station platform to take out the kinks.
>
> One of the passengers, an elderly tourist, stood breathing the rarefied atmosphere, and delightfully gazing upon the snow-capped mountains.
>
> "Isn't this invigorating?" he remarked to a man who was standing near.
>
> "No, sir," replied the man, who happened to be a native filled with civic pride, "this is Grand Junction."

This is the way a disrespectful friend told it to the Around-the-Shop Man:

> "Is that interesting?" inquired one man of another who was reading a periodical.
>
> "No, it's a religious newspaper," was the response.

—

Of course there is only one absolutely conclusive answer to such a base insinuation. It is T— C———.

Send us your guess, together with $2.50 as an evidence of good faith, and one of your friends will receive a prize every week for a whole year. By way of satisfaction to yourself, you will have caused him to marvel at your wisdom and thoughtfulness for fifty-two weeks. By that time he'll probably have enough wisdom and thoughtfulness of his own to provide for the future.

No one publication can print everything that is interesting and helpful. But here is a half hour's occupation for you. Take The Continent and any one or a dozen other periodicals on your library table. Consider the fact that you are interested in Christian work and in Christian home life and culture—that you want to be inspired by good purposes and made efficient for service. Put down a mark for each helpful article or feature that you receive in The Continent and not elsewhere. Send the Around-the-Shop Man the record. Thank you!

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO:
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating: valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company
218 S. WABASH AV. CHICAGO
NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich

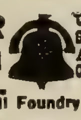
HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS



BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

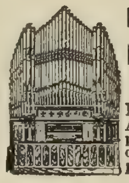
Church Chime Peal BELLS
Memorial Bells a Specialty.
McShane Bell Foundry Co., Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

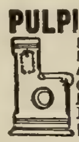
Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

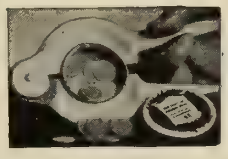
CHURCH FURNISHINGS



PIPE AND REED ORGANS
AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.



PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks.
Ask for Catalog by number only
C105 Church F'rnit're | School Desks S105
L105 Lodge Furniture | Opera Chairs O105
B105 Bank Furniture | Office Desks D105
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO



—MONEY—
Do you need it in your Church work? The International Banks will help you raise it. Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg., Columbus, O.

HARRY W. JONES
Church Architect :: MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.

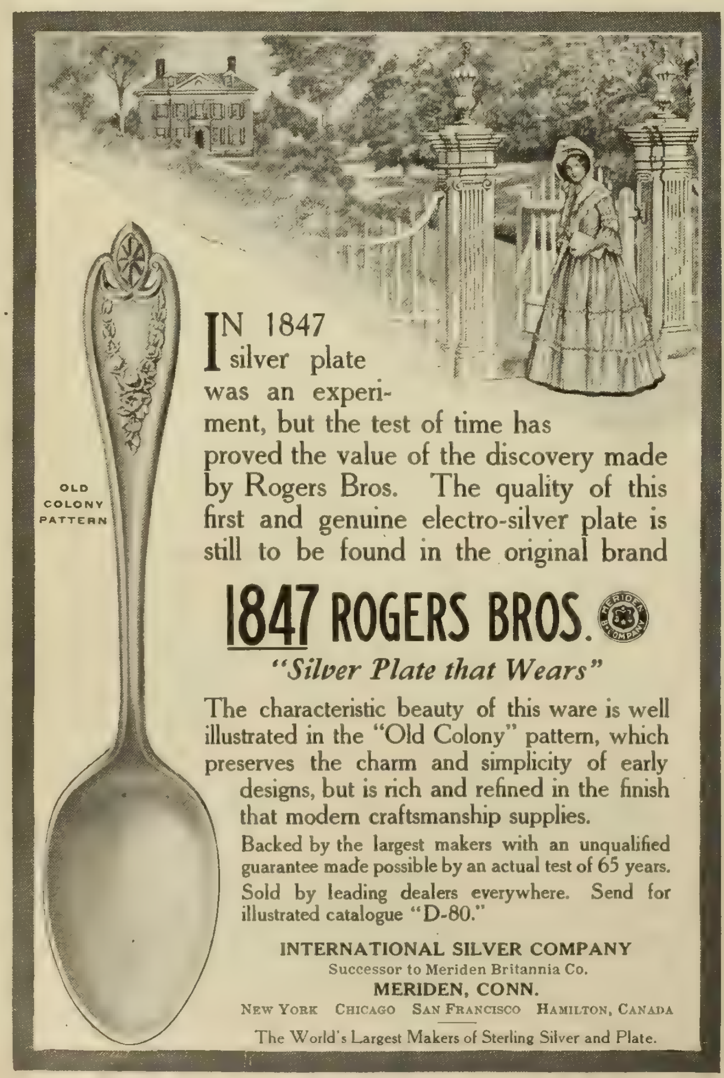
1500 MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS
Now in use. For Catalogues, Address
M. P. MÖLLER, HAGERSTOWN, MD.

Church Organs
BUILT BY
Hutchings Organ Co., 18 Tremont Street BOSTON, MASS

15,000 CHURCHES USE THE THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Noiseless, dust-proof, self-collecting, saves ¼ cost other services. Uses shallow glass—no tipping of head. Our SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER makes purchase easy. Outfits on trial—state number of communicants.
Thomas Communion Service Co., Box 1, Lima, Ohio.

A Woman Apostle of Missions

"A rut is the outward and visible sign of incompetence" begins the second article by Mrs. Helen Barrett Montgomery in the series "Let's Talk About Our Work" to appear in THE CONTINENT soon. Its title, "Missionary Ruts, and How to Get Out of Them," will give women vital suggestions for church work. The jolt of a new idea is needed to prevent further corrugation of the King's highway. This article has many applications to all church organizations. Read it aloud at the next meeting of your missionary society. This may be just the stimulus the women need to spur them to better work. Mrs. Montgomery is well known among those who have studied missions and writes with a charming, sympathetic grace. This is but one of the special articles which appear frequently in THE CONTINENT, having a wide application, but written specially for women. In this issue the story of the work of Winifred Holt of New York City will interest every woman. So, too, will "The Sentimentalism of Mrs. Moss," by Elizabeth Price, on the Home Council page. The clever pictures and verse, "The Sleepy Witch," and the story by Frances M. Fox on Young America page will attract the children.



IN 1847 silver plate was an experiment, but the test of time has proved the value of the discovery made by Rogers Bros. The quality of this first and genuine electro-silver plate is still to be found in the original brand

1847 ROGERS BROS.

"Silver Plate that Wears"

The characteristic beauty of this ware is well illustrated in the "Old Colony" pattern, which preserves the charm and simplicity of early designs, but is rich and refined in the finish that modern craftsmanship supplies.

Backed by the largest makers with an unqualified guarantee made possible by an actual test of 65 years. Sold by leading dealers everywhere. Send for illustrated catalogue "D-80."

INTERNATIONAL SILVER COMPANY
Successor to Meriden Britannia Co.
MERIDEN, CONN.
NEW YORK CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO HAMILTON, CANADA

The World's Largest Makers of Sterling Silver and Plate.

Registered Trade Mark Established Half a Century

Washable Dress Fabrics

Spring and Summer 1913

Additional shipments just arrived from abroad complete our collection for the coming season. Particular attention is directed to the following lines:

French Crepes, in all white, with embroidered dots, self stripes or white grounds with colored stripes, also solid colors, 75c to $1.50 a yard.

"Ratines," a most unusual assortment of this popular fabric, in white and plain shades, two-toned mixtures and a most comprehensive assortment of black and white effects. 40 to 46 inches wide, at $1.00 to $2.25 a yard.

The assortment also includes the newest weaves and designs in Dress Linens, Shirtings, Ginghams, Repps, Poplins, Ottoman Cords, Piques, Voiles, Dimities, Crepes, Embroidered Swiss and Batiste, Oxford Percales and washable Silk Galatea and Kindergarten Cloth.

Samples of any of these lines, except bordered materials, mailed upon request

JAMES McCUTCHEON & CO.
5th Ave., 33d & 34th Sts., New York

An Improved Self-Pronouncing

OXFORD TEACHERS' BIBLE

with new illustrations, new and up-to-date twentieth century helps arranged under one alphabet, making it a practical Bible Dictionary, including index, concordance, glossary, weights, measures, coins, botany, etc., brevier type (see sample below), 8vo, size 8½x5½ inches, French Morocco, divinity circuit, round corners, red under gold edges.

Judgment of Moab JEREMIAH, 48.

therein: then the men shall cry, and all the inhabitants of the land shall howl.
3 At the [b]noise of the stamping of the hoofs of his strong horses, at the

B.C. c. 600.
[a]Judg. 5. 23.
1 Sam. 15. 3, 9.
1 Kin. 20. 42.

10 [a]Cursed be he of the LORD [2]dec
be he that keepe
from blood.

This handsome Bible will be sent postpaid to any reader of The Continent who will send one new yearly subscriber to The Continent at the regular price of $2.50. If it is not convenient for you to secure a new subscriber and you have no friend not already taking it, to whom you want to send a year's subscription as a present, then you may have the Bible, postage prepaid, for $1.75. Be sure to state that it is the New Oxford Teachers' Bible you want.

509 So. Wabash Ave.
Chicago, Ill.

The Continent

156 Fifth Ave.
New York City, N. Y.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, No. 15 APRIL 10, 1913 WHOLE No. 2237

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

On Guard for Arbitration

ARE YOU ALERT ON THE ARBITRATION QUESTION?

It is important that you should be. The issue developed over the Panama tolls law by Great Britain's protest against it has come to a juncture which calls for the closest attention of good citizens.

It scarcely seems time as yet for an aggressive demonstration of public opinion on the subject. But the state of the question is such that almost any moment may bring on that necessity.

And men of community influence throughout the nation ought to be watching narrowly the progress of the matter, so as not to miss the moment for action when it comes.

* * *

A new Congress, succeeding the one which passed the Panama tolls act, has just assembled, and its attitude on this subject is not indicated. Other more urgent issues may postpone this.

Certainly men who live by the golden rule have no liking for needless attempts to put Congress under the coercion of public sentiment. If the people's representatives are at all of a mind to do the right and just thing, it is pleasanter all around to let them do it on their own motion.

Only when it is clearly apparent that Congress, if let alone, will swing in with narrow-minded arguments of jingoism or private interest, does the pressure of a heavy hand from the disinterested mass of the people become imperative.

That pressure it would certainly have been necessary to apply in this case with all possible weight if the late Congress had had a longer lease of life. Unfortunately, in that body the senate at least was pretty clearly in possession of men with whom a contract held only so long as the advantage of keeping it was on their side.

But the new administration gives encouragement to those who believe that national honor like personal honor is kept only by doing the square thing when it threatens loss just as when it promises gain. And if this is the temper of the executive department on foreign matters, there is reason for trusting the same ideals to influence the new Congress.

At least, the senate in any event should have opportunity to show whether it regards the arbitration treaties ratified by the United States as binding our government to arbitrate when there is strong chance of a verdict adverse, precisely the same as if it were sure of a verdict favorable.

But if the senators waver again—if they show themselves of the sort to bluff out a bad case by stubbornly locking it up from the scrutiny of justice—then there will be nothing to do but let loose on them the storm of an altogether different public opinion—the opinion that America cannot afford any policy which it is afraid to leave with just judges.

And just Americans must take care to make it a sufficient storm—the kind that there is no escaping.

* * *

Influential and earnest men are working at this subject along the line of persuading Congress to repeal the bill for Panama tolls. And this would be an excellent way of solving the problem.

That would, of course, wipe out the British grievance. And there is on record the best of expert authority for saying that American coast-to-coast shipping through the Panama canal would not suffer if the proposed exemption from tolls were revoked.

Nevertheless, it is necessary to recognize that this proposal to repeal the law does not, in existing conditions, offer a basis on which the solid moral feeling of the whole nation can be assembled.

The moral issue to be fought out is the simple question whether the United States shall keep its plighted word and stick to its professed principles at all costs.

Care must be taken to make that single, uncomplicated issue so plain that any man taking the contrary side of it shall be compelled to come out in favor of dishonesty and promise-breaking. That way only can there be a solid lining up of all honest Americans.

If the Panama tolls act unmistakably broke the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which guarantees equal British rights in the canal, it of itself would serve as such a test. It would have been that clearly enough if it had passed in its original form—exempting all American vessels from paying for use of the canal.

But under its amended provisions, the portion of American shipping which is to have free use of the canal is traffic between American ports only—in which, by long settled policy of the United States, no vessel of any other nationality is permitted to compete. On this account it is impossible to say without question that any other nation will be discriminated against if this class of shipping alone receives special favors at the canal.

Room for honest difference of opinion must accordingly be admitted at this point. And that means that attempts to erect a test of honor and conscience on the repeal of the law would turn out futile.

* * *

But there is another phase of the question which has no doubtful aspects whatever—which is so clear-cut that it divides with the most elementary exactness between honor and dishonor. On that the moral issue can be drawn without dispute.

And it is the business now of the Christian citizenship of the country to stand up square at that line of demarkation, and see to it that maneuvering politicians don't shift the question.

At this line it is a simple proposition of faith or faithlessness.

The United States has a compact with Great Britain of years' standing, pledging that disputes about the interpretation of treaties shall go to arbitration.

Now Great Britain says that America's canal tolls law, granting special privileges to American vessels trading coast to coast, violates the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. America says that it does not.

A perfectly plain case of dispute over the interpretation of a treaty. And that is the kind of question which the United States has promised to arbitrate.

If now America does not arbitrate, it is a promise-breaker. And a willful promise-breaker is just about the most inexcusable and despicable of sinners.

And an inexcusable and despicable sinner our loved republic must never be permitted to become.

There is a standard to which every upright American can assuredly be rallied. But it will fall largely to the church, as the ordained prophet of righteousness among men, to send forth the rallying call and to preach compellingly this ideal of national honor.

Let the church watch and be ready for the duty if the hour comes which requires it.

The World

Congress Grapples with Tariff and Income Tax

The new Congress, which met for the first time on Monday, has set out to reduce the tariff and establish an income tax. Wool and clothing materials, meats and other foodstuffs are definitely on the free list, the rate on steel is to be cut, but the final fixing of the tax on sugar is still an open question. President Wilson declared for a sugar tariff of 1 per cent a pound for three years, with free sugar after that time. Income taxes were tentatively placed at 1 per cent on all corporation incomes above $5,000 and the same on personal incomes from $4,000 to $20,000; 2 per cent from $20,000 to $50,000; 3 per cent from the last named amount to $100,000. Some interesting speculation is being indulged in as to the amount of income tax that some wealthy men will have to pay, beginning with $2,000,000 for John D. Rockefeller, $120,000 for Mrs. Hetty Green and $90,000 for J. Ogden Armour.

President Wilson's announcement that he himself would read his message to the senate and house from the floor of the representatives' chamber—thereby breaking a precedent that Presidents' messages should be transmitted in printed form and read perfunctorily by a clerk—created a tremendous stir in political and official circles in the capital.

Magazine Editor to Be Ambassador to England

President Wilson's most notable appointment since his cabinet selections is that of Walter H. Page as ambassador to Great Britain, a post vacated by the death of Whitelaw Reid. Mr. Page is the editor of The World's Work magazine and a member of a prominent publishing firm. He has been editor of The Forum and The Atlantic Monthly and is known as a man of letters. He has skill as a public speaker and has been actively interested in public affairs, though not as an office holder except through membership in Roosevelt's country life commission. He is far less wealthy than most of his predecessors at the Court of St. James. The practice of late years has been to appoint men of wealth to represent the United States at European countries in order that they may meet the financial demands associated with the office. This idea does not meet with Mr. Wilson's approval.

Devastating Work of the Great Floods

Sad and pathetic, soul-stirring and heroic are the echoes that came from the flood districts of Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Illinois. For example, there was Shawneetown, Illinois, a place of 3,000 people, a substantial and prosperous town. One night last week all that was left of it were a few brick and stone buildings on the main street and 100 persons in the upper stories of these buildings. A tempest of wind had completed the destruction begun by the opening of the levee, for it had lashed the broad waters of the Ohio into a rolling, tossing sea. Between the churning waters and the southwest gale, frame buildings fell to pieces, and the inhabitants as well as the militia fled to refugee camps on the hills when the levees began to crumble. And yet with the receding of the freshwater ocean the people regained hope and will restore the town.

The Red Cross and the federal and state governments continued their relief work, but the sudden and overwhelming nature of the calamity left many localities without the bare necessaries of existence and without means of communication and transportation. Consequently there was widespread suffering in spite of earnest intentions and efforts to alleviate.

The subject of flood prevention is now, more than ever, engaging the attention of farmers, business men, engineers and statesmen. Theodore Roosevelt, writing in The Outlook, urges that the whole Mississippi watershed be treated as a unit from the mouths of the streams to their sources through the complete coordination by act of Congress of all federal bureaus having anything to do with the work—and thus "lift the rivers out of politics."

Three Years in Prison for Mrs. Pankhurst

Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the recognized leader of the British "furies," as the militant advocates of woman's suffrage are sometimes called, was last Thursday found guilty and sentenced to three years' penal servitude on the charge of inciting persons to commit damage. In the course of a public speech Mrs. Pankhurst had previously shouldered responsibility for the burning of the country house of Chancellor Lloyd George. She was sentenced as a second offender. At the trial no evidence was offered in her favor, but she made a long address on the movement which she and her supporters now regard as synonymous with violence.

This is the most serious penalty, by far, yet imposed upon the militants. Instead of having a deterrent effect it was followed by new and more bitter threats, accompanied by destruction of property, such as railway cars and private houses. The original campaign of agitation has apparently developed into an organized warfare against society as a whole.

Friends and relatives of Miss Zelie Emerson, the Michigan young woman who was lately sentenced to Holloway jail in company with other women for acts of vandalism committed in the name of the cause of suffrage, have been making earnest efforts to obtain her release. Miss Emerson started the now common "hunger strike" in jail, and, it is reported, has since been forcibly fed by the prison physicians and attendants, with resulting injury to her health. The matter has been brought to the attention of the American embassy at London and also to the Washington authorities, but the response was that nothing could be done for the American girl if she had been properly convicted and received the same treatment as that given the English prisoners.

Montenegro Bars Peace; Defies the Powers

Persistent Montenegro blocked Balkan peace negotiations last week, utterly refusing to be either coaxed or coerced into stopping the siege of Scutari, the city in northwestern Albania which stood as the sole vestige of Turkish power in the long stretch of country between the Adriatic and the Tchatalja chain of forts on the outskirts of Constantinople. As little Montenegro was the first nation to begin the war, so it would be the last to end it. King Nicholas has made no gains compared with the successes of his three allies, yet Scutari seems a logical part of a greater Montenegro, and he desperately vowed to make it his new capital. Servia actively supported him. The concert of Europe, influenced by Austria, willed otherwise, and when diplomatic warnings were unheeded ten foreign warships blockaded the Montenegrin seaport of Antivari. Austria sent four, Italy and Germany, France and England the remainder. Russia was acquiescent. The English admiral acted as spokesman. The spectacle of the largest European nations being defied by one of the smallest was not expected to last long, but the situation on Monday was incongruous and unprecedented.

Turkey accepted unconditionally the offer and terms of mediation proposed by the powers, but the allies countered by asking that the frontiers of the future kingdom of Albania be delimitated in advance, also that the demand for a war indemnity be accepted "in principle." The eastern frontier of Thrace is not definitely settled, but it is agreed that the Ottoman empire will have nothing left but the far southeastern corner of Europe.

Plans for the new kingdom have progressed so far that a king has been chosen—the duke of Montpensier, a nephew of King Ferdinand of Bulgaria, of the long line of royal Bourbons in France, a grandson of Louis Philippe. He is a young man of large stature, athletic and accomplished. He will have a half civilized tribal people to reign over, and once launched the new state will probably be watched with more covetousness than good will by its neighbors.

Big Prize for Flight Over Atlantic

Lord Northcliffe, owner of The London Daily Mail, last week offered a prize of $50,000 to the first person to fly over the Atlantic in a hydro-aeroplane in not more than seventy-two continuous hours, either east or west, the contest open to all nationalities. On the heels of the offer came an announcement that Rodman Law and Henry Bingham Brown would make the attempt next July in a machine to be constructed in Marblehead, Massachusetts, and starting from Newfoundland. It is planned to maintain an altitude of 1,200 feet and make the trip in thirty-six hours, with one stop in midocean to take on fresh fuel from a steamship. Several steamship lines are reported to be willing to cooperate in this particular. Other equipment is to include five pounds of food in thermos bottles, compass, night glasses, rockets and signal lights. The weight of the machine complete, exclusive of the aviators, will be 500 pounds. The two men are to alternately sleep and steer.

According to the president of the Aero Club of America, Allen R. Hawley, crossing the Atlantic in an airship is now only a question of time, and The London Mail's offer will do much to shorten the time. The main difficulties to be overcome are the carrying of sufficient gasoline and the keeping of a direct course. Count Lambert, inventor of a hydroplane, declares the feat possible with calm weather and a slight following wind. On the other hand, several British and French aviators say the ocean flight will not be practicable for another two years, and that the financial cost would exceed the amount of the proposed prize.

✢ ✢

Great Claims Made for German Airships

The Germans have not yet been heard from in connection with the transatlantic prize, but it is reported that the Zeppelin military airships have succeeded in taking on gas and fuel from a naval collier, and that using a naval fleet as their base the Zeppelins can cross the ocean, carrying bombs and machine guns if necessary. This result is said to have been achieved as the result of ten years' quiet experimenting. Color is lent to these reports by the fact that the new German army budget calls for over $19,000,000 to be devoted to military aviation, with $5,000,000 to be added later on.

German official circles were much disturbed last week by a mishap to a big Zeppelin carrying ten passengers which was being tested by German army officers. The pilot lost his way in the clouds so that he landed at Luneville in France on a cavalry parade ground instead of in the home land. The French officers were quick to take advantage of the opportunity to acquaint themselves with German secrets of air warship construction.

✢ ✢

To Stop Naval Construction for a Year

Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, after asking the British house of commons to appropriate $231,500,000 for naval expenditures, on top of $141,000,000 wanted for the army, recently came forward with a definite proposal that Germany and Great Britain agree to cancel their program of naval construction for the year 1914. Mr. Churchill also invited all the world to join in a naval vacation for a year, so far as new building was concerned. Scores of millions were being squandered each year, he declared, without making any real difference in the relative naval strength of the nations.

As Great Britain has demonstrated its power and determination to outbuild all other nations, its proposal of a limitation by national agreement comes with great force. Germany has not heretofore been inclined to respond to the suggestion, but the fact that Germany is just now exerting herself greatly to increase the army establishment should incline her to be more responsive to the Churchill hint. Germany's extra army expenditure next year is to reach the enormous sum of a quarter of a billion dollars, and France has consequently felt compelled to follow suit.

French and German Socialists are endeavoring to end the traditional enmity between the two nations, and at a congress in Brest a few days ago French Socialists took the ground that the present rivalry of arms in the name of peace was provocative of war. The congress further decided to undertake energetic action in favor of a Franco-German understanding and international arbitration. In Alsace-Lorraine, the former French province taken forty years ago by Germany, the socialists have affirmed that they do not want "revenge" which would bring the two nations into conflict.

Religious World

Free Church Men of England in Council

The Free Church Council of England has just held an inspiring meeting in Newcastle-on-Tyne. The opening sermon was preached by the retiring president, Dr. Thomas Mitchell, and immediately afterwards the new president, Rev. Alexander Connell, took the chair and launched out on the annual presidential address, which is characterized as a "stately deliverance." Mr. Connell is a Presbyterian, successor of "Ian Maclaren" in the great Sefton Park church at Liverpool. The dominant note of his address was a warning of the perils involved in the popular loss of "God-consciousness." His text was the recent remark of a national leader, "We have somehow lost our grip on God." A whole session was later devoted to papers and addresses on "spiritual power," in which the same serious criticism was repeated.

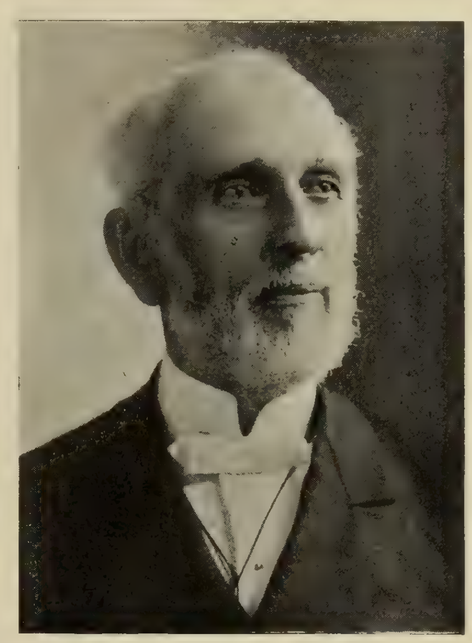
Resolutions were adopted calling upon the Liberal government to pass the long delayed bill relieving Nonconformist taxpayers from contributing money to the support of public schools under charge of the Church of England and demanding a larger national contribution to the erection of schools independent of church control. Demands were likewise made on the government for a revival of the temperance reform bill which failed in 1908 and for measures that will suppress in Calcutta and Bombay the sale of opium for export to China.

The friendly disposition of at least a certain portion of the Church of England was expressed toward Free churches by the attendance at the council of the bishop of Newcastle and Canon Hensley Henson. Canon Henson praised the Nonconformists for anticipating the Established Church in recognizing and answering the needs of the unchristianized world, especially Africa. Rev. F. B. Meyer was reelected secretary of the council for another year, and in accordance with the British custom, Rev. F. Luke Wiseman, now president of the Wesleyan Methodists, was designated as president of the Free Church Council for the year beginning next spring.

✢ ✢

A Gentle Prince of the Heavenly Kingdom

The "grand old man" of the Presbyterian Church, the beloved Dr. Wilson Phraner, slept away into the eternal life at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Frank B. Arthur of Brooklyn, on the night of April 4. Eight months past the ninetieth anniversary of his birth, Dr. Phraner was, in the beautiful imagery of the ancient Bible poet, a sheaf fully ripened for the garnering, and his going away cannot be thought of with lamentation. Rather, the memorial word to be spoken, as the volume of his life is closed, is a word of thanksgiving and joy for such a life so fully lived and so long. No spirit gentler or truer has ever been vouchsafed by the Heavenly Father to express in this world the tender compassions of his Son, nor one more faithful. For Dr. Phraner was tireless in his labor for the kingdom up till the very end of his ninetieth year, when the sudden collapse of the bodily vigor which had persisted until that time almost unimpaired, betokened his approaching release into the higher life.



Wilson Phraner, D. D.

As late as October, 1911, when more than 89 years of age, the wonderful old veteran was out on one of those home mission journeys among the synods in which he so greatly delighted and which made him so widely known and deeply loved among Presbyterians. At the last General Assembly in May, 1912, he was also present to advocate with eloquent simplicity the cause that had always lain so near his heart. His voice always rang as true as his character. Certainly no life that ever touched in any wise the life of Dr. Phraner failed to receive from him stimulus to faith, kindliness and consecration.

Dr. Phraner's most notable service in the ministry was his thirty-five years' pastorate in First church of Ossining, New York. There, at length, however, he broke down in health and was told that he had less than a year to live. With that prospect before him, twenty-seven years ago, he resigned and started on a trip around the world, with a special desire of seeing once more his eldest son, Rev. Stanley Phraner, a missionary in Siam. But it was the son whose labors were near an end, not the father, for the father survived the son by nearly a quarter of a century. Recovering strength, Dr. Phraner returned to settle in East Orange, New Jersey, and there became the associate pastor of Munn Avenue church, where his unfailing sympathies made him peculiarly welcome in house-to-house visitation, in which he was indefatigable. But he would accept no salary, stipulating instead as a consideration for his services that the church should support Dr. Milton Greene in the Home Board's service at Havana. In two different terms, preceding and succeeding his illness of twenty-five years ago, Dr. Phraner served as a member of the Home Board for over thirty years, and nowhere else will he be so much missed as in the councils of that body.

Editorial

What Is the Use?

IN CROMWELL'S day there was a sagacious member of parliament named John Ashe, to whom Carlyle has erected a verbal monument. A motion was made to thank a certain preacher who had occupied the desk in parliament on a monthly fast day. Poor Ashe's patience was exhausted, and he arose to object, "What is the use of thanking a preacher who spoke so low that nobody could hear him?" We suspect a long-suffering public would have seconded that motion with great tumult. What is the use of thanking any man who does a good thing badly? If a preacher lets his voice fall at the end of the sentences, in an effort to be impressive, or if he makes a din in speaking and is so loud that his hearers are worn out at the end of the sermon, why should anyone thank him?

For that matter, why should anyone thank a Sunday school teacher who persistently comes so late that his class has grown restless? Shall anyone thank an organist who acts as though he were a soloist instead of a congregational accompanist, or a precentor who fails the congregation when it is depending upon him for leadership? Shall anyone thank a janitor who has the church so cold one Sunday, and so warm the next, that the minister cannot combat it successfully with the congregation? What is the use, we repeat, of thanking anyone who does a good thing badly?

And yet if we insisted upon that too carefully some of us would lose half our thanks. We are in danger of doing our fine things in a poor way, of spoiling our good deeds by some avoidable fault. We let our good be evil spoken of. The apostle urges that those who show mercy shall do it with cheerfulness. That carries with it the suggestion that it is possible to show mercy in a cheerless fashion. And it is. A man sometimes gives a thousand dollars to a project, but his gift chills the heart of the receiver; it is made in such a mean fashion. Of course the giver must be thanked; but deep in the heart of the man who receives it there is sometimes a wish that he could throw it back in his face.

Other men can say "No" so graciously, or, better still, can make their gifts so graciously, that the receiver is heartened by it. It is too bad that people think so readily about the faults in good deeds, but we cannot much blame them. If we are to preach, let us do it so that men can honestly thank us for it. If we are to do good, let us do it so that evil cannot be spoken of it. If we are to show mercy, let it be with cheerfulness.

Assembly-Reduction Overture in a Nutshell

Let members of presbytery stick a pin here. Any man who votes for the pending overture for reducing the size of General Assembly must be prepared to stand up for this proposition:

In a democratic church with a republican form of government it is right and just for a minority, having already a majority representation in the denomination's legislature, to reduce still further the minority representation of the majority in order to save a little money.

Any presbyter who thinks this an impossible proposition must vote against the overture, for there is no evading the fact that just this is what the overture means.

Simply a Contest Between Progress and Reaction

It is to be hoped that the church by this time well understands that the controversy now centering around the Board of Home Missions is a controversy not over expenditures, as some would represent, but a controversy over policies. What the church is face to face with is a determined effort to reverse the board's whole program—to divert its line of march toward entirely different ends. And on that issue Presbyterians must be prepared to give their voice pro or con.

When analyzed to the base, the contentions of the board's critics become more understandable. The motive of their agitation is exactly the same spirit which accounts for "stand-patism" in politics. The Presbyterian Church has before it today, as the nation has had in recent political campaigns, the choice between reaction and progress. And all this is made the plainer when on study it appears that the main substance of complaint against the board is in reality a complaint against the one great modern improvement of the business world, "scientific management." Just what has been hailed in business life as a tremendous stroke for efficiency the reactionary spirit in the church bitterly blames the board for adopting.

The very essence of the "scientific management" idea is to multiply superintendency. Each worker is to have the advantage of working with an expert adviser, set not to "boss" him but to help him by showing him how to eliminate every motion that does not count for effect in the line of his work. And that is what the Board of Home Missions has been doing—giving isolated workers in local fields the aid of expert counsel from men who out of long experience can advise how to do a given piece of work with the least possible lost motion. But this is the very thing called waste by the gentlemen who are attacking the board. Of course "scientific management" costs, yet trade and industry say it is economical nevertheless because it so greatly increases results. But improvement of efficiency is overlooked entirely by these church critics. They see nothing in the case but the mere bookkeeping fact that a larger number of high-class men than formerly are drawing salaries in the main or subordinate offices of the board.

An equally significant contrast between the modern trend and the position of these "stand-pat" Presbyterians is notable in the dispute over the Cortez church in Colorado to which Secretary Thompson alluded in his recent public reply to Dr. Joseph L. Weaver. The newer conception of home missions looks on the work as effort to advance Christianity; therefore the board refused to give money to plant a Presbyterian congregation where Christianity is already represented adequately by other organizations. But the older notion counts it the business of home missions to extend the Presbyterian name and order; therefore Dr. Weaver insists on having a Presbyterian church in Cortez regardless of the Congregationalists, the Methodists or any other denomination occupying the place beforehand. It is not needful to impute a motive of retaliation to Dr. Weaver in order to explain the national war on the board which he has inaugurated since this incident; as long as these two views stand in opposition war between them is an "irrepressible conflict." It might just as well be fought out to a decision early as late.

But in a fellowship so long and deeply imbued with progress as is Presbyterianism, the outcome cannot be dubious. The reactionaries in this matter are confronting inevitable defeat.

Loyalty That Has Come to Be Costly

In all this country there is nobody making a finer fight than William R. Moody to observe the Bible injunction, "Remove not the ancient landmark which thy fathers have set." When Dwight L. Moody died and left to the care of his son the Northfield schools, the last and dearest interest of his heart, it was with a solemn injunction that the institutions must always be kept accessible to poor boys and girls. The elder Moody had calculated that a boy or girl worth educating could manage to earn and save $100 in vacation, but not likely more than that. Therefore he planned the schools so that any student entering at the beginning of a year with $100 would be kept through until the next summer vacation. The rest of the cost of keeping the institution open depended on solicitation from sympathetic givers outside. And that was the burden which fell on the shoulders of the son William. As cost of living has mounted up of late years, the burden has constantly got heavier. School expenses each year increase, but the contribution from the students still sticks at $100 apiece. Many of the trustees associated with Mr. Moody are telling him that he is foolish to hold to the old standard when times have changed so greatly. But he realizes that $100 is still $100 to young folks struggling for a chance in the world and increasing the tuition charge would shut out many of the poorest students. And that he feels would be recreant to his father's purpose. So the loyal son fights every proposition for making his own task easier and plods steadfastly on in his path of fidelity, which now obliges him to raise from the benevolent $120,000 every year to meet current expenses.

Dubious Partnership Better Dissolved

It is easy for anybody who knows Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst to understand why he writes daily for the Hearst newspapers of New York and Chicago. The Hearst newspapers have a tremendous constituency among metropolitan masses that the church never touches, and the opportunity of speaking to these people a daily word in favor of righteousness must have seemed to Dr. Parkhurst a chance to extend his ministry which he had no right to ignore. But though he writes sincerely for righteousness' sake, there is evidence every day that the Hearst management is not by any means concerned to use him for righteousness' sake. When across the front page of the paper, in "scarehead" type, one reads, "Dr. Parkhurst sees brutal prize fight; describes debasing exhibition for The Evening Journal," one can readily believe that Dr. Parkhurst is trying to put down prize fighting, but one is also compelled to believe that in actuality Dr. Parkhurst is being used to stimulate public zest for prize fighting. The "debasing exhibition" he has been induced to describe is served up by the Hearst minions in a way to make impressionable boys and coarse men gloat over it. In fact, Dr. Parkhurst's experiment in extending his ministry in this fashion seems a sorry failure, and we believe all his friends will rejoice when he withdraws from a partnership which is more compromising to him than it is beneficial to those whom he hoped to reach.

What Three Students Said of City Churches

A New York church member who went to look for three young university students one Sabbath morning with the idea of inviting them to church routed them all out of bed at 9:30 in the morning. "Where do you fellows go to church?" The answer was, "We don't go anywhere. No one goes to church in New York."

"But you always attended church at home," the caller pursued. To this their answer was:

"Well, we do sometimes go at night, but not to any regular place, for no one seems to care whether we come a second time or not."

Of course three young fellows, probably not too anxious to go to church anyhow, do not constitute a whole commentary on metropolitan church life. But yet the telling of this story ought to make city laymen everywhere look more alive for young fellows wandering into the congregation who look like college students or young office men, new to the city and strange to its associations. For that matter, the same lesson ought to apply to any kind of young man, no difference what he looks like.

—It is not surprising that the Board of Publication is laboring to induce Judge Willson to withdraw his resignation and continue as its president. In twenty-five years as the presiding officer of that great agency of the church Judge Willson has wrought himself into the whole structure of the organization, and his associates cannot help being shaken when he tries to draw himself out. Its president's influence in this quarter of a century has imbued the board with a unique admixture of conservatism and progressiveness which has pleased perfectly neither the conservatives nor the progressives, but which has been, none the less, efficient in getting on continually to new service and larger adaptations. There is no reason to think the daily papers are right in saying that Judge Willson has resigned because of indignation at the action of Assembly's committee on graded lessons. The judge has come to those years when men naturally wish to reduce their responsibilities, and that motive alone is quite enough to account for his resignation. Yet it is true that Judge Willson has stood steadily for the graded lessons, and there is both absurdity and irony in the intimation that there can be peril to Presbyterian belief in what a man of his stamp has indorsed.

—The Roman idea of church administration—imperialistic, as it is all the way through—has hard going when it gets up against democratic American principles concerning the tenure of church property. St. George's congregation in Shenandoah, Pennsylvania, claimed the right to name its own trustees, chosen in election by the parishioners themselves. Of course the archbishop at Philadelphia objected, since church law makes him the sole owner of all church edifices in his jurisdiction. But the civil court where the case was carried held against the archbishop, saying that the church at Shenandoah belongs to the laymen who paid for it. Doubtless, Catholic laymen could obtain the same rights almost everywhere in the country if they were aroused to test the issue.

—Some people talk about the social service platform of the Federal Council of Churches as if that platform were the whole of the council. Objectors allege it as proof that the council is "one-sided." But the charge of one-sidedness is sheer ignorance. The council has commissions on evangelism and missions and education and domestic life which are just as much a part of its scheme as the social service commission is. Better read all those reports before you conclude that the social service platform, good as it is, comprehends all that the Federal Council stands for.

—"The lift of the world today is toward a new recognition of the importance of religion." That is the opinion of Henry King Hanna as advertising man. If an advertising man is willing to go on record that way, surely every minister ought to believe at least as much, and that would rule out pessimism from the church completely.

—When President Benjamin Harrison sat down first at his cabinet table with his chosen advisers it was noted as a curious circumstance that every secretary in the cabinet save one was a member of the same church to which the President belonged—the Presbyterian. The remaining secretary was not so very far away from Presbyterianism—he was a Congregationalist. It was a most plausible chance for somebody to say—a Catholic, for example—that the Presbyterians had plotted to capture the government. Yet nobody said it, and in point of fact the identity of church relations was absolutely a chance coincidence, which nobody had realized before the members of the cabinet were nominated and confirmed. Of course the histories of Presbyterianism and Romanism are so very different that there is much greater reason to suspect Rome of coveting civil power for ecclesiastical reasons. But with all that, it is fair to realize that coincidences of this sort do happen without design, and it is no more just to suppose that every Catholic appointed to public office represents a plot of the clergy than it would be to interpret in the same way the much more frequent appointment of Presbyterians and Methodists, and so on.

—The question where President Wilson would attend church in Washington turns out to be rather a question whether he can go to church in peace at all. In the first three Sundays of his administration he was obliged literally to sneak away to some church where he was not expected in order to avoid impertinent and gaping crowds. And he could not go to any one church twice. Certainly it seems that there ought to be among right-minded Americans enough decent respect for Mr. Wilson's simplicity and sincerity as a religious man to permit him to attend worship where he prefers without the intrusion of curious strangers upon him. The right kind of delicacy would confine the attendance at the church where the President worships to the congregation which is naturally affiliated with that sanctuary.

—Dr. Alfred H. Barr of Baltimore, preaching this spring a series of four historical sermons on lessons for the church of today from the church of the first four Christian centuries, supplied his audience each evening with a printed syllabus of the points he proposed to discuss. This outline not only made good advertising for the sermons, when distributed in advance of the services, but particularly was it valuable for what it enabled hearers to "carry away with them." Certainly a sermon conforming to a syllabus held in the hand of a hearer is bound to make a more lasting impression than where the listener has no aid either to anticipate what is coming or to remember what is past. Why should not the custom of sermon syllabi become general?

—The Indian bureau is going to try to get Congress to extend the prohibition against selling liquor to Indians, so that the sale of opium, cocaine, Indian hemp and especially mescal bean shall be equally interdicted. The craze for mescal has been growing rapidly on the reservations, being identified with the development of a secret cult which is half religion and half a sort of freemasonry, and so peculiarly appealing to the superstitious strain in Indian character. The mescal intoxication is more mystical than ordinary whisky intoxication, inducing transports in which visions appear, but it is not on that account any less demoralizing.

—Dr. Henry van Dyke, who has spent the winter in California, delivered this spring the annual Founders' Day address for Leland Stanford University. He took for his theme "The Liberty Wherewith Christ Has Made Us Free." He said: "There are three kinds of law which condition us—natural, social and moral. They are not contrary to liberty but essential to it. Liberty does not consist in doing what you like but in liking to do what you can, what you may and what you ought." The neat fitting of this last triple phrase to the triple distinction of natural, social and moral law, is a bit of wisdom quite characteristic of Dr. van Dyke's luminous mind.

—It may perhaps relieve some misapprehension for The Continent to state that The Chicago Journal, whose crusade against Mormonism we have advised Christian citizens to assist, is not a Hearst publication.

Jots and Tittles

—The man most concerned about the best way to heaven is generally the one who doesn't want to go.

—Charity is too often a cup of cold water given a disciple that the giver himself did not want.

—Finding fault with another's religion is an indirect apology for its absence in ourselves.

—Criticism of others is self-flattery in its most offensive form.

—Prejudice is often opinion gone to seed.

BY ROBERT FRANCIS COYLE

Change the Man First of All

WE REMEMBER the man in gospel story who swept his house and swept it once again, the man who did nothing else but sweep, and what came of all his labor. He was a crank about getting the dirt out and the evil spirit out, but he neglected the vastly more important matter of getting the good spirit of life in. The result was that seven other spirits, more wicked than the first, came back and took possession and conditions were worse than ever. Let society be the house, and the illustration is just as pertinent. Society must have John the Baptists, it must be swept and garnished, the bad and the foul and the unclean must be driven out, but if John the Baptist is not followed by Jesus, if the positive does not come after the negative, if the good seed is not dropped in where the fire has consumed, the whole movement of society will be downward.

While there were two sides to the mission of our Lord, it is deeply and divinely significant that excoriation and attack were kept subordinate. He did not make a business of denouncing the evils of his time. His ministry was negative and he indulged in prohibitions only in a very limited degree. Evils were certainly numerous enough. On every hand he saw oppression and injustice and tyranny and vices and immoralities of all sorts. He saw the laborer enslaved, treated more like a brute than a man, but where or when did he enter the lists against greed and capital and special privilege? He saw soldiers of the Roman empire everywhere, armies with their officers and hirelings draining away the resources of the people, but never once did he cry out against militarism. He did say, "Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's and unto God the things that are God's." He saw the social evil scattering its poison, claiming its victims by thousands, but nowhere do we find him thundering against it, or forming committees and starting movements for its eradication.

Christ's Concern Went to the Heart of Things

What then? Was he indifferent to those wrongs and injustices and iniquities? Was he unconcerned about the masses and about the fallen and about social conditions, and did he mean to teach us to be? Nay verily. No one ever so interested in human welfare, and no one ever so set upon getting rid of the forces that were destroying mankind. But his concern went to the very heart of things. It was not blotches and ulcers on the skin but the poison in the blood; not the muddy stream with its impurities and its stench but the fountain head out of which it came. He would not waste his time and expend his strength upon externals. He knew that the one indispensable condition of all individual reform and all social reform is new life, that it is illogical and impossible to build men and to build society from the outside. A bridge, or a cathedral, or a stone wall may be built in that way, but not a tree or a human body or a civic body, or any organism whatsoever. When we come to life, the process of building must be from the interior out.

Hence the man who attacks the evils he can see, who wields the hammer and knocks at everything in sight, is apt to be very much overrated. He is said to be practical, aggressive, a man who is doing something. In the eyes of the unreflecting he is a wonder, a hero, and frequently he is elected to office as a reward for the way in which he has smashed rings and broken up cliques and cleaned out the Augean stables of graft and greed and vice. Let him be applauded and honored. But I am quite sure he is appraised too highly in comparison with others who do not make anywhere near as much noise. The habit of attack often becomes chronic, but I do not believe that the best friends of society are those who are forever training their guns upon its sins and its wickedness. They are doing something. They are doing much. But a thousand times more are they doing for society, for civilization and the world, who sow the good seed, who instill sound principles and start the healing and constructive forces of life.

How Christ Struck at Great Evils of the Times

Do not misunderstand me. I am simply pleading for a right putting of emphasis, trying to make clear that it is a serious and mischievous mistake in our campaigns and crusades and reform work to lay the burden of stress upon the external. There must be attack. The social evil should be attacked. Moral plague spots should be burned away by the fire of public protest and indignation. No fence of protection should be built around a cesspool, and no quarter should be given to the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor to the destruction that wasteth at noonday. Injustice, impurity, intemperance, all the armies of the night, should be attacked. But they should be attacked in the sanest and most effective way. Jesus attacked. He wielded the hammer of Thor. He made the most tremendous assault upon the works of the devil that was ever made. No bolt from the cloud ever struck as hard as he did. There was never such a leveler, never such a revolutionary as he. He saw society corrupt, wicked, all wrong, and he meant to overturn it and reconstruct it and make it all right, a kingdom of God filled with the Spirit and guided by the principles of the skies, but he meant to do it from within. He announced himself as an incendiary and a divider and a breaker-up, but only as the swelling of life in the seed breaks up the ground and splits the rock and the interior heat of truth kindles the fires of liberty and makes nations shake to their very foundations.

Privilege of birth—he struck at that, and taught that men find their places in the kingdom not by descent, not by pedigree, not because the blue blood of Abraham is in their veins, but because they have been born by the Spirit of God. Prince and pauper must go in at the same door. Privilege of wealth—he struck at that, and taught that money cannot exalt a man or bring divine favor, and that in the kingdom all are brothers, with equal rights and equal duties. Privilege of learning—he struck at that, and taught that the educated scribe is no better than the ignorant toiler. Privilege of priesthood—he struck at that, and made clear that every man has the same right of access to the great God and Father of us all. But he struck from the inside, from within the very citadel of life itself. If this method of building had always been understood and acted upon, the golden age of the world's renewal and redemption would have come long ago.

Change the Man; Then Change Environment

Socialistic advocates place all the emphasis or most of the emphasis where Jesus placed the least. They approach the problems of society from the outside, Jesus approaches them from the inside; they would clean up things by washing the surface, Jesus begins by purifying the heart. The socialist insists upon a new environment, better conditions, better housing, better sanitation, better laws, shorter hours of labor as a remedy for all ills; Jesus insists upon renewing the very springs of life. "Change a man's environment," says the socialist, "and you change the man himself." "Change the man," says Jesus, "and you will change his environment."

I prefer to walk with Jesus. I am sure he is right. I am very sure we shall never have a new society, unless there are first of all new men. What Jesus says to the world is to work for social reform through spiritual renewal. His teaching is that the world's lack is not so much ethical ignorance as ethical impotence, and that its fundamental need is regeneration and not enlightenment. The water supply is impure, and some reformer says, "Decorate the water pipes, paint the pump, make the aqueduct beautiful." Jesus says, "Cleanse the springs, sweeten the sources, remove the taint and the poison from the primal fountain." His message is that there is only one way to bring in the kingdom of God on earth—first of all to produce divine men. I believe his program is absolutely sound. The sea cleanses the slough and the bog and every filthy place along the shore not by the thunder of its waves, not by the might of its onset, but by pouring into them something infinitely better.

What the world needs, what society needs, what the people need to seize them and lift them and transform them, as dead matter is seized upon and lifted and carried up into a rose, or a tree, or a harvest, or a forest, is life. It is not enough to throw out the life line. Life, life, itself is the thing needed; divine energy within. And there will be no twice born men and no new society and no lasting reform until we get it.

His Dignity Would Save Him

What would become of the average minister if his wife didn't take such good care of him? Mrs. Blank is an example of the faithful ministerial helpmeet and guardian, says the recorder of this story. One misty day, as her husband was starting off to officiate at a funeral, she was particularly careful in cautioning him against any sort of exposure.

"Now, John," she concluded, "above all things, don't stand with your bare head on the damp ground, or you'll catch cold."

And John promised he would not.

Winifred Holt, Maiden Mother to the Blind

BY ADA PATTERSON

Here is told the story of how one young woman started and helped a work for the blind which resulted in the recent dedication of a fully equipped settlement house for the sightless in New York City. Music, useful labor and good cheer have been brought to scores and hundreds of darkened lives

WHAT FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE was to the wounded soldier on the battlefield; what Grace Darling was to the sailor adrift on a plank at sea; what Alice Smith is to painted-faced, desperate-eyed women of the streets Winifred Holt has become to the blind. Like theirs, her life is a voluntary service to those in dire need. Like them she has remained unmarried because her work she found an absorbing spouse. She, too, is maiden mother of a tremendous rescue work.

Circumstances pointed to a life of ease and the pursuit of pleasure in the smiling world for Winifred Holt. Born the daughter of Henry Holt, the publisher, a man of wealth, the world seemed a playground to the girl. With the years developed a talent and she was in imminent danger of becoming a dilettante in the noble art of sculpture. 'Twas that art, rather more than the fact that it was in the path of the fashion's trend, that placed her one afternoon at Easter in the garden of a Florentine palace listening to an afternoon concert. In the vine-mantled pergola and on strangely wrought rustic seats beneath trees in that garden in Florence sat leisure folk, the rich, the unhurried, those who all their lives had taken their ease, had never brushed the bloom from delight because of haste, who had had all they wished of the graces and luxuries of existence. Miss Holt's eye swept these groups indifferently, for she had been accustomed all her life to sights like these. Then her gaze ceased its wanderings and dwelt upon a spectacle unique to her.

Miss Winifred Holt

Timidly, half unconsciously, two youths, hand in hand, were making their way from the street along the edge of the sloping, flower-dotted lawn. Their faces were turned toward the summer house that screened the orchestra, as a flower turns toward the sun. But there was in their faces something besides the ecstasy the music inspired. There was a tenseness, an expression of strain. The eyes that were turned toward the bandstand were full of radiant wonder, yet there was an unvarying quality in their gaze. They did not glance from object to object as do normal eyes in a crowd. And in that bright assemblage on that golden Italian afternoon the three youths had another piteous distinction. Over their straight, olive-tinted, handsome features hung as a veil, tempering the joy inspired in their souls by the music, an impenetrable, abiding sadness.

Winifred Holt and her sister, studying the faces of the groping, pathetic youths, exclaimed at the same instant, "They are blind!" "How they enjoy music!" said they both, and said Winifred, "When we go home let us try to bring music to the blind, or the blind to music."

—

Returning to New York, before the bright, full life of the metropolis the pathetic picture in the garden of Florence did not fade from their minds. The girls noted every musical entertainment that winter given in New York, and for nearly every one secured tickets for distribution among the blind.

Accompanied by the young women themselves, or by some friend delegated to the duty, hundreds of the blind of New York that winter enjoyed the concourse of sweet sounds, listening with rapt faces for hours and going back to their homes in a delighted hush their sympathizing friends did not break.

The work it was found could not be spasmodically carried on. Organization, the watchword of the skillful executive, became Miss Holt's motto. The ticket bureau, to which contributions of space at musical entertainments were solicited and from which the pasteboard sesames to the pleasures of sweet concords were distributed, was established.

Out of one avenue of usefulness open others. To Winifred Holt, striving to bring music to ears famishing for it, came the knowledge that it was difficult to find sightless persons in the great human wilderness we call a city. They learned that most of the blind are very poor, that blindness deepens the instinct of poverty to hide itself from the eyes of prosperity. Shunned and shunning, as frightened animals hurry to their holes at the approach of footsteps, the sightless hide from eyes that can see. She tried to ascertain how many blind persons were included in New York's population, and where they lived. Her efforts failed because nobody knew, and nobody knew because there was no census of the blind taken. Miss Holt's efforts did not cease until she brought about, by securing special legislation, the census of the blind in New York. The vista of usefulness to the blind opened to her in yet another direction. She found that out of the timidity and darkness of their lives was born not only a desire for pleasure but that yet more ardent was the wish for work. Miss Holt placed this problem before hoary heads in the domain of practical philanthropy. The hoary heads were shaken. "There is no useful work the blind can do." So spoke an oracle among them. "They must be cared for. They are society's wards. It would be cruel to add to their burden of blindness the other burden of labor."

"But the desire to work, to do something worth while, is a fundamental human craving, like that for food and air and sleep," protested the girl who would lead the blind out of the helplessness of their night.

For answer there was only a renewed shaking of the heads that had grown grizzled in the service of humanity. Miss Holt, daring not to openly pit her brown, luxurious thatch against the gray badges of wisdom, humbly withdrew. But with a whisper resolute as Galileo's own, she said to herself, "Nevertheless, I will find work for the blind."

She went to the central office of the chief telephone company and asked to see the general manager. That official looked with bulging eyes at the low-voiced, self-possessed, handsomely gowned woman who told him that she wished employment for several blind girls at the switchboard. Courteously, yet with an appalling finality, she was told that the idea would be worthier of an inmate of Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane than it was of her.

"But they are intelligent girls, of quick perception. Some of them were well educated before they became blind. I should prefer a blind operator because her sense of hearing is intensely acute. The law of compensation doubles it. It is positively uncanny. If you would only let me bring one of them to the office."

Soon Miss Holt had the pleasure of seeing five sightless girls at the telephone switchboards. Moreover, she had the satisfaction of hearing them praised for their marvelous acuteness of hearing and for their intense application to their tasks.

Some men are afraid of barbers. Miss Holt found work for one who never scarifies the face of a patron.

She arranged for the instruction of blind persons in stenography on a stenographic machine, and from that class went capable secretaries. A prominent New York lawyer employs one whose services he so esteems that he intrusts him to none of the varying fortunes of a journey to his office in subway or elevated trains or by cable cars. He sends his automobile for his factotum each morning and sends him home in it in the evening.

She enabled a bright young man upon whom endless darkness had fallen to prove that though the light had forever failed for him he could provide it for others. He is an expert electrician in the employ of a well known firm.

Remembering the tradition that the Japanese, to render their services more effective, once put out the eyes of their physicians, Miss Holt concluded that blindness was no obstacle to effective massage. Teachers of massage were obtained for blind men, with the result that in some of the city hospitals the most rapid and skillful masseurs are men who are totally blind.

The Motto: "Light Through Work"

Blind cobblers, blind mattressmakers, blind piano tuners, have been instructed and have found employment through her agency. One protege, a linguist, is teaching classes in German, French and Italian. She has obtained pupils for several music teachers. Rugs and baskets and curtains, innumerable toilet articles and bits of fancy work, are being made in the headquarters she established and which the blind themselves named "The Lighthouse," adopting the motto "Light through work."

The despondency that follows blindness, or the sudden realization of the hopelessness of that enveloping darkness, almost always breeds the suicidal tendency. Many attempts at suicide are made. Miss Holt, knowing this psychological phase, visits the homes of such cases, and lights in the places of great darkness the torch of hope. But the light of her good deeds has reached many of the dark places before her steps. To her groped his way one day a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war, a man of determination so indomitable that he had once walked from San Francisco to New York to enlist in the army of his country. In his 300 days' service he was deafened by his nearness to the cannon during a terrific, continuous bombardment. The further affliction of blindness afterwards came upon him. The hoary heads of charity decided that the best place for him was the almshouse. He did not agree with them. With 17 cents in his pocket as his sole worldly asset he felt his way to the Lighthouse.

"I must have work, or die," said the old soldier. "I would rather die by my own hand than eat the bread of charity." Miss Holt found work for him in a weaver's room. He is prospering and content. The grave seems far from this veteran of war.

A successful designer of hats suddenly lost her sight. She was set to work trimming hats, and her fingers soon created bonnets as chic as those her pencil had sketched. A once prosperous coal and wood merchant, reduced by his sightlessness to living in a cellar, whence he peddled small armfuls of wood to a few customers, was enabled through the keeper of the Lighthouse to rebuild his successful business. The long rays from the Lighthouse have reached telegraph operators who have been enabled to resume their vocations interrupted by the loss of sight, or have been instructed in the art and secured employment.

A long roll of usefulness this, but I have said the girl had the executive instinct and knew the value of organization. Thus her own powers were multiplied by the aid of Grover Cleveland, himself once a teacher of the blind; by Richard Watson Gilder, who compared Miss Holt's endeavors, in their importance to the blind, to Sir Isaac Newton's reflections upon why an apple fell upon the ground instead of flying away into space, and by Mark Twain, all of whom, with Dr. Lyman Abbott, accepted offices in the New York Association for the Blind. The work that had begun in the drawing rooms and extended to the bedroom and library of Miss Holt's home overflowed into the workrooms and school, on 59th street, on the East side, yet scarcely a woman's cry away from a group of the most fashionable hotels in New York, and near the chief lung of the city's breathing apparatus, Central park. Here, on February 22 of this year, President Taft, Joseph H. Choate, Helen Keller, Dr. J. H. Findley and other well known men and women opened "Lighthouse No. 1," a six-story settlement house for the blind. It has a roof garden, gymnasium, library and other conveniences for those who must work in perpetual darkness.

Saving the Sight of Children

One other avenue besides these Miss Holt has found as a medium of usefulness to the sightless children of her adoption. She has organized an earnest and aggressive crusade for the prevention of blindness and against criminally thoughtless destruction of sight. Learning that a fourth of all the children who are blind are unnecessarily in that state, she has instituted a series of visits to the homes of young mothers where babes are threatened with blindness, and instruction to them that the sight may be saved within ten days after birth by washing the eyes with two drops of a 1 per cent solution of nitrate of silver.

Discovering that three-fourths of the blind become so after they have reached the adult age, she found that a chief cause of the destruction of sight was the unrestrained patriotism of Independence Day. By writing and by addressing clubs on the subject she is driving home the truth that nearly 5,000 persons are maimed or blinded in this country every year by firecrackers or kindred noise-making menaces to life and limb. She urges that patriotism may be taught the rising generation without such ruthless sacrifice as 600 children losing their sight on one day in the celebration of our national independence.

Because of these and other works of hers the mention of the name of Winifred Holt brings grateful tears to sightless eyes and a prayer to thousands of wistful lips for the welfare of the maiden mother of the blind.

How John Chinaman Has Turned About

BY CHARLES L. OGILVIE

"AND IT CAME to pass in the first year of the republic that a Christian prayer meeting was held on the marble altar at the Temple of Heaven and the gospel was preached to the gathered multitude." If some historian in the distant future should discover a sentence like the above in some record book of Chinese history, he would be forced to the conclusion, provided he knew something of China's previous history, that a mighty change took place in the year 1912. And it does not need any special insight to discover that a mighty change has taken place in China.

We westerners, who lightly regard Oriental ways, probably cannot put ourselves into the position of a Chinese in our consideration of the significance of this event. In former days, as is well known, the emperor and his court went regularly to the Temple of Heaven on given days, and with an elaborateness of worship that would have made the Levites green with envy the emperor performed his duties as representative of the people before the most high god (Shang Ti). What ordinary mortal would dare even to look on the sacred stones where only the "son of heaven" was worthy to tread? And yet this most holy place, which represented the very highest ideals of the Chinese people, is now thrown open to the public and the above-mentioned meeting has been held not only without the disapproval of the government but with the hearty commendation of attending officials. For the first time in its history the altar of heaven, the home of Shang Ti, whom the Chinese ignorantly worshiped, became indeed the house of God.

What the Facts Show as to China

Is China the same now in spite of the revolution? Many say yes. Well, what do the facts say? Did anyone ever hear of the emperor receiving a representative company of Chinese pastors and entertaining them as equals? Did the emperor ever invite to his palatial residence the delegates of a Young Men's Christian Association convention or a medical conference? Yet Yuan Shih Kai, as provisional president, has done all these things. Now, if there were only a few such events we might well question whether those few were a fair indication of the times. But when we are confronted on every hand by equally startling occurrences we are compelled to admit that the actions of the president, revolutionary as they appear, are simply a reflection of the sentiment that surrounds him. Christians in all the government offices; Christians among the highest officials of the land; Christians trusted and respected. What do such things mean? Leading Chinese are begging the Young Men's Christian Association to open associations in their cities and offering to pay all the expenses if the association will send a secretary; government schoolteachers are bringing their students to mission chapels that they may hear the wonderful gospel, and officials are establishing philanthropic institutions. If such things do not spell change, what do they spell?

Shortly over a year ago the agent of the American Bible Society, speaking of the capital, said his agents had great difficulty in getting into the homes. Almost invariably the door was slammed in their faces upon their mentioning their errand. Now it is almost impossible to find a home that is not cordial, and instead of having the door slammed in his face the agent is invited in to drink tea. In country districts there is more conservatism, and it would be ridiculous to think that every single Chinese has turned about-face and is running with outstretched hands toward the cross of Christ. That is not the way things go in this world. The significant thing about China is that her thinking people have changed, and the fact that her thinking people are her leaders is far more significant than that the leaders are outnumbered by the common people. The common people to the final man will not feel the effect of the revolution for generations. It takes time. But will anyone claim that because there are multitudes in China who know nothing, China as a nation cannot go forward gloriously? She has gone forward gloriously for a year in spite of her enemies, critics, blundering friends and her own ignorance.

Religiously, China has toleration for all. Every religion has a clear field and this is all Christianity needs. Keep the field open, let the sower sow the seed, let the Sun of righteousness shine on that seed, let the rain from heaven fall and the work is done.

Educationally, China is awake. Her board of education will undoubtedly in the course of time work out a complete government system of education patterned after Germany's excellent system.

Commercially, China is beginning to prosper. She has not fully recovered from the deadening effect of the revolution and probably will not for some time. When she does recover her poise completely it will be with pockets somewhat increased in size and a balance on the right side. In spite of the revolution her postal receipts showed an increase last year. The Chinese is a born trader. His twin brother Isaac would have to run fast to beat him.

Morally, China has made great strides. As a nation she seems to realize the fundamental place of morals, and her leaders are putting forth tremendous efforts to educate the youth of the land along this line. The formation of ethical societies, the interest in religion and the raising of the standard of education all point in this direction.

Perhaps Mr. Bland May Be Mistaken

Politically, China is—has been—will be—according to your own temperament. The facts are numerous and the field is large. You are in the realm of the uncertain and the clouds hang low. There are true and false prophets, there are pessimistic quackers and optimistic singers. Each one has a right to interpret the facts for himself. If we are to believe J. O. P. Bland, who is an extremely well posted gentleman, the hope of China becoming a strong republic is "the quintessential essence of bottled moonshine." (This is not Mr. Bland's statement, but it expresses his idea.) Yet in spite of the fact that China has had to fight discord within and "sextuplicity" without, in spite of the fact that her financial condition has been described as bankrupt, she has certainly held her head up remarkably well during the past year. There is abundant room for the pessimist to paint the heavens black. But what pessimist two years ago could have withstood the shock of having been told that within a year China would become a republic? And what pessimist today can suffer the remark that China is going to get along all right? As the question has been put in The National Review:

"Young China," says J. O. P. B.,
"Is a failure, as any can see";
But if Young China should
With its Yang Meis make good,
Oh, then where will J. O. P. be?

China of today is not the China of yesterday any more than the valley of dry bones was the same as the valley filled with living men. As in the case of the bones, so with China, the difference lies in the presence of the spirit. In China at present there is a new spirit and that new spirit was the cause of the revolution, was the secret of its success, is the inspiration of the progressive movement and is the guaranty of ultimate success. In this new spirit lies a latent patriotism, a growing national consciousness and an enthusiastic self-confidence. It is one's estimate of this spirit that determines whether one has hope for the future or can see only blackness and darkness.

If one regards the new spirit as a weak thing, then all the old national characteristics loom up in the form of the dragon, ready to devour the young child. But if one looks upon the new spirit as something strong and permanent, then the old dragon must pack up his traps and leave. And that is exactly what is transpiring. The old dragon is moving out from among the people. How did the Chinese accomplish it? They simply waved the rainbow flag, and when the old dragon saw it he knew his days were numbered. Soon he will be but an unpleasant memory. The rainbow is the emblem of a united China. China has begun a big undertaking, but there are those who believe she has courage and determination enough to persist until she accomplishes her task. Her star is rising, but let us not expect it to reach high heaven in a day. By the exercise of charity let us treat China as we would be treated and in the course of time the eastern hemisphere may see the development of a noble republic, the foundation of which shall be justice and liberty for all.

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters—Bradford Horton, working his way through Prestonbury Theological Seminary, becomes entangled in a money theft which not only threatens his reputation but also puts him in a false position with regard to his parentage. Two friends remain openly loyal during his trouble. A third, Miss Elmore, though less outspoken in her championship, displays sufficient loyalty to give her father considerable uneasiness. He is, therefore, relieved in mind when they start on a long foreign tour. In the meantime Horton is called to his home to straighten out affairs in the bank founded by his adopted father, which has been wrecked by ventures in Wall street. To aid him in this work, and in a spirit of noblesse oblige, Horton sends for Oren-Toole, through whose jealous machinations his fair name had been smirched. Friendship between the two men results, and Oren-Toole takes back his own honest name of Barney O'Toole. Through unselfish service Horton wins back the friendship of his adopted mother, from whom he became estranged because of his determination to enter the ministry. But he returns to Prestonbury Seminary to become professor of Greek.

CHAPTER XXII.—Continued

"WELL, I DON'T need to tell you, Horton, I'm glad I failed. I never would have known the sort of man you are if I had succeeded. But honestly, Horton, I don't understand why you've treated me as you have." "It's because I understand you, Barney."

"Do you happen to know where Mr. Elmore is now?"

"Yes; in Italy," said Bradford, in some surprise at the abrupt change of subject.

"Do you hear from him?"

"No. Mr. Elmore has no special use for me; why, I don't know. He turned from a friend into a foe almost in a night. There's a mystery there I cannot understand."

"I wish he could know in some way that I'm making good."

There should be no difficulty about that, Bradford assured him. Mr. Elmore should know all about Barney's altered career as soon as he returned to Prestonbury in the late fall. Then the talk drifted off to the latest Prestonbury news—the announcement just made public of the engagement of Ansley Jickers and Mrs. Elmore.

"The town is delighted," said Bradford. "They're to be married as soon as her family come home in November. Matrimony seems to be epidemic. I suppose Joe will be the next victim."

"Where do you come in?" asked Barney cheerfully.

"I?" Bradford laughed with a certain grimness. "I don't come in anywhere, O'Toole."

CHAPTER XXIII.

Meetings Far Afield

ON A MORNING in June two men alighted from the little steamer that daily makes the round of Lake Lucerne. Though not companions, both had come with the same purpose—to ascend on foot the Rigi-Culm. One of them loitered at the landing, watching the steamer as it puffed itself toward Fluellen, and then, strolling leisurely through the village, chatted with those he met. A half hour passed before he began to go up the mountain, and even then his step was not quick, but long and steady, as of one who knew what he had to do and how to do it.

The other man, having paused only long enough to inquire for the road up the mountain, started with quick, springy, nervous gait. He swung a walking stick with vigor, and occasionally struck off the head of a flower by the wayside. Before he had gone far, however, he had more than once stopped beside the road to rest, and during one of these pauses was overtaken by the man who had lingered at the mountain's foot. The wayside loiterer rose.

"Going up the mountain?" he asked with American lack of ceremony, adding, as the pedestrian nodded, "Care for company?"

"That depends."

"What on? Are you afraid of me?"

"No. We're not afraid of Americans over here."

"What makes you think I'm an American?"

"Your first question, for one thing; your nervousness, for another. And your hurry to climb the mountain, for a third. Weren't you on the steamer from Lucerne?"

"Yes. I was in a hurry. I was anxious to see the view."

"But the view will remain, whether you are in haste or leisurely."

"Of course. Views can't run away. But I had never seen it. Was there anything to stop for?"

"Yes, as I look at it. The people and shops are quaint and interesting, and in the village there's a spring of ice cold water worth the whole trip."

"Too bad," said the other regretfully. "I'm sorry I missed that."

"Did you never," asked the stranger, "hear the American proverb, 'More haste, less speed'?"

The other laughed. "It seems to me I have. What other Americanisms do you find about me?"

"One at least; the nervous way you struck off the flowers with your stick. I've noticed that Americans are usually great wasters of nervous energy."

"Are you Englishmen never nervous?"

"Oh, yes, we're nervous, but do not show it as you do. But turn about is fair play. Why do you call me English?"

"Because of your unconscious process of self-elimination. In describing me you have told what you think Englishmen are not. Besides, no foreigner but an Englishman can speak English as you do."

"That was well answered. I am English, and yet I am not. I am a Scotchman."

They shook hands, and chatting in such fashion went up the mountain, pausing now and again to look at the ever-widening view.

"I've taken this walk many times," said the Scotchman, "and each time I discovered new wonders. Is this your first sight of Switzerland?"

"Yes, and it is both revelation and inspiration."

They dined together on the mountain and afterwards climbed to the battlement above to look down on the vast panorama.

"Do you return to Lucerne tonight?" asked the Scotchman.

"No, I go northward. Shall sleep tonight near Lake Zug somewhere, and tomorrow start for Berlin, where work is waiting for me. Are you returning to Lucerne?"

"No, I go down by rail and to Vienna. But I would like to know with whom I have passed these enjoyable hours."

"So would I. My name is Horton—Bradford Horton of Prestonbury, New York." His card corroborated his words, and on the one he received in exchange he read, "Malcolm Stuart, Newcastle-on-Tyne."

"Oh ho!" he thought; "this is the man Mrs. Elmore told me about." As he slipped the card into his pocket he heard the Scotchman say, "This is strange. I am familiar with the name Prestonbury. I heard it on the other side of the globe. In Japan I met some charming people from Prestonbury. Elmore was their name. Do you happen to know them?"

"Yes, I know them, and I have heard of you. You met them again in Egypt, did you not?"

"Yes, yes. I met them in Egypt, and was with them in Rome. How you Americans seem to know everything!"

Horton laughed! "No, not quite everything. But we do keep our ears and eyes open as we move about."

At the railway station they exchanged good-bys. "Europe is not large," called back Stuart from the train as it began the descent. "Perhaps we may meet again, Mr. Horton."

* * * * *

The train which had brought the Elmores from Italy was nearing Vienna when Mr. Elmore remarked casually to his daughter, "I had a letter from Stuart in Milan yesterday. He said he would reach Vienna today, so perhaps we'll see him tonight."

"Oh, dear!" A weary sigh followed the words. "I thought I was to have a really good time in Vienna. What nuisances men are!"

"Why, I'm a man, Lennie."

"Yes, but you're a daddy-man, and that's different." The faint

(Continued on page 502)

THE WAYFARER

THREE TOPICS of conversation there be, yes, even four, which the consensus of worldly wisdom has decreed to be taboo among the discreet—dress, domestics, disease and descendants. The law is good, albeit a sort of conversational speed limit which the motorist finds rather irksome. Only recently, though, the Wayfarer broke it as he talked of the plagues in eastern lands as he has met them. Now, like the offender who reasons that he may as well be hanged for a sheep as for a lamb, he returns to the topic, thinking that the tale of his own woes may be diverting to the comfortable American reader, who, having felt no wound, makes jest of scars.

Plague and Anti-Plague

Before proceeding to Calcutta, where he and plague-prevention scraped personal acquaintance, the Wayfarer had an experience at Allahabad whereby the plague was instrumental in introducing him to the British secret service in India, which Kipling has made famous in "Kim." About to step on the train at Allahabad for Buddha Gaya and Calcutta, a well dressed Indian, whose face seemed rather familiar, accosted the Wayfarer with, "I beg your pardon, sir, but I understand you are going to Gaya, and may I inform you that the plague is very bad there, sir; very bad; and, if you please, there is no place to sleep or to buy food and the people are all leaving Gaya, sir."

* * * * *

After this torrent it took the Wayfarer several minutes to see the real point. First of all, how under the bright Indian moon did this fellow know that the Wayfarer was going to Gaya, when the American had bought his ticket only a minute before, and at a remote part of the station? Not even the Wayfarer's "boy" knew that he meant to stop off to visit the birthplace of Buddha. And why—then in a flash it was all clear. This man was the spy set to follow this foreigner who hobnobbed with leaders in the "unrest" movement as well as with government officials and missionaries. That accounted for the familiarity of the face. The fellow did not want to risk Gaya, where the plague really was bad. After a few days, when he found the Wayfarer "spotting" him, he was transferred, and some unknown servant of the ultra-cautious Indian government took his place.

India once laid the Wayfarer low with its plague antitoxin. Leaving Calcutta, via Burma and the Straits, for China, the traveler thought to be forehanded with respect to the plague that was ravaging North China. He could not stay away from Peking, as other travelers were doing, for his work called him there. But at least he could take all possible precautions; so he visited Calcutta's health officer. That pleasant British gentleman assured him that the inoculation for the bubonic plague would be efficacious against the Chinese plague. Now, in the light of subsequent events, the skeptical Wayfarer suspects that the official was keen to add to his office records of white men treated. In due season he produced a dingy hypodermic syringe, which so aroused the traveler's suspicions that he had it sterilized twice. Then into the fair left arm of the guileless American his British majesty's servant squirted two ounces of a sickly yellow fluid—a case of incipient plague!

* * * * *

In a few hours the revolutionary war was avenged. The treated arm became as hot glass. "It may bother you a little for one night, or twenty-four hours," the doctor had warned. "A little!" The carcass that was put aboard the ship for Rangoon the next morning by the faithful "boy" (and the reader who is bound for India should know that jewel among "boys") was beyond caring whether ships sank or sailed. The crazed arm had become a crazed body; and, especially, a crazed head. Alone in his berth, the dying Wayfarer wondered whether he would be reported as a martyr to science or to duty. For, after the first thirty-six hours of stupor, it became perfecty clear that that syringe had been rusty; and that the traveler was perishing not from the plague alone but from the plague complicated by tetanus—and lockjaw would be a particularly sore affiction to the Wayfarer.

And then, after all, when China was reached the Wayfarer was informed that the inoculation was perfectely useless; the doctor might quite as well have painted his great toe with iodine, for the pneumonic plague of China has not a single characteristic or germ in common with the bubonic plague of India! THE WAYFARER.

THE HOME COUNCIL

The Sentimentalism of Mrs. Moss

By Elizabeth Price

A ladies' aid society undertakes to supply an outfit for the first baby of an ignorant, inexperienced young mother. The enterprise results not only in the regeneration of the mother, but of the regenerators themselves

CHURCH was just over and the ladies' aid society was standing in the northwest corner of the room, as directed a few minutes earlier by the pastor. Mrs. President McKay hurried up the aisle.

"Ladies," she announced, "there is a new baby at the lodge and it hasn't clothes to cover it comfortably. I felt that we ought to do something about it, so I called this meeting."

"Surely John Bailey isn't so poor as that!" Mrs. Jackson spoke reprovingly.

"It isn't altogether a question of poverty," Mrs. McKay explained. "His wife is very young and ignorant and hasn't known how to make proper preparation. She is an orphan. I understand, and has probably had no training."

"Factory girl!" Miss Thompson snapped out the words as if they accounted for every shortcoming. "She looks like she hadn't a ray of sense under her fly-away hair. That's what a man gets for marrying a doll-faced know-nothing. He deserves to suffer."

"But the baby doesn't," interposed gentle Mrs. Moss. "We must surely help that poor young mother, Mrs. McKay, and see that the baby is suitably clad."

"It seemed to me we should," agreed Mrs. McKay. "Ladies, suppose we come together tomorrow afternoon and sew. Bring any materials you happen to have and we'll make up a few necessities. After Evangeline Bailey is well again she will have to depend on herself, but while she's ill and helpless it isn't the part of Christian women to see her neglected."

* * * * *

They were on hand next day, each with thimble, needle and a bit of material. Miss Thompson's donation was navy blue calico. "I got enough for two slips. It's rather dark for a baby, but it won't need washing so often," she remarked somewhat grimly.

Mrs. Marchant had flannelette for a petticoat. There was also a length of unbleached canton flannel, some coarse white madras and a crib quilt, already much the worse for wear.

Mrs. Moss made no comment as her fellow members discussed their donations, but sent her busy needle flying in and out, drawing after it a strand of creamy floss and leaving a row of dainty featherstitching around a soft flannel hem.

Mrs. Bliss was the first to notice. "I wish you'd look!" she exclaimed. "This woman is actually embroidering a petticoat—real flannel at that."

"Really, Mrs. Moss, that is not necessary," remonstrated the president. "The Baileys ought to be thankful for the plainest things, since it is their own lack of foresight that has made such gifts imperative."

Mrs. Moss sewed steadily on. "I know," she assented. "But the little baby isn't to blame, and perhaps the little mother isn't, either. If we had never been taught, we might have been no wiser."

"You can't tell me there's any excuse for shiftlessness." Miss Thompson took strong white stitches in her blue seam as she talked. "Any woman that's old enough to be a mother must know her baby's got to be clothed."

Mrs. Marchant just then caught a glimpse of the contents of a certain basket and exclaimed, "I'd like to see what you've got tucked away in that white bundle, Mrs. Moss. May I look?"

"Certainly; if you care to. I gathered up some of my own leftovers and added one or two new things so it wouldn't seem so much like a donation of cast-offs."

Mrs. Marchant spread the contents of the white bundle on the table. Three dimity slips, their necks and sleeves finished with a dainty edge, a cambric petticoat with narrow lace below its wide hem, a little shoulder blanket, neatly scalloped, warm bootees, carefully darned undergarment and the pretty flannel skirt, not yet finished. Under the folded garments lay a little pincushion, a box of rice powder and a wee white comb and brush.

Miss Thompson was the first to speak. "My patience, Mrs. Moss, I had no idea you were so sentimental!"

"Hadn't you? I am—I believe in sentiment with all my heart."

"So I see. If you weren't you'd never waste these fal-de-rals on a charity baby."

Mrs. Moss sewed serenely on. "It's a baby just the same," she said; "flesh and blood, like our own, with the same needs and wants."

The Power House

Here have we focused forces unknown until today.
Here have we hived new powers of flame that swarm and stream away.
Down highways dark where globes of light along the meadows bloom;
Where lustrous lilies born of night dispel the city's gloom.
Efficient, brisk, decisive, the master spirit goes,
Reviews his restless regiment of humming dynamos,
His orders gives and vanishes. No thought have such as he
To glean the golden pollen of the midnight's mystery.
Sufficient for their purpose that they brought this thing to be.

High in his holy city, in his power house vast of space,
The Master of us all looks forth. He sees his planets race;
His dynamos that generate the thought that comprehends
The infinite; the will that still the finite's grasp extends,
And love that shall interpret all and greater love beget.
And the powers that dwell in darkness shall be delivered yet.
He sets his finger to a switch. A world has ceased to be.
Another flames new born; with it his Son and such as we;
And light shall dawn on darkest night and teach blind eyes to see.

—John Curtis Underwood.

"As if it cared for embroidery and blue cushions!"

"It doesn't, perhaps, but the poor little mother will." Mrs. Moss spoke with sudden earnestness.

There was another pause and again Miss Thompson broke it. "Do you honestly suppose that Bailey woman cares?"

"Cares!" flashed Mrs. Moss. "Was there ever a mother who didn't care?"

"Well, everybody to their own opinion," declared Mrs. Marchant. "For my part, while I appreciate Mrs. Moss's kindness of heart, I think she is allowing her feeling to carry her too far. Plain, simple garments for children of that class are much more suitable."

* * * * *

Down at the lodge Evangeline Bailey lay alone except for the baby. The lodge, a comfortable enough dwelling, stood at the gate of a large estate whose owner seldom visited it. John Bailey was keeper and caretaker. Quiet and middle-aged was John; not in the least one to be expected to fall in love with a pretty scatterbrain whose vicissitudes of fortune had brought her to the Edgerton cotton mills in search of a livelihood. But fall in love he did, and desperately, and as soon as his determination could have its way he brought the bright-faced young girl to make cheer in his somber dwelling.

Evangeline had come with high hopes. But most of her brave attempts ended in dismal failures. "If I only knew—if there was only someone to tell me how," she wailed one day as she buried the result of her laborious baking in the ashpit. But there was no one, it seemed. The pretty, shallow bride did not appeal to the women whom John desired for his wife's associates, while the old companions of her careless girlhood were relentlessly forbidden. So the child went on, making her mistakes, trying John's patience and gradually losing the sparkle out of life.

When the mystery of maternity overshadowed her she had no one to teach her its sweet and wonderful lessons and the little life came into being with almost no preparation.

Dr. Lane was just driving away as Mrs. Moss came down the street that Tuesday morning. He stopped to say in his blunt fashion: "It can't be possible you're going to the lodge? Well, heaven be praised that somebody has a drop of the milk of human kindness left. She's all alone, and John Bailey's no more good in a sickroom than a well meaning elephant. I sent Mrs. McKay word last week, but I had begun to think nothing was to come of it."

Mrs. Moss smiled reassuringly. "I'm sorry I didn't know sooner. She shall not be neglected again, Dr. Lane."

The little mother was crying when her visitor arrived. "It don't look right to me," she sobbed. "It looks like it ought to be taken care of. I'm so weak, and I don't know how."

It did "look like it ought to be taken care of," if ever a baby did, dear little plump thing, with soft rings of hair already curling on its forehead and dark, bright eyes looking out on the wonders of the new world.

After Evangeline was comforted and comfortable Mrs. Moss unpacked her little gifts. She had hoped the girl would be pleased, but she was unprepared for the trembling ecstasy that greeted each tiny garment. "Look at the lace—fine as thread itself! And embroidery, done by hand, ain't it? And, oh, the little blue cushion with sachet power in it! Mine's red flannel. See that shoulder blanket—fine enough for a queen's baby! Mine to keep? Oh, ma'am, I could kneel down and kiss your shoes—for my baby."

The visitor turned away to hide the trembling of her lips. Then she said, "Now, let me get hold of this precious little one. My arms fairly ache for her."

With hungry eyes the girl took in the revelations that followed as the wee one was cared for in the older woman's deft and dainty way, then robed in the suitable garb of babyhood, white and soft and exquisitely neat. When the baby was laid in the mother's arms her joy overflowed.

"I knew it! I felt sure it could be sweet and lovely if it had the chance! Mrs. Moss, I don't know how. I never touched a tiny baby in all my life till this one came, and I'm not fit to be her mother."

"Listen, dear," comforted her new friend; "you mustn't cry any more. Be brave and happy and make yourself fit to be her mother."

"I want to be worthy of her, and of John. He's had a hard time, too, but he's been real patient."

The first lesson having been given, others followed. A bureau drawer was emptied and the new belongings were arranged therein with an eye to effect as well as convenience. "You can keep them in their own tidy piles, you see," said the teacher. "Then keep baby to match, all clean and sweet."

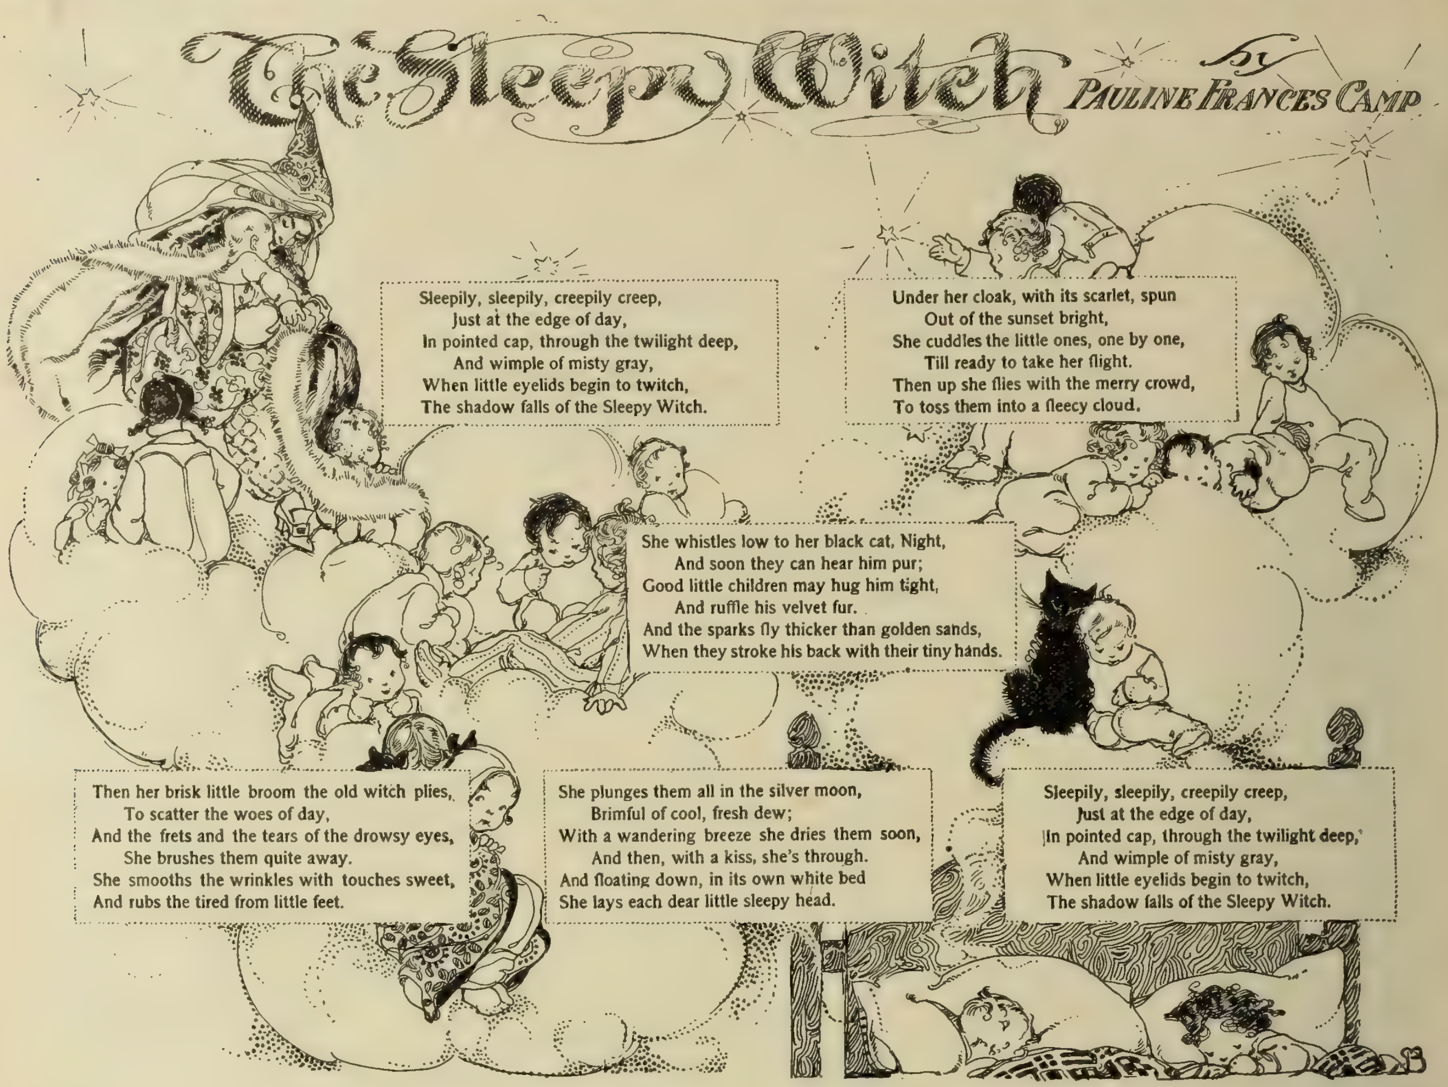
"To think they are hers!" exclaimed an awe-struck voice. "Oh, Mrs. Moss, when these are worn out what will I do?"

(Continued on page 502)

YOUNG AMERICA

The Sleepy Witch

By PAULINE FRANCES CAMP



Sleepily, sleepily, creepily creep,
Just at the edge of day,
In pointed cap, through the twilight deep,
And wimple of misty gray,
When little eyelids begin to twitch,
The shadow falls of the Sleepy Witch.

Under her cloak, with its scarlet, spun
Out of the sunset bright,
She cuddles the little ones, one by one,
Till ready to take her flight.
Then up she flies with the merry crowd,
To toss them into a fleecy cloud.

She whistles low to her black cat, Night,
And soon they can hear him pur;
Good little children may hug him tight,
And ruffle his velvet fur.
And the sparks fly thicker than golden sands,
When they stroke his back with their tiny hands.

Then her brisk little broom the old witch plies,
To scatter the woes of day,
And the frets and the tears of the drowsy eyes,
She brushes them quite away.
She smooths the wrinkles with touches sweet,
And rubs the tired from little feet.

She plunges them all in the silver moon,
Brimful of cool, fresh dew;
With a wandering breeze she dries them soon,
And then, with a kiss, she's through.
And floating down, in its own white bed
She lays each dear little sleepy head.

Sleepily, sleepily, creepily creep,
Just at the edge of day,
In pointed cap, through the twilight deep,
And wimple of misty gray,
When little eyelids begin to twitch,
The shadow falls of the Sleepy Witch.

When Baby Bear Visited the Beavers

BY FRANCES MARGARET FOX

NOT FAR FROM the home of the Three Bears in the forest lived a colony of happy Beavers. Their lodge was on a tiny island in the river. One moonlight night when Baby Bear was ill because he had eaten too much honey his mother gave him medicine and then rocked him in the middle-sized chair. Baby Bear wasn't a bit sleepy, and when he saw a birch tree back of the house fall swish-bang! into the river, he sat up straight in his mother's arms and pointed toward the window.

"That is Castor Americanus Beaver cutting down trees for his dam," she explained. "You have seen his dam, with the willow trees growing on top, many a time."

"What makes the Beavers build a dam?" asked Baby Bear.

"To protect their houses, Baby Bear. Sometimes the water in these little rivers dries up, so the Beavers build a dam across our river to keep the water from all going away, or freezing to the bottom during cold winters. Father Beaver is starting a new house, too, so they tell me, and that is why he is cutting down so many birch trees across the river."

"I wish I could go and see Father Beaver build his house," said Baby Bear. "Sally Beaver said to me, 'Ask your mother if you may come over and stay all night when we begin our new house, and see all the Beavers work.' They do their work at night, she says. May I go?"

"Certainly, as soon as you are well," agreed the Middle-Sized Bear.

Two days later she took Baby Bear to the Beavers' lodge and called upon Sally Beaver's mother. "Baby Bear wishes to come visiting," said she.

"We are glad to see him," said Mrs. Beaver. "Will you stay all day and all night, Baby Bear?"

The little Bear nodded his head vigorously, kissed his mother good-by and went away with Sally Beaver to play with her brothers and sisters. Mother Bear walked home, smiling to herself.

That day Baby Bear dined on blackberries and roots of the yellow water lily. Then Sally Beaver told him he must take a long nap with the seven Beaver babies that were born in May.

"Where shall I sleep?" asked Baby Bear.

"On the floor, right here. You see it is kept perfectly clean. This is the only room that belongs to our family. There are a dozen other families living here under the same roof, but we each have only one room and one outside door. We also have holes in the river bank where we hide when danger threatens. Once a trapper tried to catch my father, but Goldilocks's uncle sent him away from the forest and nothing bad has ever happened since. Now, cuddle down, Baby Bear, and go to sleep."

Baby Bear didn't like to cuddle down on a floor made of mud and sticks and stones, but he cuddled up in a round ball and was soon sound asleep. When he awoke Mother Beaver was teaching Sally and her seven other children how to keep their fur clean.

"Do it this way," said she, and lifting one of her big hind feet, which were webbed like a duck's foot, she combed her fur with her toes. Soon all the baby Beavers were combing their fur with their toes. Baby Bear thought it was a funny sight; but when he tried to comb his hair with the toes of his hind foot over he went, tumblety-tumble, and bumped his nose. All the baby Beavers laughed until Sally Beaver told them it isn't polite to laugh at one's company.

When Father Beaver came home to supper he showed Baby Bear his sharp, orange-colored teeth, which were so strong he could cut down small trees with one bite. "Usually, though, I gnaw around and around a tree before I can cut it down," he explained. "And look at my tail, Baby Bear. Did you ever see anything like that big flat tail?"

"No, Mr. Beaver, I never did! Do you plaster with it?"

"No, no, Baby Bear, that is a mistake. I use my tail for a paddle in the water, and for a rudder. I carry mud for plastering in my hands—I hold it up close under by throat, like this. We do plaster our houses and our dams, inside and out, and we keep them plastered, but we do all that work with our hands. We are always busy, and now you know what it means to be 'busy as a beaver.' Well, Baby Bear, let us go in to supper."

Baby Bear didn't like his supper as well as he did his dinner, because all Mother Beaver had prepared was bark of trees, willow bark particularly.

"Bedtime, Baby Bear. Come, Baby Bear," called Sally Beaver at sunset.

"Oh, but I am going to sit up all night and see your Father Beaver build his new house, Sally Beaver!"

"But, Baby Bear, he won't build his new house until frost comes!" exclaimed Sally Beaver. "He is getting the materials ready now, and cutting down trees for us to eat bark from in the winter. He is working on our new house, of course, but the work he is doing now is floating trees down the river. Cuddle down

(Continued on page 499)

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

April 20, 1913—Jacob's Meeting with Esau

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 32:3-33:17. Golden Text, Ephesians 4:32. Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving each other, even as God also in Christ forgave you.

The life of Jacob is a series of moving pictures. Each chapter is another turn of the reel, with a new incident flashed upon the screen. The last scene was at Bethel. Jacob was on his way to Haran, where he hoped to take a wife from the family of Laban, his mother's brother. His arrival and the scene with Rachel at the well forms a faint counterpart of Eliezer's experiences many years before.

But no reproduction ever equals the original. Jacob, unlike Eliezer, was not a diplomat. He was too mercenary for the fine touches of love. He could roll the stone away from the mouth of the well for the beautiful Rachel, but not until after he had seen her father's sheep. One month's residence at the home of Laban was quite sufficient for the matter of wooing, then Laban and his prospective son-in-law settled down to business. Jacob unfortunately was poor. He had vast possessions in prospect, but his birds were all in the bush. But the scheming Laban had no doubt discovered Jacob's ability, and saw his opportunity. He adroitly ignores the matter of relationship and suggests that Jacob name his compensation.

Commercial Instinct of Laban Doubles Period of Jacob's Service

This was easily done. Leah and Rachel were the prizes at stake. The latter was beautiful, but the former was not. Rachel became the choice of Jacob. In exchange he was to give seven years of service. Love never grows tired. Jacob put his hand to the plow and for seven years turned a constant furrow while Laban looked on. He evidently thought that Rachel was cheap on any terms. But Jacob grew impatient of Laban's cupidity and at the expiration of the seven years demanded Rachel in payment. That night there was a great feast at the house of Laban. The nuptials of Jacob and Rachel were being celebrated in due form. The bride was adorned with the heavy veil worn in the East on such occasions. Jacob was happy. The long years of his service were over and the one person in all the world whom he really loved was his. But at last he had met a past master in the art of deception. No more laconic expression can be found in any history: "And it came to pass that in the morning, behold, it was Leah." Naturally, Jacob protested, but Laban with the finest irony reminded him that "it is not so done in our place to give the younger before the first-born." The commercial instinct in Laban was ever strong. He increased the price of Rachel to seven years more, and Jacob, like a true lover, arose to the necessity. Love ignores time, and the fourteen years of hard, slavish service seemed to him as but a few days.

Jacob now had two wives and, like every other polygamist, loved but one. Leah lives as the victim of a system that still curses the earth. Her suffering was of that refined kind that is only possible within the sanctity of home. As her sons were born one after another, she said: "Now my husband will love me. . . . Because Jehovah hath heard that I am hated, he hath therefore given me this son." But Jacob only turned away and left her to suffer on alone. The dragon's teeth failed not of their harvest, as our subsequent lessons will fully show.

Jacob Determines to Return Home to Prepare for Patriarchal Succession

The relation of Jacob to his father-in-law is now that of a business partner, and the firm of Laban and Jacob prospered beyond that of all others. The junior partner at length determined to sever his connection with Laban. His purpose was to his credit. He would return to his home country and prepare himself for the patriarchal succession. The method of departure was in accordance with his character. He stole away from Haran as he had stolen way from Beer-sheba twenty years before. But the circumstances were reversed. Then he fled from the face of Esau; now Laban camped upon his trail. But Jacob feared Esau, while he withstood Laban to his face. The difference lay in Jacob right and Jacob wrong. Jacob becomes reconciled to Laban and they swear by the witness of the Mizpah never more to cross each other's path for harm. Jacob as yet has a long distance to go before the God of Abraham and of Isaac becomes his God, but his face is turned in the right direction. It is said that the angels met him, as they ever meet those who are in the way of right.

Jacob hears that Esau is coming with a troop of 400 men. The crisis of his life is at hand. The scenes of twenty years ago rise before him. And yet he is the same old Jacob. He divides his bands according to his preference, but his resources are inadequate to the hour. Jacob, however, is reminded that God is ever by. And to God he appeals as never before. This God is the God of his fathers and to him he cried like a child in despair. That night One in the form of a man appeared and the two wrestled until the break of day. The scene of Bethel was repeated only in this instance. There was no vision. No stairway swept from earth to heaven, but a man struggled with him to the very dawn. It was then that the patriarch was reborn to a new life. The old "supplanter" gave place to the "prince of God." He had seen God face to face.

Generosity of Esau and Prayer of Jacob Bring Reconciliation

The subsequent meeting with Esau must be read in connection with the events of the night before. Two forces contributed—the generosity of one and the prayer of the other. Those 400 armed men in all probability were intended for a different purpose than to be merely escort. When a man's ways please the Lord he makes even his enemies to be at peace with him. It was not Jacob that Esau met but Israel. The two separated there in the desert, each to follow out his own prophetic life. One became a Bedouin and the other a shepherd. Years after they met at the tomb of their father and the world saw them together for the last time. Esau was born the better man, but there was no Bethel in his life. He had no vision of God, while Jacob was born twice.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins.

ANALYSIS—An old quarrel healed. Love lost by cunning and regained by trust. The brothers become reconciled and vie with one another in kindness.

The story of Jacob's return to Palestine is one of the most beautiful and touching in the Bible. After his long sojourn, from thirty to thirty-five years in duration, he resolved to go back to the old home because divinely reproved for his unfulfilled vow (ch. 31:13). He was prospered where he was. His wealth had made him a great man among the people of that country. His large family of children was a source of great satisfaction to him. But he had as yet no intimation that Esau had forgotten or forgiven his early fraud. Doubtless he had often thought that should be outlive Esau he would quickly make his way back to the old home; but now in wives and little ones he had truly "given hostages to fortune," and his heart failed him when he thought of subjecting them to danger.

Nevertheless at a word from on high he prepared for his return. All the incidents of that weary march are full of interest, but of prime importance is that mysterious and highly dramatic scene upon the heights overlooking the brook Jabbok (ch. 32:24-32), the subject of so many expositions, poems and paintings. Jacob was as lonely as he had been at Bethel, but he had greater anxiety because he had more to lose. He was a good husband and a tender-hearted father. Tomorrow night he might be without possessions, without wife, without child. In his distress he cried unto God and God heard him, answering his prayer in a wonderful way.

With the old caution but new hope Jacob now made preparation for meeting his brother, who was coming, so he heard, accompanied by a band who might be found eager for spoils and hard to restrain.

Jacob, Still Hoping for the Best, Prepares for the Worst

Verses 1-3—Although assured by the events of the preceding night, the present looked dark for those dearer than his own life. He prepared to surrender everything he owned to this band which his brother captained, knowing only too well the character of such "soldiers" of the desert. Then putting himself well in advance of his family—and terrified beyond words they must have been—he advanced alone to meet his brother, saluting him with those prostrations which are the marks of courtesy of the East.

Verse 4—The pathetic sight of this anxious and now aged man, the offer of his herds, the complete surrender of himself, unarmed and unresisting, into the hands of his armed and warlike brother, was too much for Esau, and, with a sudden burst of feeling, he threw himself on Jacob's neck. All the sweet affection of their carefree boyhood came back, all the antagonisms of later years disappeared in a moment.

Verse 5—If anything were needed to complete the reconciliation it was the sight of Jacob's family, for Esau recognized that the family life among God's chosen people was and would forever be something very different from what it was with "the daughters of Heth" (ch. 27:46). In the sight of Jacob and these sons and daughters, God forbid he should do aught to bring sorrow to them.

Verses 6-7—And then came Leah and Rachel, leading with mingled pride and fear their silent, shrinking children. Nothing like this, such freedom of women, such seemly obedience on the part of the young, was seen in the tents of Edom. It made Esau think of that mother Rebekah who was, as he now thought, too refined and good to have had such a son as himself.

Verse 8—No one ventures to pass through the country of an Oriental sheik without offering him a tribute in the shape of a present. Although Esau's country lay far to the south, the present was ready, as Jacob showed. And it was royal in its munificence. Esau says shamefacedly that he does not want it, does not need it, will not take it.

Verses 10-11—Jacob, perhaps still suspecting that this reluctance is formal rather than real, feels that except Esau should receive something from him the covenant of peace is not sealed and presses the gift. Esau, to relieve himself from any suspicion, finally assents to accept it.

Peace Kept Most Surely by Removing Occasion for Misunderstanding

Verse 12—The soldier brother now generously offers his shepherd brother an escort through the intervening territory, but this Jacob knows would present too many temptations to the undisciplined troop following his brother. An Oriental escort even to this day is quite as likely to rob the caravan as protect it.

Verse 13—Jacob finds a sufficient excuse in the fact that he and his must travel slowly. The 400 of Esau's troop would soon weary of such deliberate pilgrimage.

Verse 14—Still in the language of diplomatic courtesy Jacob fences off proffers it was hardly safe to accept. He insisted that Esau would protect his "trek" better if before it than around it. He could inspire with awe the neighboring tribes and assure them that Jacob and his following were under Arab protection.

Verse 15—Even the offer of a part of the guard he declined with the utmost politeness and suavity, but with such firmness that Esau presses it no further and the dangerous encounter is passed.

They bade each other farewell and parted, no longer enemies but friends. No attempt was made to excuse the past, or to defend it. It was simply ignored and the brothers took a new start as if nothing had occurred to mar their early relations. A serious disagreement which has once aroused "bad blood" may be healed, but never by forcing open the old sore. When relatives find their aims, methods and habits of life utterly dissimilar, they can make peace by occupying homes some distance removed instead of seeking to live in close neighborhood and daily contact. Probably Esau realized this before their interview closed, but Jacob realized it before they met. Jacob was peacemaker, like Isaac his father, but under far more trying conditions.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning April 13, 1913

Topic—The seed growing secretly. Mark 4:26-29.

This parable is the answer of Jesus to the impatience of the disciples, who wanted the kingdom to come immediately. If the parable of the sower teaches that not all the good seed sown falls upon good ground and comes to harvest, this parable teaches that even in the case of the good seed, sown in the good ground, the harvest must not be expected too soon. Time is an essential condition of the progress of the kingdom.

—

This is one of the most profound and characteristic of the utterances of Jesus. It will give clearness of vision and steadiness of purpose to all who understand it. And it will relieve the nervous pressure and reduce the strain of the work of propagating the kingdom.

—

One of the characteristic faults of most eager sowers is that they suppose they must do it all. They have not only to sow and reap; they must also cause the seed to germinate, and grow the plant. Not so, says Jesus; there is a time for the sower to sow, and another time for the reaper to reap, and between these times the natural forces of the soil will yield the increase.

—

There is much in the kingdom of God that no amount of zeal and activity can effect. The forerunner may point to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world; but in the great work of the regeneration of the soul of man he can have no part. The man who speaks in the name of Jesus is not responsible for the result. His part is simply to sow; God gives the increase (I. Cor. 3:6-7). Nor is his part to lose his sleep, and become nervous, and be consumed with anxiety for the issue of the word. As he has faith in the vitality of the seed sown, and in its appropriateness to the soil, he will possess his soul in peace and calmly await the time when further action is demanded of him.

—

There has been a long discussion as to whether the sower is Christ or someone else. For Christ is frequently represented in the Scriptures as the reaper of the harvest; and here the sower and the reaper are the same. But the discussion has been rather too subtle. We may frankly agree that Christ himself is the sower of the word, as well as the reaper of the spiritual harvest. But his parable contains a principle of universal application; and where the disciple sows, Jesus sows. Beyond all doubt the Master is teaching his followers to be patient not only concerning the results of the seed which he himself is now sowing but also concerning the results of all the seed which they themselves shall afterwards sow. For the seed of the kingdom grows of itself whenever it falls upon a prepared field.

—

The word of Jesus is not a stone; it is a seed. It is vital, and therefore it grows. If a housewife places a cup upon an upper shelf in a cupboard and leaves it there three months and returns to take it down she does not expect to find there thirty cups. The cup is useful, but it is not vital. But a seed is vital. If a husbandman sows it in a field and leaves it there three months, he returns after that time in the full confidence that he will find there thirty grains.

—

No word of God remains in the soul of a man as it first falls. It grows of itself. No man can take a word of Christ and put it away in his memory, as a cup upon a shelf, and return after three months to find it just as he left it. If he should have this experience about any great doctrine of the faith, it could only be because he had never truly grasped it, or been grasped by it. Every great word of Jesus grows of itself in the human consciousness. It fell upon man's soul as a detached idea; it grows into a great principle that controls his life and being. It establishes relations with earth and air and sky.

—

There are various kinds of increase. There is the increase of a pile of stones. One stone is thrown upon another until there is a great accumulation. But stones have no unifying principle, no inherent idea. They are simply an aggregation that can again be dissipated.

There is the increase of the great building, which rises story by story, according to the design of the architect, and by means of the mechanical contrivances of the constructor. There is a unifying principle in this increase, but it is not inherent in the material itself, it is imposed from without.

And, last, there is the increase of the seed, which according to its own nature grows from within and incorporates into itself the soil, rain and sun. The ideas of Jesus, planted in human hearts, grow from within outward. Christianity is the life of Christ in the soul of man; it is an inner principle which unfolds to the perfection of righteousness, love and knowledge.

—

This growth is marked by certain clearly defined stages—"first the blade, then the ear, then the full grain in the ear." The sower has no right to expect that immediately after he has cast his seed on the ground he will find the full grain in the ear. This is not the process of nature. This is not the history of Jesus. The disciples were foolish ones and slow of heart to believe. And God has suffered long with the best of us before he has seen much fruition of his love.

The older Christians have need to be patient with the younger ones. It is not natural that there should be old heads on young shoulders. Time will do its work. We often worry about the shortcomings of the young folks, when the only reason for their deficiency is that they are still young. They have the root of the matter in them. We only need the patience of a gentle charity.

—

Well instructed Christians, moreover, have no reason to be impatient of other Christians who know less, and have had less opportunity of knowing. There may be a very incomplete faith that is, nevertheless, a genuine faith so far as it goes. There are multitudes of men who could not give an intelligent account of the doctrine of the incarnation or of the trinity who are, nevertheless, following Christ and resting upon his word and looking up to him for their deliverance from death and sin. They might hesitate if we were to ask them about some of the articles of our faith, but all the time their faith is just the same as ours. Only it has not yet come to maturity. We should not be impatient about them. But if we want to help, the sun of our kindliness and the rain of our tears will aid the growth of the good seed in their hearts.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

April 20, 1913

GEMS FROM OLD SONGS

Topic—Favorite verses. I. In the psalms. Psalms 19:1-14.

The oldest songs still extant are the Hebrew psalms. They are dearer to the race than any other literature. For nearly 3,000 years they have been voicing the deepest sentiments—the hopes, the fears, the joys, the sorrows, the contrition, the adoration—of millions of persons. They are attuned to a universal note; for, although they were written in a little land on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean, they more completely express the varying moods of the people of today in all lands under heaven than any purely local or contemporary production. This universality is the highest test of literary excellence. Nothing is great literature which does not make wide appeal to the human heart. So it comes to pass that scholar and housekeeper, sage and workingman, alike find delight and comfort in the psalms.

—

Instead of making comments upon familiar verses from the psalms I shall follow out the thought of the topic and quote a few favorite verses:

Make thy way straight before my face.—Ps. 5:8.

—

He forgetteth not the cry of the poor—Ps. 9:12.

—

The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork.—Ps. 19:1.

—

Who can discern his errors? Clear thou me from hidden faults.—Ps. 19:12.

—

Let the words of my mouth and the meditation of my heart be acceptable in thy sight, O Jehovah, my Rock, and my Redeemer.—Ps. 19:14.

—

Jehovah is my shepherd; I shall not want.—Ps. 23:1.

—

Jehovah is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? Jehovah is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?—Ps. 27:1.

—

Weeping may tarry for the night, but joy cometh in the morning.—Ps. 30:5.

—

My times are in thy hand.—Ps. 31:15.

—

Be strong, and let your heart take courage, all ye that hope in Jehovah.—Ps. 31:24.

—

Delight thyself also in Jehovah; and he will give thee the desires of thy heart.—Ps. 37:4.

The young lions do lack, and suffer hunger; but they that seek Jehovah shall not want any good thing.—Ps. 34:10.

—

Jehovah is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as are of a contrite spirit.—Ps. 34:18.

—

As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God.—Ps. 42:1.

—

Why art thou cast down, O my soul? And why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise him, who is the help of my countenance, and my God.—Ps. 42:11.

—

God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble.—Ps. 46:1.

—

Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God.—Ps. 90:1-2.

—

He shall call upon me, and I will answer him; I will be with him in trouble; I will deliver him, and honor him. With long life will I satisfy him, and show him my salvation.—Ps. 91:15-16.

—

Jehovah is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and abundant in lovingkindness. He will not always chide; neither will he keep his anger for ever. He hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us after our iniquities. For as the heavens are high above the earth, so great is his lovingkindness toward them that fear him. As far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us. Like as a father pitieth his children, so Jehovah pitieth them that fear him.—Ps. 103:8-14.

—

Wherewith shall a young man cleanse his way? By taking heed thereto according to thy word.—Ps. 119:9.

—

Thy word have I laid up in my heart, that I might not sin against thee.—Ps. 119:11.

—

Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and light unto my path.—Ps. 119:105.

—

They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing seed for sowing, shall doubtless come again with joy, bringing his sheaves with him.—Ps. 126:5-6.

—

As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so Jehovah is round about his people from this time forth and for evermore.—Ps. 125:2.

NEW BOOKS

Recollections of an Optimist

THE LAST LEAF, by James Kendall Hosmer. Like most autobiographies, the book contains more than a liberal supply of the first personal pronoun, which may be excused in a man in his eightieth year who has seen and heard and experienced much. It is decidedly unusual to hear from a living author that his "earliest political thrill" was away back in 1840 in the log cabin and hard cider campaign, but this is where Dr. Hosmer begins. His father, a preacher in Buffalo, numbered among his parishioners Millard Fillmore, afterwards President of the United States, who is commended for postponing the civil war ten years and thereby giving the North time to grow and strengthen herself for subsequent victory.

As a Harvard student the author heard the last public speech of Daniel Webster, who looked like "a dying lion." Charles Sumner he studied, and scores him for his fancied superiority, but concedes him some admirable qualities. One sad defect in Sumner was lack of humor. In the civil war Dr. Hosmer, then a young minister, served briefly as a private and as corporal, but during and after the war he met many of the great and lesser commanders. A little known incident told of General W. T. Sherman concerns his being invited to dine by a fashionable lady in St. Louis without his wife. On arriving Sherman found other ladies present; thereupon he promptly turned on his heel, though he was to have been the lion of the evening, and left the house in resentment of the slight put upon his wife.

Horace Mann, the great educational pathbreaker; Longfellow, Holmes, Lowell, Emerson, Bancroft, and other poets, prophets and historians, pass in review. Not the least interesting are the author's European experiences and observations more than forty years ago, including the Franco-Prussian war, and later in England. Hosmer calls his book a panorama of nearly four score momentous years. He felicitates himself on his stubborn optimism, which he credits to his eupepsia—the opposite of dyspepsia. As to the nation at large, he says, "Never have the leaders at the fore been more able and high-minded." For human society, he believes, the happy time lies not behind but before. The style of the book is conversational and friendly, and the work will appeal in particular to readers of maturing years. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $2.

Religion

IS JESUS GOD? An Argument by Graduates of Princeton Seminary; with introductory note by Professor B. B. Warfield. Dr. Warfield's imprimatur on this collection of short papers by students of theology on a theme of most vital importance to the Christian thinker lifts the work to a level on which it attracts attention. In the present state of the discussion of the person of Christ, the question treated in these papers requires the most careful and discriminating handling. This, it must be said, it does not receive at the hands of these students. The exegesis is frequently faulty, the logic inconclusive and the grasp of the subject inadequate. In the interests of the great doctrine which, with the best of intentions, these young men aim to defend it would have been better that their papers had undergone more drastic revision before they were published. [American Tract Society, New York. 50 cents net.

CATCH-MY-PAL, by R. J. Patterson. Imagine an Irish Presbyterian minister discovering a great idea, starting it to work and seeing it go with growing power; then set him down to tell about it with all his Irish wit awake—and you have this book. Bright, heartening, enthusiastic, dead sure, gripping, it is a great temperance document. "Catch-My-Pal" is a widespread temperance movement, whose name comes from Jesus' word that Peter should "catch" men, and from the common term for man in the same fix with one's self. In the first year 130,000 men joined it in Ireland. They signed the pledge and "took the button." The number is multiplied now around the world. We wish it would appear in America. At its meetings the members lift up their closed fists and say in unison: "We will see this thing through." When men say that something happens. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1 net.

THE CHRISTIAN CONCEPTION OF GOD, by Walter F. Adeney. In this volume of the "Christian Faith and Doctrine" series, Principal Adeney lays before the reader in clear and simple terms the best that present-day thought offers regarding the distinctively Christian doctrine of God. While not discarding the idea of the Absolute (which he makes the necessary correlate of perfection) the author takes the ground that it is not as practically useful in the construction of the Christian conception of God as the concrete revelation given in the gospel portraiture of Jesus Christ. Accordingly, his chapter on the Trinity, instead of coming at the very beginning of his treatise as was customary with the theologians of the past generation, finds its place much nearer the conclusion of the volume. Similarly the questions of the foreknowledge of God, of the incarnation of the Holy Spirit and of the divine attributes, especially that of immutability, are worked out from the knowledge of Christ as given in the New Testament and finding response in the Christian experience. Thus the volume consistently maintains, if not the pragmatic point of view, at least the practicable or workable one. It does not, however, claim to be a heavy theological treatise but rather a popular work designed to enlighten and help the average Christian. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1 net.

For Nature Lovers

TREES IN WINTER: Their Study, Planting, Care and Identification, by Albert F. Blakeslee and Chester D. Jarvis. This book is not a mere variation of the themes which have excused the publication of hundreds of "nature" books during recent years. Such books have served an admirable purpose, and this volume, too, will be greatly helpful to those whose fondness for nature exceeds their knowledge. It is, however, a carefully planned and comprehensive treatise, sufficiently scientific but readily intelligible, on the propagation and care of trees for various purposes. The title, "Trees in Winter," really refers to the period between the dropping of leaves and the budding that follows the dormant season. It is during this season that trees are best handled with regard to their perpetuation. Such questions as the selection of trees for particular uses, proper planting and control of parasites are fully treated, and the department giving a key to the identification of trees is specially valuable. The 450 pages must contain almost an equal number of illustrations. Doctors Blakeslee and Jarvis are prominently associated with botanical and horticultural work in Connecticut. [Macmillan Company, New York. $2 net.

THE OLD GARDENS OF ITALY AND HOW TO VISIT THEM, by Mrs. Aubrey Le Blond. This is a handbook for the garden lover traveling in Italy. It presupposes on the reader's part a considerable acquaintance with and interest in the Italian formal garden, and seeks only to enumerate and give directions for finding the finest specimens of that gardening from Palermo to Como. The author tells where the gardens are, when they are accessible and briefly mentions the features for which each is most celebrated. Her excellent photographs have been reproduced on uncoated paper, evidently to avoid making the little book too heavy to carry about; but the results are not always so good as one could wish. [John Lane Company, New York. $1.25.

THE JOURNAL OF A COUNTRY WOMAN, by Emma Winner Rogers. The real delights of living in the country are here set forth by a woman who really understands them. There are several beautiful nature plates. [Eaton and Mains, New York. $1.25 net.

New Fiction

THE WIND'S WILL, by Albert Britt, relates in absorbing fashion a heartily wholesome and appealing story of modern life. The young hero has been brought up through a fresh, unspoiled youth on an Illinois farm under the influence of a wonderfully kind and wise man. After his commencement at a small college it is made known to him that he is the sole heir to one of the largest businesses of the country. Then his testing experiences begin; he goes through a number of things, including a social fling in New York and an attempt to run the business of which he knows nothing. It is a vigorous, well told story, with life and youth and optimism marking its every page. [Moffat, Yard and Company, New York. $1.30.

THE BROWNS, by Mrs. J. E. Buckrose, gives the reader one of those happily interpretative glances into life as it is that so seldom fall to his lot from the regulation writer of fiction. The story in itself is very slight; just how a mother and daughter struggle along pinched by poverty, how they receive a small inheritance that allows them to "go it" a bit, how love comes to the daughter and what it all means to the mother. But it is so enchantingly done, with such keen bits of character analysis and such accurate emotional interpretations, that it is a real little book of life, human and happy. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.25.

PALMERS GREEN, by Stewart Caven, is an unpleasant thing, relating the story of a stupid, selfish sort of man who has invented a terrible explosive. He has a charming wife, but lets himself be captivated by a foolish girl, and finally in desperation takes a tablet of his explosive stuff and puts out in a boat to sea. But the stuff doesn't explode—it does something to his mind and nervous system, and after his rescue he becomes a model husband. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $1.25 net.

When Baby Bear Visited the Beavers

(Continued from page 496)

and go to sleep, Baby Bear. You can come again in October."

Tears rolled down Baby Bear's cheeks, but he cuddled down beside the little Beaver children and tried to go to sleep.

"Swish-swish! Swish-swish!" sang the river close beside the Beavers' house. It sang the baby Beavers to sleep; but Baby Bear began to cry softly.

"Poor little fellow! I believe he is homesick," declared Sally Beaver. "Do go for his mother, Father Beaver."

So up the river paddled Father Beaver as fast as he could go. Then he waddled up the garden path and told Father Bear that his baby was homesick.

Father Bear and Mother Bear went together after their baby, and pretty soon the little fellow was sound asleep in his own bed.

"I never could understand why the Beavers like to live in such damp houses!" said Mother Bear to Father Bear.

"Nor I, either," admitted Father Bear, "but they are good neighbors, good neighbors!"

MISSIONARY WORK

Another Slaughter of the Innocents

In the recent fighting in the City of Mexico between the forces of Madero and Diaz the worst of all the tragedies seems not to have been reported in any of the daily newspapers at all. Word of it has come from Mexico by letter to the Board of Foreign Missions in New York City. This calamity was the cruel slaughter and wounding of fifty-six small newsboys from Dr. Wallace's newsboys' home. These lads were in the Cathedral square at the time when General Bernardo Reyes, in the interest of Felix Diaz, made the first desperate onslaught of the rebellion in an effort to capture the national palace where President Madero was at that time fortified. As the Reyes troops ran into the square firing, the place was full of newsboys selling papers, and other lads seem to have scampered into the open space to see what the noise was. At any rate, fifty-six of them got in line of the rifle fire and were either killed or horribly wounded in the promiscuous shooting.

One of the onlookers who saw this dreadful sight was Daniel Zavaleta, the son of a Mexican minister who was twenty years pastor of the Chilpancingo church. The young man was widely known as a stalwart Christian, and had taken part in Christian Endeavor work since his eighth year. He had chosen the medical profession and had practically completed his course of studies in preparation for his life work as a physician. The bloody scene in the square challenged both his professional honor and his Christian sympathies, and he responded by rushing forth into the midst of the street battle to care for the wounded. His sad reward for this heroism was a bullet a few minutes later, which killed him instantly. Side by side with him fell an older doctor who had been his tutor in medicine for years. Altogether, it is said that the number killed on this morning of fearful massacre was 505, of whom 170 were women.

The slaughtered newsboys were the wards of one of the most interesting by-products of Protestant missions in Mexico City. The institution was founded in 1911 by Rev. William Wallace, who had observed the prodigious number of homeless street waifs in the Mexican capital. The Catholicism of the city had never done anything for these lads, but when Mr. Wallace proposed that they should be rescued from their sleeping haunts in alleys and vacant hallways a considerable company of the most prominent Catholic laymen of the city gladly joined him and provided the money for renting a house in the center of the city, where shelter has been nightly given to an increasing number of little strays who made their precarious living by selling newspapers in the streets. The loss of so many of its inmates does not make the home less needed, since many more have been orphaned by recent fighting and will doubtless be thrown on the streets in the same way. But it is to be feared that Dr. Wallace's wise plans will be interfered with by demoralization of conditions in Mexico City.

Part of Y. M. C. A. Building, Mexico City, Showing Effect of Gun Fire in Recent Revolution

"A Little Nursing Baby" of an Engine

Fred Hope, the indefatigable director of industrial work in the West Africa Presbyterian mission, has had "the time of his life" getting his new twenty-horse-power traction engine and saw mill up from the coast to where he wanted to use it at Elat. But he did the job all right, as does not need to be explained to anybody who knows Mr. Hope. The Continent has already told about the start of the engine on its long trip, and how the first stage of the journey ended with the big machine lying in the bottom of a creek, where it plunged through a defective bridge, Mr. Hope and his assistant, Mr. Grieg, barely escaping with their lives. It proved impossible to do anything more at that time than pull up the engine out of the water, build a house over it on the bank and leave it there until the next dry season.

When the journey was resumed, the greatest care was taken with the bridges, and thirty of them were practically rebuilt before Mr. Hope ventured across. The climb was a thousand feet in all, and only inveterate determination made it possible to negotiate all the difficulties and finally reach Elat in triumph. The engine was soon rigged up with saw mill, planer and lathes, and then, to the unbounded amazement of the whole people, the plant was started running. The Kamerun country never had such a sensation before. To tell the story in other than Mr. Hope's own words would be to forfeit the vividness of the extraordinary impression conveyed by his last vivacious letter. Let quotation therefore finish the tale:

"The first day we ran the saw it was a sight. From early in the morning till late in the afternoon there was a crowd there, sometimes 400 to 500, standing all around watching what was a regular world's fair to them. They have absolutely nothing of their own in the way of machinery, and this engine and saw mill is something wonderful to them. I heard some of them wondering if that big engine and mill came down from heaven. I told them this was just a little nursing baby I had got back in America, so small that it cried when it was taken away from its mother. I wish you could have seen and heard the expression of surprise and doubt they let off at this.

"I heard an expression of surprise behind me while I was at the engine that day and turned to see who had said it. There was a woman in the crowd watching me, who had evidently come from a distance. A man was saying, 'Why, no, he is just a man like everybody else. Why, he is the father of that little white baby up at the white man's town.' As I turned he said, 'She wants to feel of you to see if you are a real person.' I held out my arm and she timidly placed her hand on it and felt to see if I was a real person, but never taking her eyes from my face. If I had made a jump at her she would have let out a yell and started for the bush. But as her hand came in contact with flesh and it really soaked into her mind that this was only a big, fat man after all, she laughed a foolish little laugh, as though someone were deceiving her.

"But as great a curiosity was our well. We, of course, put our engine where we wanted it and dug a well, striking water at twenty-eight feet. The fame of the well has spread for miles in every direction. When I put men to work digging, our own people wanted to know what I was doing, and when I told them I was digging there to find a spring they thought I was a fool sure on that point. 'Whoever heard of such a thing?' When the water was struck I asked what they had to say, and the answer was, 'What can we say? We are finished. Next time a white man says he is going to do something we'll keep still.' Another said: 'If the white people say they are going to make water run up a tree I'll believe it, and go to my town without even waiting to see them do it.'"

Archbishop Defends a Liquor Dealer

A remarkable story which shows why evangelical missionaries in the Levant have little hope of really saving influence for the people emanating from the Oriental churches is gleaned from The Orient, a missionary weekly printed in the Bible House at Constantinople. The incident relates an experience of Captain Field, who was in command of the United States armored cruiser Tennessee when it lay recently in Smyrna harbor as a guaranty to residents during the present disturbed conditions in the Turkish empire.

Captain Field discovered that the sailors from his ship, when given shore leave, patronized much too freely a certain grog shop in Smyrna, and as a result of drunkenness so encouraged, were becoming involved in dangerous trouble with local residents. The captain therefore sent a polite request to the owner of the drinking place, desiring him to refuse to sell any more liquor to men in the American navy's uniform. But the saloonkeeper ignored both this message and a second sharper one of the same tenor. Then Captain Field sent ashore a sentinel to stand before the door of the grog shop and warn the Americans away. This not only destroyed the American patronage of the place but also the patronage of sailors from other vessels lying in the harbor.

This reduction of business soon brought a pitiful wail from the Smyrna liquor dealer, who besought Captain Field to remove the guard. But, of course, the captain would do nothing of the sort, and the next move on the part of the saloonist betrayed his possession of an astonishing influence, for a day or two later the American naval officer received a personal letter from Archbishop Chrysostom, the metropolitan of Smyrna, the highest representative of the Greek Orthodox Church in all that region, earnestly begging that the American should not ruin the trade of the saloonkeeper, because the man was one of the archbishop's most important parishioners. The amazement of such an interference is the greater, and its significance the greater, too, because Chrysostom, among his own people, is regarded with suspicion because he is, they say, too much of a Protestant. If such a man puts the financial welfare of a church member above the moral well being of visitors to his city, there certainly could be no higher view expected of his compeers in the Greek hierarchy.

Board Notes and Announcements

—Christ's word to Peter, "I have prayed for thee," was a key used in Room 48, Chicago, Friday morning by the leader, Mrs. Nicely of Crerar church, to show the way whereby we should be "going forward in love, in service and in sacrifice." In the India map talk Mrs. Dickey, who has been in India, pointed out the necessity for immediate reenforcement. Of the seven missionaries present, one was under appointment to Persia, two soon to return there; one a trained nurse for Guatemala hospital, two preparing to go again to India and one to Japan. Miss Lamme of Urumia, Persia, gave good news about Miss Van Duzee's Bible students there.

—The annual meeting of the Woman's Presbyterial Board of Missions of the Northwest will be held in First Presbyterian church, Sioux City, Iowa, April 15-17. The opening session will be Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, when a special meeting of the Westminster Guild delegates will be held. Dr. Cleland B. McAfee will make the opening address Tuesday evening. Among missionary speakers expected are Dr. C. W. Mason of Siam, J. C. Garritt, D. D., of China; Mrs. Walter J. Clark of India, Miss Rena Cathcart of Mexico, Mrs. Charles Murray of Persia, Mrs. A. K. Reischauer of Japan, Miss Florence Smith and Mrs. Charles S. Williams of South America and Mrs. Ralph G. Mills of Korea.

The Open Hearth

San Francisco's Stewardship

The modern San Franciscan suspects today that the nation has its eye upon his city. This has produced more of a sense of responsibility than pride. It was not so a few months ago. Until then he had looked upon the Pacific-Panama exposition as something all his own. It would be a world wonder and a success just because he would make it so. Today several rude, hard knocks have made partnership and censorship from without quite appropriate and rational. A nobler notion of stewardship is struggling for possession of the city.

It is a good thing to be a Protestant minister in this city that is set on a hill by the golden gate and cannot be hid. One strives against pagan and proletariat and pioneer amidst the beautiful, the bizarre and the beastly. If you are looking for rewards, O man of God! unless it be the satisfaction of standing fast and, having done all, to stand, you will have to wait till heaven dawns. But does any ambassador of Jesus ask for a more attractive chance?

It is a good thing to be a Christian layman at this time in San Francisco, with all its varied atmosphere of fog and shine and rain and wind. There is no kind of human excitement or interest that has not its counterpart here, and they challenge the best in men and women. There is no struggle in politics or government or legislation, or in social hygiene, philosophy, economics, vice, slavery, rum, commerce, immigration or labor that is not being fought out here on the fair and square with big, bold, honest hand, heart and brain. Here is the thick of things. Here the odds are heavy against righteousness, but here is where righteousness finds her true task.

It is a good thing for the nation to take a lively interest in this latest special exhibitor of American standards before all the world. While the city, like every other city, must work out its own salvation, yet what the local press might not care to say the national press can easily declare without fear or favor. What the local church might say only with impotency or disastrous effect the national church can say with such force as shall change the attitude of the whole community. The demand of the nation is welcomed by righteousness, and sin has been halted. There is more health in the body politic than was anticipated. Wide interest on the side of virtue is apparent. Red light injunction, cleaned-up "Barbary coast," liquorless dance halls, are not only agitable now but made fightable because of the nation's proper intrusion into the common counsel of this preexposition period of the city's life.

William Nat. Friend.

Bible Contest Questions

At the Logan Square Presbyterian church of Chicago a Bible contest was held which proved to be a great stimulus to Bible study in the Sunday school and congregation. The list of questions used was the same as that once used at a Bible contest at the Bible conference at Winona Lake. Two captains chose sides and the pastor put the questions after the congregation had ranged themselves in two opposing lines on either side of the church room. Both sides answered correctly till about the twentieth question, when the first draft was made, and presently the left hand side began to grow and swell and the other to shrink and then the right side began to draw, and enlarge, and so it continued for a time, but the left side again increased and continued to increase till it had practically absorbed the right, and then commenced the tug of war to find out who could answer all the questions. It did not take long. The question, "Who asked the question, Am I in the place of God?" seemed to be a stickler. However, four persons (all of them women) answered all of the remaining questions of the 146 and came off with triumph. To these the pastor awarded medals. Several persons said, "We have studied the Bible more the last two or three weeks than we have ever done before." The writer has had so many calls for these questions that the first lot of them has been exhausted. The calls have come from many states, the last orders he was obliged to refuse. Now he has had another supply printed and any who wish them can learn the terms per hundred by writing him. They are sent at cost price.

J. Tooker Ford.

2650 North Central Park avenue, Chicago.

John R. Mott and China

Our newspapers recently reported that President Wilson offered to John R. Mott the ambassadorship to China, and also announce his refusal. We understand the sincerity with which Mr. Mott considered the proposition, and we have not the least idea but what he acted from the best possible motives. Yet the fact of his refusal seems strange in the present light of this great Chinese propaganda. Probably above all men Mr. Mott is most fitted to represent our government not only in matters of diplomacy, but in all that concerns the highest and best interests of any people. A man with his moral fiber and strong influence in government and missionary circles could do for China what no other man can possibly do. Mr. Mott is doing much by traveling from place to place, from institution to institution, and stirring up missionary zeal and enthusiasm. No one can estimate the good he does. We do not speak disparagingly of Mr. Mott when we say that there are men who might well take his place—though perhaps not so successfully—in the particular field in which he has accomplished so much, but for this greater channel of power and influence we know of no man so well endowed, intellectually and spiritually, as Mr. Mott himself. President Wilson must have thought so, and Jeremiah Jenks and others, and might it not be well for the student volunteers, for the church, to think so, too?

T. W.

Wooster Has Such a Band

In an editorial in March The Continent asks "Why not have home mission volunteers?" We have them in the University of Wooster. There is a regularly organized band of fifteen with regular weekly meetings announced on the church bulletin as a definite part of our weekly list of services. Wooster has, it seems, again been ahead of the times and led the way.

E. M. Pendleton.

Presbyterianism in the Southwest

There is no wider field in the world for the spread of Presbyterianism than in the Southwest. The fields are white unto harvest. Here in this section cities have come up like magic, filled with people from the old eastern and southern states. There are many Presbyterians among them. But Presbyterians, being the most liberal folks in the world, find it easy to drift into other churches. This they are doing. It is not because they are disloyal to their church but because they are loyal to God and do not want to live in a community and not help support the church. They therefore unite with other denominations.

Unfortunately the Presbyterians who are already on the field are divided. There are those who belong to the Southern Church and there are those who are members of the so-called Northern Church. It takes considerable time of the pastor to explain the difference between the churches. The fact is the difference is so small that it requires more time to explain it than if it were infinitely greater. About the only explanation we can make is that one is a U. S. Church and one is a U. S. A. Church, and immediately the remark will be made that the only difference is one has an "A" hitched on to its name while the other has not. The idea of all Presbyterians uniting and working together is the only hope for Presbyterianism in this country. The other denominations, especially Methodist and Baptist, are thriving here because they are united. Presbyterians must unite or go along in the same old way that they have been going for the last half of a century. The plan suggested in an editorial in The Continent of dividing the church field in two great sections and making Presbyterians on each side of this line responsible for Presbyterian activities should appeal to everyone interested in the future of Presbyterianism in this country. The line might be drawn anywhere, but it occurs to this writer that a line beginning at Richmond, Va., and running to San Francisco would be such as to throw the work in proper proportion.

All Presbyterians south of the line could be known as Presbyterians of the South, and all north of the dividing line Presbyterians of the North. They, of course, would be under one and the same General Assembly. When the time came for the meeting of the General Assembly it would be the coming together of the North and the South in one great fellowship meeting. Former Cumberland Presbyterians, raised in the South and now in the Presbyterian Church U. S. A., have already seen the happy results of coming in touch with our brethren from the northland. The whole Southern Church and the whole Northern Church could soon be engaged in singing "Blest be the tie that binds."

Joseph P. Hicks,
Editor The Presbyterian of Texas.

Would Instruct, Not Construct

Congress has voted for $2,000,000 to be expended in constructing a marble temple. Would not Lincoln rather see that money spent in instructing that which will outlast all marble, the young manhood of our nation? Could not our Congress safeguard that money in some wise way of investment as did Cecil Rhodes of South Africa? Let the annual return from that sum be used for educating, say, the best student from each one of the several state universities. Let these young men be sent to Washington for three years' study of governmental problems, their expenses to be met by this annual return. We feel that our immortal Lincoln, who so thoroughly caught the spirit of our Master, would much rather see such money spent in educating young men—it may be poor financially, but bright intellectually—in the science of human government.

Lincoln, like his and our Master, loved men rather than marble. May we not seek to construct in our midst a temple of splendid statesmen whose achievements for the good of our country and the glory of God will outlast all structures of marble here and elsewhere?

J. A. Armstrong.

What One Town Did for Boys

Under the leadership of Rev. Joseph Hillman Hollister, pastor of First church, the evangelical congregations of Mount Vernon, a suburb of New York City, carried out in March a remarkable movement to enlist the older Christian boys of their city in positive living for the advancement of the kingdom among their fellows. There is no Y. M. C. A. in the town, and some effort in behalf of boys has seemed on that account more imperatively laid at the door of the churches. A stirring program was arranged for what was designated as the "First Annual Conference of Christian Boys of Mount Vernon." Christian boys of 14 and over were invited from all the churches, but none admitted except on credentials secured from their Sunday schools.

The conference began Saturday afternoon, when W. D. Barnes of the Yale '07 baseball team spoke on "The Keynote," and three Mount Vernon boys read papers on "The Christian Boy Making Himself Count," respectively in athletics, the world and the church. These papers were discussed by W. H. Burger, boys' secretary of the New York state Y. M. C. A. The evening addresses were by Harold Pumpelly, halfback on the Yale '12 football team; A. N. Cotton, international Y. M. C. A. secretary for high school boys, and F. W. Pearsall, New York state secretary of the Y. M. C. A. Sunday morning every Protestant minister in the city preached on the general theme of "The Need of the Boys in the Community," and the whole effort culminated in the Sunday afternoon mass meeting in the Westchester theater, where Captain C. L. Fenton of the United States army spoke on "Shooting Straight" and James Whitmore, a leader of the Men and Religion Movement, spoke on "The Way Out." At this meeting 250 fellows responded to an invitation to take "a forward step."

Illinois Presbyterian History

H. D. Jenkins, D. D., of Riverside, Ill., has been requested by the Historical Society of Illinois to prepare a history of Presbyteriansim in that state. He asks that churches and presbyteries having printed histories of their various organizations supply him with such copies as will aid in his work. The results of his compilations will be printed by the state society and widely distributed.

Ways of Working

Bringing Pleasure to Shut-Ins

The outdoor days of spring bring many opportunities of service to women's organizations, Sunday school classes or Christian Endeavor societies which are not available in the same way during the winter. In every community there are many people who on account of age or infirmity are unable to leave their homes with comfort. In some cities organized effort is made by the churches to reach these shut-ins and give them a taste of the outdoors. First U. P. church, Chicago, under the lead of the pastor, Rev. J. E. Walker, has for several years brought good cheer to many shut-ins by taking them to the parks. This event usually takes place in the fall, but it is an idea which can be utilized at other seasons of the year to bring as great pleasure. Last November this church gathered together fifty-two men and women, irrespective of their church affiliation, and in automobiles took them to see the flower show in Garfield park. The courtesy to the shut-ins was greatly appreciated by them, and as an annual event is looked forward to by the church.

In Revising the Roll

Just which names to drop and what to do with other absentees has been a puzzling problem the last few weeks to many a church session. First church, Thornton, Ind., has hit upon a form letter which serves a double purpose in regard to absentees. The letter is issued over the signature of the financial secretary and is addressed to active members who are out of the city. It suggests that the spiritual interests of the member will be served best by transfer of membership to a church near his present location. If there is no church in the vicinity of the member, he is welcome to stay with Thornton church, but is told that his name on the list costs his church 62 cents a year for General Assembly and presbyterial assessments and he is given an opportunity to make a pledge for the current expenses and the benevolences of the church.

Concerts as Advertisements

First church, Oklahoma City, Okla., has found that monthly popular concerts by a drilled chorus of members of the church stimulate attendance at regular services. The church employs an organist and director, who trains the voices. Admission is by free ticket, the entire 2,000 being requested before the date of the event.

—Pastors who compare half a dozen church calendars with their own can usually find some way to improve the appearance of their weekly announcements.

—Perhaps the reason the church column in the local paper attracts slight interest either from the editor or casual reader is that it contains little except the most routine formula that services will be held at 10 and at 8 o'clock. Some papers insist this is not news but advertising and force the churches to pay for it.

The Sentimentalism of Mrs. Moss

(Continued from page 495)

"Make her some more. To be sure you can. You must learn to sew well, now that you've a daughter to dress."

Miss Thompson brought the aid society's donation that afternoon. It was a sweet, peaceful face that smiled at her from a clean pillow—a face with smooth, black hair drawn back into a heavy braid. The tiny baby lay where its mother could devour it with worshiping eyes, and the visitor felt a queer catch in her throat as she looked from one to the other. "Babies, the pair of 'em," she said to herself. "I had meant to give her a piece of my mind, but I guess I won't this time. That dimity slip does look sweet, and no mistake."

When the bundle was opened two dark blue garments were not unwrapped, but instead were hastily crammed into their maker's capacious handbag. "I'll cut off the tops, sew the skirts together and make her a kitchen apron," decided Miss Thompson.

She came again next day, and the next, leaving unmistakable evidence of her visits in shining windows and well swept floors; tucking in a bit of advice now and then which the invalid eagerly cherished.

A long climb and a tedious one lay before Evangeline Bailey's inexperienced feet, but she did not falter. Her clean, white baby was the starting point—that and the bureau drawer where the embroidered skirt lay folded. Gradually, sometimes painfully, other things began to "match," even the little mother herself.

* * * * *

The ladies' aid met with Mrs. McKay a year later. As its members sat at work Evangeline passed with little Helen Moss Bailey in her gocart. "Did you ever see such a change in anybody as there's been in that woman?" asked Mrs. Marchant. "That's one thing the aid has accomplished, if it never did anything else."

Miss Thompson sniffed. "Aid, nothing!" she ejaculated. "It was Mrs. Moss or it was nobody. If those clothes had been dark and coarse—navy blue calico, for instance—Evangeline Bailey 'd be just where she was."

"Oh, Miss Thompson, you mustn't say that." Mrs. Moss's face was scarlet. "The seed was there and only needed a little cultivating."

"Yes, I must say it," was the calm rejoinder. "The seed had always been there, but you were the first one to furnish the soil to make it grow. It's thriving now without human help, but you did the planting."

"No, I shall tell tales, too," cried Mrs. Moss gayly. "Evangeline told me that she'd learned more housekeeping from you than she'd ever dreamed of in her life before."

Miss Thompson smiled whimsically. "That's all right. Evangeline Bailey wasn't the only garden under cultivation about that time."

Brotherhood Men at Atlanta

Walter Getty, general secretary of the national Brotherhood, Ohio building, Chicago, is receiving reservations for the Brotherhood supper to be held Tuesday, May 20, at Atlanta in connection with the meeting of General Assembly. A conference on men's work will precede the meal.

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 494)

smile with which she brightened the words faded as she went on. "Mr. Stuart has almost spoiled my whole trip. I'm sick of being always on guard."

"Why on guard, Lennie? Stuart is not dangerous."

"But he is, father. He's always trying to edge up toward a question I don't want him to ask."

"If he ever does ask it, what will you answer, dear?"

"Father! Do you want me to marry Malcolm Stuart?"

"Not if your heart is not in it, dear."

"Well, my heart is not in it, father, not the least bit."

"Is it—is your heart in it—anywhere, Lennie?" His hesitation as he asked the question showed that he knew it was incautious. The girl flushed; for a moment her eyes blazed with anger. Then, with an effort, she controlled herself; the memory of Shanghai was still clear.

"I told you once," she said quietly, "how I would regard your wishes in that matter."

"All right, dear. I'm satisfied," he hastened to assure her.

"But, father!" she resumed after a little silence. "We're going to Berlin, and you know Caroline wrote Mr.—Mr. Horton had gone there to study. You'll surely run across him, or I will, or we will. And it's not that I care anything about him, but I hate to have things unpleasant, and to have you get angry."

"All right, dear. I'll trust you. I have your word, and that's enough."

"Then if we do meet, and he calls, you'll be good? And I may receive him?"

"I suppose so. As professor in the seminary, he's entitled to respect. Of course," he added hurriedly, "that doesn't change things really, but——" He left the sentence unfinished.

It had not been without an effort that Mr. Elmore had brought himself to the point of saying what he had known it was necessary to say if he was not to display an entire lack

Good Tidings of Great Joy

The best news in many a day for Presbyterian aged and disabled ministers and their dependents is the announcement of the fact that, beginning with the First of April, the Relief Department of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation will increase the annuity of Honorably Retired Men from three hundred and fifty dollars to four hundred dollars, and will strive to raise the level of all other appropriations.

Do these tidings bring joy to you?

Are you glad for the sake of the aged and distressed?

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation trusts the church to approve its increased appropriation by generous and loyal support.

If you are interested write

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building Philadelphia, Pa.

of trust in his daughter and make himself appear in her eyes utterly unreasonable. When they had heard in Venice of Caroline's engagement and of Bradford Horton's election to the chair of Greek, he had been inclined to be angry, though only his wife knew it.

His tirade against the "impostor" had met with only remonstrance, not sympathy, from her, which had not lessened his disturbance at the fact that Bradford was to remain permanently in Prestonbury. The outcome was made all the more distasteful to him by the fact that the man he thought an upstart was now raised to his own social level. Over and over Mr. Elmore declared that had he been at home he would have prevented the election; over and over he vowed that though he could not ignore the new professor he would never receive him in his house. Thus only by days of struggle had the proud old gentleman come to the resolve to treat Bradford Horton, whoever he might be, as one gentleman treats another, at least until he should see some sign that Eleanor's affections were involved. "Because he fascinates me is no reason why I should suppose he fascinates her," he told himself again and again.

The little colloquy in the train cleared the air for both father and daughter. In her meeting with Stuart that evening it was a case of "forewarned is forearmed." Welcoming him without constraint and with apparent pleasure, she yet made him feel a nameless something that said plainer than speech, "Comradeship will be acceptable, but lovemaking intolerable." Chafe in spirit though he might, he did not try to pass that barrier. "Finesse is better than force," he reflected wisely. So he set himself only to be gentle, steady, patient, thoughtful, constant, delightful, so delightful that Eleanor felt a growing regret that he was not a friend instead of a lover.

So, still in his company, Vienna became Dresden, and Dresden Geneva, and Geneva Interlaken, and all the rest, and so matters fared on until they were on the eve of leaving Cologne for Berlin. Sitting on the balcony of the Hotel Royale, Stuart said abruptly, "I fear my holiday must end in Berlin. Newcastle is calling for me."

To his daughter's delight, Mr. Elmore saved her from making a reply. "That will be cause of regret," he said, "for us as well as you. We go home very soon after leaving Berlin ourselves. I shall never forget our pleasant companionship in Japan and Egypt and Italy and Germany. I hope you will not forget us."

"No, I shall not forget," was the answer. Poor Stuart! Mr. Elmore, all unwittingly, had utterly turned the edge of his carefully planned remark, and before the conversation which now became necessary was ended the mother and daughter had excused themselves to go indoors.

The Berlin papers that chronicle the movements of American tourists announced the arrival of the Elmore party. As soon as possible after reading the notice Bradford Horton called at the Kaiserhof, to find there not only his Prestonbury friends but, to his great surprise, his friend of the Rigi. His greeting to Stuart was an equal surprise to the Elmores, who had been on the point of introducing the two young men.

"Europe is so small that we have met again," Horton said. "Your suggestion as we parted seems to have proved a prophecy." Turning to Mr. Elmore, he explained, "Mr. Stuart and I climbed the Rigi together one day in June."

Stuart was hardly overjoyed at the appearance of this new acquaintance. It was his last night in Berlin, and Eleanor had promised to walk with him in the park. During that walk he had determined to make her listen to his declaration. Now he was baffled once more, and must cover his chagrin as best he might.

The evening passed rapidly. Eleanor's relief at her deliverance from what she had been sure was coming made her sparkle with charming animation. Stuart joined as heartily as he could in the conversation which centered around things of which he knew little—incidents of the Prestonbury life from which Horton had recently come. Charlie's progress in Yale, Sleighton's approaching marriage to Lucy Jickers, the engagement of young Mrs. Elmore, all were discussed in every phase.

When Horton finally rose to go he spoke first to Stuart. "I have greatly enjoyed meeting you again, friend of the Rigi," he said. "I hope this meeting will not be like that, a meeting that ends in parting, with no certainty of meeting again. I am here in Berlin for several weeks and shall hope to know you better."

"I should be pleased also," said the Scotchman a little stiffly. "But unfortunately this is only another Rigi episode. I leave for England early in the morning."

So Bradford departed without a thought that his coming had wrecked a carefully formed plan, thinking only that Stuart was a luckier fellow than himself. And the luckier fellow bowed at last without a word to the inevitable, and with his good-bys to the Elmores said good-by to his hopes. (To be continued)

Old Pastor for Young People

Pulpit Veteran Popular at Parkville — Kansas City Churches Increase Interest in Missions —Two Congregations Have Joint Services.

KANSAS CITY—It is unusual for a man nearing 70 years of age to be installed in a new pastorate. It is yet more uncommon for him to be called to a strong, active church, composed largely of young people, whose pulpit might be coveted by any minister, however eminent. Yet this is what has happened in the church at Parkville, Mo., where Dr. John C. Miller has been installed pastor of this important church. The secret of it all is that Dr. Miller is "still a young man," interested in everything that interests his people.

Grace church has closed the best year in its history. More than $10,000 has been raised for all purposes and the benevolences have doubled. This church is undertaking the support of its own missionary in the foreign field. Rev. Charles A. Arnold is pastor.

Immanuel church under the leadership of Rev. Ewing S. Hudson has had receipts from all sources double the amount the previous year. The Sunday school enrollment has been increased 30 per cent. This church will assume the entire support of its own missionary in China the coming year.

Prospect Avenue church, less than two years old, under the leadership of Dr. John H. Miller, is making substantial growth, although it lacks adequate equipment.

The two churches in Independence which have been worshiping and working together for the past five months have at their annual congregational meetings decided with enthusiasm to continue this cooperation. Plans to assume support of a missionary in China, in honor of Mrs. Fannie McCoy, a member of First church, who passed on a year ago, have been perfected.

Dr. James H. Speer, for six years pastor of Webb City church, has been elected synodical superintendent of Missouri and he began his new work April 1.

CHARLES C. MCGINLEY.

School and College

Vimont Carpent Welch, Lakewood, N. J., will be valedictorian at the commencement exercises of Mercersburg Academy June 4.

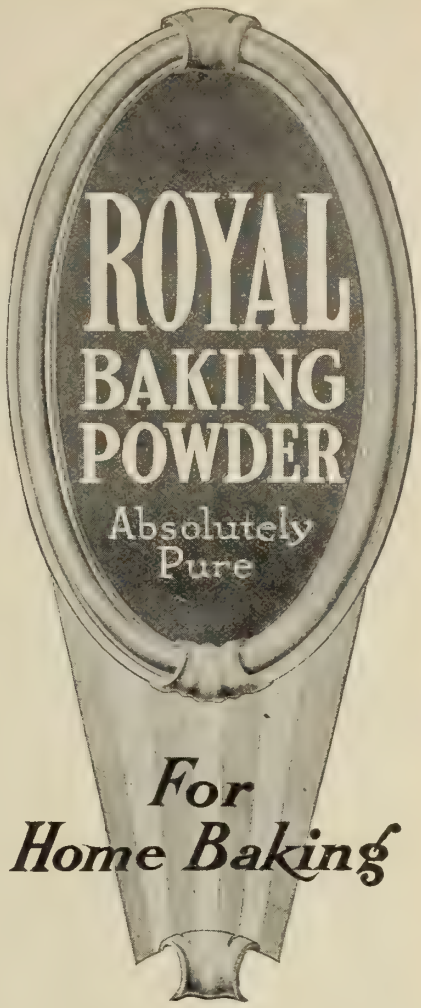
President S. T. Wilson of Maryville College will deliver the commencement address at Lane Seminary May 8. Dr. Wilson is a member of the class of 1882.

Plans for the new science hall for the Frances Shimer School have been made and it is hoped that the building will be completed this fall. When this building is in use additional courses in chemistry and domestic science will be offered.

Auburn Seminary commencement will include a discussion of the church's opportunity and responsibility toward the older boys to be led by specialists in this field of service. Thursday morning the business meeting of the alumni association will be held, with the presentation of diplomas and address to the graduating class at noon.

The Chicago chapter of the Monticello Seminary Alumnae Association held its annual meeting and luncheon March 27. Chicago members pledged $10,000 for the jubilee building fund. If $50,000 is guaranteed by the alumnæ the trustees have promised to contribute the balance necessary for building and equipping a handsome administration and recitation building. Every effort is being made to secure this $50,000 in time for the seventy-fifth anniversary of Monticello in June. The progressive policy of Miss Martina C. Erickson, who came to Monticello as principal a comparatively short time ago, is bringing Monticello prominently before the people of the Middle West.

Nine new members of the faculty appear in the list of officers of Wilson College for the coming year. The most pressing needs of the college are a general endowment fund of at least $500,000, permanently endowed professorships, scholarship funds and an administration building for lecture halls, departmental offices and administrative offices.



By
Lyman
Abbott

Letters to Unknown Friends

A BOOK of friendly counsel, helpful, hopeful and sane. They are answers to the puzzles that every man and woman tries to solve.

Net 60 cents

Doubleday, Page & Company
GARDEN CITY NEW YORK

At all Book Shops and at our own in the new Penn. Station, N. Y. C.

Disaster Will Divert Money

Less Cash Available for Educational Needs in Omaha—Choirs of Young People Used Effectively in Three Churches.

OMAHA—The cyclone Easter afternoon will be felt in its reflex on the financial canvass of both Bellevue College and the University of Omaha. Both institutions have a strong backing in the city. Each has just inaugurated a strenuous canvass for funds. Several congregations for the present will be absorbed in an effort to relieve the trying situation in which numbers of their people will find themselves.

Three churches are enjoying the experiment of using junior choirs for some of their public services. South Omaha First assigns special musical parts to its juniors attending the morning service. At times they sing responsively from the gallery. At Westminster thirty boys and girls form a vested choir, singing special anthems once a month. Parkvale uses its junior choir at each evening service. Rev. H. E. Lehman, the pastor, acts as chorister. He has been using this chorus for four months and observes a considerable increase of home interest in the church and its services.

Two congregations were stimulated by special meetings during March. Dundee church was led into the riches of the word by Samuel Dodds, D. D., of Pennsylvania. Lowe Avenue church had meetings Easter week. Dr. McGiffin, the pastor, was assisted by Doctors Marshall and McConnell, and Rev. R. H. Houseman.

Dr. and Mrs. Jenks were given a reception by the congregation of First church March 14.

Rev. J. F. Schwarz the week of March 16 assisted Mr. Hullhorst of Osceola in meetings at the latter's church.

Castellar Street church is improving its property both inside and outside by painting and redecorating.

The loyal and regular members of Dr. Wheeler's catechism class, which gathers each week at the Sunday morning service, were remembered March 16 by the pastor with fine books. This class of South Omaha church exceeds fifty in number.

Third church has a preparation class for church membership under the instruction of one of its elders, A. D. Shermerhorn. The church is without a pastor.

RALPH H. HOUSEMAN.

Call for General Assembly

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. will meet at Atlanta, Ga., May 15, at 10:30 a. m. in Tabernacle Baptist church. The opening sermon will be preached by the retiring moderator, Mark A. Matthews, D. D. The committee on commissions will meet at the church May 14 at 4 p. m. and May 15 at 8:30 a. m.

Letters as to the business of the Assembly should be sent to William H. Roberts, D. D., stated clerk, Witherspoon building, Philadelphia. Letters on the business of the hospitality committee will be addressed to Rev. Jere A. Moore, Empire building, Atlanta, Ga.

WILLIAM H. ROBERTS, Stated Clerk.
WILLIAM B. NOBLE, Permanent Clerk.

TRAINED NURSE

Remarks About Nourishing Food

"A physician's wife gave me a package of Grape-Nuts one day, with the remark that she was sure I would find the food very beneficial, both for my own use and for my patients. I was particularly attracted to the food, as at that time the weather was very hot and I appreciated the fact that Grape-Nuts requires no cooking.

"The food was deliciously crisp, and most inviting to the appetite. After making use of it twice a day for three or four weeks, I discovered that it was a most wonderful invigorator. I used to suffer greatly from exhaustion, headaches and depression of spirits. My work had been very trying at times and indigestion had set in.

"Now I am always well and ready for any amount of work, have an abundance of active energy, cheerfulness and mental poise. I have proved to my entire satisfaction that this change has been brought about by Grape-Nuts.

"The fact that it is predigested is a very desirable feature. I have had many remarkable results in feeding Grape-Nuts to my patients, and I cannot speak too highly of the food. My friends constantly comment on the change in my appearance. I have gained 9 pounds since beginning the use of this food."

"There's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

Will Prevent Future Overlapping

Five Denominations Form Alliance in Detroit—New Church on Fort Street to Be Built at Once—Dr. Jack Installed.

DETROIT—Five of the leading denominations of this city have formed an interdenominational federation to prevent overlapping of fields and to promote the planting of new enterprises where the growth of population demands them. Dr. W. T. Jaquess, superintendent of church extension, represents the Presbyterians. He is also the statistical member of the new committee on federation.

The installation of Hugh Ian Jack, D. D., as pastor of Central church was the most largely attended congregational meeting that this or any other church has seen in many years. Dr. J. A. Vance, Dr. E. H. Pence and Rev. A. H. Cameron, a classmate of the pastor, took part. A reception to Dr. Jack was held on Friday, April 4, to which all the ministers and elders in the city were invited.

Rev. William Rice, synodical evangelist, formerly religious director of McGregor Institute, Detroit, will be placed on a salary basis at once. A generous friend of evangelism in this city has assumed one half of the salary.

Gratiot Avenue church, the youngest of Detroit Presbyterian churches, has so thoroughly outgrown its accommodations that it has determined to build as soon as possible. The trustees have made up a budget for the current year of $4,000, with the intention of devoting a large percentage of the amount to the building fund.

The plans for the new church on Fort street, in the West end, to take the place of Fort Wayne church and Fulton Avenue mission, have been accepted and building will commence at once. This church will be located about three and a half miles from Fort Street church and about two miles from Immanuel, the nearest Presbyterian church. WILLIAM BRYANT.

What Annual Reports Show

From among the many reports of annual meetings there are interesting items of church advance aside from routine statistics, some of which follow: An every-member canvass for missions was recently completed in Walbrook church, Baltimore, Md., Rev. H. A. Grubbs pastor.—A number have started tithing as a result of a canvass in Aberdeen, Wash., Rev. Robert E. Cooper pastor. The budget for the coming year is 100 per cent larger than a year ago.—Rev. R. E. Anderson, Onarga, Ill., has entered his fourteenth year as pastor there, during which time the church has raised for all purposes $60,074.—Benevolences were larger than ever before at Baker, Wash., Rev. W. W. McHenry pastor.—Attendance at church services is showing improvement at Phillipsburg, N. J., under Rev. William Brower Johnson.—Women of Sedro-Wooley (Wash.) church redecorated the church and recarpeted the floors. The congregation gave the pastor, Rev. H. L. Wilhelm, a gold watch.

Will Discuss Peace

Religious bodies of all denominations have been invited to send delegates to the fourth peace congress at St. Louis May 1-3. Names of many clergymen are included in the list of delegates already submitted. Among the St. Louis members of the committee on religious institutions in connection with the congress are Dr. Samuel J. Niccolls of Second church and Dr. John F. Cannon of Grand Avenue church.

William Carey's school is still a great and growing center of learning in India.

Pears'

Pears' is essentially a toilet soap. A soap good for clothes won't benefit face and hands. Don't use laundry soap for toilet or bath. That is, if you value clear skin.

Pears' is pure soap and matchless for the complexion.

Sold in town and village

Dayton Church Is Destroyed

One Building Burned, Two Flooded in Afflicted City—Relief from Chapel in Indianapolis—Presbyterians in the Flood.

DAYTON—Presbyterians suffered immense setbacks in the loss of property and in the demoralization of their work. Park church was destroyed by fire; Third Street church, known as a mother of churches, Dr. Campbell pastor, was flooded to the depth of twelve feet, the auditorium being a chaotic mass of debris. First church, like Third Street, in the heart of the downtown district, was partially submerged, as was its mission in North Dayton. Fourth, Memorial and Patterson churches, being on higher ground, escaped. No services can be held in the affected buildings for weeks. It is hoped, however, that the work may be reorganized in temporary quarters in a short time and a start made on the reconstruction of the buildings. Presbyterians promise that the work now interrupted will be resumed ultimately upon a larger scale than ever before.

Sleep and Eat in Chapel

INDIANAPOLIS—One of the centers for relief was Cosmopolitan chapel, the institution through which the home mission committee is endeavoring to meet the spiritual needs of the growing foreign element. Situated on a knoll about three blocks from the river, its doors were at once thrown open by Superintendent Horky. Himself aroused early in the morning by the peril of his own home, he carried his little ones to safety. Homeless women and children begged for "a place to go" from the

Smith Granite Monuments

Weather All Climates

Are exclusive in tone; maintain their original finish. Distinctive and enduring. Chiseled in

The World's Best Granite—Westerly

It will pay you and please you to write for our illustrated booklets. Sent on request.

The Smith Granite Co.

Westerly, R. I.

driving rain. The day nursery building was at first opened, but the numbers increased until the chapel was necessary. Bedding was procured and the movable seats adjusted to form a resting place. For a week or more about sixty-five were sheltered and fed. The main room was given over to sleeping accommodations, while the kindergarten was the dining room. Mr. Horky and his assistants have helped needy women and children to find fitting dresses, cloaks and undergarments. Food and clothing were collected privately by the workers who teach and supervise the usual activities. Some of these good women have been on duty each day in the building, caring for the children and giving advice to discouraged mothers.

Another center of relief was West Washington Street church. Here hundreds were sheltered during the first nights, and after a week had passed it was still doing "commissariat" service. At first the members supplied provisions from their own resources, but later they were assisted by the general relief funds. Only about ten of the church families suffered loss.

A Refuge for Indianapolis Flood Victims, Cosmopolitan Chapel

Sutherland church on the north side, near Fall Creek, will feel indirectly the effects of the flood in the damage to the property in that vicinity. C. R. S.

Saved by Special Trains

West chapel, Fort Wayne, was also under water. Its congregation was rescued largely through the efforts of one of its principal workers, John E. Kabisch, who secured two special rescue trains on the Pennsylvania railway through the kindness of Superintendent Wardruf.

Columbus Church Is Ruined

COLUMBUS—West Broad Street church stands in the very center of the flood district. The building has been seriously damaged and it is possible that it may have to be removed entirely and a new structure erected. At the parsonage, on Dakota avenue, the water was about fourteen feet deep and the building damaged. Rev. W. A. Perrins and his family took refuge on the second floor of the house and remained there until Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Perrins remained on the West side, aiding in the work of alleviating conditions. The catastrophe is a serious blow to this congregation. It had recently received about 150 members. Practically all of the homes of the people are seriously damaged and a considerable number of them completely ruined by the flood. In addition to the general work of relief the Presbyterian ministers met Monday, March 31, and decided to raise a fund to be administered by their own representatives in the helping of cases of special need and the restoration of conditions which would make possible the resumption of church activities. Rev. W. M. Hindman, pastor of Northminster church, was made treasurer of the special fund thus to be collected, and contributions intended for this purpose should be sent directly to him. On April 3 fully 20,000 people were dependent for daily food and necessary supplies upon the relief furnished by the general committee and the various church organizations. W. H.

Board Asks Aid for Churches

During the flood which just devastated Logansport, Ind., West Side church was almost destroyed. The brick walls are intact, but the interior, seats and heating plant were ruined. The membership of this church is made up entirely of working people and 90 per cent of them lost all by the flood. The church cannot repair its property unless outside aid is given.

The church at Hopewell, Neb., was destroyed by the tornado. Other churches have suffered.

Gifts for these unfortunate churches will be promptly forwarded by the Board of Church Erection, 156 5th avenue, New York City.

Little Damage in Cincinnati

German Church in Submerged Area — Presbyterians Active in Relief — Rev. Robert D. Wheatley Dies.

CINCINNATI—While many Presbyterians were affected by the overflow here only Second German church was within the city's waterbound zone. Old Sixth church was on high ground, but most of the territory on either side of the edifice was under water.

Presbyterians have been active in the relief of sufferers up the Miami valley. Rev. A. G. Yount, pastor of Sayler Park church, was prominent in work of rescue of victims in Cleves and other down-river suburbs.

Dr. William McKibbin, president of Lane Seminary, found himself marooned away from home. He tried to get back from the East by way of Pittsburg, but returned to Washington.

A delayed message from College Corner brought the news of the death there of Robert D. Wheatley, former pastor of Westwood church. He had been ill a long time.

Dr. Charles W. Dabney, president of the University of Cincinnati and one of Mount Auburn church's ruling elders, took the place of Charles Edward Russell, magazine writer, and addressed the congregation of the People's church at the Grand opera house. He spoke upon the spirit of relief in cheerful evidence during the flood.

The Woman's Home Missionary Society of Cincinnati at the annual meeting at First church reported that $5,779.98 had been contributed during the year, of which $1,100 had been given to the Italian congregation in old Central church. There are now fifty-five members of that church, with men's, boys' and girls' clubs, a kindergarten and thirty-five girls in the sewing school. During the flood the church was open as a refuge for all Italians.

Rev. T. J. Preston of Hunan, China, was at Norwood church April 6 and spoke twice on China. Ren Mulford, Jr.

Community Unites in Church

Suburb of Buffalo Forms Union Congregation Under Presbyterian Auspices—Pastors Are "Loaned" for Evening Services.

BUFFALO—A committee of presbytery has just organized a Union Presbyterian church at Blasdell, an industrial suburb of Buffalo, where a few years ago a Presbyterian church was organized and an edifice erected. The church building was later sold under foreclosure proceedings and the society, working along strictly denominational lines, was unable to rally. During the last summer a community church movement was started; persons of different communions laid aside their differences and agreed to come into one church. Enthusiasm was aroused, money raised and the church edifice was repurchased and renovated. After weeks of deliberation a unanimous decision was reached to seek affiliation with one of the older denominations rather than start an independent union church, and all united in a petition requesting presbytery to organize the society under the name of the Union Presbyterian church. March 30 the church was organized and nine men elected elders, most of whom had held membership in other communions.

Several of the near by village churches have discontinued their meagerly attended Sunday evening services and granted their ministers the privilege of supplying neighborhood

Yellowstone National Park

A dear old lady of sixty-five was making her fifth trip through the Park last summer.

Her grandchildren said she became "homesick" for the Park periodically. Her visits there have a marked effect upon her health and spirits---she grows young again --- as, indeed, do younger folks! ¶ Many people have gone back to enjoy anew the climate, scenery, wonders and pastimes of

America's Only Geyserland

The 1913 season is June 15 to Sept. 15. You should plan to spend two or three weeks there. The cost is very moderate.

Go via the DIRECT AND ONLY LINE to Gardiner Gateway---original and northern entrance: Northern Pacific Ry---route of the famous "Great Big Baked Potato."

Let me send you our illustrated literature---from it you will get some inkling of the cause of Grandma's infatuation. Write today.

A. M. CLELAND
Gen'l Pass'r Agent, St. Paul, Minn.

Northern Pacific Ry

NORTHERN PACIFIC
YELLOWSTONE PARK LINE

Gardiner Gateway—reached only via the Northern Pacific Railway

THE AMERICAN HYMNAL

A Modern Book for the Modern Church

Contains the important familiar hymns with their associated tunes, and is rich in hymns that emphasize the present thought and action of the church.

726 Hymns, Chants, and Responses, with modern aids to worship. Responsive Readings from the American Revised or the King James Version of the Bible.

Send for sample copies

THE CENTURY CO.
UNION SQUARE, NORTH NEW YORK

We Will Pay You $120.00

to distribute religious literature in your community. Sixty days work. Experience not required. Man or woman. Opportunity for promotion. Spare time may be used. International Bible Press, 410 Winston Bldg., Philadelphia.

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to George A. Kilbey, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

churches which have been unable to have ministers of their own. One of these latter is now paying the village minister who comes to it a salary of $800.

Rev. Wilmot A. Carrington begins his pastorate at Akron this week; Rev. William F. Scoular also takes up his new work at North Tonawanda.

Stop Sunday Golf Playing

Pittsburg Prevents Desecration of Sabbath—Women Raise Large Sum for China Fund—Dr. Stone to Speak.

PITTSBURG—Two attempts to desecrate the Sabbath day have been successfully thwarted. Under pretense of taking an offering for the flood sufferers in Ohio and Indiana, the nickelodeons had planned to be open Sunday, March 30. The relief committee refused to sanction the move. Then a number of ministers and Christian people got busy and the authorities of the city rescinded the order. An appeal was made to the churches to give an opportunity for contributions and many of them responded. The Stanton Heights Golf Club was planning Sunday golf this summer. After a careful canvass of the members it was found that more than 60 per cent were in favor of Sunday golf. A number of the leading ministers of East Liberty and the East end sections got busy. An appeal was made to the owners of the property and they refused to give their consent to Sunday playing.

The friends and alumni of Westminster College held a banquet in McCreery's dining hall Monday evening, March 31, to celebrate the completion of the $400,000 endowment fund.

The women's missionary societies of presbytery announced at a recent meeting that they had raised $12,000 for the China fund. This is in addition to the annual contributions of $20,000.

Latrobe church, Rev. George Fisher pastor, has just completed a fine Sunday school building and will dedicate it April 27. The addition cost $15,000.

Dr. S. Hall Young was in Pittsburg during the week beginning March 30.

South Side church has called Rev. William E. Holderby of Philadelphia. This church is planning aggressive work in the downtown section of the South side, and Mr. Holderby has been selected because of his experience. It is understood he will take charge abount June 1.

Dr. John Timothy Stone of Chicago will be the principal speaker at a popular meeting under the auspices of the Brotherhood Council of Pittsburg in First church April 15.

The University of Pittsburg was the recipient of a princely gift of nearly $450,000 last week from the Mellon estate. It will be used to erect a building and properly equip it for industrial research.

P. W. SNYDER.

Moving Pictures of Missions

Board of Publication Arranges New Help for Sunday Schools—Judge Willson Wants Relief from Work.

PHILADELPHIA—The Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work has arranged to introduce moving pictures, illustrating scriptural, Oriental and missionary scenes, into Sunday schools and brotherhoods. Allan Sutherland of the board will cooperate with the picture company in producing and cataloguing pictures of religious and educational value.

The resignation of R. N. Willson as a trustee of the Board of Publication, which he has served as president for twenty-five years, has occasioned much regret. The burden of work pressing upon him is said to be the sole reason for his action.

MINISTERIAL UNION MEETS

The ministerial union, composed of the representatives of six denominations, held its first quarterly meeting of the year in First Baptist church. Resolutions of sympathy were sent to Dr. William Hutton, for twenty-five years secretary of the union, now seriously sick. Dr. Barnett of the Reformed Episcopal Church was elected secretary. Dr. C. A. R. Janvier addressed the union briefly on religious publicity and referred to the beneficial effect of local display advertisements in behalf of church attendance. A paper by Bishop Neely dealt among other things with the Roman Catholic Church. He alluded to the way it controlled the secular press so that no adverse criticism or statements calculated to injure it were ever allowed to appear. None of the papers of the city, as far as we know, made report of Bishop Neely's address.

The special committee of General Assembly on graded lessons met with the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work on April 1. The report intended to be made to the General Assembly was presented.

Great sympathy is felt by a wide circle of friends for Rev. R. H. Kirk of McKeesport, Pa., in the death of his son and only child, a senior in Princeton University. Funeral services, in which Doctors Janvier and Robinson took part, were held at the home of his grandfather, Deacon Hunter of Hollond Memorial church.

GIVES PASTOR THE BALANCE

The Church of the Redeemer, Germantown, having closed the year with a balance of $300, voted to send $200 to its pastor, Rev. H. A. MacKubbin and to increase his salary by that amount.

Bethany church, Dr. Jarvis pastor, Easter Sabbath raised $5,000 to pay some old notes and the church will enter the new year without a cent of debt. Last Sabbath was a day to be remembered because of large accessions to the membership. The communion service was attended by a very large number of communicants.

John Chambers Memorial church held a rally the evening of April 1 for the more than 100 converts from the evangelistic meetings conducted by the Needham brothers. They were addressed by John Wanamaker and the pastor, Rev. C. S. Long.

The fifth annual conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will be held in this city April 23 to 25.

Secretary of State W. J. Bryan will speak in connection with the fortieth anniversary of Bethlehem church on Sunday afternoon, April 13.

Both Presbyterian and Methodist hospitals have been made richer by $5,000 through the bequests of the late Samuel T. Benner.

Rev. George G. Mahy, secretary of General Assembly's evangelistic committee, has been engaged every evening except Saturday since March 1 in revival meetings in West Hope, Tioga and Bethlehem churches. The results have been very encouraging. The evening of April 4 he held a conference with the ministers and several laymen from each church in Baltimore to effect an organization for evangelistic work there similar to that known as the Chester Presbytery plan.

W. P. WHITE.

—

A conference in the interest of daily vacation Bible schools will be held April 10-12. There will be a demonstration and exhibition of work done by the children during the past season in Witherspoon hall April 11 at 8 p. m.

Great Revival Hymns

"BILLY" SUNDAY says:

"Song has always played an important part in every effort to set the world Godward. I consider the best Gospel song book that has been published for years."

Great Revival Hymns

Over 500,000 Sold

This book is used exclusively in the "Billy" Sunday evangelistic campaigns.

GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS will arouse enthusiasm in your various church services. We will send you a copy, postpaid, on approval, together with quantity prices. "TRY IT." Our complete catalog, including Songs for Men, Temperance Songs, Chorus Collection, Octavo Solos, Duets, etc., sent on request. Also learn how to obtain our new publications at half price.

THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
14 W. Washington Street :: Chicago

Tusculum Bulletin No. 8

Tusculum and You

YOU are interested in Christian Education.

YOU know that hundreds of splendid boys and girls are absolutely dependent upon Tusculum for an education.

YOU realize that an Endowment is essential to Tusculum's welfare.

YOU will be glad to know:

(a) That the majority of the faculty have contributed from one to two months' salary toward the $250,000 Endowment Fund we are raising at Tusculum.

(b) That practically every student, even those who are working their way through college, has contributed from $1 to $25.

(c) That every member of the college community is doing his part toward this Endowment.

YOU will recall that Tusculum still needs $78,750 of this $250,000 Endowment Fund.

YOU will surely give to this great work.

YOU have faith in Tusculum—Tusculum has faith in you. Send your contributions to

C. O. GRAY, President,
Greeneville, Tennessee.

Or to JAMES M. MOREY, Treasurer,
Greeneville, Tennessee.

W. M. Shuster Talks on Persia

Former Persian Government Official Addresses Social Union -West End Sunday School Has Largest Average Attendance.

NEW YORK—At the annual meeting of the Presbyterian Social Union held at the Hotel Savoy the evening of April 7 W. Morgan Shuster, who has done much work in Persia, was the speaker. The annual dinner to the newly appointed missionaries will be June 2.

Union Seminary is keeping its pledge of secrecy in regard to the "peace pipe" developments, but it is understood that at the recent special meeting of the directors to consider making a statement of the seminary's belief on the fundamentals of Christianity the board decided to prepare such a document. The Assembly committee will meet again April 10.

The all-day spring meeting of New York Presbytery will be held April 14 in the chapel of "old" First.

The closing exercises for the winter of the sewing school of Alexander chapel, a branch of Fifth Avenue church, took place the morning of April 5. Garments made by the children were on exhibition. Dr. John Henry Jowett addressed the school. The same morning the closing exercises of the sewing school at John Hall Memorial chapel, also a branch of Fifth Avenue church, were held. Dr. Jowett likewise spoke and there were many visitors.

The annual meeting of the New York auxiliary of the McAll mission in France was held April 2 in the parish house of St. Thomas's Episcopal church.

WINS SUNDAY SCHOOL BANNER

The Sunday school of West End church, of which Dr. A. Edwin Keigwin is pastor, has won the silk banner from the New York Sunday School Union for the largest average attendance and the greatest number of new pupils of any Protestant Sunday school on the West side of Manhattan. The record made was 97 per cent.

Harlem church, of which Dr. John Lyon Caughey is pastor, may again soon hold open air services on the church steps, as formerly.

The Collegiate church of Harlem, of which Dr. Edgar Tilton, Jr., is minister, is conducting a free dispensary on the upper East side for the treatment of the sick poor.

The Woman's Presbyterial Home Missionary Society held its annual meeting April 3 in Madison Avenue church. The chief speaker was Dr. Jonathan C. Day, superintendent of Labor temple.

Over $15,000 was given at the Easter collection in Bedford church, Brooklyn, Dr. S. Edward Young pastor. This church is now well established in its large finely equipped new plant at Nostrand avenue and Dean street.

The New York Port Society, through J. A. deBoer, makes use of a large number of old magazines, which are distributed among the men on the transatlantic liners, by whom they are gratefully received.

Dr. Arthur J. Smith, superintendent of the evangelistic committee of New York City, is giving a course of five lectures on evangelism at the Bible Teachers' Training School Friday mornings from 11 to 11:45 o'clock.

During the last year the American parish, directed by Rev. Norman B. Thomas, on the upper East side of New York, has received into church fellowship 255 members, divided among five churches.

New York University announces a course of six public lectures by Rev. August Karl Reischauer, professor of philosophy in Meiji Gakuin, Tokyo, Japan, upon "Buddhism's Challenge to Christianity in Japan." The lectures will be given at the University building, Washington square, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon on successive days, except Saturday, beginning Monday, April 14. The final lecture will be given Monday, April 21, on "The Strength of Christianity in Japan."

Dr. Palmer to Address McCormick Graduates

The graduation exercises of McCormick Theological Seminary will take place April 21 to 24 in connection with the inauguration of Dr. Cleland B. McAfee as Cyrus H. McCormick professor of didactic and polemic theology. The graduating exercises proper will be in the Church of the Covenant Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Dr. S. S. Palmer of the class of 1890 and pastor of Broad Street church, Columbus, will make the address. The inaugural of Dr. McAfee is set for Thursday afternoon in the seminary chapel and will be in charge of Dr. S. J. Niccolls of St. Louis, president of the board of directors. Wednesday from 4 to 7 o'clock President and Mrs. McClure will hold the commencement reception at the president's house. The alumni banquet will be at the church at 5 o'clock Thursday.

Will Look After Homeless Men

National Brotherhood Offers to Cooperate with Pastors and Parents -Y. M. C. A. Has Notable Double Celebration.

CHICAGO—Plans have been perfected and adopted by the National Brotherhood for the establishment of an effort to connect young men, strangers in Chicago, with Presbyterian churches near their place of residence. Pastors and parents are invited to write Dr. Francis M. Fox, associate secretary of the Brotherhhod, Ohio building, giving the location of boys who have come to Chicago to enter business or attend school. Efforts will be made to have them brought into touch with the nearest church. This is a new department of the national headquarters work, which will be in charge of Dr. Fox, who comes into close touch with all the pastors of the city.

The annual convention of the Cook County Sunday School Association will open in Second church Tuesday evening, April 15, and continue until Friday night. It is hoped that the largest attendance in the history of the association will be at this convention. Wednesday evening Marion Lawrance will present teacher training diplomas and Wednesday afternoon Dr. Shailer Mathews will make an address. Bishop McDowell will speak Thursday evening and Mr. Lawrance and Dr. F. W. Farr will speak the last night.

Prizes for the girl who takes the largest number of baths during the week have resulted in a number of new hair ribbons about the Italian mission on Superior street and have started a habit which the directors of the mission hope will be permanent. The mission, which is being conducted in a small flat, is overrun with children.

Rev. J. Eugene Snook, who recently resigned from Berwyn church, will not engage in active pastoral work for some time on account of the illness of Mrs. Snook.

Y. M. C. A. CELEBRATES ANNIVERSARY

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the connection of L. Wilbur Messer with the local Y. M. C. A. as general secretary was celebrated April 1 by a luncheon at noon and a large dinner in the evening. The occasion also marked the fifty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the association in Chicago. A large program of new buildings for various phases of the local work was proposed at the dinner. A hotel for transient young men is badly needed, a large number of neighborhood buildings, a boys' club building and structures for the various groups of railway employees and university students have also been proposed. Mr. Messer has been loaned to associations in the Orient for six months and will leave Chicago this fall.

In the union evangelistic campaign at Harvey by Messrs. Hart and Magann there were 700 conversions. Many hundreds of the church members pledged the evangelist to eschew worldly amusements. At an all day meeting an address was delivered to the laboring men, who took their lunch at the tabernacle, by Mr. Cline, president of the International Blacksmiths' Union.

Second church was disturbed last week by newspaper assertions that Dr. John Balcom Shaw was to be tendered a call by Immanuel church of Los Angeles. The reports came from the California city, where it is said that Immanuel church is quite likely to make the effort to interest Dr. Shaw, but has not yet acted finally.

Pioneer chapel, Forest park, a branch of First church of Oak Park, will be organized as a church Friday evening. Rev. S. B. Pinney has been in charge of this work for over three years. It will be self-sustaining.

Realizing the responsibility of the church to the community, the men of South Park church are planning on the erection of a parish house on the property adjoining the church. Men have recently been stimulated to larger work and have undertaken a community census. An undercurrent of revival has also been a result of the work. The men's club will entertain men of the community April 15.

Buena Memorial church has increased its offerings the past year under the duplex system. Rev. Henry Hepburn, the pastor, is an advocate of systematic church finance.

Cadillac "Desk Table"

No. 246. One of seventy-five designs
Covered by four patents—others pending

You Ought to Have This Desk-Table in YOUR Home

One moment a beautiful library or den table—the next without disturbing anything, extend the drawer and have a complete desk, with broad writing surface, pen and pencil groove, sunken ink well, and in the drawer, room for stationery. When through writing, simply slide back the extension drawer—and there's your table again.

The Cadillac is the only Desk-Table made with nickel-plated, metal slides, insuring positive and easy action. A constant delight—beautifies any room and serves every member of the family.

Ask your dealer to show you Cadillac Desk-Tables, with the Cadillac Brand on the desk lid.

Write us today for handsomely illustrated free Booklet XX

Wolverine Manufacturing Co.
DETROIT, MICH.
Largest Parlor and Library Table Manufacturers in the World.

PRESBYTERIAN TRAINING SCHOOL
of Chicago
for Christian Workers

Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

The School is incorporated and its charter says:

> "The object for which it is formed is to establish and maintain an institution for the training of men and women for Christian and Philanthropic work."

The sixth year of the school opens next September with greatly enlarged equipment. The courses of study and training are rich in Bible and Church Work subjects.

Open this year for young women only.

Correspondence with prospective students, and with pastors knowing young women who should equip themselves for church work, especially solicited.

Address H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 E. 50th Street, Chicago, Illinois

From Various Fields

Wisconsin

The opening of the church house and gymnasium in connection with the church at Oconto took place March 27.

Waukesha church, Rev. C. E. Bovard pastor, has been enjoying a season of revival, Rev. James Rayburn evangelist.

Cato and Niles, two fields whose future seemed doubtful six months ago, have taken on new life since Louis T. Hardin, a student, took charge of them. The membership has increased and efficient officers have been chosen to oversee the work.

The marriage of James Oastler, D. D., pastor of Calvary church, Milwaukee, and Miss Mary Lyman Young, contralto in his church choir, took place the evening of March 26 at the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Edson Lyman, Oak Park, Ill. Dr. and Mrs. Oastler will reside at 182 22d street.

Berean church, Milwaukee, has had a year of great progress, including the building of the new edifice. The church membership is now 175, whereas when Rev. S. P. Todd came three years ago it was thirty-three. Rev. W. W. Perry, who has given his services freely in assisting Mr. Todd, was given a Bible encyclopædia at the annual meeting.

At a congregational meeting April 1 Sheboygan church voted to build a new edifice to cost $10,000. Under the pastorate of Rev. George B. Pence the work has been prospered. The Sabbath school numbers 120. George Imig is doing much for the boys of the community through a brigade which he has organized and which could easily be doubled in membership with larger quarters. The plan is to utilize the old building for a gymnasium.

Minnesota

Recent News of the Twin Cities

A movement has been started among the men of St. Paul to federate all the social service work of the Protestant churches. An effort will be made to take a census of all the school children in the city to see if the compulsory education laws are being obeyed.

The seventh anniversary of Hope chapel, a branch of Westminster church, Minneapolis, was observed March 14 by a dinner. Rev. L. P. Warford is pastor.

The organ and other improvements in Stewart Memorial church, Minneapolis, recently dedicated, have been entirely paid for, with $28 cash balance. There was a large attendance during special services of passion week, when Dr. Charles D. Darling, pastor, preached.

Special meetings were held at Roosevelt and Angus recently by Pastor-Evangelist R. S. Sidebotham.

owa

Rev. Frank H. Gamel of Lake City, who resigned, will become head of a manufacturing company in which he is largely interested.

Rev. H. O. Bethel assisted the pastor, Rev. George Furniss, in meetings at Newton during February. This church has contributed to all the boards with increased offerings.

Holy week was observed by union afternoon meetings of all the churches of Marion in the Presbyterian church. In the same church on Easter morning was held a sunrise praise service. Charles Franklin Ensign, D. D., is pastor.

Illinois

At Joliet Second church, Rev. F. W. Kirkpatrick, the Sunday school had charge of the Easter evening service.

Dr. W. H. Penhallegon of Decatur, who recently resigned his pastorate in that city after twenty-four years of service, has been elected syndic of James Millikin University. Dr. Penhallegon has been president of the board of trustees of the university for a number of years and was a close friend of Mr. Millikin, founder of the school. His acceptance of this position will necessitate his declination of the associate synodical superintendency of home missions recently tendered him.

Petersburg church last year raised $5.21 a member for benevolences, leading all the churches of Springfield Presbytery. Under the budget system this church has shown an increase of 13 per cent for the work of the boards. Rev. H. M. Hildebrandt is pastor.

Since Rev. Henry Abraham went to Normal three years ago the Congregational church has united with the Presbyterian, a commodious parsonage has been built, plans for a new church are in the hands of the committee and $12,000 has already been pledged. This growing city is entirely free from saloons. The task of caring for these normal school students is of interest to the whole church, for the children of the state will soon be under the influence of these teachers.

Pennsylvania

New Edifice at Johnstown

The new First church, Johnstown, Dr. C. C. Hays pastor, will be dedicated May 4 when Dr. J. Ross Stevenson of Baltimore, son of a former pastor of the church, will be present. The congregation has been worshiping in the lecture room and Sunday school quarters since last September. The feast of dedication will begin the last Sabbath of April and continue for two weeks. The building will cost, with ground, $210,000 and is one of the most complete churches in the state. The auditorium will seat 1,200 and there are forty different rooms which can be used directly for various church purposes. The basement is equipped for mission work and a night school for foreigners. The church is built of Cleveland sandstone, with green tile roof, and occupies a prominent corner in the central residence section. The Sunday school quarters at the rear of the church are four stories high, with social rooms and study on the top floor. A business office with two secretaries in constant attendance is modernly equipped.

New First Church, Johnstown, Pa.

Enormous crowds are thronging the meetings of Evangelist William A. Sunday in Wilkes-Barre. More than 8,500 attended the special meeting at which he spoke on strong drink.

Oregon

The new edifice of First church, Albany, covering a quarter of a block and costing $40,000, was dedicated Easter. Dr. W. H. Foulkes, a former pastor in Portland, now general secretary of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation, preached the dedicatory sermon. Rev. F. H. Geselbracht is pastor.

Washington

The new Bellingham First church will be dedicated April 20. The church seats 1,000

(Continued on page 510)

The Only Self-Help College in Illinois
BLACKBURN COLLEGE HAS $23,000 TO EDUCATE YOUNG MEN FOR THE PRESBYTERIAN MINISTRY
WRITE President Hudson, Carlinville, Illinois

Write for Booklet 25

It describes a safe, conservative, non-speculative, non-fluctuating investment yielding a regular, known income—adapted for the investment of savings or surplus. Investigate this Company's

6%
GOLD MORTGAGE BONDS

Denominations: $100, $500, $1,000

Protected by Trust Mortgage
Interest Payable Semi-Annually

Thoroughly secured by the actual ownership of millions of dollars' worth of high-class, improved, income producing city property—located on Manhattan Island, New York City, the most valuable and most productive area of its size in the world.

NEW YORK REAL ESTATE SECURITY CO.
Capital Stock $3,950,000 Assets over $14,000,000
42 Broadway New York

COLONIAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK
La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO
Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.

3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

$25,000,000 Loaned; not one dollar lost for an investor. J. L. Pettyjohn & Co., of Olathe, Kans., will invest your funds in absolutely safe First Farm Mortgages to net you excellent interest return. Write them for particulars and references.

Oklahoma
Farm
Mortgages

Let your money make 6 per cent—NET

The three or four per cent the savings bank pay does not fairly represent your money's earning ability. It is simply the small end of the profits. The bank keep the big share as their fee for re-investment—re-investing you money in mortgages—something you refuse to do for yourself By investing direct you can at least double the profits of your sav ings as they now accrue to you. Oklahoma first mortgages—am ply secured by two to four times the amount of the loan—mak this possible—the same kind banks and insurance companies buy

Why Insurance Companies Buy Oklahoma Mortgage

Experience showed them that in order to meet competitio they must secure as high a rate per dollar as sound busines judgment allowed. Investigation proved that Oklahoma offere the best field for investments of this kind. Approximately $415, 000,000.00 is now invested by the insurance companies in far mortgages—and a good share of this in Oklahoma mortgages

Surely you can't do better than follow the example of thes trained buyers of conservative investments. So decide now t give your money a chance to make good for you.

Write now for interesting booklets describing our com prehensive investment service and mortgage list No. 71

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Company
143 West Main, Oklahoma City, U. S. A.

Good Things in This Issue

In each issue of The Continent there are scores of arguments for the enthusiastic support of the paper as a means of extending the work of the church in general and as a stimulation to the members of a particular church. Take the single example of this week's list of accessions. There are 1,287 additions recorded, which with those printed last week total 2,433. Not all joined on profession of faith, but each addition means an impetus to the church.

The missionary enthusiast has two choice bits in this issue—the changed attitude of Chinese rulers, as shown in definite ways, page 492, and the story of the steam engine which astonishes the African natives, page 500.

Additional details of the destruction to Presbyterian property and the assistance rendered refugees from the flood are given as the result of special efforts by Continent correspondents, page 504.

Financial Situation

Morgan's Son to Be Head of the Famous Banking House - Proposed New Tariff Bill Aimed at Protected Trusts.

With the death of J. Pierpont Morgan one of he best known figures in recent financial hisory passes from the stage. His son of the same name will take his place as head of the great banking house which has been built up through several generations. Associated with Mr. Morgan there has been a group of younger men, about seven in number, who have been aken into the Morgan house in New York after rather notable achievements in various banking and commercial lines. Upon these men will come considerable of the work which he house undertakes. Mr. Morgan is spoken of by commenters generally as an upbuilder. He used his financial ability in a constructive way to rehabilitate railways and other corporate enterprises and placed several of them n a position to do a paying business. Given a large capital and extensive business connecions by his ancestors, it was Mr. Morgan's part to use his growing power to add not only o his own wealth but that of others, some of whom had slight claim to his consideration. His emphasis on the character of a man as the basis of credit as revealed in the testimony before the Pujo committee and his policy never o underwrite the financial needs of concerns yet to be established are two points well worth remembering by those whose fortunes may be measured by hundreds where his was millions.

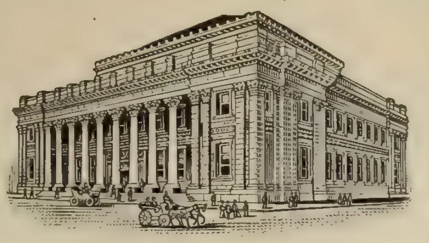
Bill Will Extend Free List

Preliminary details of the proposed tariff measure which the Wilson administration inends to push have been published. It is said o be the President's desire to rearrange the duties so that the trusts will lose much, if not ll, of the protection by virtue of which they have been waxing fat. The readjustment will be felt by many business enterprises, but the ut in duties will not be so severe as the Demorats would wish, out of respect to present business practices. The tax on sugar it is proposed to reduce to 1 cent a pound and gradually reduce further for three years, when t is to enter free. This would insure a large aving to consumers who annually now pay n enormous aggregate sum. Lumber and gricultural machinery will be free, according o published announcements of the bill to be onsidered. Wool may be free as well as boots nd shoes and dressed meats.

Recommendations have been made by a committee of fire insurance companies that their usiness in Missouri be suspended. This action ollows the passage of a bill by the legislature f that state directed against combinations, pecially in fire insurance. The companies say osses have been large and they do not care to ubject agents and officials to criminal proseution. The recent revelations of the so-called arson trust" over the country have set many eople thinking about the moral basis on which his form of insurance rests.

Brief Bits of Business News

—Relief for the homeless in Omaha took the form of a quickly organized company to loan



Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency

Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the

Illinois Trust & Savings Bank

Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidation of Other Banks

Capital and Surplus

$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. & JACKSON BLVD.

ILLINOIS TRUST SAFETY DEPOSIT COMPANY

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

These Will Fit YOUR Pocket Book

I can offer you a very profitable and safe investment to fit your particular circumstances, whether you have large or small funds, or only desire to lay by from month to month small sums as savings. These investments are backed by the IDAHO TITLE & TRUST COMPANY, and the NATIONAL TRUST & SAVINGS COMPANY. Look over the following and tell me about which one you would like to have full information. No. 1. First Farm Mortgages, $1,000 to $15,000; 6% interest payable annually; also First City Mortgages, $300 to $5,000; will net you 7% per annum. No. 2. Guarantee Capital fund certificates, $100 to $5,000, 8% annual interest and as much more as the earnings of the company will justify. No. 3. Guarantee Investment Certificates, $3.00 per month or any multiple thereof for 24 months, or as long as you like. You can draw out your money and 8% per annum interest compounded semi-annually any time after 24 months. Write for full information.

CHARLES B. COXE
BOISE President IDAHO

FARM MORTGAGES
Yielding 6% and 6½% net

A FARM MORTGAGE is a thoroughly safe investment. The security cannot be destroyed and is not affected by panics, strikes or depressions.

The first mortgages we sell represent loans made with our own funds upon improved farms worth at least two and one-half times the amount loaned. This insures absolute safety to our customers.

The investor in one of our mortgages has possession of all the papers comprising the loan, including the actual mortgage itself, together with the note and Abstract of Title. We guarantee the Title and will collect and remit interest in New York Exchange without charge.

We invite correspondence and will submit lists of mortgages and pamphlet explaining in detail our service to investors.

Bank references upon request.

THE DEVEREAUX MORTGAGE COMPANY
1014 Spalding Building :: PORTLAND, OREGON

Farm Mortgages 6%

Our Investments Appeal to Conservative Investors
Send for pamphlet "C" and list of offerings. 30 yrs. experience. Highest refs.

E. J Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.

The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

6 and 7 % Sure

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth, - - Texas.

5½% and 6% Interest

The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.

G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

REAL ESTATE LOANS

6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%

During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet R UNIONVILLE, MO.

TEXAS MORTGAGES 6% and 7% NET

BECAUSE OUR Mortgages are placed only against income bearing property, inspected by one of our officers and never exceed 50 per cent of actual values.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES purchase them with the most satisfactory results. YOU could not ask for a stronger endorsement than this. YOUR INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date, in New York Exchange without charge. Write for list, information and references.

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE COMPANY
R. B. BISHOP
Vice-Pres

Safe Security
Attractive Rate
Efficient Service

FORT WORTH, TEXAS

6% 7%
We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request
JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS
6% 6%
We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge.
SEND FOR BOOKLET.
PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%
Write for particulars regarding our investment service
Highest references.
R. C. KITTEL & CO., 108 So. La Salle St Chicago.

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS
Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.
BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

$33,000,000 INVESTED IN ALBERTA MORTGAGES
by insurance, trust and loan companies. The Associated Mortgage Investors, Inc., has applied the FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE of its Officers to making Alberta loans, which yield 6% NET and have many advantages, including GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED TITLES. Inquiries are welcomed and imply no obligation.
ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

6½% Net First Mortgages
on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.
GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT
¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075
WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

Spend Your Vacation at Winona
1913 the Surpassing Year
Schumann-Heink, Ben Greet Players, Balalaika Orchestra, Stricklan Gillilan, Schumann Quintette, Reno the Magician, Lost Princess, Ahasuerus, William Jennings Bryan, Campbell Morgan, Gipsy Smith, Edward Amherst Ott, Chicago Glee Club, Wallace Bruce Amsbury, Lulu Tyler Gates, Venetian Night. And Hundreds of Other Superb Attractions. They're All Waiting for You.
SEND FOR QUARTERLY
Address Publicity Department, Winona Lake, Indiana

10 DAYS FREE TRIAL
We ship on approval without a cent deposit, freight prepaid. DON'T PAY A CENT if you are not satisfied after using the bicycle 10 days.
DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you receive our latest art catalogs illustrating every kind of bicycle, and have learned our unheard of prices and marvelous new offers.
ONE CENT is all it will cost you to write a postal and everything will be sent you free postpaid by return mail. You will get much valuable information. Do not wait, write it now
TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries at half usual prices.
Mead Cycle Co. Dept. S304 Chicago

BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
For Hoarseness
Never fail to promptly relieve loss of voice, coughs, sore throat. Invaluable to public speakers and singers.
25c, 50c, $1.00. Sample Free.
JOHN I. BROWN & SON Boston, Mass.

money to property owners to replace their homes.

—The rising value of real estate and the overtaking of production by consumption tends greatly to the increased stability of the security for farm mortgages.

—Iron and steel products valued at $1,000,000 a day have been exported for the last eight months, according to recent figures. No industry is growing faster in the foreign trade.

—As a result of an estimate by a traveling salesman that during twenty years he has disbursed $18,000 in tips the legislature of Illinois will be asked to prohibit tips. This has already been done—at least theoretically—in Iowa, Texas and Arkansas.

Washington

(Continued from page 508)

persons in the main auditorium and has every facility and convenience known to modern church construction. It has cost $42,000. Moderator M. A. Matthews will take part in the dedicatory exercises.

For the first time in the history of Seattle the pastors of four large downtown churches united in union evangelistic meetings March 17-28. The pastors of First Presbyterian, Dr. M. A. Matthews; First Baptist, First M. E. and Plymouth Congregational churches were the speakers. The campaign was carefully planned and attracted large audiences.

New Jersey

A community church efficiency conference was recently held at the woman's club of Orange, when Rev. Charles Stelzle spoke. The need of a survey of the Oranges was suggested in order to facilitate the work of the city missionary.

The fiftieth anniversary of Third German church, Newark, was recently celebrated by special exercises extending over four days. Rev. Julius H. Wolff, the pastor, has been in charge of the congregation for thirty-eight years. The church now has 225 members, a large edifice, Sunday school building and a parsonage.

South Dakota

Several of the churches of South Dakota Synod have attained self-support during the church year just closed, among them White Lake, Rev. Edward Van Ruschen stated supply, and Wessington, Rev. John L. Howe pastor.

A Presbyterian church was recently organized in Plankinton by urgent invitation of the community. It is connected with Sioux Falls Presbytery and is now seeking a pastor. A Congregational church had been defunct for some years.

Nebraska

Hopewell church, in the country six miles south of Unadilla, and the manse were both wrecked by the Easter storm. The minister, Rev. Curtis J. Hannant, and his wife both escaped unhurt. After the storm fire greatly damaged the manse, on which there was no insurance.

Oklahoma

As the result of a personal work campaign conducted by the pastor, Rev. Wellington E. Loucks, and his band of workers Claremore church has been greatly awakened. Simply by an emphasis upon personal consecration to God a large number have been added to the church.

Ministerial Obituary

Rev. Elmer Briton Waller

Maryville College has suffered a grievous loss in the sudden death, by cerebral hemorrhage, on March 29 of Rev. Elmer Briton Waller, dean of the faculty. For twenty-two years Professor Waller has occupied the chair of higher mathematics; but he also rendered the college conspicuous service in many other ways. He had great financial ability, and his counsel in the executive committee of the board of directors was invaluable. He was at once a man of initiative and stability, and of geniality and humor. He was only 54 years old at his death, yet he left a noble life work behind him. He was a graduate of Union College and Princeton Seminary. His wife and two daughters survive him.

Dr. Webb Reported Injured

Dr. Aquilla Webb of Louisville, Ky., met with a serious accident on a train between Columbus, Ohio, and his home city. A stone thrown through the window hit him on the side of the head. It is reported that the sight in one of his eyes is destroyed and that his right side is paralyzed. It is believed his side will get better, if not entirely well, but it is doubtful whether he will ever see out of his injured eye.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Adams—Hallock, April 15, 11 a. m.
Ardmore—Lehigh, April 15, 8 p. m.
Austin—Austin First, April 22, 8 p. m.
Binghamton—Owego First Union, April 21, 3:45 p. m.
Black Hills—Hot Springs, April 15, 9 a. m.
Boston—Brookline First, April 15, 2 p. m.
Buffalo—Lancaster, April 21, 2:30 p. m.
Butler—Butler Second, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Cairo—Omaha, April 16, 7:30 p. m.
Carthage—Neosho First, April 15, 7:30 p. m Notify pastor, Rev. W. M. Elliott.
Cedar Rapids—Shellsburg, April 15, 7:30 p. m
Central—Sweetwater, April 11, 8 p. m.
Central Dakota—Woonsocket, April 16, 8 p. m.
Central Washington—Toppenish, April 15 7:30 p. m.
Chattanooga—Chattanooga Second, April 15 7:30 p. m.
Chicago—Highland Park, April 14, 10 a. m.
Cimarron—Alva, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Cleveland—Cleveland Old Stone, April 15 8:30 a. m.
Columbia—Valatic, April 15, 4 p. m.
Columbia River—Woodland, April 15, 7:30.
Columbus—Westerville, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Corning—Villisca, April 15, 2:30 p. m.
Crawfordsville—Frankfort, April 21, 2 p. m
Dallas—Plano, April 11, 8 p. m.
Dayton—Springfield Second, April 14, 2 p. m
Denver—Denver North, April 15, 10 a. m Woman's Missionary Society same time an place.
Detroit—Detroit Trumbull Avenue, April 21 7:30 p. m.
Dubuque—Oelwein, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Elizabeth—Elizabeth First, April 15, 10 a. m
Erie—Franklin, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Ewing—Norris City, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Fargo—Erie, April 22, 10:30 a. m.
Flint—Ubly, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Florida—Eustis, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Fort Wayne—La Grange, April 21, 7:30 p. m
Freeport—Freeport First, April 15, 7:30 p. m Woman's Presbyterial Society, April 16-17
Genesee—Corfu, April 14, 2:30 p. m.
Grafton—Fairmont, April 14, 6:45 p. m.
Hastings—Superior, April 22, 7:30 p. m.
Holston—Tusculum Mount Bethel, April 1 7:30 p. m.
Huron—Norwalk, April 14, 7 p. m. Woman' Presbyterial Missionary Society, same tim and place.
Indiana—Evansville, April 21, 7:30 p. m. Delegates notify Rev. W. F. Padgett for entertainment.
Indianapolis—Southport, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Iron Mountain—Poplar Bluff, April 15.
Iowa—Winfield, March 14, 7:30 p. m.
Iowa City—Tipton, April 14, 7:30 p. m. Missionary societies, April 15-16.
Kalamazoo—Decatur, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Kansas City—Kansas City Benton Boulevar April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Kendall—Aberdeen, April 22, 7:30 p. m.
Kittanning—Rural Valley, April 14, 7:30 p. m
Lackawanna—Scranton Washburn Street, Apr 21, 7:30 p. m.
Lake Superior—Calumet, April 11, 7:30 p. m Woman's Missionary Society meets in connection.
Lansing—Dimondale, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Laramie—Rawlins, April 15.
Larned—Tribune, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Lehigh—Catasauque, April 15, 2 p. m.
Lima—Rockford, April 14, 3:30 p. m.
Logansport—Michigan City, April 14, 7:30.
Long Island—West Hampton, April 15.
Madison—Baraboo, April 15, 2:30 p. m. Presbyterial society, April 16, 9 a. m.
Mahoning—Canton First, April 14, 2:30 p. m.

Marion—Urbana, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Maumee—Tontogany, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Milwaukee—Milwaukee Berean, April 15, 7:30.
Monroe—Tecumseh, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Muncie—Anderson, April 21, 3 p. m. Presbyterial Missionary Society same time and place.
Muskogee—Afton, April 18, 8 p. m.
Nebraska City—Auburn, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
New Albany—Madison Second, April 15, 7:30.
Newburyport—Portland Park Street, April 15, 2 p. m.
Niagara—Niagara Falls Pierce Avenue, April 21, 9:30 a. m.
Niobrara—Randolph, April 15.
Oklahoma—Meeker, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Olympia—Olympia First, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Omaha—Omaha First, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Osborne—Smith Center, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Otsego—Richfield Springs, April 21, 3 p. m.
Ozark—Greenfield, April 15, 2 p. m.
Peona—Galesburg First, April 15, 9:30 a. m.
Portsmouth—Portsmouth, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Providence—Worcester, April 15.
Pueblo—Trinidad, April 22, 7:30 p. m.
Red River—Brainerd, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Redstone—Uniontown First, April 14, 10:30.
Saginaw—Saginaw Washington Avenue, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Seattle—Seattle University, April 15, 8 p. m.
Shenango—Leesburg, April 21, 7:30 p. m. Conference 3:30 p. m. Train leaving New Castle 2:35 p. m. will be met åt Leesburg.
Southern Oregon—Medford First, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Spokane—Wilbur, April 15, 7:30 p. m.
Springfield, Springfield First, April 15, 7:30.
St. Cloud—Long Prairie, April 15, 8 p. m.
St. Joseph—Maryville First, April 15, 8 p. m. A prepresbyterial meeting 10 a. m.
Southern Arizona—Clifton, April 18.
Steuben—Bath, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Steubenville—Scio, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Utica—Little Falls, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Waterloo—La Porte City, April 15.
Westchester—Peekskill, April 21, 4 p. m.
West Jersey—Gloucester City, April 15, 10 a. m.
Wheeling—Wheeling Third, April 21, 7:30.
White Water—Connersville First, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Wichita—Winfield First, April 15, 7:30 p. m. Evangelistic conference, April 14, 7:30 p. m.
Wooster—Canal Fulton, April 14.
Zanesville—Newark Second, April 14, 2 p. m.

Resignations

Colorado—Elbert and Eastonville: A. W. McNeel.
Florida—St. Augustine Flagler Memorial: Alfred S. Badger.
Illinois—Grand Ridge: E. M. Martin; Freeport Second: H. M. Markley; Cooksville: Edwin B. Whiting.
Indiana—Winchester: Robert Little.
Kentucky—Marion: Wallace Clift; Dawson Springs: W. O. Nagle.
Missouri—Clayton: W. M. Langtry; Carterville: C. E. Pitts.
Michigan—Grand Rapids Immanuel: W. E. Kunz.
Minnesota—Mora: Nathan Feather; Hibbing: J. W. Helmuth.
New York—Mechanicville First: David C. Davies; New Berlin: W. H. Niles; Turin: R. H. Hughes.
Pennsylvania—Atglen: Edward Warren.

Calls

[Will stated clerks, in reporting receptions and dismissals, kindly name the church from which the minister resigns, and the one to which he is called? This information will help to insure accuracy.]

Arizona—Flagstaff: J. K. Alexander, McCormick Seminary.
Colorado—Bayfield: Charles B. Campbell, stated supply, accepts; Greeley: John W. Findley, Bedford, Ind., accepts.
Illinois—Augusta: D. L. Moore, accepts.
Kansas—Coffeyville First: H. M. Markley, Freeport, Ill.
Kentucky—Mayfield: H. N. Barbee.
Minnesota—Stephen: R. S. Sidebotham, accepts; Crosby: C. M. Ruland, accepts.
New Jersey—Hamburg: R. H. Hughes, Turin, N. Y., accepts.
New York—Akron and Crittenden: W. A. Carrington, Galeton, Pa.; Binghamton Immanuel: H. Lewis Smith, Independence, Pa., accepts; Rose: William Niles, New Berlin, accepts; New York Broome Street: Joseph Brown, Hazleton, Pa., accepts.
Ohio—Mansfield: E. M. McMillin, East Liverpool; New Lexington: C. H. Rank, Collinsville.
Oregon—Grants Pass: Charles F. Richardson, Azusa, Cal.
Pennsylvania — Ebensburg: B. F. Heany, Avella; Beechwoods: C. C. Cribbs, accepts; Chanceford: J. Francis Hagen, Princeton Seminary, accepts; Pittsburg Bellevue: John Waddell, Parkersburg, W. Va.; Pittsburg Blackadore Avenue: F. W. Crowe.
West Virgnia—Weirton: C. G. Allen, Holliday's Cove, accepts.
Wisconsin—Chippewa Falls: Hugh H. Owen, Lodi.

Installations

Nebraska—Madison: J. E. Farmer, March 19.
New Jersey—Basking Ridge: L. G. Bennett, March 27.
New York—New Rochelle: George Reynolds, March 25.
Pennsylvania — Masontown: J. B. Brice, March 16.
West Virginia — Weirton: C. G. Allen, March 31.

Supplies Arranged

Michigan—Grayling: David Gillies, Mayville.
Pennsylvania—Lower Merion: W. M. Schall.

Vacant Pulpits

Colorado—Pueblo Mesa: Elbert and Eastonville, after May 1; Arapahoe.
Iowa—Volga.
Kansas—Stanley: O. H. Beardslee , clerk, Olathe, R. F. D. 7.
New York—New Berlin: E. R. Fuller clerk; Turin: W. D. Holdin clerk.

Change of Address

Burrows, Leo R.—Grand Rapids, Minn., to Appleton, Wis.
Foreman, C. A.—Flagstaff, Ariz., to Albuquerque, N. M.
Kunz, W. E.—Grand Rapids, Mich., to 6446 Winchester avenue, Chicago, Ill.
Lee, O. B.—Auburn, Ill., to Carrollton, Mo.

Churches Organized

Colorado—Chivington, March 25; Oxford, March 13.
Washington—Chelan Falls, 27 members, March 23, J. B. Furguson pastor.

Accessions

California—Santa Maria, 13, March 23, W. F. S. Nelson.
Colorado—Pueblo Park Avenue, 5, March 23; Walsenburg Second, 8, March 23; Alamosa Second, 7, March 23.
Idaho—Boise Bethany, 10, March 23, M. E. Lindsay; Montpelier, 7, March 23, J. C. Garver.
Illinois—Milan, 24, March 23, H. P. Dunlop; Oak Park, 31, March 23, G. N. Luccock; Oneida, 4, March 23, C. F. Wilson; Chicago Garfield Boulevard, 12, March 23, R. K. Ryan; Joliet Second, 4, March 23, 8, March 30, F. W. Kirkpatrick; Chicago First, 47, March 30, W. C. Covert.
Indiana—Pierceton and Troy, 12, March 30, A. E. Ewers.
Iowa—Volga, 3, March 30, J. E. Healey.
Kansas—Salina, 25, March 23, A. E. Van Orden: Emporia Arundel Avenue, 21, March 23, S. H. Maxwell; Osage City, 9, March 23, F. J. Cowling; Stanley, 10, March 16, S. T. Davis; Pittsburg, 19, March 30, C. L. Alspach.
Michigan—Bay City First, 31, March 30, T. S. Anderson.
Minnesota—Round Lake, 8, March 23, J. T. Anderson; Elbow Lake, 5, James Godward.
Montana—Anaconda, 11, March 30, J. M. Ross.
Nebraska — Omaha, March 23, following churches: Clifton Hill, 3, T. B. Greenlee; First, 13, E. H. Jenks; Parkvale, 12, A. E. Lehman; Westminster, 11, T. H. McConnell; Dundee, 6, G. E. Fisher; North, 13, Melvin V. Higbee; Fairview, 2, and Covenant, 12, March 30, Charles H. Fleming; Tamora, 5, March 23, Orville Compton.
New Jersey—Phillipsburg First, 40, March 23, W. Brown Johnson.
New York—Delhi Second, 10, March 30, W. M. Kittredge; Stony Point, 14, March 23, R. J. MacBride; Hammondsport First, 18, March 23, W. F. Colclough; Rochester Third, 40, March 23, P. M. Strayer; Oneida First, 20, March 23, G. B. Swinnerton; Syracuse Elmwood, 23, March 23, A. W. Allen; Islip, 10, March 23, D. H. Overton; Allegany First, 12, March 23, G. H. Orvis.
Ohio—Greenfield, 26, March 23, Freeley Rohrer; Norwalk, 25, March 23; Circleville, 20, March 23, D. S. Tappan; Jewett, 11, March 9, Isaiah Revennaugh; Wapakoneta, 23, March 23, F. L. Webb; Greenville, 24, March 23, C. C. McKinney.
Oklahoma—Bartlesville, 25, March 30, C. E. Alexander.
Oregon—Baker First, 9, March 23, W. W. MacHenry.
Pennsylvania—Towanda, 12, March 23, J. S. Wolff; Ellwood City, 17, Jan. 12, 9, March 23, W. F. Reber; Langhorne, 11, March 23, B. F. Paist, Jr.; Pittsburg Providence, 14, March 23, A. B. Allison; Philadelphia churches, March 23, West Park, 38, C. Grant Hopper; Cohocksink, 32, Z. H. Capp; Second, 24, Alexander MacColl, Germantown First, 56, W. B. Jennings. Derry, 5, March 23, George S. Rentz.
Washington—South Bellingham First, 4, March 23, J. M. Wilson; Sedro-Woolley, 24, since Feb. 1, H. L. Wilhelm; Seattle Mount Baker Park, 11, March 23, E. H. Broyles; Davenport, 25, March 23, F. Tonge.
West Virginia—Parkersburg First, 16, March 23, E. A. Culley.
Wisconsin—Milwaukee churches: Perseverance 56, Westminster 37, Berean 26, Washington Park 11, Sheboygan 4, Hope 15, Delafield 6, Cato 6. Horicon, 5, March 23, W. B. Macneil.

The forty-third annual meeting of the Women's Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, April 23-24, in Third Presbyterian church of Rochester, N. Y. Delegates are requested to present their credential cards on Tuesday evening at the church or Wednesday morning at 9:30. The chairman of the hospitality committee is Mrs. Charles F. Wray, 519 West avenue, Rochester, to whom delegates and missionaries attending the meeting will send their applications for entertainment. By order of the board,

MARY L. BLAKEMAN, Recording Secretary.

A West Point on the Mississippi

If a Russian is so anxious to preach that he will leave home and friends for America in order to study, he has earned encouragement. One of the students at Dubuque German College and Seminary did this. There was no opportunity for him to learn to be a minister in his country. He will be a pastor to his countrymen here. There are 173 other young men in this institution ready to enter Christian service among foreign-speaking peoples. Many of them cannot readily pay the modest charge for room and board, although they use every opportunity to earn money in various occupations out of school hours. Friends of Christian education accept this opportunity to further the solution of America's immigrant problem by assisting in this work. You will be interested in the story of what some of the men of Dubuque have done after they leave school. If we have your name and address we can tell you about them. May we? Address Dubuque Seminary, Dr. C. M. Steffens, President, Dubuque, Iowa.

Last Chance to See the Engineering Wonders of the

PANAMA CANAL

A delightful 16 day Cruise, covering PANAMA CANAL, HAVANA and JAMAICA, by the

S. S. "VICTORIA LUISE"

Leaving New York April 30th.

A few good Staterooms left. Cost $145 up. BOOK NOW

IMPERATOR

Newest and Largest Steamship afloat. 50,000 Tons, 919 ft. long, 98 ft. beam

Sailing from Hamburg on her maiden trip
Ma[illegible] due in New York May 31st.

SparksMarionE †jan14
1205 Springfield av

In addition to the well-known features of modern ocean steamers she will have a great Ritz-Carlton a la carte Restaurant and Ballroom, Grill Room, Private Dining Rooms, Pompeian Bath and Swimming Pool, and a Gymnasium.

Services and Cruises to all parts of the world

Write for beautiful illustrated book

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE

41-45 Broadway, New York

BOSTON PHILADELPHIA PITTSBURGH CHICAGO ST. LOUIS SAN FRANCISCO

PUBLISHED WEEKLY. $2.50 A YEAR
APRIL 17, 1913

The CONTINENT

©1912 BY KISER PHOTO CO.

The Continent will pay you for a letter

WE want to get clear, straightforward, helpful answers to certain questions. Literary form or finish is not so important as point and practicality. If your personal experience makes it possible for you intelligently to discuss these questions, just sit down and write us what you would say if you were talking earnestly, face to face, with a friend. Your name need not appear if you object. We want your actual experience, and the conclusions you have formed as a result of that experience. The questions are indicated by the following subjects:

What College Did for Me

We want letters on this topic (1) from a business or professional woman; (2) from a married woman. In each case we will pay $10 for the letter accepted for publication. It should not exceed 800 words.

Why I Sent My Son to Boarding School

On this subject we want just a plain, factful letter from a parent whose boy is now or has been in a private school, military or nonmilitary. For the best letter, preferably not exceeding 600 words, we will pay $5.

Why I Sent My Daughter to Boarding School

We want also to know why parents decide that it is worth while to send the girl to boarding school. Six hundred words is the limit. The best letter will be purchased for $5.

Why I Chose My School

This is for the students. We will give $5 apiece for the best letters of not more than 600 words on this subject in each of these classifications:

1. By a young man in college.
2. By a young woman in college.
3. By a boy in a military school.
4. By a boy in a nonmilitary school.

CONDITIONS It is not necessary to be a reader of nor a subscriber to The Continent. Letters based on mere theory or hearsay will not be considered. They must be in the office of the paper by June 15. Write on only one side of the paper, give your full name and address, inclose stamps if you wish your manuscript returned, and address your letter to Managing Editor The Continent, 509 S. Wabash Ave., or 156 Fifth Ave., New York City.

Mother's Day Supplies

Mother's Day
An Order of Service
arranged by
Antoinette Abernethy Lamoreaux

A New Order of Service for Mother's Day arranged by Antoinette Abernethy Lamoreaux.

Price, 5 cents each, 40 cents a dozen, or $3.00 a 100, postpaid.

New Mother's Day Invitation Post Cards

With an exquisite reproduction of a spray of white carnations. Price of either No. A or No. B, 75 cents a 100, $3.50 for 500, or $6.00 a 1000, postpaid.

These may be used in inviting the members of the school to your Mother's Day exercises.

No. A. Without printed invitation.

No. B. Containing an invitation printed in the space for correspondence.

New White Carnation Celluloid Bookmark

With tassels. Price, 4 cents each, 40 cents a dozen, or $3.00 a 100, postpaid.

This bookmark has been prepared in response to the demand for a souvenir appropriate for use in connection with the Mother's Day Service. An effective gift for the mothers and other visitors, as well as for the pupils.

Half Actual Size

Actual Size

New White Carnation Celluloid Button

Price, 20 cents a dozen, or $1.50 a 100, postpaid.

Send five cents for Sample Set and examine before ordering.

The Presbyterian Board of Publication

Headquarters:
PHILADELPHIA, Witherspoon Building

New York, 156 Fifth Ave.
Chicago, 509 S. Wabash Ave.
St. Louis, 505 N. Seventh St.
San Francisco, 400 Sutter St.
Nashville, 415 Church St.
Pittsburgh, 204 Fulton Bldg.
Cincinnati, 420 Elm St.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
Everett Sisson, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber· otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, APRIL 17, 1913

INTRODUCING JESUS.......................... 517
EDITORIAL—
  "If It Moves, Hit It"........................ 521
  Medical Man Prescribes Religion for Drunkards 521
  Which Way Honors Presbyterianism?.. 521
  Proper and Improper Way of Nominating Moderators 522
  Slanderous Tongues of Roman Priests.. 522
  Broken Rule Cements Unity.......... 522
  A Picture Book and the Information in It........................ 522
THE WORLD........................ 518
RELIGIOUS WORLD........................ 520
THE GRACE OF READINESS....J. H. Jowett 523
NEEDS OF AMERICA AND LATIN AMERICA ....Juan Orts Gonzalez 524
AN AMERICAN ALPINE DISTRICT—GLACIER NATIONAL PARK (with Illustrations)... 525
CASE OF GOVERNMENT-SUPPORTED SECTARIANISM..............Gerrit Verkuyl 526
MISSIONARY RUTS: HOW TO GET OUT OF THEM......Helen Barrett Montgomery 527
40,000 MILES BY AUTO.....The Wayfarer 528
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter XXIV. ....Richard S. Holmes 529
THE HOME COUNCIL—Is the Modern Toy Too Good?.....Edith Brown Kirkwood 531
YOUNG AMERICA—The Boy and the Near-Boy (Illustrated).......Nora A. Smith 532
NEW BOOKS........................ 533
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 534
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE........E. A. Wicher 535
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE......W. T. Ellis 535
MISSIONARY WORK (with Portrait)....... 536
THE OPEN HEARTH........................ 537
WAYS OF WORKING........................ 538
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS FIELD—Beginning 540

Around the Shop

This is the Around-the-Shop Man's week off. He believes everybody, including his friends, deserves an occasional rest. First, let us hear from Rhode Island, where Presbyterian ministers must feel a bit lonesome:

"I constantly read the new books, but I look forward to The Continent each week as a rich treat."

—

And now from the pastor of a great church in the city of Baltimore:

"I am thankful for The Continent. I am as grateful as ever my dear old father was for Dr. Gray and The Interior, both of whom he knew so well. From the very first issue of The Interior to the last issue of The Continent not one copy has ever failed to come into our homes. You are doing God's work plainly and wisely and the whole Church has much for which to thank you."

—

Let the pastor of a Pennsylvania church, in which sixty-one families have just been added to The Continent's subscription list, now have his say:

"I want to express my appreciation for what you have done in introducing The Continent to so many of our families. Our church here realizes more than ever that the church is alive and that other parts of the vineyard are doing more and more modern things than we are. That means that we have to get a hump on us to keep up to the van. Of course, I realize that The Continent robs me of the chance of saying many things that I see in The Continent because they (the people here) already have read them, but I can forgive IT and thank it for the trouble it has saved me."

You don't need to worry about this poor brother's troubles, so far as robbing him of chances to say good things is concerned. He has a seemingly inexhaustible supply of his own—and he has been known to share them with Continent readers through the columns of the paper.

—

And (as you will see, appropriately) a last word comes from another Pennsylvania minister:

"My wife said to me yesterday: I am glad that I have just sent your suscription to The Continent, for any paper that can publish two such articles as the one by Dr Hill and the one by Mr. Ellis in the same issue ought to have all its subscriptions paid in advance and ministers should have no special rates."

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

PIPE AND REED ORGANS
AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

The Best Way
The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago

The International
The most practical Communion Service made.
Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg, Columbus, O.

STEREOPTICONS
A Great Soul-Winning Campaign for the Summer Months. Indoors or outdoors.
The Christian Lantern Slide & Lecture Bureau
30 W. LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros." on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

WEDDING INVITATIONS
ANNOUNCEMENTS
CALLING CARDS
FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating; valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company
218 S. WABASH AV. CHICAGO
NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich

Good subscription man wanted to travel in Eastern States. Address with references The Continent, 156 5th Ave., New York, N. Y.

To Atlanta
FOR THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

CHICAGO
CINCINNATI
KNOXVILLE
ATLANTA

A sunshine trip—ideal at this time of year. See the Southland in bloom; blue-carpeted Kentucky; the wonderful Cumberland mountains. Atlanta—the thriving and beautiful southern metropolis.

$25.80
Round Trip from Chicago
May
11, 12, 13, 14, 18 & 19
Proportionately low fares from other points on

PENNSYLVANIA LINES

Tickets good for stopover at Knoxville—going, returning, or both—for a period not more than five days.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY SPECIAL TRAIN
From Chicago Through to Atlanta
Leaves Chicago 9:50 p. m. Tuesday, May 13. Get particulars from nearest agent of Pennsylvania Lines, or address

C. L. KIMBALL
Assistant General Passenger Agent,
Chicago.

Louisville & Nashville R. R.

The Most Attractive Way

TO

ATLANTA, GA.

For the General Assembly Presbyterian Churches May 15, 1913

Round Trip from

CHICAGO, $25.80

May 11, 12, 13, 14, 18 and 19

St. Louis, $21.40, Cincinnati, $15.00, Evansville, $14.40

Tickets on sale May 12, 13, 14, 15, 19 and 20, good returning until June 10, but with privilege of extension to June 30 by depositing ticket and upon payment of $1.00. Stopover permitted at Nashville, Chattanooga, Glasgow Junction (for Mammoth Cave) and Knoxville to visit Freedman College.

For full particulars regarding

Special and Regular Train Service

Call on or address

P. W. MORROW, N. W. P. A., 332 Marquette Bldg., Chicago
F. D. BUSH, D. P. A., Andrews Bldg., Cincinnati
R. C. WALLIS, D. P. A., 312 North 8th Street, St. Louis

Annuity Gold Bonds

¶ The Trustees of The Western Theological Seminary offer for sale annuity bonds in denominations of $100, $500 and $1000. These bonds combine the features of absolute security with that of a gift to theological education.

¶ These bonds are secured by assets of the institution, amounting to one million dollars.

¶ They pay from 5% to 10% according to the age of the annuitant.

¶ Income from the bonds up to $200 per annum free from Pennsylvania State tax.

Comparison of Returns on $1000 Investment at 8%

(Annuitant from 70 to 75 years of age)

Savings Bank		Annuity Bond
$1000 .	Income $40.00	$1000 .	Income $80.00
State Tax . . .	4.00	No State Tax . .
Net Income .	$36.00	Net Income .	$80 00

For further information apply to

President JAMES A. KELSO,

731 Ridge Avenue, N. S., :: Pittsburgh, Pa.

54 Books in One Great Volume

FREE

To Continent Subscribers

¶ In a year The Continent gives its readers in quantity of reading matter the equivalent of fifty-four copies of Ralph Connor's story book "Black Rock." Bind up your fifty-two issues of The Continent for a year into a complete and permanent volume by

THE EMERSON BINDER—"A Binder That Binds"

Each issue may be inserted week by week as it arrives.

"It's as simple to insert a weekly issue as filing papers and requires but a few seconds."

¶ How often have you wished to read an article or story in some back copy of The Continent only to find that copy lost or mutilated? You can now have your Continents in the form of a durable and attractive bound book, ready to refer to at any time, and a handsome addition to your library. After the volume containing the entire year is completed, you may either remove the copies, to be bound in the usual way, or you may simply place the binder and contents on your library shelf. The words "The Continent" will be stamped in gold on the front. It is bound in full black cloth.

¶ By special arrangement we will send this binder absolutely free and postpaid to any present subscribers who will send us a new yearly subscriber for The Continent at the regular $2.50 yearly price. Here's a chance for you to get that friend to subscribe or, if you prefer, send the paper to him as a present. If you cannot do this, we will, as a special courtesy, send the binder to you postpaid at its regular retail price of one dollar.

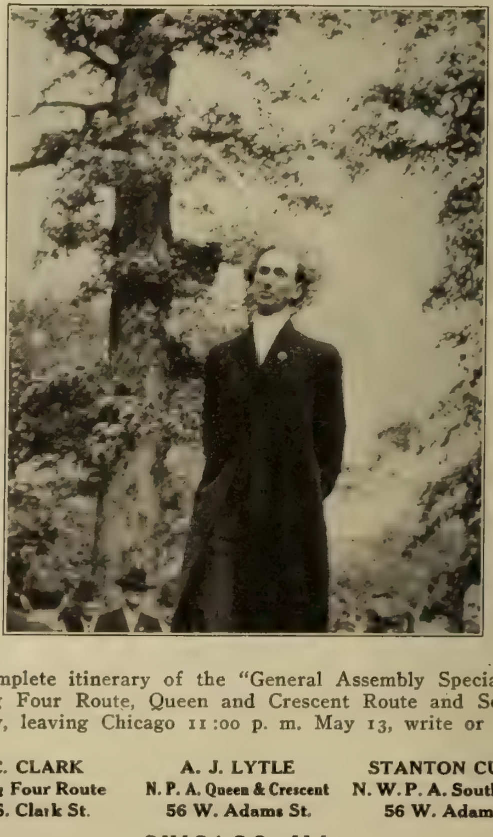
Address THE CONTINENT

509 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill. 156 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y

Rev. Mark A. Matthews, D.D.

Moderator of the General Assembly

will use the route of the "General Assembly Special" from Chicago to Atlanta, via Cincinnati and Chattanooga, en route from Seattle.



For complete itinerary of the "General Assembly Special," via the Big Four Route, Queen and Crescent Route and Southern Railway, leaving Chicago 11:00 p. m. May 13, write or call on

C. C. CLARK	A. J. LYTLE	STANTON CURTIS
G. A. Big Four Route	N. P. A. Queen & Crescent	N. W. P. A. Southern Ry.
228 S. Clark St.	56 W. Adams St.	56 W. Adams St.

CHICAGO, ILL.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, No. 16 APRIL 17, 1913 WHOLE No. 2238

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

Introducing Jesus

"TO COMMEND THE MASTER."

Everybody personally familiar with Dr. Grenfell, the devoted Labrador missionary, will recognize this phrase as characteristic of him. It is his favorite way of expressing the governing motive of all his work.

Dr. Grenfell preaches some to his people and prays for them a great deal, but, as is well known, the most of his labor has to do with affairs not commonly regarded as spiritual—attending the sick, superintending hospitals, setting up trading posts, introducing new industries, improving housekeeping habits and providing wholesome resorts for sailors and fishermen in the idle season.

But doing these things, he is a missionary not "off and on" but all the while, for all the while and whatever he does he is aiming to "commend the Master."

That is to say, Dr. Grenfell takes pains to let these Labrador people know that the reason why he puts himself so completely at their service is because Jesus Christ loves and cares for them and likes to have one of his servants serve them.

Thus Dr. Grenfell counts on making Labrador folk think well of Jesus. And they do.

Labrador honors Jesus Christ because it knows a man who is in Labrador for Jesus' sake. And that one fact verifies the true missionary character of all Grenfell is doing.

* * *

In all mission fields abroad, and especially in the so-called institutional churches at home, there has been in late years a vast expansion of activities that are social and humanistic. And everywhere this expansion has awakened question of the right of it.

Is not all this social service development, men ask, carrying the church outside the realm of religion—even shifting its base off the ground of religion altogether?

To answer this—to justify including physical and social helpfulness in the church program, and yet at the same time set up a barrier against the excess of it—there have been many efforts to define just what forms of such work the church can undertake without endangering its spirituality.

But these endeavors have satisfied nobody. No standard of discrimination has been hit upon, and no two definitions have come anywhere near agreeing. Meanwhile in practical observation it is plain that some churches grow stalwart spiritually while engaged in the very methods that appear to reduce other congregations to pottering with mere external and temporal ornaments of life.

The simple fact is that no prescription and no proscription of methods can touch the core of the case. It is a question turning wholly on the spirit of the worker.

Any social work and any humanistic appeal are worthy of the church if undertaken to help the world appreciate Christ.

* * *

The church's great business is to introduce Jesus to men.

The preeminent introduction of him, of course, is the evangelistic introduction, offering him as Saviour, Regenerator, Pardoner of sins, Creator of newness of life in the human heart.

But where men are unwilling or unprepared to receive him so, it is not only right for the church, but its duty, to introduce the Master in any lesser way which will get him grateful friends.

Even so he himself in his earthly lifetime was gracious and helpful to men who did not recognize him as Son of God, but loved him as Son of man for his kindness amid their trials and fears.

And in fellowship with them thus as man with men, the Lord revealed a divinity which taught them soon to testify, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the Living God."

The lesson of his own life, therefore, warrants the faith today that if men can be induced to receive him for whatever he may at the moment seem to them to be—counselor, example, inspirer, consoler, healer—he will grow on them greater and greater till they realize his infinite saving power.

Any means, therefore, which makes people think better of him than they have been thinking—which inclines them to associate with him in any nearer fellowship—is labor befitting his church.

* * *

By way of examples, if the Jews will not accept him in the full theological definitions of the orthodox church, it is legitimate Christian preaching to bid them take him for their noblest Prophet.

If the workingmen appreciate him as the "Carpenter of Nazareth," it is lawful Christian preaching to commend him in that character as their sympathizer and fellow toiler.

If the lowly and downtrodden are moved by his "blesseds" for the poor, the church ought to offer concrete proof that his spirit of succor still lives among those he most influences.

And if the suffering are too much engrossed with bodily ills to realize the need of their souls, it is perfectly loyal for the church to do as Jesus did—to carry healing to the afflicted, whether they ask or do not ask forgiveness of their sins.

Provided, of course, in all this, that the Lord Jesus shall not be commended after such a fashion as would make it seem that the church itself thinks nothing more of him than these lesser characters of him—prophet, healer and consoler. Always the social service of the church must have a care not to deny his greater lordship.

But faith which serenely commends the Master in lesser characters because so perfectly sure that his greater character will dawn on all who meet him in any friendship whatever—this in itself hallows every method of service that by any means makes known to men the holy and loving Christ.

* * *

But this broad indorsement of any church activity which "commends the Master" is by contrast a reminder that much of what the churches practice today as institutional method becomes under this test far from creditable to the Lord's disciples.

Work for boys, work for girls, work among the workingmen, work among the immigrants, work in the downtown sections, very often, if subjected to analysis, ascends in motive no higher than a determination to attract the crowds and avert the shame of having a church go to pieces.

Or rising a little above that low level of worry for the institution, it may concern itself to give brightness and pleasure for a little while to people whose lives are difficult and cheerless. Or still better, it may aim at developing good habits and combating vice.

Yet it is none of it fit to be called church work if it has an ultimate object any less than making everybody within the radius of church influence warmly acquainted with Jesus Christ.

The World

Congress at Work on New Tariff Bill

Promising progress is being made by the ways and means committee and the Democratic caucus of the house of representatives in passing upon the various schedules of the new tariff bill. President Wilson has given his approval to the bill as drafted, though he did not assume that the measure was perfect in all particulars, and he has freely conferred with house and senate leaders. It is generally conceded that the bill fulfills the pledges of last year's Democratic platform, and if enacted Democratic preaching will be translated into practice. The policy of high protection will be superseded by a tariff for revenue only, or a "competitive tariff."

It is estimated that customs duties aggregating $80,000,000 will be removed; this sum to be, in part at least, replaced by the new income tax. But figures as to the actual results of the tariff reductions are only conjectural, as tariff making in America is still on a political, not a scientific, basis. Consequently the rates are experimental, and while the intention is to relieve the consumer from the burdens of indirect taxation, the actual workings of the proposed law will be known only as time passes. An effort will be made to reestablish the tariff commission to make expert investigations and reports so that lawmakers in future may work with greater knowledge and certainty.

Meantime the millers are protesting because it is proposed to take the duty off of flour and leave it on wheat; the Louisiana planters are objecting to free sugar, and Hawaii wants to secede from the union if sugar is placed on the free list; some business men say the bill may spell disaster, while others see no harm in it, but all wish for early action. Wall street, which manufactures nothing, but is a financial barometer, is unperturbed, as the bankers and brokers think the effect on security prices has already been discounted. Nobody has been ruined yet, and probably nobody will be ruined by the Wilson-Underwood bill.

The New York Times in a long editorial asserts that conditions were never so propitious for passing from one tariff to another with so little friction: "What everybody is reconciled to, and what nearly everybody wants, cannot hurt many."

* *

Minimum Wage in Congress and in California

Illinois' spectacular investigation of vice and the wages of women and girls has found an echo in Congress. Senator Chilton of West Virginia last week introduced a bill to fix $9 for a week of six days as the minimum wage of women working for firms engaged in interstate commerce or in producing any article which is to become the subject of interstate shipment. Employment of girls under 15 years of age is forbidden. Fines of not less than $500 or imprisonment of not less than three months are provided for violations of the proposed measure.

In California the leaders of organized labor have gone on record against laws fixing wages, presenting several reasons, one of them being that such laws encourage workingmen to look to the state for help instead of trusting to their own collective power. The point of view is that labor can set its own pay by and through its organization and effort, far better than the state can enforce penalties for failure to live up even to a low standard.

* *

For a Federal Department to Fight Floods

A plan to check the destruction caused by floods and to reclaim lands too wet or too dry is proposed by the national drainage congress, which closed its third annual meeting at St. Louis Saturday. A delegation from the executive committee of the body will wait upon President Wilson to urge the immediate creation of a federal department of public works under charge of a cabinet secretary, whose first work would be to make war upon floods. The belief is expressed that the wide scope of the problem of water control in practically all the states of the union requires that it be under the immediate supervision of the President in the exercise of authority to be conferred by Congress.

Through his secretary, Mr. Tumulty, President Wilson expressed the hope that during his administration substantial progress would be made toward the regulation of floods, drainage, river navigation and allied questions. If the drainage convention believed the establishing of a special government department would help to grapple with these questions, then he promised to give earnest consideration to the suggestion, but on this point he would not commit himself. Secretary of War Garrison is now preparing a report on ways and means of coping with floods, and President Wilson has "an open mind" on the subject.

Thirty-three states were represented at the sessions of the drainage congress, of which ex-Governor David R. Francis of Missouri was formerly president. Edmund T. Perkins of Chicago is the new head of the organization, and various sections of the country are represented on the official list. Sir William Willcocks of England is an honorary vice-president.

Aside from the urgent problem forced to the fore by the Indiana and Ohio floods, the convention considered the drainage and reclamation of 75,000,000 acres of swamp and overflowed lands in the United States and their utilization for agriculture. Swamps were held to be a peril to public health, and the elimination of mosquitoes and malaria was seriously discussed.

Revised statistics by Red Cross agents show that more than 500 lives were lost in the state of Ohio in the recent floods. The property loss has not been accurately computed.

* *

Coordinating the Producer and the Consumer

A gathering which holds promise of good things for farmers and consumers took place at Chicago during three days of last week. It was designated the first national conference on marketing and farm credits. Frank P. Holland of Dallas, Texas, publisher of a well known agricultural journal, was the moving spirit, and the attendance was widely representative. There was much talk of reducing the cost of living, at the same time raising the prices obtained by the farmer. The conference made plans for organization in every state in the union for the purpose of working out a system of marketing, crop raising and farmers' credits. Another meeting will be held in the same city a year hence, and in the interim methods of cooperation between producers and consumers are to be studied, backed by federal assistance. The department of agriculture has a bureau of marketing with a $50,000 appropriation, but in the opinion of the conference the issues at stake necessitate an outlay of millions.

* *

People to Elect Senators Hereafter

Connecticut was the thirty-sixth state to ratify the seventeenth amendment to the constitution providing for the direct election of United States senators. The amendment gives the state legislatures the right to prescribe the precise method of election.

This latest change in the organic instrument of government has been made in record-breaking time—only a little over a year. Doubtless the Lorimer scandal in Illinois, and lesser scandals in other states, had much to do with bringing it about. It will require the people to take an active interest in the choice of their state's representatives. If the people do not rise to their opportunity the reform will be a failure in spite of the fact that aside from the presidency no office is more important to the nation's welfare than that of a senator. To offset this increased demand upon citizenship the "short ballot" movement now being pushed in various parts of the country, to make minor offices appointive instead of elective, is desirable and timely.

* *

King of Spain Escapes Assassination

King Alfonso of Spain, for the third time in his reign, last Sunday narrowly escaped assassination. Rafael Sanchez Allegro, an anarchist and native of Barcelona, fired three shots at the king, the first time barely missing the mark. The king was on horseback in the streets of Madrid, and his escape was the signal for a great outburst of popular enthusiasm in his favor. His assailant said he wanted to avenge the execution of Dr. Ferrer in 1909.

* *

Concert of Europe Stimulated by Balkan War

The Turko-Balkan war has run the scale from the sublime to the ridiculous, and thence to the tragic. First the note of sublimity was struck when four sturdy little nations banded themselves together to do noble battle with the corrupt, backward and brutal Turk, in a struggle of the cross against the crescent; apparently it was an unequal contest, with the odds against the Balkan allies, but they pushed the fighting to a series of splendid victories. This, too, in the face of much European hostility. The element of the ridiculous was injected when diminutive Montenegro, with an area about equal to Rhode Island and a population less than that of Indianapolis, boldly defied the great nations of Europe who ordered King Nicholas to stop bombarding Scutari, the one bit of spoils for which Montenegro vainly longed. And when Nicholas refused to cease firing the powers sent a dozen big warships to blockade the twenty-eight mile strip of Montenegrin coast. Twenty-eight miles did not give the international fleet much room to maneuver, so the men-of-war extended their patrol southward to the mouth of the river Drin, incidentally capturing King Nicholas's yacht. Perhaps it was this loss that led Nicholas to hint that he might yet be bought off.

Tragedy is threatened in a rupture between Greece and Bulgaria. Greece has been in possession of Salonica for many months—it was here that King George was lately assassinated—but Bulgaria has not conceded Greece's title to this preeminent port of the Ægean. Last week there was almost an armed clash between the Bulgar and Greek forces, and the contention of the two allies may disrupt the promising Balkan alliance—which would indeed be tragic.

Dissensions of the allies and the stubbornness of Montenegro had the gratifying effect of harmonizing the "concert of Europe," as the six cooperating nations are called. At the beginning of the war it was feared that a general conflagration would break out, but instead the powers found themselves working more and more in unison as events progressed. International cooperation has proved practicable, and is at least a step toward international peace.

National Strike for "One Man, One Vote"

A whole nation on strike was the prospect that threatened Belgium on Monday. Workmen to the number of 300,000 or 400,000 agreed to quit their several occupations everywhere in that densely populated country of eastern Europe not for more pay or shorter working hours but because they want every man to have a vote—one vote and no more. The Socialists and most of the labor unions have been making an organized campaign for manhood suffrage against the system of plural voting prevailing in Belgium. Every citizen over 25 years of age has one vote, and there are nearly 1,000,000 or these. If he owns real estate, or if he is over 35 years of age, has children and pays a house tax, a man has two votes, and there are about 400,000 in this special class. Two supplementary votes are given to graduates of universities, officeholders or ex-officeholders, and there are over 300,000 in this privileged class. Thus the plural voters, though far outnumbered, can outvote the masses.

The primary cause of the present movement was the defeat of the Socialist and Liberal coalition in the parliamentary elections of last year. A manhood suffrage bill was refused all consideration by the Clerical majority in parliament, the Clericals for the most part being elected by property owners with more than one vote. Thereupon a general strike was decided upon, but was reconsidered when the premier intimated that the government would be more conciliatory if the strike menace were withdrawn. But as the government made no move the Socialist congress at Easter again voted the strike.

All last week there was a rush to lay in stocks of nonperishable food, for it was expected that railroad and water transportation would be crippled along with the closing of docks, mines, factories and furnaces. The great glass furnaces in particular will suffer, as immense loss results if the fires are permitted to die down. Steamship companies whose vessels land at Antwerp have given notice that they would not accept responsibility for freight, and merchandise shipments en route are being diverted to Rotterdam or Hamburg. The strike is described as the most sweeping attempt to apply methods of organized labor for purely political ends. It is a battle for an idea or an ideal.

Forcible Feeding and Hunger Strikes

"Forcible feeding," as practiced upon the British suffragettes who insist upon starving themselves when sent to prison for vandalism or arson, is a subject which has lately attracted considerable attention, and by some persons is believed to be extremely cruel. A New York physician of extended experience, writing to The Times of that city, explains that forcible feeding, if done with ordinary skill, is neither painful nor injurious to the victim, and he cites cases of insane asylum inmates who were thus fed for years without ill effects. Mrs. Pankhurst and her associates may be martyrs, he says, but not because they have not been permitted to starve to death. Mrs. Pankhurst, after nine days of fasting, has been released from imprisonment on probation and sent to a sanitarium.

Mr. McKenna, the British home department secretary, now has a bill in parliament to enable him to cope with the "hunger strikers." A prisoner who refuses food would not be fed at all, but would be held until health is threatened, then released and shortly afterwards arrested; this process of alternately releasing and rearresting to be kept up until the full time of sentence had been served in jail or prison. The proposal shows to what lengths the desperate acts of the suffragettes have driven the government. And apparently votes for women in England are no nearer than they were five years ago.

China's First National Parliament Meets

The first national elective assembly of the world's largest and youngest republic opened its sessions in Peking last week, apparently under auspicious circumstances. There are 596 representatives and 274 senators, and of these 500 and 177, respectively, were present at the inaugural joint meeting April 8. They are described as earnest looking men of mature years, nearly all of them dressed in western fashion. Yuan Shih Kai, the provisional president, sent a message of hearty congratulation and hope. The congress must frame a constitution and elect a president, as well as exercise the usual legislative functions. If some crisis does not alter their plans the congress will draft a constitution before choosing a president. This may take months, and meanwhile Yuan will continue as chief executive, with possibilities indicated of friction developing between him and congress.

A recurrence of political murders is hinted in recent dispatches. The Kou Ming Tang, a Chinese revolutionary society, charges an officially inspired plot to murder its leaders, one of whom was recently slain at Shanghai. They are opposed to the strong centralization methods practiced by Yuan and will, it is reported, oppose his election as president.

Brazil, instead of America, was the first nation officially to recognize the sovereignty of China. Last Thursday, anticipating action by the United States, Brazil cabled its recognition of the new republic.

Chinese Declaration of Independence

An address to the world was issued last week by the representatives of the new republic gathered in the first permanent national assembly at Peking. It was cabled to Washington, and there favorably commented upon as showing the influence of American education upon Chinese members of the body. Significant extracts follow:

"The will of heaven is manifested through the will of the people. That the hundreds of millions of the people possess the authority of the state is not proclaimed now for the first time. The monarchy, so long corrupt, proved unworthy of the grave responsibilities intrusted to it by the will of the people, but with the introduction of popular government the representatives of the people must share the likes and dislikes of the people. They are to give expression to the desires and voice the will of the people; they hold the reins in behalf of the nation. . . .

"Can we be otherwise than anxious? Yet through great tribulation the spring comes to prosperity, and our bad management and anxieties are a means to happiness. Now, therefore, we unite to form this assembly and presume to publish our aspirations. May ours be a just government. May our five races lay aside their prejudices. May rain and sunshine bring bounteous harvest and cause the husbandman to rejoice. May the scholar be happy in his home and the merchant conduct his trade in peace. May no duty of government be unfulfilled and no hidden wound go unredressed. Thus may the glory be spread abroad and these our words be echoed far and wide, that those in distant lands who hear may rejoice, our neighbors on every side give us praise, and may the new life of the old nation be lasting and unending. Who of us can dare to be neglectful of his duties!"

Ending Peru Atrocities; Slavery in West Africa

A few days ago the court of chancery in London ordered the compulsory winding up of the Peruvian Amazon Company, the British corporation whose agents were held responsible for the horrors of the Putumayo rubber forests first revealed by Sir Roger Casement, the consul general at Rio Janeiro.

More recently stories of slavery in Portuguese West Africa have stirred England. The London Spectator prints extracts from a pamphlet prepared by a former Portuguese official known as a curator, appointed by law to look after the interests of the natives. The ex-curator asserts that the office is almost farcical, as the planters of Angola are in supreme control of the situation. There are said to be from 40,000 to 60,000 slaves in the province who are kidnaped and held in bondage under color of labor contracts.

* * *

—Woman suffrage was defeated at the election in Michigan last week by a large majority, although last year the cause was lost by only a few hundred votes. The liquor interest is blamed.

Religious World

Phenomenal Church Rally Planned at Toronto

Assured realization is now announced for the daring and unique proposition to hold an unofficial "church congress" of Canadian Presbyterians in Toronto the first week of June, just preceding the meeting of the Canadian General Assembly. The plan involves nothing less than bringing to Toronto in that week all the active pastors of the whole denomination and their wives, together with one lay representative from each congregation in the church. This will make a convocation of more than 5,000 Christian leaders, vitally related to the activities of individual local congregations. Discussion by and before this great and influential audience of the projects and ideals of Presbyterianism must create enthusiasms that will penetrate every nook and corner of the whole Presbyterian fellowship in Canada.

The value of such a gathering was recognized on all hands from the first moment of its suggestion. But there was much doubt whether such an enormous undertaking could be financed. It involves paying the expense of railway travel for representatives from the extreme borders of Canada and every intermediate portion of the dominion. But every obstacle was swept away when ten generous Presbyterian laymen of Toronto joined to pledge $100,000 for transportation charges and the congregations of Toronto unanimously agreed to entertain the visitors in the homes of their people. Massey hall, the largest auditorium in the city, has been secured for a whole week of meetings, and the program now being laid out will present the entire work of the church proportionately and with the most impressive eloquence of the strongest leaders in each department.

* * *

New Zealand Exemplifies Church Union

Another step of advancement worthy of note in the progress of the Christian world toward union along lines of church family affinity is reported from New Zealand, where the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodist Churches have been consolidated under the title of the Methodist Church of New Zealand. The signing of the deed of union by the leading men of each denomination was considered a ceremony of such public importance that place was made for it in the town hall of Wellington, the capital of New Zealand, and the governor general of the dominion, Lord Liverpool, presided. One of the most honored of the signers of the deed was Mr. Gittos, who has been a missionary among the native Maoris of the islands for over sixty years. He was called in the general conference the "grand old man" of Methodism. His age is 84, but he continues as active as a man of half his years.

* * *

A Question of Denominational College Control

In the Vanderbilt University case, which has most unhappily divided opinion and awakened internal antipathies in the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the denominational authorities have just won in chancery court at Nashville a complete victory over the trustees of the institution. The trustees have been seeking to establish an authority over the university independent of the denominational bishops, whom the General Conference of the church had made coordinate administrators with the trustees. The trustees also undertook to deny the right of the General Conference to elect new members to their board, insisting on filling vacancies themselves. The argument they made in support of this action dwelt upon the inability of a denominational body to enter intelligently into the problems of university life. But the court holds that the university has prospered under such denominational control, and in any event, whether beneficial or not, the control is established by the charter and cannot be broken. The trustees have given notice of appeal and purpose to carry the question to the supreme court of Tennessee, thus necessarily prolonging an unfortunate controversy.

* * *

Three Places for Vacation Mission Study

The Missionary Education Movement announces for the summer of 1913 three midsummer conferences to which are invited all young people of the churches who are interested in the promotion and conduct of mission study classes in their home congregations, and desire greater efficiency of service in that line. These three conferences are to be held respectively from June 27 to July 6 at Blue Ridge, North Carolina, where new conference grounds have just been opened sixteen miles east of Asheville (railroad station, Black Mountain); from July 11 to 20 at Silver Bay, Lake George, New York, and from August 1 to 10 at Williams Bay, Lake Geneva, Wisconsin. The Presbyterian department of missionary education is cooperating in all of these conferences, and Presbyterian leaders will be prominent at all of them. From the headquarters of this department at 156 5th avenue, New York, young Presbyterians may obtain an illustrated booklet giving full information concerning speakers, railroads and other details.

At each of the conferences an intercession period will begin every morning session. This will be followed by class work on the newest mission study books, on teacher training and on graded Sunday school work. Open parliaments on methods and problems will take up the last hour before noon luncheon. Open air vesper services and platform meetings addressed by speakers of national prominence will be features of the evening hours. Afternoons will be kept completely open for recreation.

Prospective attendants will select naturally the conferences most convenient to their home localities, since programs will practically be identical in each place. Doubtless the most important of the three gatherings this year will be that of Lake Geneva, since a special effort will be made to concentrate there the "stewards" whose missionary interest has been enlisted by "The World in Chicago."

* * *

Promising Career Ended at Its Threshold

Pathetic and stunning news comes from Cairo, Egypt, that sudden death has there overtaken William W. Borden, the young graduate of Yale and Princeton who had set out from China to establish there at his own expense a mission among Moslems. Mr. Borden had already won exceptional respect among American Christians by the simplicity with which he was devoting his immense inherited fortune, and his life at the same time, to Christian service. His personal religious bearing was admirable in constancy and unaffected sincerity. In Yale he founded the Yale Hope mission, now under charge of the university Young Men's Christian Association, where sympathetic students demonstrate their brotherly religious interest in drunkards and derelicts. In Princeton Seminary, from which young Borden graduated a year ago, he had a most wholesome influence. Meanwhile he had become a director of Moody Bible Institute in Chicago, to which he gave liberally, and there he was ordained to the ministry last autumn.

In preparation for his chosen life work in China he sailed soon after for Cairo, where he expected to spend a year in studying Mohammedan life and literature under the guidance of the great expert, Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer. It was there, according to cable advices, that an attack of spinal meningitis ended his life almost without warning. The sorrow of such a loss to the missionary cause will oppress the entire Christian world, which can only resort to prayer that through his example others like him may be raised up in his stead.

* * *

Remarkable Missionary Giving in March

Presbyterians of the United States did some stupendous giving for foreign missions in the last weeks of the ecclesiastical year, which ended March 31. The Foreign Board at Nashville had sent out a startling distress call in February, when the giving of the churches had fallen off so seriously that a disastrous deficit appeared inevitable. But Southern Presbyterians rallied amazingly to the support of their foreign work, and when the books were closed the balance sheet showed gifts of more than $600,000—a record total which not only provided for all the year's outlay but covered also all the accumulated debts of past years.

The Foreign Board at New York never appeared in such danger of disaster as the Nashville board, but it was still much behind last year's record at the middle of March. In the last two weeks of that month, however, the board's receipts were $559,862, making for the year a total upward of $1,600,000. In the last three days—March 28, 29 and 31—more than $100,000 a day came in. The board will report a bookkeeper's deficit, but this results only from a change in rules adopted by the last Assembly, which required $108,000 out of $208,000 received in legacies to be set aside for educational endowments and not counted with money available for current expenses. The churches have given practically what they gave last year, and have in addition already paid in $125,000 cash for the China campaign fund, which is to be expended in the next three years. Pledges to this fund now exceed $300,000.

The Home Mission Board at New York has closed its year with a slight balance on the credit side of the ledger, thus maintaining a record which has been broken only once since Dr. Thompson's administration paid off the home mission debt in 1899, the second year of his incumbency.

Editorial

If It Moves, Hit It!

A DRUNKEN SAILOR, arraigned in court for damage he had done, explained that the extent of that damage was due to the rigid application of a principle which he adopted whenever he was drunk: "If it moves, hit it!" It is unfortunate that the idea was so well phrased by such a character, for it represents the thought of very different men. We almost hesitate to speak of it, lest we may seem to be comparing them with this type.

There are excellent men, not at all drunken sailors, who act unconsciously by that principle. Something within them rises to rebellion when a thing really moves. If any agency of the church or any leader of a recognized department of church work shows signs of moving or of divergence from the familiar paths these good people are instantly on guard. The one unpardonable offense for some minds is advance. Bowing at the shrine of the past is the only worship which they recognize as pleasing to God. They are instantly suspicious of change.

Partly, that is because of a narrow outlook. It comes from seeing one thing that needs to be done and demanding that it be done first of all, with nothing else attempted until it is fully accomplished. The good people of whom we are speaking say that a certain agency came into being to do a certain phase of work. No matter if there are other phases of the same work which have come into sight since the agency was organized—phases which may for the time be actually more important than the original phase—there must be no divergence till the first thing is all finished.

Partly also this habit of hitting anything that moves is entangled with personal reasons. It generally happens that the interests of the objectors are caught in some wise in the old and less accented phase of the one task. You catch that note as soon as you begin to go into details with men who object to moving. The illustrations which show you how offensive the new movement is are almost always drawn from personal experience. Someone's own plan is not being carried out and it seems offensive to have it deserted.

Of course, this is all too bad. Victor Hugo has a saying that the reason revolutions accomplish so little, and are so condemned in history, is because so many people have the habit of sitting down too soon. They cannot bear to have a strong, aggressive, forward movement continue. There are always some who are ready to declaim against it, to find contemptuous words for it, to magnify the old phases of work. The church has had to make all its advances against that.

On the whole, it is better so, for every church and every agency needs to be kept sensitive to the old as well as to the new. Yet, of course, the only real life and power is movement and advance. A church that does not move into fuller knowledge of the truth is disloyal to the leading of the Holy Spirit. It cannot stand still, nor face backward in its faith. As Principal Rainy used to say so often, "The church has a Master and that Master is living." The church must allow nothing to bind it so that it cannot follow when he leads out into fuller truth.

So it is with the agencies of the church. Any agency of the church which is content with its old task and sees no way whereby it may lead the church into sight and service of new and larger tasks is disloyal to the life of the church it represents. But every such agency must be prepared to find in the church, and among those who count themselves its supporters, the spirit which resents movement and wants to hit anything that moves. Then the call is for tact and gracious wisdom which shall carry the agency forward, and yet shall command as fully as may be the loyal support of the whole church.

Medical Man Prescribes Religion for Drunkards

Peculiar dignities are supposed to attach to the typical man of Boston, and other peculiar dignities to the typical doctor of medicine; so it might be argued, a priori, in the Bostonese manner, that Dr. Richard C. Cabot, being a Boston medical man—and withal just about the best known medical man living in that city—would constitute a converging point whereon these two sets of dignities would meet, culminate and, reenforcing each other, rise to some colossal consummation. But they don't. In fact, neither of those sets of dignities ever got within sight of Dr. Cabot. Both of them doubtless got lost on the way, but neither would have dared tackle him if they had chanced to arrive. If nothing else, his brief brown sack coat, none too well fitting and quite as appropriate for a horse-trader as for a medical man, would have been an effectual discouragement.

However, a droll face, twinkling eyes, sly thrusts of keen-edged humor and the shrewd common sense which he speedily makes manifest are quite sufficient to reconcile new acquaintances and old to the absence of dignity. On the platform, speaking as an apostle of sensible hygiene and rational medicine, Dr. Cabot produces a fine equipment of scientific learning, which he knows how to popularize both charmingly and effectively. In his public lectures he has, for example, some reasonable things to say, out of a store of science well mixed with religion and human sympathy, concerning the curse of intemperance. A few quotations are indicative:

"Intemperance is not a disease in the sense of being a disorder which works predictable changes in the body or can be cured by medicinal means. There is no cure for alcholism except a change of character in the drinker. All so-called medical treatments for alcoholics have value only in controlling the appetite for the time being, and thus giving a man a chance to get his breath—his moral breath. Somehow or other a man who has been victimized by drink must be got into a physical state good enough to give his moral instincts a chance to work. That's the advantage of a hospital treatment.

"I believe in the prohibition of the liquor business where there is public opinion strong enough to enforce it. I should like to see liquor abolished from the whole of this country. I want especially to say that the practice of medicine would not suffer in the least if alcoholic stimulants were unobtainable. There are plenty of substitutes just as efficacious. But I don't believe in the farce of trying to enforce a prohibition law where the sentiment of the public is against it. What is doing most just now for temperance in the United States is industrial pressure—the increasing difficulty of getting and holding employment which the man who drinks is facing.

"The drunkard is cured only when his will is turned against drink and fortified there. But I don't believe the will is often reached through the intellect. It is reached mostly through the contagion of friendship. Many a man has been enabled to stop drinking through having a friend who was willing to come to him and stand by him until his fit of thirst had passed. Men permanently reformed are cured by either work, play, affection or religion. And it is my observation that not many are cured without all of these factors joined together.

"Don't trust to the will of the man alone; the human will unsupported is the weakest thing I know. Religion is at the heart of this problem. Religion is not something old-fashioned and outworn; it has just as much power today as it ever had. Religion is the one thing which can make a man loyal when there is nothing in sight to be loyal to—keep him faithful when there is no visible reason to be faithful."

Which Way Honors Presbyterianism Most?

If we should speak merely as Presbyterians concerning the Home Mission Board in New York, which must we say has brought greater honor to Presbyterianism—the board's older or its newer policy? In former days when the board was aware of no duty except to plant Presbyterian congregations where they would likely add more or fewer recruits to the Presbyterian host, Presbyterian home missions stood not very high in prestige with the Christian world at large. In other denominations the best compliments the board got were the flatteries of jealousy. Its agents were objects of complaint when they got ahead, and of ridicule when they fell behind, in the everlasting race to see which denomination could get the most and best footholds in new towns of the frontier.

But in later days Secretary Thompson and his associates, with a splendid Christian statesmanship, have chosen a different road. They have tried to conceive policies in behalf not of Presbyterianism but of the whole body of Christ. They have attacked problems which all denominations feel with equal stress. And what is the result? How do other churches feel toward Presbyterians now? There is but one voice—praise everywhere for Presbyterian leadership. There is no home mission board anywhere in the country which does not today confess its debt to the Presbyterian board for inspiration, stimulus and profitable example. All through the nation Christians of other names talk about Presbyterianism showing the way in regard to labor, immigration, the country church and the like. The honor of the Presbyterian Church never before stood so high in the United States as it does just now.

It had seemed as if every Presbyterian must appreciate this and be thankful for it. But it appears that a few do not. They are out to destroy the "departments" by which this greater prestige of the Home Mission Board has been achieved. They want to trim down this big new policy to the old selfish limits. They want to get back to the petty rivalries of the day when such a thing as denominational home boards working together was unthinkable—when they did their work as relentless competitors, not to say enemies. This is what the board's critics wish.

But the church doesn't. The church knows which way its own nobler honor and more especially the honor of the cause of its Lord have come. The "departments" won't be eliminated. The new policy won't be reversed. Wait and see what General Assembly says.

Proper and Improper Ways of Nominating Moderators

In stamping out from the church the obnoxious practice of political candidating for the chair of Assembly moderator it is not necessary to lay any unnatural embargo upon opinion or the free expression of it. There is nothing wrong in spontaneous discussion prior to Assembly of names that seem worthy in connection with the church's principal office of distinction. It is entirely reasonable that a strong man's service to the kingdom should awaken appreciative suggestions for honoring him. But the thing which is intolerable where the simplicity of Christ rules, is that committees should be organized and campaigns laid out and appeals prepared and letters written for the purpose of coaxing into line supporters who would not be enlisted by their own impressions of a nominee's fitness. And where, as has so often happened, the candidate himself engages secretly in the schemes expected to promote his chance to "sit down in the chief seat," the offense passes from being improper to being unchristian.

A way of entire propriety, however, is open to any man's friends who believe that the church would do well to make him Assembly moderator. Let them request his presbytery to nominate him for the office, and when this nomination is formally made, let the church be acquainted with the fact as part of the official presbyterial proceedings. And there let the matter rest. "Whatsoever is more than this is of the evil one." With this much seed of suggestion in the mind of the church, if the nominee is the worthiest man in sight, the Assembly may be trusted to choose him; if he is not, neither he nor his friends ought to covet what this simple and honest method is insufficient to attain.

Commissioners to the next General Assembly will have a serious responsibility. Now is the time to blot out moderatorial politics. The church is aroused to demand the reform and expects its representatives to attend thoroughly to the matter this year. All that is needful is to take care to defeat all candidates in whose behalf systematic electioneering has been undertaken. Commissioners concerned for the Christian purity of the church should be alert to cast their moderatorial ballots for men who reasonably appear not to have schemed for the place—nor permitted scheming by friends. One lesson of that kind will be enough.

The Slanderous Tongues of the Roman Priests

One of the special reasons which make it next to impossible to believe in the Christian spirit of Roman priests in general is the abominable venom with which they concoct slanders against everybody who ever renounces their orders and becomes a Protestant. All who remain in the priesthood are saints; all who desert it are devils. A Protestant pastor can "pervert" to Rome with no worse dismissal than "Poor fellow!" But no priest can turn Protestant without being followed from Romanism with vilest lies befouling his character. The regularity of this thing shows villainy in the quarter whence it emanates. Father Chiniquy, the loved pastor of St. Anne Presbyterian congregation in Illinois, was stormed with such persecution all his life long after deserting Rome, and Roman scandal mongers are still unable to let his name alone, though the good old man has been in his grave a dozen years. Just lately Catholic papers have been circulating a charge that Father Chiniquy was found guilty of embezzlement and expelled from the Presbyterian ministry. This is an utter lie without the shade of a shadow of excuse for its manufacture. No conceivable reason can account for the circulation of the story except bad hearts behind it.

A Broken Rule Cements Presbyterian Unity

The United Presbyterian Assembly has to break its own laws to meet in Atlanta alongside the other Presbyterian bodies in the "grand quadrilateral" of Presbyterianism there in May. Its regular rule calls it to convene on the fourth Wednesday of May each year, whereas the other Assemblies get together on the third Thursday. And on the calendar of 1913 the fourth Wednesday comes thirteen days after the third Thursday—which would dislocate altogether the pan-Presbyterian combination that Atlanta has planned. So the United Presbyterians accommodatingly step forward two weeks and will organize on Wednesday evening, May 14. The other Assemblies will begin the next morning. After that they will be "all together with one accord in one place" each evening. Daytimes will serve for their separate affairs.

A Picture Book and the Information in It

It is "a pretty picture book," indeed, which the College Board has put out under the title "Presbyterian Colleges." In the way of artistic printing it is quite a while since this production has been rivaled in Presbyterian board literature. But it is more than a picture book. It is an absolute encyclopedia of Christian education under Presbyterian auspices—with all the information an interested church man could ask for, laid out in delightfully clear detail. Anybody except the very best informed specialist on the subject will confess amazement to see the variety and dignity of the institutions of learning in America affiliated with the Presbyterian Church U. S. A. And all but specialists will be amazed, too, at the growth of these interests since the College Board was founded thirty years ago. In 1883 there were twenty Presbyterian colleges in connection with the U. S. A. Assembly; in 1913 there are sixty, and two which were counted in at the beginning of this period—Princeton and Hamilton—are now counted out. Endowments have increased from $5,000,000 to $31,000,000, and students from a little more than 2,000 to nearly 8,000.

—Church people of New York state are fighting valiantly and finely to prevent the passage of the Duhamel bill, which would permit saloons to be open in New York a part of Sunday. The argument, of course, is that they are open all day now, and a law legalizing them for part of the day would be preferable to the utter disregard of the present statute. But Christian citizens have learned too much in their experience with the saloon to be deceived by this sort of appeal. They know the saloon devil takes his "ell" just the same whether he is given an inch or not, and it is better not to compromise with him for even half an inch. The Duhamel bill will no doubt be defeated. At least it will be if the church people do not go to sleep on the job. But when it is defeated right-minded New York citizens ought to take to heart one thing they have not yet learned, and that is that in order to maintain the existing Sunday law, its enforcement ought to be hammered at all the time. The weakness of Sunday defenders in the big cities is that they pay practically no attention to Sunday laws until someone proposes to repeal them. If the churches kept up a steady campaign of education on the rightfulness and reasonableness of Sunday legislation there would be no such nip-and-tuck struggle to maintain the existing statutes when the legislature meets.

—For a solar plexus blow at the liquor traffic nothing goes straighter to the spot than the argument which Collier's Weekly has been stressing so much lately—that the one totally intolerable feature of the whisky business is the deliberate way in which the distillers "use all the arts of trade to stimulate whisky consumption." They thus not only live on a dangerous popular habit, but for their own greater profits they do everything in their power to make that bad habit worse. This is conscious "exploiting of human weakness," and as Collier's says, "It is not drunkenness that is unforgivable but the encouragement of drunkenness."

—The Religious Telescope, organ of the United Brethren, published in Dayton, missed its issue of March 28 entirely and was able to print but four pages in lieu of the usual thirty-two for the issue of April 2. But those four pages contained the most vivid and feeling story of the Dayton flood which The Continent had discovered anywhere. The prosperous United Brethren Publishing House suffered a loss of over $100,000 in machinery and stock, but its great fourteen-story building stood the flood undamaged.

—Alfred Noyes, the young Londoner whom critics hail as the greatest English poet who has appeared since Tennyson died, is a worthy successor of Tennyson and Browning in the depth and strength of his religious feeling. Recently in prose Mr. Noyes has remarked: "The poet demanding that not a worm shall be cloven in twain or crying with Blake that a robin in its cage shakes heaven with anger is at one with that profound truth—a sparrow shall not fall to the ground without our Father's knowledge."

—Adam was not the first man who thought to deceive the world by a suit of clothes.

—No one ever lost his way to heaven who did not try to go alone.

◆ ◆ DR. JOWETT'S MESSAGE ◆ ◆

I SUPPOSE that one fair test of the quality of our life would be found in an examination of our readiness. What are we prepared for? What is the nature of our predispositions? What is the plastic power of our character in relation to the general circumstances of our days?

The Grace of Readiness

The apostle Paul always had healthy and honest pride in his readiness. "Ready" is one of his favorite words. It sprang to his lips whenever he gazed upon the probable succession of events as they approached him. He knew himself to be competent in Christ Jesus. He knew that in the divine strength he would be level to the most pressing circumstances, and equal to the immediate burden or task. He knew that he would not be overwhelmed by any contingency; the crisis would find him prepared. I want to examine one or two aspects of this characteristic readiness in which the apostle glories.

Prepared for Continuous Fidelity of Service

"Ready unto every good work." What does he mean by good work? The Christian life is not a series of good works like scattered street lamps along a road. The life of goodness does not find its symbol in separate lights but in a line of light; not in intermittent lamps but in unbroken radiance. If our good works are only to be like occasional lamps, what is there to be between them? Some time ago I was asked to join a society, every member of which is pledged to do "one good action every day." But what about the other part of the day? What of the shaded road between those spasms of goodness?

How often can we do a good work? We can do one as often as we do anything. Everything can be made good because everything can be done as the Lord would do it. The great apostle was "ready unto every good work," because he was ready to make good of every circumstance and to compel it to shine with the light of the Lord.

Paul was ready to consecrate everything. The Christian life to him was not a series of crises; it was a continuous progress. He seized every situation as it came to him, and used it to the glory of his Lord. If the commonplaces of life are made good we need have no fear about the crises. If ordinary things are made beautiful the extraordinary things will look after themselves. The apostle Paul had the same consecrated spirit in tent making as he had when he was writing one of his immortal letters.

Prepared to Render Unto God Every Deed of Life

If I had lived in his town, and had been wanting a tent, I should have liked to buy one which had been made by Paul. His common work was a good work, acceptable unto God. If I had lived in Nazareth in the days of the Master, and I had wanted to buy a yoke for my oxen, I should have gone to the carpenter's shop and got one that had been made by the carpenter's Son. That common implement would have been a good work. If I had lived in Philippi in apostolic days I should have bought my purple from Lydia. If I had lived in Northampton in his day, I should have bought my boots from William Carey. Carey put the same conscientiousness into his common labor which he put into his enterprise for the evangelization of the world. He was "ready unto every good work."

The apostle Paul did a good work when he preached the gospel on Mars' hill, but he was continuing his good work in his quiet life in the home of Aquila and Priscilla. His host and hostess were forever telling their friends what a benediction it was to have Paul in their house. Not that their talk was "goody-goody," but that it was always good. Not that it was never humorous but that it was never unclean. Their conversation was chaste; it often sparkled but it was always pure. And therefore do I say that the symbol for the apostle's life was not a series of lamps but a line of light. He was always ready for whatever came, and he illumined the immediate circumstance with the spirit of the Lord. The thing that came to him every moment he received in the power of the Holy Ghost.

If the Christian church should exhibit the same unbroken radiance, it would be a mighty witness for the kingdom. If we could reveal the Holy Spirit in our laughter, in our sorrow, in our recreation, in our work, in our rest, in all our relationships with those who work for us and are associated with us, then everything would be a good work, and everything would redound to the honor and glory of God.

"I am ready not to be bound only but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord." The apostle was ready to pay the penalties of the truth. He was ready to lose anything and to suffer anything rather than prove faithless to his Lord. He had "suffered the loss of all things"—home, friends, situation and prospects—and now he was confronted with threats of imprisonment and possible death. But he was ready! It is very evident that this man did not want a cheap religion, a religion that cost him nothing. Religion that costs nothing is worth nothing. A religion that sheds no blood can render no vital service and can experience no heavenly joy. Paul was ready to be bound; he was prepared for any hardships which might assail a soldier of the truth.

What are we ready for in the way of suffering for the truth? Take the suffering of the lowest degree. Are we ready to suffer physical weariness for Christ? Are we ready just to be tired in his service? We are willing to be tired in pleasure, and in making money, and in seeking position and holding it; are we ready to be tired in the way of the cross? I heard a woman say who had been doing a tremendous day's work for Christ, and who seemed very exhausted, "Yes, I am very tired, but it is a blessed tiredness." Are we ready for that?

Are we ready to lose the good fellowship and even the friendship of some people in the strictness of our fidelity to the Lord? Are we ready to be "dropped" because we refuse to lower our flag? There are circles in every city that would not tolerate us if we were to become out-and-out Christians. The presence of the faithful disciple of Christ is to many people like a day of judgment. They resent the presence and pour upon it every form of scorn and discomfort? Are we ready for such sufferings? Fine conscientiousness always arouses the enemy; are we prepared for his opposition, or do we raise the white flag of surrender and march along the easy way with the foes of the Lord?

Prepared to Enter Into Higher Life

"I am ready to be offered." The apostle was ready for the sacrament of death. And here the word "ready" is not the dull passiveness of the servant awaiting the commands of his master. It is the readiness of the bridegroom awaiting the call of his bride. It suggests forwardness, cheerfulness, alacrity, and in this spirit is the apostle ready for what I have called the sacrament of death.

A sacrament is not an end. It is an appointed means for reaching an end. It is a subordinate means for gaining something greater. I have likened a sacrament to a subway, which is not intended to be lived in but to be used to get somewhere. The broken symbols at the supper are our helpers to bring us to the once crucified but now glorified Lord. And death is a sacrament. It is a means and not an end. It is a subway which brings the Christian to the paradise of God.

J. H. JOWETT.

Woodrow Wilson's Prayer

(From The Springfield [Mass.] Republican)

These verses are made up almost entirely of phrases taken from the President's inaugural address:

A nation deeply stirred by solemn passion
  At sight of wrong
Calls to heroic work of restoration
  The brave and strong.
With heartstrings swept as by an air from heaven—
  From God's white throne—
We listen to the moan of countless thousands,
  Life's undertone.
No day of triumph but of dedication
  Is this our time;
Men's hearts, men's lives, men's hopes appoint us
  Our task sublime.
O God, here at the hearthstone of the conscience
  We seek thy light;
Justice, and only justice, is our motto—
  Show us the right!

—W. G. Ballantine

—The less one believes in future punishment the more he makes it appear necessary.

Needs of America and Latin America

BY JUAN ORTS GONZALEZ

Dr. Gonzalez was formerly a Franciscan monk. In his native Spain and in Mexico he served the Roman Church in high educational posts, but a clear mind and a pure heart in the end led him from his mother church. Coming to the United States to enter secular pursuits, by way of farewell to Rome he published an admirable theological polemic, "Roman Catholicism Capitulating Before Protestantism." This won the stout friendship of Dr. J. C. Barr of New Orleans, under whose influence the former priest has entered the Presbyterian ministry

EVERYONE who looks thoughtfully and comprehendingly at the many great problems that confront Americans today realizes at once that a thorough knowledge of Spanish character and civilization is a need of pressing importance, or at least it would be a most helpful aid in a wise and ready solution of some of these great problems.

Expansion of business and its protection against outside encroachment, national credit and prestige, the present and future religious development both at home and abroad all imperatively demand a thorough knowledge of Spanish ways and civilization. American business enterprises from Mexico to the southernmost end of Patagonia in South America are innumerable, and countless millions of American money are already invested in them. The opening of the Panama canal will undoubtedly revolutionize business methods in regard to capital invested in South America and, by offering steady market for manufactured goods and raw materials, will present economic advantages yet more important than cutting the canal across the isthmus of Suez offered to Europe.

Yet North America is not prepared to meet successfully the new demands made upon her in case of an emergency. To every thoughtful and patriotic American it is both perplexing and distressing to know that in the last twenty years neither American business enterprises nor American prestige and credit have increased in South America as they ought to have done under the conditions and with the opportunities afforded.

Other Nations Supplanting America in the South

It is somewhat alarming from a national standpoint to see how other nations, such as Germany, for instance, with fewer opportunities than we have had and with almost insuperable difficulties which do not exist with us, is slowly but successfully and progressively pushing her own interests and gradually supplanting American influence both economically and socially. Even in republics like Brazil, where some years ago American friendship and American business were welcomed and conspicuous, today you find German capital and German influence in control.

How can anyone account for such a failure on the part of Americans? To me it seems due chiefly to the neglect of Americans to learn and understand Spanish-American civilization and ways of doing things. It is a puzzle to explain why a nation so practical as this one gives more importance to a knowledge of the French and German than to Spanish-American civilization and the language that represents it. Business transactions today and in the years to come will bring the people in the United States in close contact with Spanish-speaking people. The need appears still greater when we look at national prestige and credit. North America assumed a tremendous responsibility when she proclaimed what is known as the Monroe doctrine. No matter what one individual's views may be, every American must take as a matter of fact that doctrine as a national policy.

The American government may give a more or less literal interpretation to the Monroe doctrine, it may apply that doctrine more or less strictly, but the government of the United States can by no means take back that doctrine nor be otherwise than true to the principles for which it stands. If the government should prove false to these principles it would mean the ruin of national prestige and credit.

An individual can easily, and sometimes with advantage, change his plans for life, but a government cannot make changes in its policy, when the integrity of the nation is involved, without losing strength at home and prestige abroad. The Monroe doctrine has to be carried out and, if wisely done, I honestly believe it will be a great blessing both to the Spanish-American republics and to this country as well.

I hope to demonstrate that no other influence can be more beneficent and more powerful for good in Spanish America than the influence and civilization of the United States. Up to the present day the Monroe doctrine has accomplished only negative results. Until now the United States has succeeded in avoiding European and Asiatic interference, but American intervention and influence is not welcomed anywhere in the Spanish-American republics; nay, more, it is deeply dreaded and profoundly hated.

No matter what diplomatic visits and diplomatic language may say, the naked truth is that the average citizen in Latin America dreads and hates American influence. Among hundreds of instances I could cite to demonstrate the truth of this statement I shall use only two because of their importance. The first is from a lecture delivered at Columbia University July 9, 1912. The lecturer was Dr. Manuel Ugarte of the Argentine republic. He is a man who can speak with authority on this question and he had visited almost all the Spanish-American republics and had come in contact in one way or another with the leading writers and politicians in those countries. This is what he said:

"Within a short time the Panama canal will have brought the two great oceans into communication and under the flag of the United States will have been realized one of the most colossal works ever undertaken by man. But that monument of grandeur is reared upon an act of atrocity; that statue of national glory rests upon a base of disloyalty. I do not believe that there is in the history of nations an instance so bold and rude as that committed on the republic of Colombia. Of this transgression on the right of a friendly and weaker state, we ask ourselves from the north to the south of Latin America, 'Are these the lessons of civilization, of morality and righteousness which the United States imparts to the countries over which it claims the right of paternal vigilance?' The ruthless violation of a treaty teaches that the strong may break their word with impunity. Pretending that the Colombian government should compel its congress to approve a compromise, they advised the president of Colombia to rise against the constitution, to serve as an unfaithful instrument to bring about the separation of one of its provinces. They made out of this province a separate so-called republic for the benefit of the traitors; and in treating Colombia so harshly after despoiling her, they appear to prove, in the end, that the Monroe doctrine, at first a safeguard for all America, has been converted into an instrument of tyranny, and that it does not now mean as before, that 'no country shall have colonies in America' but rather signifies that 'Latin America is our own colony.'

"Why should one be amazed, therefore, if we of Latin America turn our eyes toward Germany or Japan, seeking the counterpoise and equilibrium that the United States fails to accord us?"

Peace Only if Uncle Sam Dominates

Again Dr. Ugarte says: "Three men in recent times have endeavored to oppose imperialism—Porfirio Diaz in Mexico, Cipriano Castro in Venezuela and Santos Zelaya in Nicaragua. All three have been driven out by uprisings nourished by imperialists from this country. That they were tyrants who fell by the weight of their own crimes is no reply. No politician could be more discredited than he who directs the destinies of Guatemala, and nevertheless imperialism sustains him, for he is its most servile aid in Central America. Sometimes they have gone so far as to aid the revolutions with soldiers and arms. And I ask myself, I ask the opinion of the people of the United States ignorant of such disgraceful machinations, is it moral for a great nation that has contracted historic responsibilities, instead of correcting, to allow its citizens to foment disturbances in neighboring nations, so as to be able to say to the world, 'You see, there can be peace here only if we dominate?' Is it moral that a nation that could be the educator of these young democracies should permit its citizens to corrupt and anarchize them like wicked guardians who encourage inebriety and vice in their wards, so as to undermine their nature, push them into the cemetery and secure their fortune? It is not alone a crime against all principles of justice that imperialism is committing but an attempt against the country that it tries to aggrandize.

"To continue thus must result in provoking in all Latin America a formidable movement of disapproval. It must lead us to organize for resistance; and everyone knows that weak nations have an effective arm to combat strong ones—the boycott. Do you want

(Continued on page 526)

An American Alpine District—Glacier National Park

In The Continent's "All Around America" pictorial series are presented from time to time the many strikingly beautiful or interesting scenic attractions of the New World. On March 13 there were shown pictures of Yellowstone national park. This week the pictures, including the one on the cover, are from the Glacier national park. The photographs are copyrighted by the Kiser Photo Company for the Great Northern railway GLACIER NATIONAL PARK, in the northwest corner of Montana, one of Uncle Sam's last wildernesses, remains in its natural primitive and picturesque condition, untouched save for the roadways, hotels and chalets constructed by the railway company. Switzerland has no scenery to equal what nature here provides, says more than one observer. The upper picture shows a sweep of rugged, snow-crowned peaks in the Piegan Pass region, looking south from the summit of Mount Pollock. This same sentinel peak also furnished the vantage ground from which was obtained the striking panorama of mountain and gorge shown on the front cover of this week's Continent.

The beautiful little panel at the left is a part of the Narrows on St. Mary's lake. Visitors find the gentle beauty of this lake—one of the 250 in the park—a restful contrast to the robust strength and majesty of mountains, glaciers and canyons. The lower picture is another vista of the same body of water.

Blackfeet and Piegan Indians have their habitat in this region and the illustration shows a small group.

Needs of America and Latin America

(Continued from page 524)

to put us to the necessity of doing in all Latin America what the people of Bogota did recently to the American street railway enterprise which was obliged to sell out and retire because no one cared to enter its cars?" Let my readers remember that these sentences are not only the words of Dr. Ugarte but they also reflect the opinion of the whole of Spanish America.

The other quotation that I shall make is from a translation given in The Literary Digest of an article taken from El Intransigente, an important paper published in Mexico City. This is what the writer says: "Not for ourselves alone but for every group of the great family of the Indo-Spanish that ever looks toward the north with keener suspicion as the northern republic expands, is our position one of profound concern and responsibility. Standing confronted with the United States, we must look steadily ahead, ever suspiciously and distrustfully, in the name of every country of America that speaks Spanish.

"And the responsibility for a critical situation must not be placed upon us; it must rest on them. It is they who frown at us constantly, at our life and our liberty. It is they who, from the depth of their souls to the very words of their speech, evince gloomy and acute hostility for us. Is it possible for us to be so slightly human as to respond to such a sentiment with cordial affection or romantic love? Peace and friendship? The degree of them that already exists should satisfy us. So long as 'they' are what they are it is impossible for us either to dream or to think alike. Our faith is the Latin faith, the faith of the Scipios and the Guzmans. Their faith is the fides Punica, the faith of Hamilcar Barca, of the Maine and the Panama canal.

"Between 'them' and ourselves, in spite of the fact that we press each others' hands while we mingle formal compliments, there will always appear separating heart from heart the irremovable barrier of steel that is more significant now than during the centuries that have passed. Between 'them' and us, beneath the smiles of ambassadors and behind the hypocrisy of the official note, our soul surges against their soul, their cupidity against our pride."

A powerful navy and a well organized army used as compulsory intervention will never bring about a satisfactory solution of this awful problem. On the contrary, that would cause all Spanish America to combine against a seemingly common foe and they might succeed in obtaining the support of some powerful European or Asiatic nation. Then a most bloody, lasting and disastrous war would be at hand.

The Monroe doctrine will never be welcome until you send there together the merchant and the missionary, your millions and the gospel of Jesus Christ.

The religious and moral conditions in South America are appalling. Every American would do well to read the fair and sober statements contained in Robert E. Speer's book, and it would be seen at once that if the gospel of Christ is needed anywhere it is there, in South America.

Possibility of an American Romanist Federation

Finally there is another important fact which ought not to be overlooked by Americans, especially patriotic and Protestant Americans, if they wish to understand Spanish-American civilization, and do not wish to jeopardize their own.

There is already in the air not only the possibility but the strong probability of an American Roman Catholic federation, beginning with Canada and extending to the end of Patagonia.

Catholic papers and Catholic bishops have often spoken in the highest terms of praise of such a policy and have indorsed it heartily. The Knights of Columbus, that American religious association made up largely of Catholic laymen, has pledged itself to carry into the public life of the nation the plans of the Roman hierarchy. Branches of this association are being established in Cuba, Mexico and other Spanish-American countries. On Thanksgiving Day the representatives of those countries have for several years gathered together under the leadership of a Roman Catholic cardinal. If a politico-religious federation is formed, then not only will every Protestant movement in Spanish America be crushed but even in this country Protestantism will be handicapped and the nation become entangled.

Americans know the result of the order by Valentine on Indian schoolteachers' clothing and how the affair ended.

An American Roman Catholic federation including Canada, the United States, Mexico, Central and South America would place American Protestantism at the mercy of the Roman Catholic hierarchy and would make a mutual understanding between North and South America an impossibility.

South America may yet be a Christian country according to Protestant standards, but she cannot be a Roman Catholic country and a friend of the United States with our present ideals and civilization.

A Spaniard by birth and education, an American by attachment and adoption, I love both countries with all my heart and honestly believe that when some prejudices are dispelled there will be no friends more genuine and sincere than the true American and the true Spaniard.

Case of Government-Supported Sectarianism

BY GERRIT VERKUYL

Mr. Verkuyl is a responsible Presbyterian preacher and Sunday school missionary, personally familiar with the community and conditions of which he writes. The situation he describes indicates that the question underlying the famous order of former Indian Commissioner Valentine was a good deal more than a mere question of clothing or whether or not Catholic teachers should wear their clerical garb while on duty.

THE RESERVATION of the Chippewa Indians at Reserve, Wisconsin, is composed partly of "pagans," partly of Catholics and partly of Presbyterians. The number of Presbyterians is not equal to either of the other two; but, as one would naturally surmise, they form a dominant element of the intelligent and thrifty. The community certainly cannot be termed Catholic. So strongly is that felt that the township has erected at its own expense a public school building, in which it regularly sustains a teacher.

The main reason—aside from religious conviction—why a public school is wanted and maintained lies in the crying inefficiency of the sisters who teach in the parochial school. It is not our province to pass judgment upon their intelligence, neither to speak of their efficiency in teaching Ave Marias and Pater Nosters; they appear to be eminently successful along those lines, and therefore as parochial instructors they probably must be pronounced well qualified. But since their entire payment is derived directly from the government one is naturally inclined to ask for some secular instruction.

Such things as reading, writing and arithmetic seem to them quite too trivial in comparison to the memorizing of church prayers, the recital of the church catechism and the practice of genuflections. As a result the children do not acquire in three years what they learn in the public school within three months. I am writing this within bowshot of the parochial school and after thorough examination of the public school teacher at this place and the one of a school a few miles from here. The latter teacher is handling a boy now who has attended this parochial school for two years without learning to read or write a single word. He has attended the public school only a month, and proves a bright little fellow indeed, picking up most rapidly. Both teachers quoted various similar instances.

This inadequate establishment, under complete control of the parish priest and taught by sisters who have not passed official examinations for teachers' certificates, is not subsidized but completely supported by our government. One teacher receives $65 a month, another $45. Besides, they eat from the rations—flour, salt, pork, beans, and the like—which the government supplies for the Indians. There are also three other sisters supported by the government to prepare and distribute those rations. The government further pays $15 a month to the Catholic Church for the use of the schoolroom and the housing of all these sisters—a handsome rent considering the inadequacy of those two little buildings.

Not content with having his lion's share of the government's support, the priest has made it his business to fight the public school tooth and nail. That school is ideally and exactly what our government is striving for—a growth of the Indian into self-support. But that ideal means evidently nothing to the parish priest. He excommunicates the parents of the children who attend the public school and keeps the ban over their heads just as long as they persist in sending their children to that place of better instruction. Of course the children are condemned to share in that awful judgment. Should any of them die in that apostate state their future is held up as too horrible to contemplate. Besides all these anathemas the priest places himself at the church gate of mornings and belabors the children themselves as they pass by to the public school. In consequence the Catholic children that still dare to attend walk to the school some other way.

This is not happening in the Philippines, nor in some far-off corner of Porto Rico, but under our stars and stripes right here in Wisconsin; where first in all our commonwealth the Catholics brought about the decision against sectarian teachings in the public schools. Is it American?

"Let's Talk About Our Work"

Missionary Ruts: How to Get Out of Them

BY HELEN BARRETT
MONTGOMERY

This is the second of a series of articles by Mrs. Montgomery, the first of which appeared in The Continent of February 13. While addressed particularly to the modern woman, they have also a wider appeal to every active Christian who desires to see efficient, effective methods used in church work

A RUT IS THE outward and visible sign of incompetence; the expert road builder will have none of it. Yet rut making and maintenance is, perhaps, our most widespread national industry. The ruts that ridge the surface of the highways from Maine to Florida and from New York to San Francisco spell short hauls, light loads, worn out wagons, broken down automobiles, overworked horses, high prices for farm products and low prices for farm lands. Rutless roads are possible; yet rutless roads are few, because the people have not yet learned that the unconscious tax they pay for rutty roads is much greater than the cost of making smooth, mudless roads without ruts.

In our church, too, we have our ruts; old, well established, highly thought of. You may see them corrugating the King's highway through all the sovereign states of presbytery, synod, bishopric, conference or session. In them when the rains descend the car of progress is mired. Across them we jolt and jar at a snail's pace. Because of them golden grain lies piled in church granaries that ought to be sent far and wide to feed the hunger of the world. Over them with galled shoulders we drag one-horse loads a little way, when we might draw great burdens swiftly and with ease. Why do we tolerate them? How shall we get rid of them?

We tolerate them because on the surface it seems easier and less costly to endure ruts than to abate them. Then we are so used to them that the wheels of our minds would almost miss the old ruts in which we have bumped along all our lives. To get out of them means a jolt; and there is nothing which shakes one up so terribly as the jolt of a new idea. Let us look for a moment at some of them, our oldest, deepest, dearest missionary ruts.

There is the monthly missionary meeting—it has been monthly so long that there seems something almost sacrilegious in suggesting a missionary meeting oftener than once a month. To be sure, a French class or a whist club or a reading circle would languish if held at such intervals; but missions and monthly begin with the same letter of the alphabet—let that settle it.

Then there is the place of meeting; what a deep old rut that is in many churches! Why, for years and years, on the first Tuesday of each month, we have met in the church parlor, in the same seats arranged in the same way, with, apparently, the same air unchanged from year to year. The hour of meeting is another rut; the order of exercises, the election of officers, the type of program, are others.

Now the tendency of all these ruts is to deaden thought and initiative and to encourage a dull and automatic routine which is fatal to growth and progress. So long as one stays in a rut everything seems to run smoothly and well—the trouble is that one cannot run fast or far, nor carry much produce. Then the older and deeper the rut the harder it is to get out of it, and the poorer the efficiency of the road considered as a means of getting anywhere. To be sure, one can stand still quite comfortably in a rut, and there is many a missionary society which has not advanced a step in twenty years. It has no more members, no larger gifts, no greater consecration, no more accurate information than it had twenty years ago. Cherchez le rut.

There is only one way to get out of a rut—a sharp turn, a strong pull, a big bump, and there you are! There is only one way to keep out of a rut—scientific road making and systematic road mending. Then the more the work the heavier the load, the greater the traffic, the harder and smoother and more efficient the road. Take the monthly missionary meeting, for example. Why not frankly regard it as a minimum, and go on to further counsels of perfection? There are societies that have fairly doubled their membership doubling the number of meetings each month, arranging for fortnightly meetings and diversified programs. A certain young ladies' society which meets once a week devotes one meeting each month to business and social affairs, one to sewing, a third to foreign missions and a fourth to home missions. These frequent meetings have resulted in drawing into the society a far larger number of girls than when they had the regular monthly meetings. Most of the prosperous women's clubs have weekly club days which prove none too many for all the diversified interests of the club. Not all members come to every meeting, but the intervals are not so long that they lose the connection and forget the topic. In a state of society where card parties meet every week the missionary meeting must demand more time or get none.

Again, why usually at 3 in the afternoon? This hour cuts out every stenographer and school teacher and business woman and mother of young children. It quite firmly assumes that all missionary enthusiasts are middle-aged and married, and for the most part we carry out the assumption. Suppose instead of following along in this deep old rut we used our imaginations a little and tried to see how difficult it would be for us to get to the missionary meeting if we belonged to one of these numerous classes, and then made a bid for their attendance by changing the sacred hour of the missionary society's meeting. Suppose, for a moment, that we arranged for an occasional meeting when the babies were in bed, the office hours over, the school closed. Might it not be easier for some women to take a burning interest in the missionary society? Why not alternate afternoon and evening sessions, holding one of each every month? Or we might have two sections, one of which met in the evening and one in the afternoon, each to meet the needs of its own group.

If we always have met in the church parlor, why not try an occasional meeting in a private house? Or, if we have been afternoon tea-ed to death, try the church for a time. Change is the law of life; why make uniformity the law of the missionary society?

A little study spent on the consideration of possible ruts in the place and conduct of the society will often put new zest into the meetings. Why should we let the second bests in life have all the tremendous appeal of interest and freshness? Why associate dullness with the most vital and marvelous of subjects just because we have got into a rut and it is some trouble to get out?

There is the order of exercise, another deep rut. Why should we always begin with a hymn, then have a Bible reading, then the reports, then the program? This means that the most sacred part of the meeting is put when there are the interruptions of those who come late and the lack of enthusiasm of a small number. Then are there no missionary passages in the Bible but the second psalm, the last chapter of Matthew and the tenth chapter of Romans? Suppose we defer the prayer until after the program, and then have not a devotional exercise but real prayer for which our hearts have been prepared by the facts presented, so that our prayer grows naturally out of the meeting. Suppose we take the message from the word of God as the last thought which we carry away. At least let us suppose these things for a while until there is danger that again life may drop out of them and they in turn become routine. In so far as it is possible for the form of the meeting to grow naturally and inevitably out of the nature of the meeting itself, there lies the path of reality and power.

Sometimes we might sit informally around a table and not always in stiff rows in front of a platform. Suppose that sometimes we should take a topic and talk about it, sometimes should write papers, sometimes should show pictures and charts, and sometimes scenes from actual life.

The most dangerous rut of all is to continue the same officers year after year. The same woman cannot prepare the program every season and not repeat her ideas so that you would recognize one of her programs as easily as your mother's sugar cookies or one of Gibson's drawings. It is far better to put the preparation of a program into the hands of a committee appointed for months of work. Let each member of this committee be required to present her ideas of a program, and then let the best ideas of all be combined in the program. Is it fair to the work of Jesus Christ that Christian women should have a program committee working two years to provide the program for the college club, and put off the missionary society with an impromptu program or take the ideas of one faithful woman who has for years been left all alone to furnish ideas for a whole society? Most of the offices should be frequently passed around. In some of the most successful clubs no woman can succeed herself without an interval of at least a year.

A strong woman and a busy woman will consent to take an office if she knows that it is for a definite term and that then someone else must assume the burden. The more ex-presidents there are in a society the better, for the more interested members there are. If there are six officers, let three be retired each year, thus providing for both change and continuity.

It may look as if it would kill the society for the beloved president to retire, but it won't. Perhaps she is so competent that she makes the rest inefficient, just as many daughters never develop initiative because they have such executive mothers. A good circulatory system of office holding is one of the first requisites of an efficient society. In fact many an office holder is herself a sort of saintly rut in which the society is running so smoothly and comfortably that no one has noticed how slight the advance.

The truth is that each woman touches a different group of friends, and those whom one president finds uninterested and indifferent may be drawn into active cooperation by another. The names that have been unconsciously blacklisted by such expressions as, "You can't interest her," "She won't work," "It is no use asking her," "She doesn't care for missions," give way under the undaunted and happily inexperienced efforts of the new officers. A new group of women come into active work and the society profits thereby.

A great mistake of the society that has got into ruts is this labeling of all the women. A mental tag is really a very dangerous thing, for it assumes that human beings are as unchanging as a ragbag, when in reality the tag, to be up-to-date, would have to be changed every day. The deep human heart lies open to the sweet influences of the wind that bloweth where it listeth, and one never knows when the cold and indifferent are ready to become the earnest and faithful. But those who have been rebuffed for years quite naturally lose heart and put a permanent tag on certain women. The beauty of a change of officers is that it enables others to try who are not discouraged and who may succeed where the best and most influential have failed.

"I am come," said Jesus, "that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Life means youth, joy, change, movement, color, courage, energy, will, love. It is the foe of death and stagnation and dullness. So the very spirit of the Master is opposed to the stereotyped, the formal, the traditional. It is the uprush of his divine spirit of deathless youth and life which differentiates Christianity from all other faiths. It carries in its bosom the power of renewal. It is this which it inherits from the Master who is forever breaking up the old ruts of thought and leading Christendom on to new paths. The non-Christian world, except under the impact of the forces of Christendom, has been quite content to go on forever in the old rutty roads. But Christ, who offers himself as the road for traveling pilgrims, is also the great worker who is building in the desert a highway for God. We may help him in the divine adventure, if we will. He asks of us our best—wit, youth, charm, talent, invention, beauty, culture, thought, prayer. His work is hindered when we allow it to become dry, dull, hackneyed, stereotyped, unvarying. We are to tend the beautiful road so that over it may go loads of health and hope and love for the feeding of the world. A vital, ever-deepening contact with the energizing Spirit of Jesus is the best corrective of ruts in the life of either the church or the individual.

"He's a deep thinker." "I guess so. None of his ideas ever get to the surface."—Detroit Free Press.

THE WAYFARER

40,000 Miles in an Auto

NOWADAYS a journey around the world is as easy and conventional as a stroll down Broadway. There is no adventure in being borne, by de luxe processes, from comfortable steamer to modern hotels and first-class trains, everywhere finding servants able to converse in one's own language. Civilization has spread the magic carpet. A man may buy his ticket in Chicago for a complete tour of the world and be able to leave with his friends a schedule of where he will be on every day of his absence. The spice has been conventionalized out of a globe-circling tour, as it is commonly taken.

* * * *

Nevertheless, there are adventures in plenty for those who seek them. The first requisites are initiative and brains on the part of the seeker. There passed through the orbit of the Wayfarer's ken a few days ago a young man homeward bound after a 40,000 mile automobile trip around the world—that is, 40,000 miles in the automobile itself. The hero of the tale is the young man, but there is a heroine also, for his mother accompanied him, sharing all his adventures and proving, concerning the qualities which the youth displayed, that she had them first. The father, too, shared the early part of the tour, until business responsibilities recalled him to New York. Isn't the picture a delightful one to contemplate—an entire family, in affluent circumstances, adventuring this big world together under the direction and care of the son, who but shortly before had been graduated from Princeton? A better postgraduate course for a young man could scarcely be desired.

* * * * *

To be caught in the center of a typhoon in remote Japan sounds interesting, but it is no jest. Warned of the coming of the storm, the Japanese propped up their houses, and the young American closely roofed over his precious machine, and fastened the roof to the ground, to make it storm proof. These measures were adequate, but later the roads were full of wrecked houses and other debris, making progress difficult. Four miles out of town the bridge over the main river was found to be missing, so Young America and his Chinese servant, who professed to be able to speak some Japanese, sought counsel as to a roundabout route. After ten or fifteen minutes of confabulation—the dread Japanese "sodan," or conference—the servant was asked, "What do they say?" Smiling blandly, and unwilling to confess his almost complete ignorance of the language, the Chinese replied, "He say 'Yes'!" The sign language set the automobilists on their way, only to find the second road blocked, after a time, by three seagoing schooners, which the typhoon had deposited across the right of way!

What is sometimes involved in traveling by automobile in the remoter sections of the Orient is shown by the simple statement that in the Philippine islands alone this young traveler had to construct more than thirty bamboo ferries, to bear his car over streams. Once it took as many as sixty coolies to pull the machine out of a culvert in Sumatra. This automobile was the first to cross the Rajputana desert in India, where the hummocks and drifts and depressions had to be negotiated either by skill or by ingenuity.

For all this there had to be a resourceful master mind; and the young American supplied it. Naturally he went equipped with block and tackle and shovel and ax and canvas road covers and other unimaginable contrivances; for his troubles did not befall within telephoning distance of a garage. To the Wayfarer the best part of the story is the fact that the young man proved that, in head and in hands, he was equal to emergencies; and whether mired amid the orang-outangs, or dealing with the ignorant natives, or attending to the machine itself, he proved his American spirit. Not until San Francisco was reached was the automobile touched by chauffeur or mechanic, and there it was overhauled for the long, hard trip across America. Altogether 117 tires were used, and something like 5,000 gallons of gasoline, most of it averaging between 40 and 50 cents a gallon.

* * * * *

That an automobile should run into a wild black buck in India, or that it should be so remote from the haunts of men that a herd of these curiosity-filled animals should actually stop its progress, seems incredible. The wild life of the jungles interested these travelers, and they talk appreciatively of the great gray apes of India, of the prodigious strength of the woolly orang-outangs of the East Indies, and of the gorgeous peacocks of the tropics. They saw the natives, too, at close range and under unusual circumstances, and as they are students of books and of human conditions, they got more out of the trip than lies on the surface.

* * * * *

Not that they were uninterested in the surface! That is the first concern of a motorist. While listening to Young America, the Wayfarer learned a new lesson in the relative worth of roads, for the verdict is that the worst roads on earth—this, mark you, being the verdict of one who had bumped over Asia—are to be found in this land of the free. Even bad roads have their use, for they teach the man in the automobile how to endure or overcome obstacles.

THE WAYFARER.

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

CHAPTER XXIV.

BITTER WORDS AND SWEET

NOT THE movement of a muscle, not the inflection of a word, had shown during that evening the working of Mr. Elmore's mind. He had held himself in leash as the hunter holds his straining hounds. He had seen a surge of color sweep over Eleanor's face as Horton entered the drawing room of the Kaiserhof; he had seen how utterly devoid of emotion was her parting with Malcolm Stuart. In spite of himself, no matter how he held his feelings checked, young Drum's bearing, more graceful and distinguished than ever, fascinated and angered him as it did at every contact between them.

Reason tried to persuade him that there was nothing to fear. "Eleanor does not care for him," he argued with himself. "She said she would not marry him even if he should ask her. And, anyway, what sign does he show that he means to ask her?" But rational argument seemed to have no calming effect upon the unrest that this man's presence excited in him.

There was a still more immediate reason why the events of the evening had put Mr. Elmore out of temper. In spite of his last talk with Eleanor on the subject, before their stay in Vienna, he had hoped that she and Stuart might reach an understanding, and so cordial had they seemed of late that he had almost become persuaded that matters were as he wished. He was annoyed, therefore, when Horton's appearance kept Stuart from his rights on that last evening, and disappointed when he saw from his daughter's cool manner to the young Scotchman that there was nothing between them after all. Too excited to let the night pass without a discussion of the matter with his wife, he broached a sudden question, pacing the floor of their apartment.

"Emily, are Lennie and Malcolm Stuart engaged?"

"I think not, dear. She would have told us."

"Well, why aren't they engaged? They ought to be. No man was ever more attentive to a girl."

"Probably," said the lady demurely, "for the same reason that kept us so long from being engaged. You never asked me."

"Does she love him?"

"Not the least bit, Richard."

"Well, why doesn't she love him?"

"Why didn't you love any one of half a dozen girls in Prestonbury, rather than me?"

"Why, because I couldn't."

"That's Eleanor's reason. You would have seen it all along, as I have, if you hadn't been blind."

"I know she told me practically that some time ago, but I thought lately she'd changed."

"She'll never change, Richard."

"Does she love this—this—this Drum man?"

"There's no reason to think so—she hardly knows him. What does make you insist so on that? But," she went on thoughtfully, "it wouldn't be surprising if a girl did fall in love with him. How handsome he was tonight! Why, Richard, he's perfectly fascinating."

"Don't you suppose I know that? That's what makes me insist, as you call it."

"Do you know," said his wife, "sometimes when I see how charming he is, and what a perfect gentleman, I think there's a fearful mistake somewhere."

"Don't you get crazy, too, Emily," said Mr. Elmore shortly. "Anyway," with an effort to reassure himself, "I have her promise not to marry him till I say she may, and I'll never say that. Never!"

"Suppose you should find there was a mistake, Richard?"

"But I won't! Don't I know? Didn't Rosalie Horton's letter just tally with the story of that old vagabond?"

"My dear, did it ever occur to you that perhaps you're putting into Lennie's head an idea she never would have thought of herself? It's fairly sure to make a girl fall in love to tell her not to."

"Nonsense! Lennie's no fool, and she has a mind of her own. Anyway, I'll keep her from seeing him any more. We'll leave Berlin tomorrow."

"But, my dear," said Mrs. Elmore in consternation, "we've only just reached here. It will look very——"

"I don't care. St. Petersburg is more worth seeing than Berlin, and I've got my letters to the commandant there."

"But, Richard——"

"Don't talk," he silenced her roughly. "We leave here tomorrow. I say so."

Accordingly, a change of plans was announced to Eleanor next morning, and two nights following, when Horton called again, he learned that the Elmores had left unexpectedly for St. Petersburg.

Eleanor accepted the situation preasantly enough, though there were many things for which she would have liked to linger in Berlin. She knew well enough the reason of their sudden departure; she understood why her father had fled from Berlin, where he as much as she desired to stay, to St. Petersburg, which had been outside their itinerary and about which neither of them cared especially. She could not quite refrain from all mention of a fact so obvious.

"You ran away from Berlin, daddy," she said one day after they were settled in the Russian capital, "because you were afraid of Mr. Horton. Do you doubt me after all?"

"No, dear," said Mr. Elmore uneasily. There was something about his daughter's steady gaze and even self-control that he had begun to find disconcerting of late. "But I want to save you from annoyance."

"Don't trouble, father. Mr. Horton will never annoy me," she said gravely. "And please don't annoy me yourself by showing that he annoys you."

"But he does, Eleanor, in spite of all. I saw how glad he was to see you, and I know what the looks and acts of young men mean. Besides, his most inopportune call sent Mr. Stuart away in a manner highly unsatisfactory to me."

"But highly satisfactory to me, father, and I think I am the one to be most considered in that connection. I was saved from a most unpleasant scene. I do not care at all for Mr. Stuart, except as a pleasant addition to our holiday, and I am thankful enough that at last he is only a memory."

"Oh, well," sighed her father, "girls are queer." It was his last allusion to the suit of Malcolm Stuart.

If Mr. Elmore thought that by his swift move he had escaped the dangers he feared from the proximity of Bradford Horton he was doomed to disappointment. The first person he encountered on the steamer when his party embarked at Liverpool for home was the man he so feared. His old feeling of dislike for an impostor, of resentment at being first hoodwinked and later mortified, mastered him in a moment, and Eleanor, seeing it, feared troublous times in the journey across the Atlantic.

The first days of the passage were rough, however, and it was not until Sunday, the fourth day out, that Bradford came into contact with Mr. Elmore, when he found him on deck in a sheltered spot, lying in a steamer chair and looking very ill. He stopped with a courteous inquiry after the older man's health and then, mindful of his promise to Barney, added, "I have news that may interest you about a former employee of the bank. I forgot to speak of it that night in Berlin when we had so much to talk of."

"About Hobbs?" inquired Mr. Elmore stiffly.

"No. About Barney O'Toole, or Oren-Toole, as he once called himself."

"Once? Was not that his name?"

"No, sir. His name is Barney O'Toole. He has abandoned the other name."

"Where did you learn this?"

"I worked with him for some weeks a year ago."

"Where?" The information surprised Mr. Elmore greatly.

"In Glencoe, my old home. The bank my father, my adopted father, founded was wrecked by a defaulting cashier. It ruined our family. I was called home to help untangle the snarl."

"Did Oren-Toole work with you in that enterprise?"

"Yes. The bank examiner needed aid and I recommended O'Toole."

"I thought you and he were enemies."

"I was never his enemy. Why he was mine I did not know until recently. But the past is past. We are the best of friends now."

"You said a moment or two ago your adopted father founded that bank. Was that Henry Horton?"

The tone of the question was hostile, but Bradford answered it calmly in the affirmative.

"You once gave me to understand," Mr. Elmore went on sternly, "that he was your father. Why do you now call him your adopted father?"

"Because he was. Until I was 13 years old I did not know he was not my own father, and I never have called anyone else so. When I told you my story three years ago I was doing what I had been taught to do."

"Mr. Horton, do you know who was your father?"

"Yes, sir."

There was a dangerous quiet in the tone, but unheeding, the other continued to press his inquisition.

"Was it the old man you so charitably buried?"

With a mighty effort at control Bradford assented, only to have his anger set in a blaze by the next inquiry.

"What was his name, Mr.—Mr.—ah——"

"Pardon me, Mr. Elmore," said Bradford, his face very white. "Not even to you can I answer that. My father had his reasons for not wishing his name to be known in Prestonbury. The time may come when I will reveal his secret, but that time has not arrived."

"So you decline to answer me?" Mr. Elmore laughed scornfully. "I can hardly wonder. Not even education can wholly lift a man above his origin. I am sorry this talk should have so aroused your anger, but there was really no reason why you should have spoken to me."

"I beg your pardon," the young man replied with dignity. "There was a reason. I stopped to tell you, as Barney O'Toole asked me to do, that he has become cashier of the reorganized bank and is very highly respected in Glencoe. That is all, Mr. Elmore. I will trouble you no more. I hope you will soon be on your feet again. Good day."

And calm outwardly, but a seething furnace within, he turned to walk along the deck.

"Will this man never be fair to me?" he raged. "I might have known that apology sprang from no change of attitude to me but only from his own selfish desires for the good of the bank. But why should he hate me? There's some hidden cause. I could have told him my father's name, but what good would that have done? I would only have been untrue to my father and gained nothing by it."

For the remainder of the voyage he made no further effort to speak with any of the Elmore party, but the afternoon before they landed he met Eleanor alone on deck, and she accosted him with animation and pleasure in face and voice.

"Tonight will be our last upon the ocean," she began. "The captain is arranging for a volunteer concert. Will you sing?"

"Why, surely, if it will give you pleasure."

"How absurd you are! As if there were any question about that. I'll tell the captain. What will you sing?"

"Oh, I have a new song I picked up in London—new music to 'Break, break, break.' I call it fine. Will you play the accompaniment for me?"

"If I can see it first."

"I'll go get the song," he said. When he returned with the music she was sitting at the piano.

"Do you know," she said, "I've only heard you sing three or four times."

"Well, we will make it a fifth, if you'll run that accompaniment over."

"I don't need to run it over. I can follow you."

He began to sing, but halfway through the second verse she stopped. "I am like Mr. Sleighton that Sunday at Second church," she said in reply to his look of inquiry. "How queerly things come about," she added. "I can't realize that Lucy is to marry him. I used to think he was one of life's impossibles."

Horton laughed. "Sleighton's a fine man," he answered; "a very fine man. He'll be heard from some day. However, this is not rehearsing. I must sing the whole song for my own satisfaction."

It was before the third verse, however, that there came an interruption of his own making. "By the way," he said, "speaking of the wedding, did you know I was to be a performer?"

"I supposed you would act as best man. I am to be maid of honor, so Lucy wrote last summer."

"For me that is a day to look forward to." Before the look in his face she dropped her eyes, and they turned back to the music. They were just finishing the last verse when her father appeared at the door of the saloon, drawn by the sound, but unaware of the performers. Angry in an instant, he crossed directly to the piano.

"Pardon me for the interruption," he said, "but I wish to see Miss Elmore."

Eleanor rose. "I think there will be no difficulty about the accompaniment. Father, Mr. Horton has a lovely song for tonight, and I'm to play his accompaniment. Good-by, Mr. Horton."

And Bradford Horton understood both the father and the girl.

The concert was a success, as ocean steamer concerts always are. There was generous applause, and encores were abundant, but the surprise of the evening came when Mr. Horton sang. "Who is he?" was the question many times repeated. "Is he a new tenor going to the states for the opera season?" He could not refuse to give a second number.

"Miss Elmore, can you play without the notes the old 'Nearer, My God, to Thee'—old 'Bethany'?"

"Yes."

"Then please strike the chord and follow me."

When he had finished not a hand moved; a thrilling silence was the eloquent applause. The singer led his accompanist to her seat beside her mother, then very quietly left the saloon, but his departure was a signal for an outburst of applause. He did not return, however, till the captain went in pursuit of him and brought him back, when again, during his self-accompanied rendering of the "Three Fishers," the audience sat spellbound, and when the delight of the congratulations he received at the close carried him back in memory to a night when a single white carnation had dropped from an opera box to the floor at his feet.

Making his way through the throng, desirous only to escape into the darkness outside, he felt a bit of paper slipped into his hand. Looking to see who had done this, he observed Eleanor Elmore moving away with her father. When in his cabin he unfolded the crumpled slip, he found in it simply the two words, "Thank you."

He looked for a moment at the conventional words, so unconventional in their coming to him. "I'm yours, Antigone," he said at last. "You'll never know it, probably, but I'm yours."

CHAPTER XXV.

ILL WINDS NOT WITHOUT GOOD

ALL PRESTONBURY, it seemed, was astir with preparations for the double wedding in the Jickers family. "Who ever heard of a wedding on Thanksgiving Day? But it's just like those Jickerses. They can't do anything like anybody else. It's certainly Jickery enough, with Ansley for a groom and Lucy for a bride, and Joe for a best man, and the old doctor to give the bride away."

Such was the gossip of the day, very hearty and friendly gossip, for the family had a warm place in the heart of their town. Ansley Jickers, especially, was the people's pride, since his election in the first week of November to the post of state senator.

It was but a few days before the double wedding when the house on Sunset Hill threw open its doors and became again a center of the city's social life. It was there that the reception for both wedding parties was to take place. In these early days of her return every young man in the city, it seemed to her mother, called upon Eleanor, among them Bradford Horton, as conventionality required in view of their approaching association in the festivities. Lucy was to have no attendant but Eleanor, her closest friend, and Mrs. Elmore's maid of honor was to be Alice Lee. These three, and Joe, as his brother's best man, were much thrown together in the rehearsals and preparations for the great event.

The wedding came and went as weddings will, unmarred by any untoward event, and in the midst of glad good wishes from hosts of friends. Mr. Elmore, to be sure, frowned as he heard the hum of admiration that passed about the church as his daughter came down the aisle, after the ceremony, on Bradford Horton's arm. Her beauty and his elegance of bearing seemed eminently fitted to each other. Perhaps it was the centering of all eyes on them that made it possible for Joe Jickers, as he and Alice passed down the aisle behind them, to say what he did to his companion.

"Your honor," he said suddenly in an undertone, half way between altar and door, "counsel moves that the next malefactors to appear at yonder bar shall be Joseph Jickers and Alice Lee? What says your honor?"

Alice looked up, startled. "We've just appeared there, Joe. What's the use of appearing again?"

"Your honor, counsel would have these malefactors appear again as principals, not as accessories."

"How absurd you are, Joe!"

"Your honor, counsel is aware he can be absurd upon occasion, but he is not absurd now. Counsel has been hunting for an angel for years, and he thinks your honor's it. What does your honor think?"

Near-by people could hear Alice laugh, but she made no response.

"Your honor, is the laugh with no answer intended for a negative to counsel's motion?"

"No, counsel, no. Your motion is granted, and you're a dear old boy."

"Good," said the little man. "Will your honor name the day?"

They were at the door now. "Sometime after the holidays, counsel," the girl answered. Then this strange lover looked full into her eyes and she saw what she had never seen before—the soul of the man she had loved for many days.

In the vestibule Joe walked directly up to Eleanor Elmore. "Lennie," he said, "you needn't look for any more angels for me. I've found my own." Then he took the face of Alice Lee between his hands and kissed her.

* * * * *

When Horton answered a knock at his new apartments one day early in December he found young Jack Tappan, announcing himself as a committee from the Shakespeare Club. "We shall feel highly honored, Professor Horton," he said, "if you will accept election to membership now. We can't agree to read the Greek Testament, you know, but perhaps you'll be willing to forego that pleasure for an evening occasionally."

The reasons that had kept Bradford from the club three years before no longer held. His career was assured, his position was established. There was nothing to deter him from satisfying his social instincts and gratifying his friends. So it was with acceptance of this invitation that he launched his boat on Prestonbury's social waters at the dock of the Shakespeare Club. He very soon proved that he could pull a good oar. If he enjoyed most of all in the evenings at the club his meeting with Miss Elmore no one ever suspected that he gave her a second thought. He was less transparent than Sleighton. Her father watched anxiously at first, but since Horton never called upon her at her home he soon relaxed his vigilance. With the most popular member of the seminary faculty he had no quarrel.

So the winter passed, and with pleasant anticipation the professor of Greek planned for an old-fashioned home-going at the end of the seminary year. All winter he had kept in warm and tender touch with Glencoe, where Barney O'Toole lived now in the old home, giving great comfort by his attentions to Mrs. Horton. It was to Barney that he wrote when May had come at last, "The term will close tomorrow and I can finish my work in a week. Then, ho for Glencoe, and the river and the hills I love so well!"

But who can tell what a day will bring forth? Part of the work that must be done before leaving Prestonbury involved a call on Mr. Elmore, a call upon which much turned. His card admitted him, as three years before, to the banker's private office. Mr. Elmore's manner struck him as more reserved and repellent than it had been of late. The fact was that so unusual a call had awakened in Mr. Elmore's heart all the old fears that had lain sleeping through the winter. For this reason his language was courteous but cold.

"Have you had a good year's work, professor," he began, perfunctorily.

"Very."

"Have you accomplished all you expected to?"

"Not all. I suppose no man with high ideals ever does."

"I hope you find your life as a citizen of Prestonbury enjoyable."

"All it lacks is the element of home. The other professors, with their ability to entertain, have me at a disadvantage. It is with reference to this that I have called."

Mr. Elmore hardened instantly. He was now entirely sure that the moment so long feared had come. "If you wish to consult me about buying a house," he said icily, "I think I can serve you best by referring you to a real estate dealer."

"The matter of a house does not interest me particularly, Mr. Elmore. My interest is in the queen who shall rule the house. It is of her I would speak."

"I know nothing about queens, professor."

"It is of Miss Elmore I am speaking. I would see her as my wife in that leadership for which she is so superbly fitted. I am asking you for permission to win your daughter's hand, Mr. Elmore."

"You? You? How dare you?" Mr. Elmore fairly stammered in his wrath. "You give her a place as social leader? For that she needs no aid from you. Her social leadership was assured long ago. And you dare to ask me for her hand?"

"Yes, sir. Is that a crime? I will offer her a clean hand and a pure heart."

"No, sir. You will offer her nothing. Have you dared to speak with her?"

"If I had, I should not have asked you if I might."

"No, you would not. She would have sent you where I send you now, to find someone of your class and standing, or no standing."

Bradford Horton was very angry, but his love for the daughter was greater than his wrath at the father. With admirable self-control he answered:

"I can accept your refusal, but I will not brook your slurs. I will not seek Miss Elmore's hand, though I feel sure she would have accepted my offer had I made it without coming to you. I recognize your present right, but I demand an explanation of your words."

Mr. Elmore, exasperated by Horton's self-possession, answered with vehement scorn:

"A clean hand, you say; a pure heart! Why did you not complete the sentence—'and no name'? Why do you masquerade under a name not your own? Drum—William Drum—is your name if you have a name. You dare to propose to join your nameless life to that of my daughter?"

He drew open the table drawer, took a letter from a bundle of papers and threw it down before Horton. "Read that, sir," he ordered.

(To be continued)

Appoints Federal Council Commission Chairmen

President Shailer Mathews of the Federal Council has announced the chairmen of the various commissions under whose direction a large share of the united work of the churches will be prosecuted during the coming quadrennium. The chairmen are as follows: Church and social service, Rev. Josiah Strong; evangelism, Dr. William H. Roberts; family life, Rev. George Eckman; foreign missions, Robert E. Speer; home missions, Rev. Hubert C. Herring; religious education, Dean W. F. Tillett; Sunday observance, Rev. Peter Ainslie; state and local federations, Rev. A. W. Anthony; temperance, Rev. Rufus W. Miller; peace and arbitration, Rev. J. B. Remensnyder.

THE HOME COUNCIL

Is the Modern Toy Too Good? By Edith Brown Kirkwood

There is little with which the modern man or woman works today that is not reproduced on a miniature scale for the child. Does a certain education of mind which results from playing with the finished toy compensate the child for the loss of imagination, ingenuity and initiative developed in making the toy himself? It is the author's personal belief that it does not

"I AM WONDERING, after all," said a mother recently, "whether the educational value of the modern toy offsets the childish imagination it kills?" The question, put to a group of mothers, followed a discussion in which the advantages of the modern child over the youngster of even ten or fifteen years ago was a mooted point.

Send memory back over the days in father's back yard when an Indian lurked behind every tree, and every bit of shrubbery was a wigwam difficult to enter but just as effective in the game. Then wander into your own back yard some day and watch Tommy emerge from an Indian tent of latest pattern, dressed after the manner of the chief of the Choctaws, real, but miniature, tomahawk in hand. Tommy races around the yard for a short while, emitting college yells he has learned from older brothers and sisters, and then Tommy is ready for something else. He is tired of playing Indian.

"I can't understand the children of today," remarked father at this point. "Why, when I was a boy, if I'd had such an outfit as that I'd never have grown tired of playing with it!"

Father's Advantage Over Tommy

But would father have been as highly satisfied as he says? Suppose when he wanted to play Indian he had not had to pick up loose tailfeathers in the barnyard and stick them through the old leather line, cut so laboriously, that the Indian chief might have a proper head covering? Suppose when this was done he had not had to trim a belt with shredded leaves for fringe? Suppose it had not been necessary to coax mother for the loan of her best butcher knife for the important role of dagger or tomahawk—this because father's hatchet was locked safely in the tool chest? Suppose, if the bushes failed to satisfy, it had not been necessary to hunt up old rails for a wigwam? Suppose that all of these things had been in readiness? What of the hours that would otherwise have been spent by small hands and minds in truly accomplishing something? What of the realization of the accomplishment itself?

Perfection Discourages Effort

Go through the toy houses of today and if you are the average parent you will be stupefied at the array. No longer is it necessary for a boy to borrow old mackintoshes to play fireman—there are boots and cap and rubber coat all ready for him to don. No longer is it necessary for the small lady of the house to conjure her brain with outfits for dolly, for everything known in woman's outfitting is duplicated in every doll's size. Dolly's bed is a small gold and white reproduction of her own. Why make needle holes in wee feminine fingers by endeavoring to create a four-poster, canopy-top, from a pill box? Dolly's baby buggy is an up-to-date English perambulator. Why beg mother's big-headed pins and her coat buttons, or be satisfied with the humbler wheels made of cast-off spools attached to a shoe box?

The boy of today no longer finds it necessary to "go to Jerusalem" on a row of dining room chairs, because he can send a toy train of cars spinning over a railroad perfect in its block signals, its switches, its towers, its bridges, with even the coal in the coal car. And why ride the kitchen broom handle when horses so perfect they all but neigh stand in barns and stalls ready for delivery? For nothing whatever does he need imagination.

Over in the girls' section the doll houses are three-story affairs, with Louis XV. parlor sets, mission dining room outfits, the finest of kitchen furniture, with stoves which might have been the models of the ranges in the hardware department, pewter or steel or aluminum utensils, pots, pans, skillets.

Fried eggs of papier-mache or candy, perfect in coloring, are laid in a nest of bacon ready for dolly's breakfast; roast turkey, tiny but well browned, with asparagus tips resting in cream, or baked potatoes, or any salad one might wish to order at the Doll's inn, are waiting to be carried to the beautifully polished doll's table. Why feed mud pies to a doll gowned like the queen of Sheba, or even anything as humble as the paste of flour and water which once served as cake?

No Training for Eyes and Fingers

In truth, there is little today with which the modern man or woman works or plays which is not reproduced on a miniature scale for the child's playtime. The perfect train, the street car and tracks, the fire-fighting engines and ladders, automobiles, the hundreds of things with which boys now are familiar, undoubtedly serve as another step in the education of the mind; but is not education the work of the brain and imagination its play? Is there not danger of so surfeiting Jack's brain with perfection of work that, all necessity for initiative removed, he is in danger of becoming a dull boy?

One would hardly wish to take from the little girl her beautiful doll's house with all the fine furnishings that stimulate her appreciation of the perfect; but there is still the feeling of pity that her artist's eye is not to be trained in the combining of colors and her fingers in the grouping of lines in the piecing of her own dolly's bed coverings.

MEN MAY PRESCRIBE FASHIONS

Declaring that the immodesty of the attire worn by women on the streets and in public places is the cause of "a great wave of immorality now sweeping over the country," a member of the lower house of the Ohio legislature recently introduced a bill providing for the appointment by the governor of a commission of three members to prescribe the fashions to be worn by women in Ohio. It is proposed that members of this commission be between the ages of 30 and 50 and two must be married men. One of the members, the bill provides, must be an ordained minister, one a parent of not less than three children and the third a social settlement worker.

Under the provisions of the bill the commission would be compelled to fix limits on decollete dresses. There are further provisions to the effect that "transparent stockings shall not be displayed or worn in public places"; and that "it shall be unlawful to display or wear any outer garment trimmed or combined with lace, insertion or embroidery mesh, through which the color or texture of the skin may be distinguished, without having the transparent material backed with opaque material."

Though the statement that woman's dress is the cause of present-day immorality may be somewhat extreme, there can be no question that it has its influence not only in breaking down the barriers of modesty which are woman's best protection against familiarity, but in lessening the respect and reverence of men for womankind. Such fashion reform as the Ohio measure would promote seems needed. Women would, of course, raise outraged protest at having their attire censored by men. But since they themselves have failed to bring about the reform is it more than fair to give the men a chance?

BITS BY THE WAY

THE LEAVEN OF PRAISE

The power of a hearty, sincere word of commendation and appreciation to turn the tide of discouragement is illustrated in a little story which comes from one of Chicago's large department stores. In this store's employ was a young German girl whose only assets seemed to be a large, full face, coarse, unmanageable black hair and an impenetrable stolidity. She made no friends and was almost a complete failure as a saleswoman. The department manager was on the point of discharging her when he remembered the store's sympathetic matron and sent the girl up to her, hoping that she might be able to get at her difficulties.

The girl burst into the matron's office.

"I hate myself!" she cried. "I hate my ugly Dutch face and my stiff, greasy hair. I don't see why I'm not like the other girls. They're all pretty, and stylish, and—and——" The rest was lost in sobs as the girl cried her heart out beside the matron's desk.

"Why," said the matron, looking at her in honest surprise, "I don't think you're ugly. You have such a beautiful complexion and such fine teeth. Look at yourself and see if I'm not right." She threw back the door of a closet and drew her in front of a mirror that hung inside.

The girl surveyed herself earnestly for a moment. Then, "Do you really think I'm not ugly?" she asked.

"Yes," returned the matron, "I really think so. And, moreover, if I had such beautiful teeth as you have, I'd want to smile and show them. Why don't you try it?"

The girl stood silent, still critically regarding her reflected self. Then suddenly she smiled. "I will," she said.

It took her some time to cultivate the pleasant-look habit, but she kept at it. As her face gradually brightened it lost its sullen, repellent look, and even the refractory hair seemed to respond to the working of the cheer leaven. Soon her fellow workers began, too, to feel it, then her sales picked up. To make a long story short, the girl who narrowly missed being a failure became one of the best liked and most capable clerks in the store just because of the encouraging word at the despairing moment.

Merited praise is never flattery, nor, properly given, does it make for vanity. Instead, it is an unfailing stimulus to endeavor. And—it is one of the few things within the power of each of us to give. S. C. R.

Light to Get Home

A solemn hush is brooding o'er the moor,
The silent stars are stealing through the door,
The light that's left of day is nearly o'er,
Ere I am home.

The moor-tracks wind into the pathless night,
Till they are lost at last upon the height;
But in the west there lingers all the light
To see me home.

The love that led me all the golden way,
Nor left me when my feet had gone astray,
Will hold me still, at dying of the day,
And bring me home.

—Charles Kingsley.

YOUNG AMERICA

The Boy and the Near-Boy

BY NORA ARCHIBALD SMITH

[This story is by an old friend, for Miss Smith has written many books and stories for boys and girls, besides several she has written with her sister, Kate Douglas Wiggin. Probably you have read some of these stories, but if not, of course you read "The Good Ship Santa Claus," which she wrote for you last Christmas.]

PART I.

MAX WAS THE BOY; and as for the near-boy, perhaps you can guess what he was. What is most like a little boy, I wonder—bright-eyed, quick-eared, round and rollicking, rough and tumble, happy-go-lucky, always hungry, go-to-sleep-quick, get-up-early, jumping and racing, always on the go? Why, I think it's a dog, and that's the reason I call him "near-boy."

The near-boy's real name was Mumps. He was called that because when he was given to Max his little master was struggling through that uncomfortable illness. Though it was a queer name for a dog, people grew by degrees to think it rather nice. Mumps liked it himself, and there was no sound in the world he loved so well as his name called in Max's voice from the top of the staircase in the morning. That meant that he could scramble up with his tail and his tongue and all his four legs at once, panting and barking, all the way, and see if he could beat Max back to bed. This was a noisy play, and Max's mother had to ask him every day to be more quiet. And every day Max always said, "Oh, I forgot!" and looked up with big, round, penitent eyes; and then his mother always stroked his head and said, "You forget a good many things, my son."

And so he did; there is no doubt of that. Mumps knew it as well as anybody, for once upon a time the boy and the near-boy went to the woodhouse to make a windmill, and the boy played so long that the near-boy went to sleep, and so was forgotten and shut in there all night without his supper. And another time the boy told the near-boy to watch his coat that he had thrown under a tree, and then, seeing a chance for a drive, went off and left Mumps there for hours in the hot sun. Oh, Mumps could have told a good many things about Max's forgetfulness; but he believed that everything Max did was and must be right, and, though he cried in the woodshed that cold night, he never thought of blaming Max for his shivers.

And Ellen, the cook, could have told a good many stories of Max's carelessness and thoughtlessness, too, for he often made her a great deal of trouble; and his father and mother could have told most of all.

"Max," said his mother one morning when he had again forgotten about calling the near-boy up so early and had again forgotten about not letting him get into bed with muddy paws, "Max, I think I shall have to do something serious to make you begin to remember things."

"But I do try, mother," pleaded Max; "only I forget."

"You can't try very hard," said his mother, shaking her head. "You seem to remember things perfectly well when you want to. You always come home to dinner on time, and I notice you never forget when your father is going to drive if he has promised to take you."

"I know; but that's different," cried Max. "Anybody could remember those things."

"Do you mean that anybody can remember things he wants to do himself, but nothing to please other people?" asked his mother. "For that's what it sounds like."

Max hung his head, for the way his mother put it made him seem so selfish—and he didn't mean to be selfish.

"Your father and I have been talking this over," said his mother, "and we have decided that something must be done. You are 10 years old now, and you do not improve at all in these things. You throw your books on the piazza when you come home from school; you toss your hat and coat on the floor; you do not put away your playthings; you forget to feed Mumps——"

"Oh, no!" cried Max, and the dog pricked up his ears at the mention of his name.

"You forgot him last night," replied his mother sadly, "for his supper is on the pantry shelf, just where Ellen told you she had set it away for him."

"Oh, that's a shame! Poor Mumps!" cried the boy, stooping down to pat the near-boy.

"It is a shame," answered his mother; "for I notice that Mumps never forgets anything that he thinks will please you. But, Max, you make my work so hard and the house so disorderly by the way you throw your things about, and you waste so much of my time, and your time, and Ellen's, and your father's, by making us search for your clothes and your books and your playthings, that we have decided to begin tomorrow on a different plan."

The "Near-Boy"—Mumps Was His Name

"Oh, dear, mother! I do think you're unkind," cried Max, with tears already in his eyes. "I'm sure I try all the time to put my things away."

His mother smiled, although her eyes, too, were a little wet. "Then you must try harder, son," she said, "and we'll begin the new plan tomorrow morning. We'll go today and see if you know where everything that belongs to you is kept. You know you have a very good memory, or so your teacher says, and this will help you to strengthen it. Then, after tomorrow, if I find anything of yours out of its proper place I have decided to take it away and put it in the camphor chest. You can redeem it in a week, but not a moment before, for you must begin now to overcome your carelessness, and this is the only way I can think of to do it." And then his mother broke down and cried herself.

Hide-and-Seek

BY ELIZABETH KNOBEL

Out in the woods beside the creek
I love to play at hide-and-seek;
I shut my eyes up tight, and then
I count, "One, two, three," up to ten;
And while I'm counting for our play
My comrades hide themselves away.
"I'm coming!" then I gayly cry.
No single one of them I spy,
But when I listen, through the grass
A laughing rustle seems to pass—
My merry playmates, every one,
Are waiting, hidden, for the fun.
And then I softly steal about
To seek my little playmates out;
I peer in every tiny nook,
In every single place I look,
And search each corner carefully
Wherein a little friend might be.
And when I've looked in all of these,
At last I drop upon my knees
And bend the little leaves aside—
It is a lovely place to hide—
And—yes! I clap my hands to see
A playmate smiling up at me.
She looks so sweet I 'most forget
My "One, two, three for Violet!"

The boy's arms were around her neck in a moment, and the near-boy was kissing her hand.

"Don't cry, mother," said Max in a really manly way; "it's all right. I'm not so careless as you think, nor so forgetful; and you'll find a week from today that the camphor chest will be so empty it will just ache!"

It was Sunday when mother and son had this little talk together, and on Monday and on Tuesday no waxwork in a glass case was ever more absolutely in order than Max's room and his belongings, while Mumps's sides looked like a filled-out balloon.

On Wednesday Max's father found his son's arithmetic on the front steps, and his parcheesi board on the study desk, to which it was stuck by a crushed gumdrop. These articles were promptly deposited in the camphor chest and his mother added to them in the evening the boy's shoes, which he had changed for his slippers before tea and left in the middle of the floor, and his favorite humming top, which she had tripped over on the parlor rug. Ellen increased the collection by a slingshot found near the cooky jar and his grammar from the ironing table. By that time his mother and father were a little discouraged, and the more so because Max didn't seem troubled by these results of his carelessness.

"You will need your grammar and arithmetic today, Max," said his father seriously at breakfast Thursday, "and you will have to buy them out of your month's allowance, if you have any left. The books are in the camphor chest, and there they must stay for a week."

"They are?" questioned Max in surprise. "I thought I put them away when I came home!"

"In the same place that you put the parcheesi board, and the slingshot, and the top, and your school shoes?" asked mother, not knowing whether to laugh or to cry.

"What! All those things?" cried Max. "And I've been so careful I'm about worn out. There, don't you worry, mother; I'll wear my old brown shoes to school, and I've got plenty of playthings left." Then he bent his head over his porridge and ate cheerfully away, while his parents exchanged discouraged looks, and his father whispered, "It's not going to be a bit of use, dear. We shall have to try something else."

Boy Scouts Invited to England

Sir Robert S. S. Baden-Powell, chief scout of the British Boy Scouts, has invited the Boy Scouts of America to attend the third national rally of the Boy Scouts Association of Great Britain in Birmingham, England, July 2-9. All scouts who are planning to cross the ocean this summer are asked to arrange to be in Birmingham during the rally.

Demonstrations of the various activities of the scouts will include their work in first aid, carpentry, dairying, pathfinding, photography, pioneering and the like. There will be a general camp for scout masters and scouts who come to the rally. Tents, blankets, ground sheets, etc., will be furnished free, and food will be provided as cheaply as possible.

If you plan to attend the rally, Young America, ask your scout master to write to James E. West, chief scout executive, Fifth Avenue building, New York City.

What the Principal Meant

In a certain school in Milwaukee it is customary for the convenience of the principal to indicate in the corner of the monthly report card whether a child is S. P. (specially promoted), T. P. (trial promoted) or N. P. (not promoted).

These abbreviations aroused the curiosity of a 7-year-old boy who had never before received a report card. He asked his teacher the meaning, but was told to think it out himself. The following morning he went proudly up to the teacher.

"I know what those letters mean now, teacher," he said. "S. P. means Smith's pets, 'cause they skipped a grade. T. P. means teacher's pets, 'cause they passed on trial, and N. P. means nobody's pets, 'cause they didn't pass at all."

NEW BOOKS

Presbyterian Missions in Foreign Lands

Around the World Studies and Stories of Presbyterian Foreign Missions, by Charles Edwin Bradt, William R. King and Herbert E. Reherd. It is an exceedingly interesting undertaking to which these three well-known ministers of the Presbyterian Church set themselves in July, 1911, when they sailed for a year's investigation of the various foreign mission fields. Three months were spent in preliminary study of early missionary foundations in various countries of Europe, after which were visited in succession Syria, India, Siam and Laos, the Philippine islands, China, Korea and Japan. Following the arrival of the party in San Francisco, some time was spent in examination of the work for Chinese and Japanese on the Pacific coast.

Such a tour must have resulted in the collection of an immense amount of data, and it is not remarkable that with even the most effective condensation the story of the tour fills nearly 500 pages. Within the time of visitation it was, of course, not possible to make an intensive study of the several missions, but the various chapters of the book include sufficient historical background and descriptive matter to indicate a satisfactory basis for the conclusions of the visitors. There is an elaborate showing of photographic reproductions, most of them presumably secured by Mrs. Bradt, who acted as official photographer for the party. These pictures will be valued by the thousands of Presbyterians in America who are connected by ties of friendship or by missionary interests with the representatives of the church in foreign lands.

In each country the evangelistic, educational and medical departments of the work are considered by Doctors Bradt, King and Reherd, respectively, and a chapter is given to a discussion of the work among aliens in America. The investigators emphasize these points:

1. The need of stronger pressure upon the church for immediate action.

2. A fourfold increase in the number of foreign missionaries.

3. A fourfold increase in funds to provide for more missionaries and for an average force of ten native assistants to each man missionary.

4. Belief that if the mission work is thus strengthened, it will be possible to preach the gospel to every preacher within this generation.

5. That the primary need is for distinctive evangelistic work.

6. That the missionary force should be given large liberty in its work.

7. A definite and comprehensive policy for foreign missionary work as a whole.

The volume should be read with great interest by all Presbyterians and will have a place as a most serviceable handbook in every missionary library. [Missionary Press Company, Wichita, Kan.

Of Public Interest

The Struggle for Bread, by "A Rifleman." Social and industrial unrest is not confined to America, and this book deals with that part of it which affects the English people. In some respects the conditions over there are worse than they are here; for in England the workingman not only works for less wages but he has no hope of rising above his class. Moreover, the population of England has increased far beyond the supporting power of the soil, and consequently the bulk of the people have to subsist upon the profits of foreign trade. Thus it will be seen what an important figure the question of free trade versus tariff cuts in that country. It is amusing, by the way, to find this author attributing the great civil war in this country to "the desire for free trade," rather than to the slavery question. His volume, however, is very interesting, and gives the reader a vivid idea of the strained economic situation in England, and of the increasing tenseness of "the struggle for bread" in that country. [John Lane Company, New York. $1.50 net.

New Lives for Old, by William Carleton. Some time ago Mr. Carleton wrote a book entitled "One Way Out," in which he told how, at 38, he lost his position with a large corporation and, finding it impossible to get another on account of being already considered "too old," became a day laborer among the immigrants and started all over again. In "New Lives for Old" the author continues his story. As his business prospered he bought a farm and moved onto it. He found the neighboring village asleep, and, as he expresses it, he began to blow the resurrection trumpet. He certainly did succeed in waking up the community—he and his good wife Ruth. It is a captivating story, better than any love tale or detective yarn, because it is so very human and so true to life. Especially those who believe nothing good can come out of an abandoned New England farm should read and profit by it. [Small, Maynard and Company, Boston. $1.35.

The Stock Exchange from Within, by William C. Van Antwerp. There is a widespread feeling in this country against what is popularly known as stock gambling. Some even go so far as to condemn all dealings in stocks and demand that they should be suppressed by law. The majority of people probably do not know enough about the subject to form a just opinion either way. For this reason Mr. Van Antwerp's book is entitled to a hearing. It is a frank defense of the stock exchange as an institution, by one of its members, and a challenge to its critics. Of course he presents the best features of stock dealings in the strongest light; but he is entitled to credit for discussing the evils also. Naturally they do not appear as gigantic to him as they do to some people, but it is something that advocates of stock speculation recognize that there are evils connected with it. If someone would explain how it is possible to effect a change of owners without a transfer of ownership, in stock manipulation, he would do the public a real service. [Doubleday, Page and Company, New York. $1.50 net.

Socialism Summed Up, by Morris Hillquit. The author's former and larger books on socialism have made him an accepted authority on the subject. The present summing up is brief, but exceedingly pointed and vigorous, and is worth the while of anyone who wishes to know what the teachings of socialism really are. [Metropolitan Magazine Company, New York. Paper.

Two Books on Italy

Little Cities of Italy, by Andre Maurel; translated by Helen Gerard. M. Maurel is, according to one of his countrymen, among "the most deservedly notable men of letters in France." His acquaintance with history and with art and with literature is evident. He is said to be "welcome in brilliant salons, friend of the leading spirits of our times"; and this, too, one can readily believe. Probably his style of writing is as warmly favored in salon circles as his style of talking. But outside that radius he is not likely to be pronounced a comfortable guide or companion. He is too unwilling to be simple, explicit. He writes as if an erudite, hypercritical knowledge of all the world's deeds and all its masterpieces formed a basic part of every reader's equipment; as if to seem to impart any knowledge would be insulting to the reader's blase omniscience. Therefore he seeks to say about Ravenna and Rimini and Modena and Pavia and Perugia and Ferrara something different from any of the infinitude of things already said of them; and to this end rhapsodizes and coruscates, soars into dizzy heights of hyperbole and twists and turns like a contortionist in intricate tricks of metaphor. The effect is much like that of an accidental explosion of fireworks—noisy and brilliant, but bewildering. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $2.50 net.

The Italians of Today, by Richard Bagot. Mr. Bagot's book is not intended primarily for the historian, the traveler or the artist; it is offered to the man in the street whose knowledge of modern Italy and the Italians is of a vague sort, and it admirably fulfills its function. [F. G. Browne and Company, Chicago. $1.25.

New Fiction

Left in Charge, by Victor L. Whitechurch, contains some of the best descriptive incidents of English peasant folk to be found between book covers. It is a bright, sweet little story of a country parish, in which the old vicar has worn himself out and is obliged to take a leave of absence. The manner in which his stalwart substitute puts new life into the conventional village, circumvents the villain and succeeds in managing the very managing daughter of the vicar makes good reading and a good romance. [Doubleday, Page and Company, New York. $1.20 net.

The Perfect Gentleman, by Harry Graham, purports to be "a guide to social aspirants, compiled from the occasional papers of Reginald Drake Biffin," and is recommended by the publishers as sparkling with fun. It has to do with such subjects as the bath, dress, dancing, social intercourse, art and travel; and there are funny things—quite a few of them—but they are so far apart, so overdone and so out of the spirit of modern American humor that one feels as if a great deal of effort had been expended for very little return. [Duffield and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

St. Quin, by Dion Clayton Calthrop. This new story by the author of "Perpetua Mary" will interest many readers. It follows familiar lines: A pair of young people marry and do not know each other until after a series of disturbing circumstances, when they suddenly find themselves much in love. [John Lane Company, New York. $1.30 net.

Joyful Heatherby, by Payne Erskine. The heroine is an unspoiled girl from a small New England coast town, and the scene is laid chiefly in Boston. The story gives some hint of the peril in which such a girl finds herself in a city, and the service which can be rendered to her by an honest man. [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.35 net.

Ranching for Sylvia, by Harold Bindloss. In leaving England to oversee a young widow's farm in Canada, the hero meets and falls in love with a genuine, charming girl of the great Northwest. [Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. $1.30 net.

The Dragoman, by George K. Stiles. An American girl and a young Englishman enact a curious love affair on the banks of the Nile. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.30 net.

Poetry Received

The Call of Brotherhood, and Other Poems, by Corine Roosevelt Robinson. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $1.25 net.

The Locusts' Years, by Mary Helen Fee. A. C. McClurg and Company, Chicago. $1.35.

At the Crossing with Denis McShane, by William Allen Knight. Pilgrim Press, Boston.

The Red Button, by Will Irwin. Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.30 net.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

April 27, 1913—Joseph Sold Into Egypt

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 37. Golden Text, I. Corinthians 13:4: Love envieth not.

Joseph's coat was an emblem of his father. Its varied colors represented the vices and virtues of the name. Our moral characteristics appear to come from the same sources as do our physical. We resemble our fathers inside as well as out. That the children of Jacob should have been a contradiction was not strange. Their father was an anomaly, and since they were born of four mothers, the family coat was not likely to be of a single color.

Creation is a long process. We are all older than our birth years, and the dust from which we were created was gathered from many soils. Joseph, we suspect, resembled his mother. Much of the good within us comes from that source. That Jesus was born of a human mother in no sense weakens his claim to divinity. The Son of God and the Son of Mary unite in him. Those who see in this lesson a mere succession of events will fail to find its real meaning. History is never simply a record of events. History is sequence. Everything bears a relation to something else.

Isaac Sees in Canaan Land Set Apart for Worship of True God

In all these migrations God himself went along. At times he revealed himself, as he did at Bethel, and then again he left the emigrants to themselves. In our last lesson Jacob was on his return journey from Haran to Hebron. He had been absent twenty years, but Isaac, his father, was still alive. The idea that Canaan was the land set apart for the worship of the eternal God had taken possession of his soul. It was the one unsetting star that hung above his horizon. That idea drew him back to Hebron, as it had drawn Abraham away from Ur long years before.

It has been remarked that evidences of civilization now begin to appear. There is a gradual transformation from the shepherd to the farmer.

The patriarch now becomes a permanent resident of the country. His sons had located at Shechem, fifty miles to the north, and were engaged in caring for their father's sheep. Joseph was a lad of 17 and for a time had been associated with his brothers. But old men see visions, and young men dream dreams. Joseph's dreams were of a greatness before which even his father would bow in subjection. The sons envied, but the father "kept the saying in mind." There is a marked difference. Envy never thinks. It acts from hatred, and hatred is a house on fire. The more it burns the hotter becomes its flame.

That Joseph Was Object of Brothers' Hatred Was Natural Result of Upbringing

That Joseph should have been the object of his brothers' hatred was not strange. They had been reared in an atmosphere of favoritism. The sons of Leah must have remembered the injustice done their mother in the days of Haran. Rachel was the favorite of their father, and in Joseph they saw a perpetuation of the same thing. The story of Esau was no doubt a twice told tale at their fireside. Jacob's home life is full of suggestion. It is seldom that one ever rises far above his surroundings. The example of the father lives in his children. The patriarch should have known that, but, like many a father since, he was blind to the effect of his own teaching. The law of reaction is just as certain in life as it is in mathematics. The harvest is only the sowing under another form. But the most far-seeing men are often blind to the objects nearest at hand.

The father dressed his boy in a coat of many colors and sent him fifty miles away to Shechem. "Go now," he said. "See whether it is well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks; and bring me word again." A more fatal challenge could not have been devised. As well might he have dressed himself in goat skin when he went out to meet Esau on his return from Haran. But folly is never consistent. That coat was of the kind worn only by the rich and favored. It reminded the brethren of their sheaves bowing to the sheaf of Joseph. Clothes in themselves are innocent, but they sometimes bring their wearers to a deeper pit than the one that greeted Joseph. Principle should not be confused with prejudice, but sometimes the latter exacts the higher price.

As Joseph came upon the field ten men said one to another: "Behold, this dreamer cometh. Come now, therefore, and let us slay him." So they stripped him of his coat and threw him into a vacant well. And there he was left to die, while they sat down to eat bread. Murder has often sprung from the most unexpected causes. He that is angry with his brother has already blood spots upon his heart.

Joseph's Life Saved to Further God's Scheme of Redemption

It would seem that Joseph's life was over, but God's work was yet unfinished. The vast scheme of redemption needed Joseph's service. Reuben is touched with pity and Judah, weighing Joseph's death over against his life, asks which is the more profitable for them. A caravan of trading Midianites happened to be passing by and to them was the youthful dreamer sold for twenty pieces of silver, or about $12 of our money. The tragedy was soon completed. Joseph's coat, dripping with the blood of a kid, was brought to Jacob. The patriarch, recognizing it, rent his garments and cried, "Joseph is dead. I shall go down to my grave mourning for my son!"

In far off Egypt a beautiful boy becomes the property of an Egyptian officer, and the bowing sheaves are scattered to the winds. But the dreams that God inspires eventually come true. Joseph has gone, but God went with him. His brothers are to meet him again. Our future is God's present, and in another life we must all face our deeds.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—In the mysteries of providence God makes the wrath of man to praise him. There is no sin more cruel than envy and no sinner more worthy of the judgment than the sinful son, cruel to his father, his brother and his posterity still unborn.

How wonderfully true to life as we know it today is this Old Testament history! Our blessings oft come to us in disguise, and our griefs are not infrequently the gateways to our goals. The hours which are forever to remain with us as happy bestowals, many times wore rue rather than orange blossoms.

Joseph was cast into a pit that he might be lifted to a throne, and his brothers' hatred enabled him to save his father and the whole family from distress.

Canaan was a poor school in which to rear a race for large endeavor. The transference of Jacob's family and race from Canaan to the valley of the Nile was not unlike, in many respects, what it would be to remove a tribe of Bedouins from Arabia to London today. Israel was not sent into Egypt for religious but for mental quickening (Acts 7:22). And while reliance on the friendship of the Pharaohs more than once proved a snare to Judean kings, we also know that Egypt continued to be, even until the birth of our Saviour, a refuge from many a threatened ill (Matt. 2:13).

Envy and Jealousy Kindle Flames of Hatred Against Joseph

Verse 23—Let us remember that Joseph, whatever boyish faults he possessed (v. 5), came to his brethren on an errand of good will, seeking to know of their safety and to report their need if in any trouble. Palestine has never been a safe country for unarmed wanderers. Jacob might well fear that the duplicity and cruelty which his sons had practiced on the Shechemites (ch. 34) would lead to serious consequences. He felt uneasy when for a long time there was no report from his sons. Their very flocks would be a temptation to which the inhabitants of the section might easily succumb. And so Joseph was commissioned to ascertain how things went with his older brothers (v. 13), a charge which, young as he was (v. 2), he promptly accepted.

Verse 24—But envy and jealousy are swift to shed blood. Jacob had imprudently exhibited his partiality for the young son of his beloved Rachel, but so far as the story goes he had wrought the older sons no injustice. He had not enriched Joseph at the expense of those looking after his flocks. When there is a disposition to take offense a pretty coat, or even a bit of ribbon, is sufficient to kindle the flames of hate. And when once the infection of envy has got root in man's soul, it strikes deep, to the destruction of the whole better nature.

The Question of Profit Sometimes Outweighs the Question of Duty

Verse 25—The fields where Jacob's sons were pasturing their flocks were nigh to the great through route by which merchants from the east reached the land of the Nile. One of the most mournful facts in history is the undeniable fact of "man's inhumanity to man." When one visits the Old World castles, with their torture chambers still intact and their racks and thumbscrews exhibited before the eyes of the twenetieth century progress, he wonders how anyone could sit down to eat bread in the rooms above when such suffering, by the command of the owner inflicted, was so close at hand. But when we read of lynchings in our own country, and of bits of charred wood bought as souvenirs of horrible burnings of human beings, we realize that in some men the veneer of feeling is not very thick. Joseph's brothers have kith and kin among ourselves, remote as our period seems to be.

Verse 26—But the question which would not down was, "Will it pay?" It is harder to say which is the baser, sin for mere revenge or sin for the sake of hire. So far as Joseph was concerned death in the pit might be kinder than a slave's lot in Egypt. His brethren did not discuss this. The question that interested them was, "Where do we come in? What's the use of killing a boy that you can sell?" Joseph's brothers could easily secure his silence by telling him it was a choice between his acquiescence and death. Slave traders have never been noted for their humanity or given to asking questions about the rights of the chattel offered them. The transaction was soon concluded, but the incident was not closed. It was to have a dramatic sequel which no one then could foresee.

The Sin of a Son Bites Sharper than a Serpent's Tooth

Verses 31-33—The story which constitutes this lesson will seem to some to be too cruel to be true. But there are just such sons today bringing down to the grave the gray hairs of their parents. The writer was in a Sunday school recently, and seeing a perfect Apollo sitting opposite, said to the stranger next to him, "What a splendid picture of manhood that young fellow over there is!" To which the new acquaintance replied mournfully, "That is my only son and my heaviest burden." One of the most beautiful boys the writer ever knew stole the lifetime savings of his mother and wasted them on a dissolute woman. Jacob's sons are not extinct. Some of them are in the Sunday schools today. May this lesson strike home and save some of them from slaying their own fathers by crimes that will return with their curses, finally to rest upon their own souls both for time and for eternity.

The Hawser of the Soul

I stood one summer morning on the harbor wall at Chicago. The rising sun was flashing along the Michigan shore. Great bars of fire were springing out of the lake, till the heavens were aglow with splendor, bathing sea and sky and water wall, and kindling on the eaves and roofs of the city front. In the distance a great ship was moving, its sails and spars aglow, its outline a giant pearl against the sky; and between the ship and the tow tug that hauled it seaward a mighty hawser, now taut and tuneful with tension, dripping diamonds and pearls as it arose from the water, and now submerged and out of sight, covered with the waves, but a mighty hawser still—substantial, real, reliable—seen or unseen, a hawser still.

That hawser is Christ. No task is too great for his strength. No billow can affect his power. No cloud can eclipse his presence, nor darkness hide his face. Clean-cut and beautiful at every strain, glowing bright with every trial, firm, reliable, a soul-hawser forever, holding us to God, drawing us to heaven.—E. G. McLean.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning April 20, 1913

Topic—Unprofitable servants. Luke 17:7-10.

This parable has sometimes been very puzzling to men who have not recognized the close connection that exists between it and the words that immediately precede. The Master had been speaking about the unlimited possibilities of faith. If the disciples had faith as a grain of mustard seed, they would say to a black mulberry tree, like the one growing on the side of the road along which they were traveling, "Be thou rooted up, and be thou planted in the sea," and it would be done. And they would do other things of similar difficulty, such as converting whole villages to acceptance of the gospel of their Lord.

—

Immediately these disciples would think: "What excellent servants we are! How valuable are we in the promotion of the interest of our Lord!"

—

A belief in works of supererogation is implanted by nature in the soul of every man. The disciples were convinced that they could be very profitable servants; that they could do a vast number of good works which could not reasonably be required of them.

—

"What must I do to be saved?" is the cry of the Philippian jailer; it is the consciousness of Hellenic naturalism coming to expression in his voice. "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house," is the Christian answer. Men like to think that they can do something to earn salvation. Their self-love prompts them to take this view of their conduct. They like to think, too, that they can be better and do more good deeds than could properly have been expected of them. There is no harder task for the preacher than to convince the average common sense man, who has kept out of jail, that he has not been quite so good a man as the community or the church could ever have desired him to be. If he has assisted to keep a struggling charity alive and help it do its work, he frequently has a comfortable feeling of a store of good works laid up somewhere against possible overdraught in the future. If, in addition, he has given a few dollars for the conversion of the heathen, he did so with a distinct sense of superior merit.

—

But the awful evil of this sense of merit is that it has made us indifferent to the pain and suffering, the wrong and misery, by which we are surrounded on every hand. Just in proportion as we are disposed to assert our own value, do we lose the conviction of our obligation toward our fellow men. We have ceased to serve our Lord, that we may eat and drink ourselves. Here is the needed lesson in humility for us.

—

Jesus is speaking to the company of the disciples. None of them ever owned a slave; though the sons of Zebedee had worked by the side of the hired servants of their father. But all of them were poor, and close to the life of the poor. They knew well the condition of the slaves who worked in the fields, and they felt the full force of the Master's argument. Those poor laborers on returning from the plowing or the feeding of cattle were not invited to sit down at once and feed themselves, though such an invitation would have been most welcome to their tired bodies. But they were required first to prepare their Master's food, gird themselves and serve him as he sat at meat. Only when he had finished eating and drinking were they permitted also to eat and drink. It was a hard lot, a lot of constant toil and privation. Jesus is not approving it; he is simply stating it as a fact and using it as an illustration to make clear the relation of his followers to the service of the kingdom. All the slave's work belonged to his owner. When he had done all that he could he was no hero; he was simply a serf who had done his duty. And his labor left no profit over to accrue to his own credit or the advantage of his lord.

—

So was it in the kingdom. All the powers and capacities of the disciples for service belonged already to their Lord. They could do nothing which they were not bound to do. And if they should suffer privation and hardship, wearniess and pain, and finally death itself, they need not be surprised, as though some strange thing had befallen them. Nor need they feel that they had deserved exceedingly well of their Lord. They would have done only their duty.

—

It is significant that all the metaphors used by Christ and St. Paul to describe the religious life indicate to us not a condition of ease and contemplation but of struggle and hardship, pain and death. The fisherman and the sower, the sword and the cross, symbolize the Christian expectation. In this instance it is the slave, who has no privilege of pleasing himself, but must stand and wait upon the pleasure of his master.

—

The Christian conscience answers to the teaching of the Saviour. When we have done our utmost, when we have been fully awake, have exercised every power we possess, have spent ourselves early and late, then we know in our deepest consciousness that we are only unprofitable servants.

—

Whoever refuses to call himself an unprofitable servant makes Christ himself to appear an unprofitable servant. St. Paul says: "I do not make void the grace of God: for if righteousness is through the law, then Christ died for nought" (Gal. 2:21). And in the gospel of St. Luke the narrative is interwoven with the Pauline doctrine and saturated with the Pauline temperament. The man who believes that he is able to do more than he is under obligation to do has a very low idea of the perfection that is contained in the law of Christ.

—

Does the requirement of Christ seem exacting and forbidding? Then let us remember that he spoke these words with the cross looming up before him. If he demands all the service we can yield, he himself also served to the uttermost. He spoke his words knowing that he would soon die for his servants.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

April 27, 1913

THE BOOK THAT MAKES NATIONS

Topic—Mission work at home and abroad. IV. Bible work. Acts. 17:1-12.

The tourist who visits Bethlehem will be shown the cave, under the same roof as the grotto in which the Saviour was born, where Jerome translated the Bible into the Vulgate. He wanted to get as close as possible to the Life in rendering the book. The gospel takes its rise in the birth of Christ. There is significance in this incident of the ancient saint and scholar, who made the translation of the Bible into Latin which endures to this day, getting near to the manger for his labors. The best Bible work is that which keeps closest to Christ.

—

There are Bible translations in approximately 500 languages and dialects. There is no important nation on earth today which may not read the word of God in its native tongue. Many peoples have been given the Bible as their first literature; they had no written speech until the Bible translators, with infinite pains, reduced their tongue to written language. The greatest literary achievement in human annals has been the giving of the Bible to the whole of mankind, in the speech to which each nation was born. This has also been the greatest single work of missions.

—

The judgment of the heads of the two great English-speaking nations upon the Bible and its Hero are of contemporaneous interest. Not long since somebody inquired of King George's private secretary concerning the king's reading habits, and Lord Knollys replied as follows: "I have had the honor of submitting your letter to the king, and am directed to inform you in reply that it is quite true that he promised Queen Alexandra as long ago as 1881 that he would read a chapter of the Bible daily and that he has ever since adhered to this promise."

President Wilson, as all the world knows, is a Presbyterian elder and the son of a Presbyterian minister. In a little book by him, "The Free Life," occurs this passage: "Our true wisdom is in our ideals. Practical judgments shift from age to age, but principles abide; and more stable even than principles are the motives which simplify and ennoble life. That, I suppose, is why the image of Christ has grown not less but more distinct in the consciousness of the race since the tragic day in which he died upon the cross. . . . He is the only permanent person of history, the only complete and unalterable epitome of what man is and what man would be, a creature of two worlds."

—

Whenever I make any decision I ask myself what the Bible would teach me to do in that particular case. It is to me a fountain from which I draw light and strength, and in hours of sorrow and depression I seek consolation therein.—Emperor William of Germany.

The man bearing the Book to a non-Christian land is more potent than the man leading an army or a fleet of warships. For the Bible subdues characters, whereas the military or naval force merely overcomes territory and outward actions. More revolutions have been wrought by the Bible than by gunpowder.

—

Martin Luther used to teach his children to read the Bible in the following way: First, they read through one book carefully, then they studied it chapter by chapter, and then verse by verse, and finally word by word. For, he said, "It is like a person shaking a fruit tree. First shaking the tree and gathering up the fruit which falls to the ground, and then shaking each branch, and afterwards each twig of the branch, and last of all, looking carefully under each leaf to see that no fruit remains. In this way, and in no other, shall we also find the hidden treasures that are in the Bible."

—

The charge has sometimes been made against Christians that they use the Bible as an idol. They set it up as a fetish, instead of handling aright the word of truth. The wise words of Miles Coverdale in the preface to his English Bible of 1535 are still applicable: "It shall greatly help thee to understand Scripture, if thou mark not only what is spoken or written, but of whom, and unto whom, with what words, or at what time, where to, what intent, with what circumstances, considering what goeth before and what followeth."

—

The Bible has been the Magna Charta of the poor and of the oppressed; the Bible is the most democratic book in the world. . . . By the study of what other book could children be so much humanized? I have been seriously perplexed to know by what means the religious feeling in mankind, which is the essential basis of conduct, is to be kept up without the use of the Bible.—Thomas Huxley.

—

The Bible thoroughly understood is a literature of itself—the rarest and richest in all departments of thought or imagination.—Richard H. Froude.

—

Anybody who is interested in helping people to understand the Bible is a patriot.—Justice David Brewer.

—

If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible our country will go on prospering and to prosper; but if we and our posterity neglect its instructions and authority, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us and bury all our glory in profound obscurity.—Daniel Webster.

—

It is supremacy, not precedence, that we ask for the Bible. It is contrast, as well as resemblance, that we must feel compelled to insist on. The Bible is stamped with specialty of origin and an immeasurable distance separates it from all competitors.—William E. Gladstone.

MISSIONARY WORK

Protestant Viewpoint in Catholic Lands

The statement adopted by the interdenominational conference of boards and missionaries doing Protestant work in Latin America (held in the Presbyterian building, New York, March 12 and 13) appears in a document which, though brief, well represents detailed study. It is a marvel of terseness and compactness. The conference defines Latin America to include Mexico, all the republics of South and Central America, Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippine islands. In facing the situation in these countries, so completely occupied by the Roman Catholic Church, the members of the conference appreciated clearly that they were face to face with a common criticism that it is wrong and unfraternal to extend foreign missions to countries where the inhabitants are already Christian according to the broadest definitions. The conference was therefore explicit and direct in stating the reasons why it believed foreign missions of the Protestant faith to be justifiable in these countries, even granting that the papal church is a branch of Christianity. In these stalwart terms the conference expressed itself on this subject:

"While these lands contain a great variety of moral and spiritual need, we frankly recognize that, as a whole, Latin America presents a situation different in many respects from that presented by the non-Christian peoples of Asia and Africa. There we find ethnic faiths intrenched behind the sanctions of many centuries of national thought and practice. To lead these Asiatic and African peoples into the liberty and fellowship of our common Lord and Master is the aim of all Christian effort. In Latin America we find no great non-Christian religious system. In all these lands we find the representatives of the Roman communion. In all of them that communion has been the dominant religious influence of centuries.

"But we also find—for reasons into which we need not enter here—that the vast majority of the people of Latin America, especially the men, claim no vital relation, and acknowledge no allegiance, to the Roman communion. Religious indifference, agnosticism and infidelity, especially in the more enlightened Latin-American countries, have laid a strong hand upon most of the 71,000,000 people who dwell in these lands. Moreover, there are several millions of unevangelized Indians and other native peoples. They are surely pagan as any tribes in the heart of Africa. Their need of the gospel is the same.

"We acknowledge gladly that the Roman communion has done useful work among these varied peoples. We would do nothing to detach sincere Christians from their allegiance. There are patent facts, however, which call loudly upon the Christian communions of this land to more worthy effort to aid the people of Latin America to meet their spiritual, moral and intellectual needs.

"1. Millions of people in Latin America are without the gospel today, either because they have never heard it or because they have rejected it in the form in which it had been offered to them.

"2. The percentage of illiteracy in Latin America is from 50 to 85 per cent.

"3. The percentage of illegitimacy is appallingly high, ranging from 20 to 68 per cent.

"4. Agnosticism, if not infidelity, almost universally prevails in all the universities of Latin America."

—

Ohio Women Plan Mission School

The synodical societies of Ohio are arranging a missionary conference or school of missions in Wooster for five days, beginning Sunday, Aug. 10. The resident missionaries will contribute an exhibition of curios. The program will be as strong and attractive as it will be possible to secure, and will include Bible study and devotional periods conducted by Miss Angy Manning Taylor of Moody Institute. Isaac T. Headland, D. D., author of "China's New Day," will be one of the speakers, and C. E. Bradt, D. D., of Chicago will give two lectures. Other speakers will be announced later. It is expected that a large number of Ohio women will avail themselves of the privileges of this first synodical school of missions. A most cordial welcome has been extended by Wooster University. The manifested desire of the faculty to cooperate is most encouraging. Accommodations will be provided in one of the dormitories.

—

Ready to Speak in Behalf of Lepers

Miss Bertha G. Johnson of Chicago is a late recruit to the forces of the American committee which cooperates with the Mission to Lepers in India and the East. Miss Johnson will travel among the churches and speak, not only in local meetings but in religious conventions and conferences, on the dire and pitiful needs which this mission to the lepers is meeting and on the responsibility of American churches to bear their share in the work. Miss Johnson enters into this task with an enthusiasm born not of remote information but of personal knowledge. When she went to India as a Presbyterian missionary in 1902, she came into immediate contact with the leper problem and with leprosy's sorrow. It touched her heart particularly when the little secretary of her junior Endeavor society was found to be a leper and had to be sent away to a leper asylum. In 1909 Miss Johnson was compelled by ill health to return home, and in the time intervening between her arrival in Chicago and her entrance upon this new work she has devoted herself largely to the foreign department of the Chicago Tract Society. In her early years, before going out to India, she was secretary of the Chicago Christian Endeavor Union and its missionary superintendent. Dates for her services can be arranged by addressing W. M. Danner, secretary, 105 Raymond street, Cambridge, Mass.

Miss B. G. Johnson

—

Another Home from Kennedy Bequest

Matsuyama, the only mission station on the Island of Shikoku, Japan, has at last a good mission house, built by a Christian contractor. Having moved in, Mrs. J. C. Worley writes: "One woman whom Mr. Worley baptized a year ago walked thirty-five miles over the mountains and carried a baby on her back to get to us so she could learn foreign cooking in a week. It seemed I could not do too much after she had made such an effort. She came over every morning into our kitchen and we proceeded to cook; she with paper and pencil in hand and watching with both eyes. I am wondering what I shall be expected to eat next time we go there! I taught her some new songs for the Sunday school she and her husband hold in their little mountain village. I just wanted to fill her up with good thought and helps to take home, as she had made such an effort to get here."

—

Omaha School of Missions

The Omaha Summer School of Missions will be held June 23-30 at the University of Omaha. Classes will be conducted by Dr. Charles T. Paul, president of the Indianapolis College of Missions, and Miss Frances Bates Patterson of Chicago. Dr. Edward A. Steiner, the author and lecturer, will speak on "The Struggle for Brotherhood." Dr. Haigazian, president of the Apostolic College of Konia (old Iconium), will deliver an illustrated address on Asia Minor and current conditions in Turkey.

Charles W. Fairbanks, former vice-president, and Dr. Charles E. Bradt of Chicago, who recently toured the world, will also deliver illustrated lectures. Mrs. Edward P. Costigan of Denver will have classes in methods for children and will also conduct the story-telling hour.

—

Missionary Brevities

—Marriages on the mission field often demonstrate the weakness of denominational lines, but it is not often that two young men wed two young women of the same mission on the same day. That is a coming event in the Allahabad station, which has caused a good deal of pleasant excitement. On April 23 there will be a gathering of many Presbyterians there from near-by places to witness the marriage in the morning of Rev. Alfred W. Moore of Etah and Miss Louise Keach, who has been teaching in the Mary Wanamaker School of Allahabad for two years. In the afternoon Professor H. T. Avey of the engineering department of the Arthur Ewing Christian College weds Dr. Sarah Swezey of the Presbyterian hospital in the same city. Miss Swezey went to India in 1910. Mr. Avey went as a short term teacher to the college, but volunteered for life service after his term.

—"Gospel Han" is the name boasted now by a Chinese teacher in Ichowfu, China. Mr. Han was a triple-honor scholar in the Chinese classics, whose attention was finally turned to Christianity. He became so thoroughly convinced of the truth of the gospel that before being baptized he insisted on being privileged to take a name that would mark him as a Christian forever afterward. He is now teaching Chinese history and pedagogy to a normal class for country school teachers in the Ichowfu mission.

—When Dr. Sun Yat Sen, leader of the Chinese revolution and now the national railroad commissioner, visited Tsingtau in the province of Shantung on official business the missionaries were delighted to observe that all the conferences which local business men had arranged for Sunday Dr. Sun firmly put off till Monday. He would transact nothing of business on the Lord's day. Instead, he attended church and delivered an address before the congregation.

—Rev. John B. White of Brandon, Colo., is greatly dissatisfied with the comparatively small number of people that he can reach in his sparsely populated field driving with team and buggy. If he had some sort of motor car he could enlarge his parish. Secretary Thompson of the Board of Home Missions indorses the suggestion that some prosperous Presbyterian who is getting a new car this spring might ship the old one to Mr. White.

—Matthew Wellington, one of the six Nasik "boys" who carried the body of David Livingstone from the heart of Africa to the coast, is still living at Mombasa, British East Africa, and is in the government service. The six were liberated by the British from slavery and educated at the Church Missionary Society's School, near Bombay, India. Wellington is an intelligent man and an active worker in the church at Mombasa.

—

Board Notes and Announcements

—Nathanael's confession, "Rabbi, thou art the Son of God," was the heart of the lesson brought by Mrs. George L. Robinson Friday morning at Room 48, Chicago. It was an hour of many prayers for India, for the two Fatehgarh missionaries present for the last time before returning. The Siam secretary presented the request of Miss Alice J. Ellinwood of the Harriet H. House School (address Bangkok, Siam, via Brindisi) for Bible illustrating pictures cut from Sunday school papers and quarterlies, for hand work for her little scholars. Miss Jennie M. Colman, formerly of India, told of her visits to lepers, whose refusal to take the candy sent to them because it had come in the same conveyance with her, although she had been careful not to touch it, showed the power of caste. Miss Emily Forman acknowledged gratefully the ready response to her request for dolls. Mrs. Berry, who represented the board at the meeting of Bloomington Presbyterial Society in Bement, brought greetings.

—New leaflets on India: "Taibai and Her Two Sons," 3 cents; "Mary Warren of Gwalior," by Henry Forman, D. D., 2 cents. On China: "The Education of Chinese Women" and "Singing Child's Classmate," the latter by Miss Grace Newton of Paotingfu, each 3 cents; "The Man Who Went to China to Be Converted," 1 cent. Also for April meetings: "India Awakening," "The Woman Who Came at Night," "A Little Captive Maid," "A Hindu Gipsy," "The Mission Station—a Social Settlement," "Ganesh the Leper," "Satabia," each 2 cents; "Religions of India," 5 cents.

The Open Hearth

[Writers of letters to The Open Hearth are reminded that excessive length of their contributions operates to shut out other participants in current discussions. Three hundred words is an acceptable maximum. Communications of greater length will be cut down, or will be returned if marked "in full or not at all."]

Warning from Secretary Speer

Inquiries have come to us with regard to two Nestorians, or Syrians, from Kurdistan, named Joshua and Ezra Khamis, who have been soliciting funds for alleged missionary work in Persia and Turkey. For the last ten or twelve years these men have been seeking to support themselves by missionary schemes. Some twelve or more years ago they organized what they called the Central Kurdistan mission, with some backing from people in England and the Bible Lands Missions Aids Society. The statements which they used in their report were extravagant and unreliable. They finally started an orphanage in Gawar, a district in Kurdistan, but it had a very bad name, scandalous reports being current with regard to its character and influence. The American missionaries who knew the men and what they claimed to be doing declined to indorse their work, and the Bible Lands Missions Aids Society dropped it. There were at that time only about a dozen orphans, and they were brought to Urumia, while the Khamises went abroad soliciting money. There is no need of an orphanage in Urumia, and Joshua Khamis and his wife are incapable and morally unsuited to conduct an orphanage anywhere. Ezra Khamis, I believe, has taken a degree in medicine at the University of Edinburgh. No money should be given to these men for their alleged missionary enterprises.

If friends in the United States and Canada are desirous of giving help to the people either of Persia or Turkey they should send their contributions through the American missionaries, who will account for the expenditure of all moneys and who can be depended upon to apply contributions to bona fide mission work. Readers should be on their guard against giving money to solicitors from Persia or Turkey who do not have the authentic written indorsements of the American consuls in Tabriz and Van and the American missionaries in the field from which they come. ROBERT E. SPEER.

Use of Profanity in Magazines

Most of us have noticed the frequent occurrence, in recent years, of profanity in publications supposedly high class and which would therefore be expected to be free from such seriously objectionable matter, and the practice is apparently rapidly increasing. Is it not high time that a halt was called on this practice, so degrading to all, and especially to youthful readers? If the matter was taken up by ministers' associations, Y. M. C. A.'s, Christian Endeavorers and other young people's societies, and also men's church organizations, etc., it would not take long to lead publishers to realize that it would be to their interest to leave offensive language out of their publications. The only excuse that I have ever heard given for its insertion is that it is "realistic." This is lamentably true, but far from sufficient reason for its use. There are many expressions which, if printed, would give an article a realistic tone, but which would not be tolerated for a moment even by these regardless publishers.

Why should they make an exception of profanity? And why will their readers tolerate it? If these men propose to insult their readers by making their stories and numerous articles realistic at the expense of decency, they should be taught that their readers have some sense of decency if the publishers have not. If those who do not approve of such language will drop a line to the publishers of any periodical or other publication in which it appears, asking that such language be discontinued, it will probably have a great influence in checking the repulsive evil; and if such mild measures fail to accomplish this result a few names withdrawn from the subscription lists of such periodicals would be pretty certain to lead even unprincipled publishers to realize that it is more important to make their productions fit to read than it is to make them disgustingly realistic. READER.

"Lincoln Church and College"

In the Open Hearth of March 6 H. W. L. urges the building at Washington of a Lincoln memorial Presbyterian church and Bible college. The writer read the suggestion with growing interest and would urge the further consideration of this honor due the memory of the beloved Lincoln. The writer is a southerner, born near the old battle fields of Corinth, Miss., a son of a dead Confederate soldier, a student and teacher of American history, a former Cumberland minister and now pastor of an American Presbyterian Congregation. He urges the adoption and execution of this proposed plan to honor the martyred Lincoln. He never fails to preach a memorial sermon on the anniversary of Lincoln's birth. Strange times and good times are these when a southern born and bred minister, a Democrat and a young man, will say from the pulpit that Abraham Lincoln was the greatest man ever born on the American continent and that he will grow larger and grander in the hearts of thinking people through the days to come. Surely we have the money to build this memorial, and surely there are enough friends of Abraham Lincoln, North and South, who have respect for his name to make the necessary sacrifice. R. WELTON OAKES.

Philippine Church Statistics Err

Some time ago in our church papers I noticed a list of the largest Presbyterian churches. The list placed Manila high, saying it had 3,073 members. The fact is that the largest Presbyterian church in Manila has about 450 members. The 3,073 is the number of members in a group of a dozen churches under the supervision of J. B. Rodgers, D. D. I also noticed a list of the various synods in which the percentage of the churches having pastors or stated supplies and the numbers of churches vacant were given. The list gave the Synod of the Philippines as having 100 per cent of its churches with pastors or supplies. Since this is so contrary to the facts, I wish to say, as stated clerk of the synod, that a very small percentage of our churches have either pastors or supplies. A very large part of them are under the general care and supervision of the missionaries and the Filipino pastor-evangelists. Only a very small per cent have their own pastors.

Nearly every congregation in the mission maintains regular Sabbath services under the direction of its elders, deacons and Christian workers, which fact is very gratifying. In some of the churches a traveling preacher or evangelist of the mission may preach once every month, in some other churches only once every two months, and during the other Sabbaths some members of the church conduct preaching services and prayer meetings. While our churches have not yet done a great deal toward supporting their pastors, they have done much toward maintaining regular services and in doing personal work. CHARLES N. MAGILL.

Christian Inefficiency

In the issue of Jan. 16 The Continent tells of the slow progress made by the Presbyterian churches North and South, in which almost half of the churches report not a single person had been added to fellowship in the past year. A prominent Methodist speaker found the same condition in Iowa, and incidentally remarked that Iowa paid more attention to raising corn than to religion, as it took some $1,200 in preachers' salaries to every addition to church membership. This condition is not attributable to a lack of earnest effort, and whole-hearted devotion to serving the various charges, but to some other cause. What is the cause?

We are in the midst of a great famine. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord: and they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they shall run to and fro to seek the word of the Lord, and shall not find it" (Amos 8:11, 12).

"For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a King, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without teraphim: afterwards shall the children of Israel return and seek the Lord their God, and David their king; and shall fear the Lord and his goodness in the latter days." J. J. BRUCE.

Woman's Doubt as to Women's Votes

IN A RECENT article in The Continent entitled "Yes or No on Suffrage: Woman's Apathy," an incident is given which fairly represents the attitude of many women, namely, that of utter indifference toward and unwillingness to think out this vital problem. But there is another side to the matter than the one the author presents.

I have in mind a woman who is a capable, sensible mother and homemaker, sacrificing happily her own ease and economizing in every detail in order that her husband may fit himself for a better position than he has heretofore held. Suppose this woman were given the ballot, what would result? There would be for her three possibilities—either she must vote as her husband does, or vote without knowledge, or else give up many of the hours that are now a part of the capital stock of the family in order to get for herself the knowledge which would enable her to vote intelligently. A balance struck in such a case would present to any fair-minded observer a distinct loss to the credit side of the family resources.

Anyone who has made the effort to get women interested in settlement work, friendly visiting or kindred activities does not need to be told that the apathy of many women extends to all of these. Given the unlimited use of the ballot and what would such women accomplish? I do not believe that even the ballot would raise her to a higher plane of living or a more unselfish attitude toward her fellow beings.

And then, what of the women wage earners who are suffering because of wrongs and oppression? Herbert Spencer says: "Ill-treated classes of men have had to struggle far longer before they obtained, from the classes who ill-treated them, the concessions they demanded, than women as a class have had to struggle before obtaining from men, as a class, the various freedoms they asked. They have obtained these without political power; and there is no reason to doubt that such further injustice as they complain of—chiefly in respect of the custody of children—may be similarly removed without making the gigantic constitutional change which some of them seek."

Except in very rare instances, working women and girls have not had the opportunity, nor can they have the mentality and the vision, to recognize and meet the needs and supply the remedy for their situation. The problems of the working girl would be greatly complicated and progress in every direction retarded, I believe, if the unrestricted power of the ballot were to be suddenly placed in their hands.

Moreover, experience has not proved that wonderful results have come to pass where the ballot has prevailed for twenty, thirty and forty years. A careful comparison of the laws of the states of Colorado and of Massachusetts shows that in the latter state the laws protecting women and children are much fuller than in Colorado, while in New Jersey there have been secured, largely by the much despised "indirect influence" of women and entirely without their vote, such reforms as legislation against child labor, the establishment of a probation system which is considered by some authorities to be beyond that of Colorado, and creation of a Board of Children's Guardians.

What we need is not so much "votes for women" as "thoughts for women." For I believe that when women are keenly alive to the needs of the home, of the community in which they live and so of the world at large; when they are willing to be unselfish and, whenever possible, to bear with love and intelligence the burden which the Creator has laid upon them as their divine and peculiar right—the burden of carrying on the race to its perfection—they will find life infinitely satisfying, and no one will be able to accuse them of apathy. MARGARET K. HOWARD.

Ways of Working

Your Experience Will Help

In this column will soon be printed accounts of the ways in which churches in both city and country handle the difficult "summer problem." Perhaps your church has used a plan which you will be glad to pass on for the benefit of others. Articles should be not more than 300 words in length and be marked for Ways of Working.

To Advertise Evening Services

Linwood Presbyterian church, Kansas City, Mo., Rev. Harry C. Rogers pastor, has made very effective use of a cut of the church showing it by night. This is used on invitations for the Sunday evening services, and on account of the different appearance of the church attracts attention. Similar night scenes are used by other churches, among them First church, Portland, Ore. Such a cut can be made by any good engraving house by retouching an ordinary photograph.

Linwood Church, Kansas City, Mo., at Night

Giving Boys Something to Do

An inexpensive but practical and useful way of attracting young boys to the church has been found by Rev. Leon A. Losey of Westminster church, Auburn, N. Y. Mr. Losey believes that boys should be brought up in a trade and that they should be given opportunity to select the one which most appeals to them. In the shop which he has established in the basement of his church boys are admitted after school hours, when they may work and play with typewriters, telegraph instruments, wire and wireless, printing press, shoe cobbling outfit and general electric devices. Mr. Losey believes that he can spend his time as a pastor to no better advantage than in thus being a friend and adviser of the boys at an impressionable age.

"The expense is very light as compared with a gymnasium," writes Mr. Losey in suggesting how the plan may be adapted to other places. "Any kind of room will do. Carpenter tools are always a good investment, and each boy furnishes his own. Lumber can be obtained from dry goods and grocery boxes. If there is a typewriter agency in the town, the agent is willing to rent rebuilt machines at a very nominal sum. It is good business for him.

"At first I let the boys try their hand at one thing and then another, until they naturally sift themselves into the kind of work for which they are best adapted. They are then encouraged to stick to it, by the offer of a prize for best results. This sifting process at the early age at which we admit the boys (9 to 12 years) may save them a great deal of time and trouble in after life.

"There is an economic side. It gives the boys a new incentive to earn money, where they are expected to buy their own tools and boxes. A quarter is now valued for the useful tool that it will buy. Fve cents never looked so large before, as when a boy needs a pair of hinges for a box he is building and does not have the 5 cents.

"This sort of work wins the hearts of the parents. They not only know that their boys are safe while with their pastor but appreciate the fact they are improving their time."

How a Gift to Missions Was Multiplied

A Sunday school with an average attendance of 150 located in a suburban town, Elizabeth, N. J., gave $4,136 as an Easter offering. The pupils come from well-to-do homes for the most part, neither great poverty nor riches being represented. An attendant of the church desiring to contribute to the China campaign fund and wishing to make the gift multiply itself offered to give $500 through the Sunday school if the school on Easter would raise a like amount. As the school on the previous Easter had given $500 to the building fund of an affiliated chapel of the church, it was thought possible to duplicate the amount for China in 1913. Efforts to raise the $500 began Feb. 16. The following week another friend made a second challenge that if the school would raise $1,000 instead of $500 he would give $2,500 to the China fund, thus totaling with the first donor's gift $4,000 in all —enough to erect the new hospital for men at Changteh, China, with $2,000 already in hand for that purpose.

Each week information was presented about the needs in China and the value of the hospital. Pictures of the physician in charge, Dr. O. T. Logan, of the present inadequate hospital and of some of the patients were shown. The gifts as reported each week were posted on the blackboard, so that the progress might be noted. It was realized from the outset that some heroic and sacrificial giving would be necessary. The superintendent with buoyant faith said, "Of course we shall raise it."

Some children decided to give their entire allowance; some of them earned money in the home and devoted it to the campaign fund; one person pledged all he could make by doing extra work outside of his regular duties; another gave a goodly part of a legacy; another gave up a spring dress; another made marmalade and sold it; another earned money by doing embroidery; another for six weeks gave half of his regular lunch money; others denied themselves candy, really unnecessary articles of food and certain luxuries; others multiplied by three, five and ten, and even more, former Easter gifts. Some former members contributed.

The offering on Easter morning surpassed expectations. Instead of $1,000 being contributed $1,135.87 was brought in in cash and pledges as follows: From classes $637.05, cradle roll $6.13, primary department $57.19, home department $47.75, officers $181, from individuals $180.75, from the two donors $500 and $2,500, making the total $4,135.87.

A special program had been arranged in connection with the offering. The committee had placed strings running from one gallery in the Sunday school room to the other. Attached to the strings was a large picture of a ship mounted on cardboard. One gallery represented Elizabeth, N. J., and the opposite one Changteh, China. Figures marked the distance between the two galleries. According to the size of the gifts as announced and posted on the blackboard the vessel made its journey. It was a united, unanimous and in many cases a sacrificial and heroic effort to present an offering for China's need in this great crisis hour.

In February the equipment fund for the men's hospital at Changteh was presented to the Sunday schools of First and Second churches of Indianapolis. As Dr. Logan, the physician in charge at Changteh, was personally known in these two schools, they had a peculiar interest in his work. Though $375 from each school seemed an unusual sum to secure, they recognized it as a call to heroic giving and each pledged this amount, thus providing $750 for the equipment.

Sunday schools when challenged with a big opportunity respond more readily than to a small one. "They can who think they can." No Sunday school should judge its ability to give by any past performances.

GEORGE H. TRULL.

The brotherhood at Mishawaka, Ind., recently won first prize for Indiana of $100 in a contest for the best mock trial in the case of Jennie Brice offered by Everybody's Magazine.

The Rainbow and the Pot of Gold

Most children have been told the fable of the "Rainbow and the Pot of Gold." If they ever started out to find the pot of gold, they came home with wet feet, disillusioned and disappointed.

Today the rainbow loses its colors and becomes a mathematical curve—the curve of efficiency. It begins in the temporary inefficiency of youth and ends in the inescapable inefficiency of age. When a man comes to the crest of the curve, the maximum of his efficiency, say at the age of 50, what does he do? Two things. He remembers the inefficiency of his youth, out of which he has grown. He trembles before the rapidly approaching inefficiency of age. If he be a minister, he knows that the descent is precipitous. What does he see at the end of the curve—of efficiency, the modernized rainbow of promise? He sees no pot of gold. In nine secular careers out of ten he sees a pension, which is as good as the pot of gold. If he be in the Presbyterian ministry he will see poverty, unless the church will adequately endow Ministerial Relief and Sustentation, and thus provide him a pension.

Does the church want a ministry full of efficiency in its prime?

Does it want to release for its own service energy that is now dulled by harassing care over the inefficiency of age?

Then let it provide a proper pension for its aged servants and it will secure for itself a new and mightier leadership.

If you are interested, consult your pastor or address,

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building :: Philadelphia, Pa.

Team Work by Church and School

BY E. N. WARE

"MADISON and Paulina streets is the wickedest corner in Chicago, and it is only two blocks away," was the startling statement Dr. Ozora S. Davis made to a great congregation assembled in New First Congregational church at the recent dedication of the new parish house. Dr. Davis is head minister of the church and president of Chicago Theological Seminary. This bold outcry was not made so much as a rebuke to the policing of the great city of Chicago as it was a challenge to the church to become effective in its community.

O. S. Davis, D. D.

The completion of the parish house made it possible to complete the plan of affiliation of church and theological seminary. It portends great and lasting good to the community adjacent to this "wickedest" corner that this great church remains in its midst, linking itself with the theological seminary for more concentrated and effective work, realizing its opportunity as a leavening force and gathering strength for the herculean task to which it has voluntarily set itself. With its wealth and aristocracy and splendid talent it might have sought other quarters in more elegant and refined society. But this only leads to the more detailed account of this remarkable affiliation of church and school which was incident upon the union of two great Congregational churches of the West side of Chicago at Ashland and Washington boulevards, facing Union park.

Two years ago two of the oldest and most influential Congregational churches of the city, not very far separated in location, were facing the serious problem of disintegration and weakness incident upon the changing condition of the communities brought about by the removal of the wealthy to more congenial localities. A conflagration rendered almost useless the property of First church. Instead of rebuilding, the property was sold to the Volunteers of America and the proposition to unite with Union Park church was accepted. This union was to institute a new order of things in church life. It was a pioneer venture in Protestant church and school correlation. The spired church building commands a sweep of boulevard and the chapel of Chicago Theological Seminary stands close on the left.

The union of the two churches was made with the proviso that the united church should be at once affiliated with the seminary. The seminary professors would be at the same time ministers of the New First church. The head minister of the church is the president of the theological seminary, directing its affairs. In the church he is overseer of the work of his staff and the entire parish. He has charge of the preaching service, occupying the pulpit once a Sunday; has the care of the Wednesday evening service and meets the prudential committee of the church.

B. F. Aldrich, D. D.

The parish minister performs the duties usually consigned to a regular pastor, such as visiting in the parish, conducting funerals, performing weddings, administering the sacraments and looking after strangers; sharing with the head minister and others of the staff the preaching service. In the seminary he has charge of the chair of homiletics and pastoral theology. The minister of religious education directs the church Bible school, the training of teachers and organizing of classes for young people in Bible study. In the seminary he becomes professor of religious education. The minister of music is director of three choirs, provides for the special musical entertainments and gives special instruction in music. In the seminary he is professor of music. The minister for the parish house is director of the gymnasium classes, forming clubs and other social organizations. In the seminary he teaches social economics.

The staff as now constituted is the following: Dr. Davis, head minister and president of the seminary; Benjamin F. Aldrich, D. D., parish minister and professor of homiletics and pastoral theology in the seminary; Rev. Frank G. Ward, Ph. D., minister of education and professor of education; Professor H. Augustine Smith, minister and professor of music; C. B. Hawkins, director of the parish house and professor of social economics. Other teachers in the seminary are not in direct connection with the work of the church.

Where Things Are Being Done

It was with this fivefold equipment that Dr. Davis challenged his great constituency to transform what he called the wickedest corner in Chicago. That things are being done is the impression one gets on visiting this busy religious plant. The visitor is the more convinced when he sees the program and looks over the record. It advertises itself as "A great modern church in action." "Not an exhibition but an example of our regular work" is bold-lettered on a card inviting one to the church on a Friday night.

The church itself is a lively place. During the past year an average of 300 persons have gone in and out of the building every day. From the Sunday school library there were taken 2,244 books. This, as well as the registration of 190 boys in the boys' story club, shows that the people of the neighborhood are being attracted to the institution. The Camp Fire Girls, teachers' training classes and Boy Scouts are other organizations meeting in the church. The 160 persons in the several choirs get valuable musical training. The parish house is open every day of the year. Here the dining room during the last twelve months was the scene of 367 socials. In this building also the church has its office. The gymnasium is open every afternoon and evening except Sundays and Wednesdays from 8 to 9 p. m.

As might be expected, the church has a virile brotherhood for the outgoing of its activities. A "forum night," the second Monday of each month, brings the men together at 6 o'clock for supper. There follows the discussion of neighborhood questions such as the vice problem, the saloon problem, home and housing conditions in the district, public amusements and the young people, and juvenile court procedure. Then there is "home night," the fourth Wednesday of each month, with supper at 6 p. m., followed by discussion until 8 p. m. on such subjects as brotherhood service in the parish, brotherhood men and Sunday school boys, our brotherhood and our women.

This noted church does not hold itself aloof from other forces which make for good in its community. It welcomes and fellowships with what it terms "the cooperating forces of the community," such as churches, hospitals, settlements, schools, religious and benevolent organizations and institutions. What a field of social and religious service is here afforded the young men of the affiliated seminary!

Popular Meetings at Atlanta

The opening meeting of the Pan-Presbyterian conference at Atlanta will be at 8 o'clock May 15, when greetings will be given by representatives of the four churches interested in this gathering. The moderators of the four General Assemblies will conduct a union communion service on the following afternoon and in the evening there will be a popular meeting on evangelism. Rev. Charles Stelzle will be one of the speakers at the meeting on Christian social service Saturday evening in the Auditorium. The relation of Christian citizenship to the social evil will then be discussed also.

Sunday school workers will have a general meeting Sunday afternoon, May 18, when Rev. George H. Trull will preside. There will be a demonstration of missionary methods in the Sunday school under the auspices of mission boards of U. P., Northern and Southern Churches. The same afternoon the women will have a meeting; there will also be a mass meeting on the church and country life, and a fourth meeting will be addressed by William Jennings Bryan. Sunday evening there will be four meetings devoted to ministerial relief, colleges, the Brotherhood and temperance. Popular meetings on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings will be devoted to work among colored people, home missions, foreign missions and the church and public education.

The General Assembly of the U. S. A. Church will meet daily in the Baptist tabernacle, the Southern Assembly in North Avenue Presbyterian church and the U. P. Assembly in Central Presbyterian church. Joint sessions in the evening will be held in the Auditorium.

Arrangements are being made for an excursion to Panama for twenty days following the Assembly.

A Royal
Baking Powder
Hot Biscuit is the luxury of eating
—MADE AT HOME—

"STARVING" THE CHILDREN

Dr. Wiley Claims That Half the Children in the United States are Underfed

In an address delivered at Greeley, Colo., Dr. Harvey W. Wiley is reported to have said that "half the children in the United States are starving." He further added: "Under the very shadow of the nation's capitol there are 17,000 who are underfed. The very foundations of the government are threatened."

The doctor then went on to state that wheat is the best balanced food for the muscles and the brain, and he told his audience how easy it was to make a good breakfast food from a pint of wheat by grinding the wheat in a coffee mill and then cooking it as ordinary mush is made.

Whether Dr. Wiley was correctly reported or not, it is certain that the statements attributed to him are merely the utterance of commonplace facts now generally recognized and accepted by physicians and dietetic experts. To learn their truth all one needs to do is to watch the dietetic habits of some of the sturdy races of Europe. The Italians who come over here by the shipload to build our railroads and to do other work that calls for unusual strength and physical vigor subsist very largely upon boiled whole wheat and barley. For the third meal of the day this diet is often varied by cooking a small piece of meat in the same pot with the whole wheat or barley—but it is the cooked cereal that supplies the body-building nutriment.

This boiled whole wheat is practically what we get in a shredded wheat biscuit except that the biscuit is still further improved and made more easily digestible by shredding and baking. The shredded wheat biscuit is better than any mush because the crisp shreds compel thorough mastication and because the baking process partially dextrinizes the starch in the whole wheat grain. Being made in biscuit form, you can do so many things with shredded wheat you cannot do with mush, or flaked cereals. It combines deliciously with fresh or preserved fruits, especially strawberries and peaches, making a complete, nourishing meal at very small cost.

News Notes from Various Fields

Maryland

Good Work Among Foreigners

Second church, situated among the foreign population of Baltimore, is 112 years old. Under the leadership of Rev. Mr. Niles the church is measuring up to its responsibilities and seizing every opportunity to reach the foreign element. The vacation Bible school was the largest in the city, numbering 199 children of Jewish parentage and forty-six of other religious proclivities. The basement has been modernized and divided into suitable rooms. A large sign calls the passers-by to the recreation center. A boys' brigade will soon be under way. Most of the boys attending are sons of Russian Jews. The girls take naturally to the sewing school. Here Jews and gentiles (Italians) are meeting together. But this has not been accomplished without opposition. At times both scholars and teachers have been assaulted. A young women's club, teaching embroidery and millinery, is doing effective work.

Rev. David T. Neely of Aisquith Street church has just completed twelve years of service in this church.

Northminster church has divided its parish and made each elder and deacon responsible for a district. They are now engaged in a systematic visitation. G. A. B.

Washington

The session of Davenport church sent conveyances for all the aged for the Easter service.

Rev. E. L. Morton, who has resigned as pastor of Rainier Beach, will take up special work among the Japanese of Seattle.

Rev. T. H. Lewis, pastor at Georgetown, assisted by Dr. W. O. Forbes, has just closed a very successful series of meetings.

A church of nearly 100 members was recently organized in the town hall of Opportunity by Dr. George Hageman, Sunday school missionary.

Rev. James Thomson, who serves the churches at Wilson Creek, Krup and Moses Lake, takes a forty-mile drive four times a month to fill the appointments.

An extra $1,000 has been included in the budget of Aberdeen church for repairs during the coming year. Rev. Robert Cooper, pastor, is assisting largely in the growth of this church.

Rev. H. T. Murray, who for the past two years has been in charge of new work near Everett, began his work at Stanwood April 1. Two congregations, each possessing the services of its own minister—Clinton and Skykomide—have grown out of the work begun by Mr. Murray during his period of service.

Nebraska

New pulpit chairs and carpets have been furnished by the ladies of Emerson church.

Rev. Allen D. Seelig, a new pastor at Humboldt, has had a number added to the church on confession of faith.

First church, Columbus, Dr. George F. Williams pastor, which advertises itself as a strangers' Sunday home, has an adult Bible class which meets every Thursday night.

A need for more room in their already commodious building spurred the pastor of Lyons church, Rev. James G. Clark, to propose plans for utilizing the unfinished basement. The woman's aid society pledged $1,000 for the work. Thirty church men, with the help of three teams, worked two days excavating the basement and twenty men with two teams finished the labor the third day. With the work that followed the church now has a large Sunday school elementary division room, a kitchen and reception room. The work of Rev. George Howard Williams of Illinois developed much religious interest in meetings conducted in this community under union auspices.

Creston church has its debts all paid and money in the treasury. The outlook for the future is encouraging. The present pastor, Rev. C. M. Whetzel, took charge last June.

Rev. J. E. Farmer was recently installed as pastor at Madison. Rev. E. F. Hammond of Norfolk, Dr. J. M. Caldwell of Wakefield and Dr. Alexander Corkey of Wayne took part in the service.

Trinity Methodist church, Omaha, whose edifice was wrecked in the storm, has been using the building of North church in the evening. The Plymouth Congregationalists are worshiping in the U. P. church.

Since the coming of Rev. M. W. Lorimer October last Plattsmouth church Sunday school has been regraded, graded lessons have been introduced and several new classes added. An inside stairway has been constructed from the rear of the upper auditorium and hot air heating system installed.

Oregon

The handsome new stone edifice of First church, Albany, Rev. F. H. Geselbracht pastor, is the college church for Albany College, and members have carried a heavy burden in connection with the recent campaign for a quarter million endowment by the college. Nevertheless, the people subscribed all but $3,500 of the cost of the church by the day of dedication.

Recently Dedicated at Albany, Ore.

The material is gray stone; the church is capable of seating 1,200; the basement equipment provides a complete kitchen and a dining room seating 300; Sunday school quarters are adequate. Professor Harry L. Reed of Auburn Theological Seminary, New York, a former pastor of the church, assisted Dr. W. H. Foulkes at the dedication. The Albany congregation now has the finest Presbyterian church in the state outside of Portland.

Idaho

A Christian Endeavor society has recently been organized in Grangerville church. The Sunday school is growing rapidly. Rev. J. A. Hedges is pastor.

The Presbyterian Messenger, published by the church at Pocatello, Rev. Clyde E. van der Maaten pastor, is a recent new publication which is arousing interest among the members of that church.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of Boise Presbytery was held in First church, Boise, March 25-26. Papers were presented by Mrs. Edgar Dilley of Roswell and by Mrs. A. L. Lee. At a popular meeting Rev. E. P. Lawrence of Roswell and Dr. J. H. Barton spoke. The financial policy of the North Pacific Board was adopted and an educational committee elected to direct the missionary work in the presbytery the coming year. The society made 25 per cent increase in its contributions for the year, to be given to the Frances A. Holt fund for a ward in the Douw hospital at Peking. Officers

The Only Self-Help College in Illinois
BLACKBURN COLLEGE HAS $23,000 TO EDUCATE YOUNG MEN FOR THE PRESBYTERIAN MINISTRY
WRITE President Hudson, Carlinville, Illinois

Safety

Only the most sanitary of refrigerators should be acceptable in modern residences. The health of the family often depends on how foods are kept in hot weather. The danger of tainting or poisoning of foods by soggy, stagnant air or zinc linings can be absolutely prevented by installing in your home a

McCRAY Refrigerator

In the McCray a perfect circulation of pure, dry, cold air keeps food sweet, fresh, cool and absolutely untainted. Scientifically insulated walls and sanitary, easily cleaned interiors lined with opal glass, enamel, porcelain or odorless white wood—no zinc.

McCrays are quality refrigerators chosen by the U. S. Pure Food Laboratories and are installed in the most luxurious institutions and private residences.

A wide range of stock sizes and built to order types to suit the smallest or largest families. Outside icing door may be added to any McCray, thus preventing the iceman from tracking up the kitchen floor.

Write for our free book "How to Use a Refrigerator" and any of the following catalogs:

No. 90—Regular Sizes for Residences.
No. 73—For Florists.
No. 49—For Hotels, Clubs, Institutions.
No. 69—For Grocers.
No. 60—For Meat Markets.
No. A. H. Built-to order for Residences.

McCRAY REFRIGERATOR CO.
583 Lake Street Kendallville, Ind.

Salesrooms in the following cities:

Chicago, 158 No. Wabash Ave., New York, 231 W. 42nd St., Philadelphia, 206 So. 11th St., Boston, 52 Commercial St., Cleveland, 1915 Euclid Ave., Detroit, 239 Michigan Ave., Milwaukee, Water and Sycamore Sts., Minneapolis, 103 N. Sixth St., St. Louis, 404 No. Third St., New Orleans, 225 Baronne St., San Francisco, Geary and Stockton Sts., Washington, 611 F St., N. W., Louisville, 643 So. Fourth Ave., Pittsburgh, 114 Market St., Columbia, S. C., Main St., Atlanta, Ga., 82 Marietta St., Cincinnati, 303 E. 4th St., Indianapolis, 1116 Prospect St.

For branch salesrooms in other cities see your local phone directory.

BOVEE FURNACES

At Manufacturers' Prices

THE BOVEE FURNACE HAS DOUBLE THE HEATING CAPACITY OF OTHER FURNACES FOR AMOUNT OF FUEL CONSUMED. They are made very heavy, of the best of material.

Measure the fire pots and combustion chamber and then note the long travel of heat through the compound radiator before reaching the chimney. Compare these measurements with those of all other first-class furnaces, and you will see WHY the Bovee Furnaces require so little fuel and last longer.

Send plans for our special winter prices. We save you about one-half on the price of a first-class heating plant.

BOVEE FURNACE WORKS
315 8th St. :: Waterloo, Iowa

elected were: President, Mrs. J. H. Barton; corresponding secretary, Mrs. E. S. Owen; recording secretary, Mrs. A. L. Lee; treasurer, Mrs. W. S. Titus.

Westminster church, Boise, Rev. McLain W. Davis pastor, has increased 30 per cent in membership during the year and the enrollment of the Sabbath school 54 per cent.

Boise First church has adopted the rotary system for elders. Rev. Charles L. Chalfant has just completed five years as pastor and the enrollment has been increased from 327 to 740.

March 23 Dr. J. H. Barton, superintendent of home missions, organized a church of nineteen members at Rogerson, a new town on the Salmon River tract. It is grouped with Hollister under the pastoral care of Rev. D. J. Treiber.

The church at Burley, which a year ago was nearly on the verge of dissolution, held an encouraging service Easter in the new brick church. The building was decorated with a large variety of flowers and plants grown by members of the church. A Lutheran jeweler gave the church a clock as an Easter contribution. A brotherhood comprising men of all creeds is one of the organizations under the guidance of the pastor, Rev. J. B. Robinson.

South Dakota

A new church has been organized at Plankinton, although most of the members are Congregationalists.

The church of Salem after months of pastorless experience is encouraged with sharing in a marked revival and additions to membership under the leadership of Rev. Edward Leow, who came just before the close of a series of union meetings.

Aberdeen now leads the synod in missionary activity, as the total contributions attest. Dr. J. Rosser Jones is pastor and his preaching attracts especially the men of the city. But the women of the congregation far surpass the men in gathering money for missions at home and abroad.

The thirtieth anniversary of Castlewood church, Rev. W. R. Coventry pastor, was held recently. The meetings were announced by a double column display advertisement in the local papers. Exercises began with a sunrise prayer service on Easter. Rev. W. H. McCuskey of Monticello, Idaho, first pastor of the church, preached in the morning. In the evening another former pastor, Rev. J. W. Christianson of Sisseton, spoke. On account of the overcrowding of the present building, part of the Sunday school is forced to meet outside the church and a plan has been started for a new building.

FRIENDS HELP

St. Paul Park Incident

"After drinking coffee for breakfast I always felt languid and dull, having no ambition to get to my morning duties. Then in about an hour or so a weak, nervous derangement of the heart and stomach would come over me with such force I would frequently have to lie down."

Tea is just as harmful, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.

"At other times I had severe headaches; stomach finally became affected and digestion so impaired that I had serious chronic dyspepsia and constipation. A lady, for many years state president of the W. C. T. U., told me she had been greatly benefited by quitting coffee and using Postum; she was troubled for years with asthma. She said it was no cross to quit coffee when she found she could have as delicious an article as Postum.

"Another lady who had been troubled with chronic dyspepsia for years, found immediate relief on ceasing coffee and using Postum. Still another friend told me that Postum was a God-send, her heart trouble having been relieved after leaving off coffee and taking on Postum.

"So many such cases came to my notice that I concluded coffee was the cause of my trouble and I quit and took up Postum. I am more than pleased to say that my days of trouble have disappeared. I am well and happy."

Look in pkgs. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

Typical of the work which falls to the lot of Sunday school missionaries in the less settled portions of the country was the recent funeral service conducted by Rev. William L. Hood. An entire family of six had been frozen in a blizzard about sixty miles from Hot Springs.

Montana

The aid society of Anaconda church has recently redecorated the auditorium. Dr. J. M. Ross is pastor.

Rev. Raymond M. Huston, pastor at Bozeman, is pushing the work among the students of Montana State College. The Sunday school has classes containing a large number of college men and women.

A committee has been appointed to formulate plans for the construction of a new church at Billings. It is expected that the structure will cost about $40,000 and pledges will be obtained soon. Dr. J. M. Hervey is pastor.

Oklahoma

First church, Stillwater, received a large number of members at its April communion as the result of several weeks of evangelistic teaching and personal work in the Sabbath school, in which pastor and teachers cooperated. Many are social leaders in Oklahoma State College, located there, among whose students a great work is being done by the pastor, Rev. L. C. Ilsley, aided by his session and teachers.

Maine

Much was made of the recent meeting of Newburyport Presbytery in Park Street church, Portland, Dr. Alexander Jackson pastor. This is the first time that presbytery has met in this state. Dr. Jackson recently had reprinted for distribution among his members an article in a popular magazine, "Shall We Go to Church?"

Massachusetts

First church, Worcester, has burned a mortgage of $13,000 which has rested upon the edifice since its purchase six years ago. During those six years this church, composed of working people, has secured for equipment over $19,000 and the membership of the church and Bible school has doubled.

Florida

Dr. Alfred S. Badger of Flagler Memorial church, St. Augustine, who has tendered his resignation, will not retire until Oct. 1. Dr. Badger expects to continue spending his winters in the state.

District of Columbia

Rev. Thomas B. Thompson, who has resigned as pastor of Sherwood church, Washington, is the first appointee of President Wilson to the United States navy. He will be chaplain.

North Dakota

A threefold study was made recently in Jamestown church of China's special need and $56 was contributed by the ladies' missionary society for emergency work in that country.

West Virginia

Easter in First church, Parkersburg, was preceded by a week's meetings, in which W. L. McClure, D. D., Jeannette, Pa., very ably assisted Rev. E. A. Culley, pastor.

New Hampshire

The women's societies throughout the state have shown a larger interest in the work of the various boards this year than ever before.

Kentucky

Winchester church, Rev. J. Russell Crawford pastor, is preparing for special services, which will begin April 27.

Minnesota

Western church was recently helped by a series of meetings conducted by Rev. E. L.

THIS IS ABOUT DUBUQUE

They come to us

usually strong, healthy young fellows, full of life. We want to send them out the same sort—wiser, better informed, efficient, thoroughly consecrated to their great work.

They go to others as preachers, as pastors, as leaders. They can help and must help their people — German, Bohemian, Hungarian, Japanese, Mexican, whatever race they may be — to live good, clean, wholesome lives.

That gymnasium

will be such a great factor in equipping our men—in making their preparation count to the utmost—that we know we shall get it. Some Presbyterian, if he acts promptly, will honor his name in this way while doing a deed the good effects of which will be unending. But it may come from many small givers. Who can tell?

We can only tell what our work is and what it needs. The rest must be left to you. Let us give you the facts. Dubuque German College and Seminary, President C. M. Steffens, Dubuque, Ia.

Professors, Teachers and Others

Join Archaeological and Geological Exploration Expedition on Horseback under the distinguished Geologist, Professor James Perrin Smith of Stanford University, from the Cliff-Dwellings in S. W. Colorado by Great Natural Bridges in S. E. Utah, thence down Colorado River and through Grand Canyon, Arizona—the expedition covering the region of the World's Greatest Natural Wonders, July 1 to August 20. For particulars and Reservations address R. R. Smith, Cortez, Colorado.

Latchaw of Baker. The church will make extensive improvements to the building. William Anderson is pastor.

A building committee, of which the pastor, Rev. R. Cooper Bailey, is chairman, has been appointed at Crookston.

Round Lake congregation is outgrowing the capacity of the church and funds are being raised to build an addition and complete the basement rooms. This is the only church in the village. Rev. J. T. Anderson is pastor.

Indiana

Indianapolis Churches at Work

A series of Sunday afternoon mass meetings for men was begun lately by the Methodist, Christian and Presbyterian churches of Irvington. The opening address was made by A. H. Goddard, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., and Charles W. Fairbanks was anonunced for the next session. The latter addressed a similar city organization—the Southeastern Federation—April 6.

Rev. E. H. Douglass, late of Franklin, Ohio, assumed regular pastoral duties at East Washington Street church the first of the month.

Annual meetings of the churches reveal generally a substantial condition. Especially is this true with the younger organizations, such as Home, Meridian Heights, Irvington and Troub Memorial. The last under the leadership of Dr. E. L. Williams is showing very hopeful indications. Old debts have been paid and efficient financial methods introduced.

The union ministers' association has inaugurated a movement for a simultaneous evangelistic campaign next year. The last meeting was given over to a discussion of some phases of this pressing need for the city.

Synod's Sabbath school and home mission committees were in session here last week. Plans for close cooperation were approved. Reports from the Gary settlement house showed completed features and enlarged program.

Dr. John P. Hale, pastor of Second church, has been offered the superintendency of synodical missions.

About forty of the pastors were guests of the Y. W. C. A. at luncheon given for the purpose of explaining hopes and methods of the association. Aside from the local officers who spoke was Miss Ida V. Jontz of the Chicago field force.

C. R. S.

Rev. John W. Findley, who has gone from Bedford to Greeley, Colo., served ten years in the charge he leaves.

Bids have recently been received for a new $10,000 church building at Remington. Rev. Edward H. Bull is pastor.

Attendance at Meridian Heights Sunday school, Indianapolis, is near the 200 mark and the primary department has increased during the year from thirty-six to seventy-six.

California

The U. P. church of Beaumont, with a per capita contribution to missions of $9.02 the past year, lays claim, according to newspaper reports, to the largest per capita contribution to missions of any congregation in the world. Rev. H. P. Espy is pastor.

Easter saw the completion of the dedicatory exercises of Santa Maria church. A little over three years ago this church was virtually abandoned, and reopened two years ago. The new building will seat 300, with commodious Sunday school rooms. Rev. W. F. S. Nelson is pastor.

Rev. E. F. Hallenbeck, pastor of San Diego church, presided at the laying of the corner stone of the new edifice March 30. Rev. W. B. Noble, who was pastor of the church at the time the corner stone of the present structure was laid, delivered an address. A copy of The Continent was placed with other papers in the stone.

Colorado

Idaho Springs is opening its doors again and will soon have a minister at work in the town and surrounding camps.

An ordinance for one day's rest in seven was adopted by the decisive vote of 3,665 to 1,552 in Colorado Springs April 1. The ordinance requires one day's rest in seven for all employees except "those employed in care of the sick, domestic help and managers of departments when their continuous supervision is necessary."

Rev. W. H. Hyatt, who took charge of the churches at Antonito and La Jara recently, is meeting with large success.

Rev. B. F. Mitchell, recently of Elizabeth, has taken up his work on the Weldon valley fields. A new church will be dedicated at Orchard April 27.

South Broadway church, Denver, is now one of the most comfortable in the city since the placing of the new seating, one of the members having provided as a memorial the best pews obtainable. Rev. F. W. Willman is minister.

At its recent meeting Denver Presbytery adopted a strong resolution of confidence in the personnel and management of the Home Board, and deploring the unjust and untrue criticisms being circulated regarding it. This is said to be the feeling current in all the Colorado presbyteries.

Arizona

Dr. Robert McLean of Albuquerque, recently appointed by the Board of Home Missions as superintendent of Mexican work, was a visitor to the Globe Mexican church recently.

The synodical missionary recently made a tour of the Mexican churches. This branch of the work needs stimulation. The Mexican churches, like the republic, seem subject to revolutions.

Rev. C. H. Love is back in his pulpit at Clifton after an enforced absence of some weeks. Mr. Love was badly burned in both hands at Christmas time extinguishing fire at the Sunday school entertainment.

The Charles H. Cook Bible School for Indians held its closing exercise for the term April 9 at Tucson. The school has had a good year, with nine young men enrolled for training. Rev. George Logie, the principal, feels greatly encouraged with the year's work. The students have done well both in the classroom and in earning their way by outside labor. A campaign of evangelistic meetings in some of the reservations will conclude the year's work.

Iowa

Rev. N. R. Miles has recently closed a six years' pastorate at Colfax, during which time the membership has increased largely.

The Bible class for men conducted by Dr. L. M. Coffman, pastor of First church, Davenport, has grown until the average attendance is now 100 each Sunday. The church building will redecorated during the summer.

Rev. J. Edward Healey, during his three years' supply at Volga, has succeeded in bringing the church from a weak home mission field to self-support. He recently resigned.

Preceding the annual meeting First church, Sioux City, raised $20,000 to pay all indebtedness on the church and McClintock Memorial chapel. Dr. Wallace M. Hamilton is pastor.

March 30 Rev. Samuel Ollerenshaw closed an eight years' pastorate with Kossuth church, one of the oldest churches in Iowa. He also finished a term of forty-one years of active

Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster's
"BOOK OF HOMESPUN VERSE"
104 Poems—202 Pages
(Mrs. Sangster's Latest Book of Poems)

In the Foreword Mrs. Sangster says: "Here are poems to add sunshine to daylight for happy people, and to brace and console the afflicted. . . . The verses in this book are meant for everyday folk, who have an interest in everyday affairs. My book is sent out with messages of cheer and comfort to American homes, North and South, East and West, beneath our Flag of Stars. The gentle reader who cares for nature, for home, and hearth and for simple life will find this book a personal message."

The friends of Mrs. Sangster, and all those who have followed her in The Interior and The Continent, should have a copy of this beautiful Book of Poems. Send for a copy NOW.

PRICE (postage paid) $1.00

Address THE CHRISTIAN INTELLIGENCER CO.
C—149 Church Street, :: New York City

For the General Assembly
PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES
May 15, 1913
Atlanta, Georgia
SOUTHERN RAILWAY
Premier Carrier of the South

3 Through Trains Daily—Each Direction, Affording Highest Class Service. Dining, Drawing, Stateroom, Sleeping and Observation Cars 3

NEW YORK TO ATLANTA, GA.

Lv.	New York	12:30 a m.	11:08 a.m.	4:35 p.m.
Lv.	W. Philadelphia	3:30 a.m.	1:20 p m.	6:52 p.m.
Lv.	Washington	8:50 a.m.	4.35 p.m.	10:45 p.m.
Ar.	Atlanta	5:00 a.m.	11:15 a.m.	5:00 p.m.

Only Line Operating Exclusively Pullman Train Between New York and Atlanta

SPECIAL RATES FOR ABOVE OCCASION
WRITE FOR RATES AND FULL INFORMATION

NEW YORK OFFICE: 264 Fifth Avenue
A. S. THWEATT, Eastern Passenger Agent

PHILADELPHIA, PA., - - - 828 Chestnut St.
BALTIMORE. MD. - - - 119 E. Baltimore St.
WASHINGTON, D. C. - - - - 705 15th St., N.W.

To Churches Considering New Hymnals

Don't decide until you have seen the new

Hymns of the Centuries
(Church and Chapel Editions)

Includes the hymns which ought to be there and omits those that no one wants to use.
Representative churches in thirty-one states already using it.
Words printed with the music
Send To-day for Returnable Copies

THE A. S. BARNES COMPANY
Publishers of Hymn Books since 1855
381 Fourth Avenue (27th St), New York

Fellowship Inspiration Cooperation
By Men and for Men a Great
Brotherhood Conference and Supper
ATLANTA
Kimball Hotel, Tuesday Evening, May 20, 1913

5:30—ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE in dining room of hotel, on "The Best Methods of Men's Work in the Local Church."

6:30—BROTHERHOOD SUPPER to be marked by rich fellowship by the men of the different Assemblies.

Price of Supper is $1.00, which admits to Conference. Reservations should be mad AT ONCE, as capacity of hotel is limited to 400. Requests for tickets, accompanie by check, draft, or money-order, should be sent to Mr. Walter Getty, General Secretary Presbyterian Brotherhood of America, 509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinoi service in the ministry. Mr. Ollerenshaw will reside in Mediapolis. The pastor and people of Mediapolis church united with the Kossuth people in this closing service.

Rev. Philip Palmer is rejoicing with the people of Mediapolis over the prosperity which has attended his pastorate among them, which began last October. The membership is larger than at any time previous in the history of the church.

An all day conference March 25 with dinner at noon marked the annual meeting of Diagonal church. The first year of self-support showed all bills paid promptly. The pastor, Rev. F. W. Thomas, recently held evangelistic services in a near-by settlement of Bohemians.

Missouri

St. Louis Men to Meet

In Second church of St. Louis Presbyterian men are to hold April 25 a great delegated mass meeting drawn from the brotherhoods of the local churches. Dr. John Timothy Stone, speaking on "Men's Opportunity in the Church," and Dr. J. T. Henderson, associate secretary of the Presbyterian Brotherhood, will be the speakers. The brotherhood organization of the presbytery declares as its policy an effort to "train a body of men to be ready for service, so to speak, as a church militia, which shall be posted on the needs of the church, able to help in the work of the church and prepared to cooperate with similar bodies of other denominations."

With Kansas City Churches

Linwood church now has a membership of 1001, the largest Presbyterian church in the state. It raised $14,000 for all purposes during the year.

First church has recently passed through a very successful series of special meetings conducted by Dr. F. S. Arnold, pastor. The financial campaign in the interest of the budget has been very encouraging.

CHARLES C. MCGINLEY.

The brotherhood of Barbee Memorial church (Southern) of Excelsior Springs has appointed a committee to meet Presbyterians who visit that resort. They will also obtain rooms for visitors on request. The pastor is Rev. L. M. Beebe.

Kansa

A debt of $1,400, in addition to $500 for improvements, has been paid by Cherryvale church, Rev. E. L. Combs pastor.

First church, Fort Scott, observed passion week, the pastor, Rev. J. A. Smith, having the assistance of Rev. T. W. Rainey, recently dean of Oswego College. The largest communion service for several years was held Easter.

During the past year Atchison church has nearly doubled its total amount raised for the support of the church and missions. For the first time in ten years the congregation has contributed to every board of the church. A parsonage for the pastor, Dr. W. I. Alexander, is being discussed.

Michigan

An addition to the chapel of the church at Adrian is being considered. It is proposed to make a separate entrance for the men's classroom.

Plans have been started for the erection of a gymnasium in connection with Morrice church. The movement is interdenominational and has received the sanction of the pastors of all the churches.

South Lyon church has received word from Andrew Carnegie that he will meet the subscription list of the church with an equal amount for the purchase of a new organ. It will be purchased at once.

Tennessee

The annual mountain workers' conference and Bible school will meet at Maryville June 24 to July 1. Rev. Hubert S. Lyle, Maryville, is secretary.

In connection with a recent series of revival meetings in Maryville teams of speakers were sent to schoolhouses to interest people of the country. This plan attracted a large attendance at the union revival meetings. A temperance and law enforcement rally was held in New Providence church, Rev. Hubert S. Lyle pastor, March 15.

Wisconsin

Each woman attending Easter services at Horicon church was given an Easter lily. Rev. W. D. Macneil is pastor.

The adoption of graded lessons in the Sunday school of Eau Claire church has created more interest, both among the teachers and scholars. Rev. W. T. Angus is pastor.

Rev. James A. Melrose of Rice Lake has resigned to become assistant to Dr. John E. Bushnell of Westminster church, Minneapolis. He began his work there April 1.

Rev. E. Iverson, Sunday school missionary of Chippewa Presbytery, organized First church of Sand Creek, Dunn county, March 30 with sixteen members, two elders and three trustees. Sand Creek is a farming community in northwest Wisconsin.

Recently a five days' school of methods for greater efficiency in Sabbath school was conducted at Athens by Dr. Gerrit Verkuyl, educational Sabbath school missionary. In this he was assisted by Rev. P. J. Gramness and Rev. C. A. Adams of Merrill. Addresses were made by Rev. S. A. Martin, Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Rev. Clair S. Adams of the church and country life department, Board of Home Missions. The nearest English-speaking Protestant church of any denomination is thirteen miles away.

Wyoming

H. Ray Berger of McCormick Seminary has been assigned to Encampment for the summer.

Goshen mission work comprises three small country fields that Rev. Thomas Hodge, recently of Utah, took up April 1.

Casper field was recently organized by the pastor-evangelist. There never was a stronger church organized than this one in Wyoming—sixty-five members to begin on. Rev. R. MacFadyen of Drexel, Mo., takes up the work.

Rev. E. A. Ballis of Cottage Grove, Ore., will be missionary to the Arapahoe Indians. The pastor-evangelist has recently organized a church of twenty-five members at Arapahoe and has secured a grant of ten acres for a mission location. The church will erect a church, manse and barn.

Vaughn is a country point worked up by Rev. C. H. Witteman, pastor of Lingle church, five miles distant. It will remain under Mr. Witteman's charge. A church of eight members was recently organized. This is the fourth organization effected by the pastor-evangelist during the year just closed.

Ohio

On the evening preceding Easter a little child brought to Mrs. H. Marshall Thurlow, wife of the pastor of Athens church, a tiny Easter basket, containing an offering in gold, as a token of the love of the women of the church.

Last year Edgerton ceased to be a home mission church and this year the budget is much larger. During the past year this church and the one at Lost Creek have both been increased in membership. The pastor is Rev. Rhys Price Jones.

In the church at Greenville the Sabbath school has outgrown its quarters and frequently overflows into the audience room. During the past year the church has established a new school under the board's direction and has placed The Scientific Temperance Library in the public library of the city. Rev. Charles C. McKinney is pastor.

The first annual meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Marion Presbytery convened in First church, Galion, April 3. The morning session was devoted to business, the most important being the adoption of the constitution. The plan for the synodical from contamination in the matter of food for infants, let no influence dissuade the mother from using Gail Borden Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. The supremacy of Borden's milk is due to 56 years of experience in supplying the best milk products.

TO AVOID DANGER

The Revised Hymnal of the Presbyterian Church has met with instant favor, and has already been adopted by over 350 churches.

More than 45,000 copies have been sold, and this in the face of the keenest kind of competition.

No other book should be considered for a moment when the Board of Publication has given the Church a book of such unqualified merit.

The Hymnal of 1895 set a new standard for the devotional praise of our Church. This standard has been carried forward and planted on still firmer ground by the work of the Board's Hymnal Committee, as demonstrated in the book now offered for use in our Church.

PRICES 8vo. Cloth, $1.00
12mo. " .75
Words Only, " .65

Special rates on introduction orders

Send for sample copy

Presbyterian Board of Publication
Witherspoon Building Philadelphia

HARRY W. JONES
Minneapolis, Church Architect Minnesota.

Rider Agents Wanted
in each town to ride and exhibit sample Ranger bicycles. Write for our latest special offer.
Finest Guaranteed 1913 Models $10 to $27
with Coaster-Brakes, Puncture-Proof tires.
1911 & 1912 Models all of best makes.... $7 to $12
100 Second-Hand Wheels
All makes and models, good as new................ $3 to $8
Great FACTORY CLEARING SALE
We Ship on Approval without a cent deposit, pay the freight, and allow
10 DAY'S FREE TRIAL.
TIRES, coaster-brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries, parts and repairs at half usual prices. DO NOT BUY until you get our catalogues and offer. Write now.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. S-304 Chicago, Ill.

summer school of missions in Wooster Aug. 10-15 was approved. The popular meeting in the evening was addressed by Rev. A. I. Good of Africa and Mrs. D. F. Diefenderfer, general secretary of the Woman's Board of Home Missions.

New York

The church at Oakfield, Rev. S. D. Angel pastor, recently burned a mortgage of $4,000 which has been on the church for some time.

The largest number of members ever received at one time in Port Chester church were welcomed April 6. Rev. Ira Barnett is pastor.

Rev. G. B. Swinnerton, pastor at Oneida, recently completed two series of sermons of four each—"Artificial Religion" and "The Day of Life."

It is proposed that the Sunday school rooms of Dundee church be opened during the week as restrooms for farmers and their wives. Rev. F. H. Bisbee, the pastor, has charge of the project.

Dr. Charles E. Craven, who has been stated supply of the church at Mattituck, L. I., for eighteen years, is about to exchange ministerial for educational work. He plans to retire from the pulpit in September and to assume the mastership of a boys' boarding school.

Dr. William R. Taylor in a recent address before the Presbyterian Union, Rochester, suggested that there should be a more systematic placing of churches and a closer denominational unity. Dr. Taylor has been pastor of Brick church for a quarter of a century.

The twentieth anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. F. W. Palmer of Central church, Auburn, was recently celebrated by a reception given by the congregation. The gift of a guest book, containing the autographs of all present, and a large purse for the pastor were features of the evening.

During the last three months Rev. C. H. Dudley, pastor at Silver Creek church, has been giving a course of addresses Sunday afternoons to men only. These meetings have had a large attendance, especially of business men not seen at regular church services, and have been appreciated by them.

Dr. W. H. Foulkes, general secretary of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation, who on account of the floods was forced to change his schedule in connection with the Albany Presbytery campaign for a $10,000,000 fund, will speak Sunday morning, April 20, at Amsterdam Second church and in the evening at Johnstown. Dr. W. J. Johnston on the same day will preach at Cloversville Fourth and at Kingsborough. Rev. Alfred Fowler will preach at Watervliet Jermain Memorial and at West Troy First. The campaign will close April 27 in Albany.

New Jersey

Rev. C. E. Schaible of Burlingame, Kan., dedicated First church, Williamstown, April 6.

Elmwood church, East Orange, Rev. Charles B. Bullard pastor, used a large new pipe organ for the first time on Easter. The instrument is fully paid for.

Dr. Alan D. Campbell of the Suydam Street Reformed church, New Brunswick, died March 31 at Wells Memorial hospital of pneumonia. He leaves one daughter and three sons. His pastorate covered twenty-four years. He succeeded his father, Rev. William H. Campbell, the founder of the church.

West Side church, Englewood, held special services on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday evenings before Easter. The Livingstone centenary was observed by a combined service of all the churches on Wednesday. Dr. Fleming James of St. Paul's Episcopal church, Rev. Robert Davis and Rev. James G. Bailey, the pastor, conducted the exercises.

First church, Englewood, held daily services during holy week excepting Saturday. At vespers on the first four days Rev. Theodore F. Savage of Christ church, New York; Rev. Richard E. Locke of First church, Rutherford; Rev. Raymond C. Knox, chaplain of Columbia University, and Dr. John H. Kerr, Arlington Avenue church, Brooklyn, were the speakers. On Good Friday three services were held. Among those participating were Dr. George T. Berry, Rev. Thornton B. Penfield, Rev. Harris E. Adriance, Dr. Thomas H. P. Sailer, Mornay Williams, Robert E. Speer, all men in the congregation of First church, and the pastor, Rev. Robert Davis.

Attendance upon the preaching services in Central church, Newark, has increased one-fifth since the first of the present year. The Easter offering amounted to more than $1,500 and nearly 1,700 persons were in attendance upon Sunday school, Endeavor and the church services that day. Much of the afternoon on communion days is spent by Dr. George Walton King, pastor, with an elder in giving communion to sick and elderly people of the congregation who are not able to attend the services.

The funeral of the veteran Dr. Wilson Phraner, who died April 7 at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Frank D. Arthur, Brooklyn, was held from Munn Avenue church, East Orange, of which he was associate pastor. The eulogies were by Dr. Charles L. Thompson of the Home Board and Dr. Arthur J. Brown of the Foreign Board. Others who took part were Rev. Robert B. Beattie of Munn Avenue church and Dr. James McWilliams of Ossining, N. Y., where Dr. Phraner was for thirty-five years pastor. Burial was at Ossining.

Pennsylvania

Plans are being made for the observance of the twenty-fifth anniversary of Langhorne church June 7.

Rev. Francis S. Hort, pastor of First church, South Bethlehem, for the past fifteen years, began his new work at Calvin church, Philadelphia, the middle of this month.

One-tenth of the contributions of Towanda church, Rev. John S. Wolff pastor, goes to benevolences. This church during the past year has shown marked growth in the number of members and equipment.

Rev. Harry B. King, pastor of Calvary church, Harrisburg, has recently recognized the younger members of the Sunday school in the church service by preaching a preliminary sermon of ten minutes especially for them.

The first service in the basement of the contemplated new church building of Bethany church, Chester, was held Easter. Services will be held here until the church can be completed. Rev. Egidius Kellmayer is pastor.

A church institute was conducted by Rev. W. S. Douds, superintendent of Erie Presbytery, at Pittsfield church in February. The pastor is Rev. Homer K. Miller. The outlook in this old church is more encouraging than in many years.

First church, Ellwood City, is splendidly equipped for service since entering the new building and the steady and substantial growth along all lines is an evidence of the loyal cooperation of the people with their pastor, Rev. W. Frank Reber.

Avalon church Easter Sabbath was crowded, chairs being placed in all the aisles to accommodate the audience. Almost 300 have united with the church in the past twenty-two months. During the past week forty men making up twenty teams made the every-member canvass to cover the budget for the coming year.

One of the Presbyterian workers near Connellsville is Rev. Demetris Vishanoff, a brother to the governor of Salonica, where King George of Greece was recently assassinated. Mr. Vishanoff is a Turk, a native of Macedonia, who was disinherited by his father, a nobleman, on account of his conversion to the Protestant faith.

Illinois

Nearly a hundred tons of rock have been brought from the quarry by men and boys of Carbondale church in preparation for the building of a new edifice.

South Park church, Rock Island, organized from a mission of Broadway church last fall, has opened a reading room in the church which will be open to the community every evening of the week except Sunday. The city public

The Selection of a School

is a subject which requires the fullest consideration. THE CONTINENT'S Educational Bureau has on file information regarding all the principal institutions of the country and will gladly cooperate with parents and students in making a choice. This service is entirely free to readers of THE CONTINENT. Begin your investigation in time to permit a thorough inquiry. Address

The Continent Educational Bureau
509 S. Wabash Avenue - - - Chicago

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN OXFORD, OHIO FOUNDED 1853
Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges
A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.
Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE
OFFERS
To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.
IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.
38 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Indiana

BEFORE DECIDING WHERE TO ATTEND SCHOOL
Send for Catalog of Valparaiso University Valparaiso Indiana,
One of the Largest Universities and Training Schools in the United States.
26 Departments Excellent Equipments
195 Instructors School the Entire Year
Expenses less than at any other school. Catalog mailed free. Address H. B. BROWN, President, or O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.
Forty-First Year will open Sept. 16, 1913.

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas
Vocational-Cultural for young women

Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD A Cultural and Practical School
FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE
RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Theological Seminaries

Hartford Theological Seminary
Scientific methods with practical training. Large faculty and library.
Graduate fellowships, both foreign and resident. Open to all college graduates.
Associated with
Hartford School of Religious Pedagogy
Training Sunday School and other lay workers.
Hartford School of Missions
fitting for foreign service.
Address Dean M. W. JACOBUS, Hartford, Ct.

You will buy DIRECT from the Producer
if you purchase
SMITH GRANITE PRODUCTIONS
IN WESTERLY GRANITE
THE SMITH GRANITE CO. :: Westerly, R. I.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE
CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR
Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

library has loaned books to be borrowed by individuals under the same conditions as at the library. The brotherhood has this under supervision.

Central church, Rock Island, has refused to join with the pastor, Rev. Marion Humphreys, in requesting a dissolution of the pastoral relation.

A large young men's Bible class is one of the interesting features of the work of Princeville church, where Rev. Max B. Wiles is finishing his fifth year as pastor.

The county Christian Endeavor convention will meet at Albion church May 5. Union evangelistic meetings will be held in the same church in July. Rev. B. T. Watson is pastor.

First church, Macomb, will furnish enough money to build two new chapels in China. Money for the first chapel has been sent to the Foreign Board and funds to build the second will be sent in May. This church gave $595 for home missions and $1,086 for foreign missions last year. The total contributions for the year were $12,896. The present membership is 732. More men and boys attend this Sunday school than women and girls.

Clergy and Laity

Dr. Andrew A. Dinsmore, for the last six years assistant at West End church, New York City, and his wife are spending the winter and spring in California.

The accident with which Dr. Aquilla Webb of Louisville, Ky., met has so injured him that he had abandoned all idea of being a commissioner to Atlanta. He had been mentioned during the last few months as a possible moderator.

Dean Waller, whose death at Maryville, Tenn., was noted last week, had his early home in Seneca Falls, N. Y. Dr. S. W. Boardman of New Jersey, who was president of Maryville College and closely associated with Dean Waller for many years, pays this tribute: "He was an excellent scholar, an apt and able teacher and a commanding administrator. There was scarcely anything which he did not touch and improve. He often would invite his class to his home for a social evening. He appreciated from the first the higher, the religious aspects of Maryville."

Plan Young People's Institute

Week's Conference in St. Paul—Minneapolis Hesitates to Adopt Plans for Pageant and Exposition.

ST. PAUL-MINNEAPOLIS — House of Hope church entertained the Presbytery of St. Paul. The sermon by the retiring moderator, George E. Davies, was upon "Unfashionable Faith." Dr. M. D. Edward was elected moderator. Overtures 1 to 6 were answered in the negative; 7 and 8 in the affirmative.

Comprehensive plans are formed for a presbyterial young people's institute in St. Paul to be held at the Y. M. C. A. and Central church April 22-27. Secretary Hall of the young people's department will be director. The program contemplates supper, three or four departmental study classes, an open parliament and a popular address each evening.

The new house of worship of Merriam Park church continues to grow and it is hoped can be ready for occupancy by October.

Goodrich Avenue church is mourning the loss of its senior elder, Walter E. Beckwith, who entered into rest April 4. He had been an elder in that church for twenty-two years and for much of that time superintendent of the Sunday school.

Minneapolis has under consideration "The World in Minneapolis." Definite decision concerning this will be made a little later. Some hesitate because of the spectacular features and others because of the amount of time and energy taken from ordinary church work.

Westminster church, Minneapolis, has recently called as assistant to the pastor, Dr. John E. Bushnell, Rev. James A. Melrose of Rice Lake, Wis.

Bethany church, Minneapolis, Rev. Eliot H. Moore pastor, is rejoicing in the added equipment of a pipe organ.

Superintendent R. F. Sulzer has been doing yeoman service in behalf of the Sunday School Board in Michigan during the past two weeks.

Superintendent J. W. Kearns of the Home Board has been called to New York for the spring review and conference. Minnesota cherishes the ideal of self-support for home missions and Sunday school in the not distant future.

What Presbyteries Are Doing

New Brunswick Presbytery met in Lawrenceville (N. J.) church. Rev. Francis Palmer was elected moderator; Rev. George H. Ingram stated clerk and treasurer. John J. Steiner of the senior class of Princeton Seminary was received as a candidate for the ministry. Presbytery accepted an invitation from First church, New Brunswick, for the fall meeting, when the 175th anniversary of the constitution of the presbytery will be celebrated. It was in New Brunswick on Aug. 5, 1738, 3 p. m., that the Presbytery of New Brunswick held its first meeting, with Rev. John Gross moderator and Rev. Gilbert Tennent clerk. At the same time presbytery will take note of the twentieth anniversary of the pastorate in New Brunswick First church of William W. Knox, D. D.

Des Moines Presbytery met in First church, Indianola, Iowa. Rev. Alexander MacFerran was chosen moderator. Thomas Humphries of First church, Des Moines, and W. L. Cain of Seymour church were taken under care of presbytery. Rev. Horace O. Bethel, chairman of the home mission committee, reported that this year shows the largest offerings to home mission work in the history of Iowa self-support. Dr. George P. Magill, associate president of Highland Park College, presented the work of the college showing the large increase in students and support. The total enrollment is 1,728. Memorial services were held for the late Rev. S. D. McFadden. The educational committee was instructed to prepare a plan for the institution of a "McFadden memorial educational fund" to aid needy students. Rev. John Wilson, who has served the church forty years as a Presbyterian minister, was released from further active service. A committee of W. O. Harless, William McCoy and John Bamford was appointed to revise the proposed "Des Moines plan" of handling the benevolences of all the churches through a presbyterial treasurer.

Mouse River Presbytery met in Westhope church March 25. Rev. William J. McIvor of Towner was elected moderator. Rev. H. S. Morrison, pastor-evangelist, was reelected for the new year. At the Wednesday evening popular meeting Rev. G. William Barnum gave an address on "China's Open Door," which was followed by a stirring message from Mr. Morrison.

Emporia Presbytery met in Newton, Kan., April 8 and was opened with a sermon by the moderator, Rev. J. F. Cowling. President H. C. Culbertson of Emporia College was elected moderator. A committee was appointed to give publicity to Emporia College Day, to be observed at the meeting of synod in Emporia next fall. Overtures 1 to 5 were answered in the affirmative at the fall stated meeting. This action was reconsidered and the following resolution adopted: "The Presbytery of Emporia heartily favors the idea of federation that inspired the five overtures known as the Seattle overtures, but negatives these overtures because of their ambiguous phraseology and the confusion resulting from their introduction into the Form of Government." Dr. Charles E. Bradt addressed the popular meeting on the crisis in China.

Box Butte Presbytery met at Gordon, Neb. Rev. James Bedford Brown of Alliance was elected moderator. There have been very gratifying results in the evangelistic campaigns of the past year. The churches of Alliance, Mitchell, Morrill, Scottsbluff and Kimball have very considerable increases in membership, and the churches of McGrew and Pleasant Valley have been organized, the latter of thirty members, as the result of special meetings conducted by the pastor of Scottsbluff church and the pastor-evangelist. Country church conferences have been held in various parts of the presbytery. Box Butte Presbytery has room for three or four more men who are willing to spend and be spent.

PRESBYTERIAN
TRAINING SCHOOL
of Chicago
for Christian Workers
Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

"The World in Chicago" and the great Missionary Pageant will draw many Presbyterians to Chicago during May. This will furnish opportunity to become better acquainted with the School. We can furnish satisfactory accommodations in the School buildings for both men and women guests at these very modest rates:

For a week or longer—
Room and Breakfast (per week) $4.50

For a day, or less than a week—
Room, Breakfast and Dinner.... 1.00
Room and Breakfast..... .... .75

Single Meals—
Breakfast and Luncheon, each... .25
Dinner, 6:15 p. m. (Sunday, 1:15) .35

Street cars passing our door reach "The World in Chicago" and the Pageant direct (20 to 30 minutes' ride).

We suggest to pastors and parents of young women, especially those living near Chicago, that you urge them to attend "The World in Chicago" and at the same time get in touch with the Training School.

Some life decisions may result.

For boarding reservation or information regarding the School address

H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

LAKE FOREST COLLEGE
offers a liberal training under experienced professors and excellent provision for the physical and social welfare of its students, in a beautiful environment. For information address
JOHN S. NOLLEN, President, Lake Forest, Illinois

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.
They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address
MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS
An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY
Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy.
Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Tennessee

Ward Seminary For Girls and Young Women
42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports, For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres.. Nashville, Tenn.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY
College entrance, 15 units.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Brotherhood Plans Developing

Local Council Will Visit the Churches in Turn—Annual Meeting May 12 -Bryan at World in Chicago Exercises May 4.

CHICAGO—Plans are being put into operation for the systematic visitation by members of the Chicago Brotherhood Council of the various organizations of men in the churches of the city. Reports on the work of the organizations and points in which they are weak will be reported to the general body, which will act as a clearing house on information thus received. It is expected that a large number of ideas will be obtained which can be sent to the various bodies for their guidance and inspiration. Robert E. Ross, president of the Chicago brotherhood, is at the head of this movement. The local brotherhood is also arranging for a large dinner for men and women of Presbyterianism to be held in the Coliseum May 12, the evening of Presbyterian Day at "The World in Chicago." At 4 o'clock of the same day in Second church will be held the annual meeting and election of officers of the Chicago brotherhood. George C. Lazear is chairman of this committee. Calvin Mills is chairman of the conservation committee which will have charge of the work of locating young men in Chicago and connecting them with a church, as The Continent announced last week.

There are twenty teams now owned by the Christian Industrial League engaged in gathering old furniture, clothes and papers, by the sale of which the institution supports a hotel and rescue mission.

Highland Park church is supporting two China missionaries out of a total of $5,195 for benevolent activities. The congregational expenses, with the building fund, last year were $66,832. The men's work in the Bible school is specially well conducted. Rev. R. Calvin Dobson is pastor.

BRYAN TO OPEN "THE WORLD"

William Jennings Bryan will speak at "The World in Chicago" as part of the dedicatory exercises in the Coliseum May 4 at 3 o'clock. There will be preliminary exercises on the day preceding, when the exposition is scheduled to open, but the Sunday afternoon service will be the first large meeting.

The Sunday school of Christ church numbers 600 and all departments of the church are progressing under the pastorate of Rev. Thomas W. Stewart.

The young people of Austin church are doing much to stimulate attendance at the vesper service, which is becoming a conspicuous feature of the church work. Rev. R. H. Beattie is pastor.

Belden Avenue church, Rev. W. H. Phelps pastor, during the past year increased the contributions to benevolences three and a third times over the amount raised the year previous.

CHURCH HOUSE AT EVANSTON

Women were nominated for elders by some enthusiastic members of First church, Evanston, in the primary ballot preceding election at the annual meeting last week. The trustees have bought two lots adjoining the edifice and a church house is being planned. This congregation during the year gave $32,886 for benevolences, in addition to $33,000 for congregational expenses. Rev. David Hugh Jones has completed his first year with this church.

Chicago Presbytery convened Monday in the beautiful new Highland Park church with a banner attendance. F. S. Selden, D. D., was elected moderator. The resignation of Dr. T. D. Wallace at Hinsdale was approved. Dr. Wallace will spend the remainder of his ministry in California, but retains his membership in Chicago Presbytery, with which he has been connected for twenty-seven years. Rev. J. M. Mahaffy, after seven years' work at Manteno, resigned and Rev. B. M. Brown, whose self-sacrificing work at Onward church has broken his health, will also be relieved. Pioneer church's organization with 164 members was recognized. The following commissioners were elected: Ministers, Messrs. Stone, Carrier, Jenkins, Hepburn, Ryan, Boyle and Covert; elders, Messrs. H. C. Overstreet, T. E. D. Bradley, E. H. Smith, J. W. Coutts, G. C. Taylor, Frank Rich and R. S. Simmons.

The central field committee of the Y. W. C. A. has moved its offices to the Westminster building, Dearborn and Monroe streets.

Dr. S. Hall Young, who was unable to visit all the churches that wanted to hear his story of Alaska, will be in the city again during "The World in Chicago."

During the past year Central Park church, Rev. F. A. Hosmer pastor, has seen the almost entire elimination of its debt.

The Y. M. C. A. at McCormick Seminary has become a part of the general association in the city.

"The Story of Fargo," an account of the recent series of meetings at Fargo, N. D., in the world missionary campaign, has been issued by Dr. C. E. Bradt, in charge of the central district of the Home Board, Ohio building. The conference in Fargo has attracted large attention over the country and efforts are being made to organize a similar series of meetings in San Antonio, Texas, in conjunction with the Southern Church.

Men of Austin church, who have lately organized for more definite work, have issued a folder about the church for use in inviting strangers to attend services.

The graduating exercises of the Presbyterian Training School will be held in First church April 22 at 8 o'clock.

DR. SHAW TO VISIT LOS ANGELES

Dr. John Balcom Shaw, the well-known pastor of Second church, announced to his officers last Sunday that he had received a call from Immanuel church of Los Angeles and that he would leave this week to "look over the field."

In addition to the features already announced for the Cook County Sunday School Association convention now in session at Second church the program provides for a superintendents' and officers' dinner this (Thursday) evening, with an address by William H. Edwards, superintendent of Westminster Sunday school of Milwaukee. Friday morning and afternoon there will be departmental conferences and in the evening an adult Bible class dinner.

Alfred Morrill, who has been with Wilson Avenue branch of the Y. M. C. A., will be assistant pastor at Lake View church.

Church Changes with People

German Congregation Offers Building for Mission for Incoming Foreigners–Evangelistic Meetings All Summer.

PITTSBURG—The spring meeting of presbytery April 8 in the chapel of First church attracted an unusually large attendance. Dr. J. S. Axtell was elected moderator. The trustees reported that more money had been raised for local church work than in any previous year. Dr. George Montgomery, field secretary of presbytery, was given an extended vacation in order that he might have an opportunity to recuperate from his recent severe illness.

Rev. John M. Mealy, who has passed his seventieth year, and his forty-sixth year in the active pastorate, asked to be released from Riverdale church. First German church of the North side, which had been established and fostered by the late Dr. John F. Launitz, asked presbytery to dissolve the congregation and take charge of the property. There are no longer enough German-speaking Presbyterians to support the church and the representative of the congregation asked presbytery to make it a mission to the Slavs, Poles and other nationalities which have located in the vicinity.

The Pittsburg evangelistic committee held a meeting April 7 to plan the summer campaign. Shop work will be continued in some of the shops all summer. Street meetings will be held under the direction of Evangelist D. S. Schultz. Work among the children will be carried on in different sections of the city under the supervision of E. A. Harrar. A site for the Billy Sunday meetings has been secured in the Oakland district. The finance committee for these meetings will not organize until after the summer season.

The following officers were chosen Monday, April 7, for the ensuing year by the ministers' association: President, Rev. O. N. Verner; vice-president, D. S. A. Hunter; secretary and treasurer, Silvaneus Haupert.

The Sharpsburg congregation, Rev. D. R. Montgomery pastor, is making preparations for the celebration of the seventy-fifth anniversary of the church in September.

P. W. SNYDER.

Bethlehem Church Has Grown

Fortieth Anniversary Shows Its Great Progress—Sunday Invited to Philadelphia—Italian Mission Dedicated.

PHILADELPHIA—The event of the week in Presbyterian circles has been the celebration of the fortieth anniversary of Bethlehem church. Organized in 1873 with thirty-four members, it has now 1,350 and stands fourth in size in the presbytery. Its first pastor was Dr. M. Newkirk, its second Dr. B. L. Agnew and its third and present pastor Dr. John R. Davies. Under his ministry the accessions to the membership have averaged over 100 annually and nearly $400,000 has been raised for all purposes. The Sunday school as well as the church has had constant growth and now enrolls 1,400 members. The celebration services drew out large audiences and awakened much interest. At the communion on the morning of the 6th the large auditorium was filled. The pastor and his assistant, Mr. Hibschman, were aided by Rev. George G. Mahy. In the evening Dr. Davies preached an historical sermon. At the Sunday school in the afternoon the city's superintendent of public instruction, Dr. Brumbaugh, made an address to the 1,100 present and Dr. J. A. Worden presented diplomas to twenty members of the teacher training department. On Monday afternoon presbytery was entertained. In the evening Dr. Francis L. Patton of Princeton delivered a notable address on "The Authority of Christ." Tuesday evening a free concert of a high order was given by the choir of the church. Wednesday evening there was an address by Dr. C. A. R. Janvier, Thursday evening a social entertainment attended by pastors and members of neighboring churches and Friday evening was devoted to the young people. The great events of last Sunday were the raising of a debt of $12,000 at the morning service, the address of William Jennings Bryan in the afternoon and a thanksgiving service in the evening, all of which aroused great enthusiasm.

BILLY SUNDAY TO HOLD MEETINGS

Upon invitation of the ministerial union Billy Sunday, the evangelist, April 7 at midday addressed an audience which packed Arch Street Methodist church, one of the largest in the center of the city. He was introduced by Bishop Berry and spoke for an hour and a half in his dramatic and vigorous style. Certain ministers and officials and churches were severely criticised and the Bible and orthodoxy enthusiastically lauded. At the close, on suggestion of John Wanamaker, it was resolved by those present to invite Mr. Sunday to come at an early day to Philadelphia and hold a series of meetings. Bishop Berry was authorized to appoint a committee to invite other denominations not represented to cooperate in the movement.

Of much interest to Philadelphia North Presbytery and the Italian mission of Germantown was the dedication Sunday, April 6, of the Memorial Church of the Saviour. The building is well adapted for worship, Sunday school and institutional work and cost about $13,000. It was erected by Mr. and Mrs. J. Milton Colton of the Abington church as a memorial to Mrs. Colton's sister, Mrs. Margaret Roberts McFarland. In the services of dedication Rev. H. B. McCrone, moderator of presbytery, presided. Doctors L. W. Eckard, W. B. Jennings and Pirrazzini of New York took part. The pastor is Rev. Joseph F. Panetta, a convert of First Italian mission of Philadelphia.

At a mass meeting in the Academy of Music under the auspices of the Philadelphia County Sunday School Association, held to emphasize the necessity for trained men and women in Sunday school work, addresses were made by Dr. M. G. Brumbaugh, superintendent of public schools; Alba B. Johnson, president of Baldwin Locomotive Works; Dr. Nehemiah Boynton, moderator of the Congregational National Council, and Rev. Charles A. Oliver, superintendent of teacher training in Pennsylvania. To F. W. Lange, M. D., secretary of the county association, a purse of $355 and ticket to Zurich, Switzerland, were presented.

ONE BUDGET FOR MISSIONS

Presbytery of Philadelphia at its April meeting resolved to formulate annually a budget for home missions, including those for synod, presbytery and the church at large, and to have all offerings sent to one treasury to be distributed in a pro rata proportion according to the needs. After listening to an exhaustive report on the needs of colored work by Dr. Matthew Anderson it was voted to make an effort to extend its influence and labors among the 100,000 colored population of the city.

Tuesday, April 15, the Y. W. C. A. began a whirlwind campaign to raise $750,000 to erect branch buildings in various parts of the city and equip them. About 400 workers are engaged and the campaign methods adopted by the Y. M. C. A. a year ago are being pursued.

The Forepaugh theater midnight services of the Presbyterian evangelistic committee have been mainly conducted by Dr. C. A. R. Janvier and O. La Forrest Perry. Previous to Easter night they had missed but five nights in eight years. That night Mr. Perry was detained by illness at Atlantic City. He sent an Easter message and a plea for acceptance of Christ to those attending. Dr. Janvier read it from the platform and twenty-five men responded.

Rev. S. H. Cox, a graduate of Union Seminary and pastor of the chief Congregational church of the city, has resigned on account of ill health.

Rev. J. B. Howell of Philadelphia Presbytery, who for the past two years has been in Portugal superintending the publication of his commentary on the gospels in Portuguese, has returned with Mrs. Howell to Philadelphia. He has in view commentaries of other portions of Scripture in the same language.

On April 21 the Presbyterian ministers will be addressed by Professor W. R. Newbold of the University of Pennsylvania.

W. P. WHITE.

Want Five-Story Parish House

West End Church Will Have a New Building—Union Seminary Relations Conference Progressing Activities in New York City.

NEW YORK—West End church, Dr. A. Edwin Keigwin pastor, voted unanimously at a congregational meeting April 9 to build a five-story parish house on the site of the present Sunday school chapel, which is only two stories high. It also voted to renovate the auditorium, tearing out the back wall so that the parish house can be connected with it, affording several hundred extra seats. The work will cost $75,000 and the church extension committee has offered to lend the church $25,000.

The General Assembly's committee on relations with Union Theological Seminary was in session April 10 at the Savoy hotel. The committee received from the directors of the seminary a communication setting forth that institution's attitude on the fundamentals of the Christian religion. All of the proceedings are kept secret, but it is understood that the seminary offers to invite acceptable Presbyterian pastors to lecture to Presbyterian students on the polity and confessions of faith of the Presbyterian Church. Dr. John F. Carson of Brooklyn, chairman of the committee, though still in poor health, was present and presided.

New York Presbytery at its meeting Monday licensed Messrs. van Dyke, Holbrooke, Murray and Byrd, Union Seminary students, by a vote of 74 to 10. Dr. John Fox filed a protest against this action. Bayard Dodge, another student, withdrew. The overture on reduction of Assembly was defeated. These commissioners to Assembly were elected: Ministers—Edgar W. Work, Dr. Francis Brown, Henry Sloane Coffin, William Adams Brown, Jonathan Day, Wilton Merle-Smith, William P. Merrill, Anson Atterbury; elders—Henry Jessup, Frederick Booth, William S. Bennet, John Messenger, Theodore Morris and Cleveland Cady.

A case now in the courts which will interest the church is the contest of the will of the late John Calvin Martin, who died about a year ago. In a will made in 1908 he left the residue of his estate, which amounts to about $1,000,000, equally to the Board of Home Missions, the College Board and the Board of Education. But in his last will, made in 1912, he left all to the John C. Martin Foundation, a series of private philanthropies he carried on. It is claimed that he was of unsound mind when he made the last will. He attended Fifth Avenue church.

The corner stone of the new church at 174th street and Wadsworth avenue will be laid the afternoon of April 17 under the auspices of West-Park church, of which Doctors Anson P. Atterbury and Anthony H. Evans are copastors. Addresses will be delivered by Dr. Edgar W. Work, moderator of presbytery, and Dr. Howard Duffield of First church.

Three churches in New York Presbytery are pastorless—Rutgers, Bethany and New York.

Bloomingdale Reformed church, of which Rev. William Wallace Ketchum was pastor, has closed its doors. It is for sale and the money will be used by classis for church extension.

Louis L. Tribus, an officer in Calvary church, West New Brighton, Staten island, is the new president of the Presbyterian Social Union. Rev. George R. Montgomery, assistant at Madison Square church, was reelected secretary and treasurer. Among the vice-presidents chosen were Doctors John Henry Jowett, George Alexander and Wilton Merle-Smith.

Fifth Avenue church will tender a reception to Dr. and Mrs. John Henry Jowett April 28, the second anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. Jowett.

WILL BUILD NEW Y. M. C. A.

W. K. Vanderbilt, Frederick W. Vanderbilt and Alfred G. Vanderbilt have given $300,000 to build a new structure for the railroad Y. M. C. A., within a stone's throw of the new Grand Central station, Manhattan.

Labor temple will have charge of the East Twenty-Fourth Street recreation pier Monday afternoons and evenings until July 1.

West Twenty-Third Street church, of which Dr. Harlan G. Mendenhall is pastor, in its report for the year just closed shows that the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society have doubled their membership. The contributions to church support have increased more than $1,000 and the benevolences are $1,353 more than last year. The lunch club for business women now averages 100 per day.

Dr. William Y. Chapman of Roseville church, Newark, read a paper on "Thomas Carlyle" before the Presbyterian Ministers' Association April 14. Next Monday Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston of Stamford, Conn., will speak on "A Meditation Suggested by a Recent Cruise in the Caribbean Sea." The last Monday of the month Dr. James H. Hoadley of Greenwich church will talk on "Impressions from a Trip to the East."

The Bronx ministers and laymen have a Clergy and Laity League, which was addressed on April 8 by Frank Moss, assistant district attorney, on "Neighborhood Church Cooperation to Prevent Crime." Three Presbyterians are represented in the list of officers—Rev. Graham C. Hunter, who is president, and Rev. Albert D. Gantz and Rev. C. E. B. Ward, who are vice-presidents and district chairmen.

During the past year $1,000 has been paid on the mortgage on Greene Avenue church, Brooklyn, Rev. G. H. Eggleston pastor.

It is expected that the new church building to be erected by the extension committee for Woodlawn Heights church will be completed by early fall. Plans have been adopted.

The spring term of the Robertson Parochial School of Scotch church opened March 21. This is the only Presbyterian parochial school in New York City and it is almost as old as the church, 157 years.

At the recent opening rally of the ninth season of the tent, open air and shop campaign of the evangelistic committee of New York City the total cash and pledges amounted to $3,679, $1,500 more than a year ago.

District Attorney Charles S. Whitman, who is a deacon in University Place church, Dr. George Alexander pastor, addressed a gathering of about 700 preachers, including Jew and Catholic, in the assembly hall of the Metropolitan Life building Easter Monday. His subject was "Vice Conditions in New York City."

Mrs. Wilton Merle-Smith, wife of the pastor of Central church, addressed a meeting of the Young Women's Missionary Society of Fifth Avenue church April 4 on "The Foreign Policy of the Church."

Official Notice

By order of the Presbytery of Chicago its stated clerk is instructed to publish in the columns of The Continent its action in deposing from the ministry Rev. David B. Greigg, D. D., and excommunicating him from the church.

JAMES FROTHINGHAM,
Stated Clerk Chicago Presbytery.
509 South Wabash avenue,
Chicago, April 10, 1913.

M. P. MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS

Builder of the large electric organs in Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, Ohio (2 organs); Russell Sage Memorial Presbyterian Church, Far Rockaway, N.Y., and Bedford Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N.Y.; the three-manual organs in Westminster Presbyterian Church, Detroit, Mich., Presbyterian Church, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and instruments in almost 200 other Presbyterian Churches alone. Specifications and estimates on application. For catalogues and particulars,

Address, M. P. MÖLLER,
HAGERSTOWN, :: MARYLAND

CHURCH MONEY

Is being raised in large amounts by churches which ship to us all their

OLD NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS MAGAZINES, OR WASTE PAPER

This is a splendid plan to raise church money or pay off the church debt; and it is the long-sought "something out of nothing" plan, as the material is usually thrown away.

Write us at once for information and prices.

THE WESTERN PAPER STOCK CO.
1452-60 Indiana Ave., .: CHICAGO

TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED

Samples at Wholesale

Get in Business for Yourself

Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.

Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.

MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

TEACHERS, COLLEGE STUDENTS, MINISTERS ON THEIR VACATIONS

And others who desire pleasant, helpful and remunerative employment during all or part of the summer (or longer) will do well to write us, applying for entrance into our summer CONTINENT enlisting campaign. Your eligibility as a Volunteer will depend somewhat upon your location during the summer. Write us and we will be glad to tell you about our plan.

THE CONTINENT
509 So. Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill. 156 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Look Out for Burglars!

PUT YOUR

Abstracts, Bonds, Deeds, Diamonds, Insurance Policies, Notes, Jewelry, Silverware, and all Other Valuables

IN THE

Royal Safety Deposit Vaults

160 W. Jackson Boulevard
CHICAGO

TRUNKS STORED

BOXES RENTED FOR $3 PER YEAR AND UPWARDS

Good Things in This Issue

For your vacation. See the pictures of Glacier national park on the outside cover and on page 525.

For a broader view of Americanism. Ponder over the article on page 524 by Dr. Gonzalez.

For the next missionary meeting you attend. Perhaps some of the suggestions of Mrs. Montgomery's article, page 527, may be carried out.

For your serious thought. Are the toys of your children too complete? Read what Mrs. Kirkwood thinks, page 531.

For public officials, great and small. Shall a Chinaman be more scrupulous than an American to observe the Lord's day? Read the little incident of Dr. Sun, page 536.

For your Sunday school class. That idea of a cardboard ship to indicate the progress of mission collection for China is good. Read all of the article on multiplying gifts to missions, page 538.

For your anticipation. An article by William T. Ellis on the Young Woman's Christian Association will be printed soon. An article by Dr. S. S. Palmer on "Influence of Political Life on Character" is another good thing in immediate prospect.

Receding Water Shows Extent of Damage by Flood

Ruin in Dayton Churches

Additional details of the flood in Dayton show the effect to the church property. A special correspondent of The Continent visited the city as the floods were receding.

First church, Dr. Wilson pastor, is greatly dismantled; the floors are buckled, the massive walnut pews are heaped together; the fine organ recently renewed at a cost of $3,000 is moved from its place and the beautiful carpets covered with several inches of slime.

Park church, Dr. Boyce pastor, was burned while the water was below, involving a loss of $15,000, protected by insurance.

Third church, Dr. Campbell pastor, also has bulging floors, ruined carpets, detroyed choir loft and badly injured organ. The pastors of these churches fared in their homes the common lot of their neighbors, suffering almost incalculable loss in libraries, carpets, clothing, pictures and things long endeared by use.

Bethel mission of First church is almost destroyed, and its minister, Rev. Mr. Hartman, was rescued from its tower.

Dr. Brownlee of Memorial church has the fine distinction of leading his people in the establishment of the first relief station of its kind opened in the city, and the other churches, with their pastors, entered into like work with great heartiness.

W. D. Huber, vice-mayor of the city and trustee in Memorial church, issued the order which closed the saloons of the city. Over 1,500 persons were rescued in Riverdale by boats directed by M. J. Switzer, an elder in Forest Avenue church; the study of Fourth church gave shelter to scarlet fever cases, while Ralph Adamson of Third Street church rescued twenty persons, and Robert Elder of the same church got out of a sick bed to do rescue work at the peril of his life.

One pastor early asked his trustees to cut his salary in two and others are planning similar reductions that they may help bear the burdens of their people.

Church Must Have Help

Fully three-fourths of Lawrenceburg, Ind., congregation suffered loss. The church and manse were damaged to the extent of several hundred dollars. The people cannot meet the situation alone and help is needed to care for the suffering and rehabilitate the church work. Any assistance sent to the pastor, Rev. A. F. Davis, will be gratefully received.

Flood Leaves Mud Two Inches Deep

Sixty refugees were housed in the upper rooms of First church, Portsmouth, Ohio, during the flood. Twelve feet of water was in the main building. The social rooms and the gymnasium and clubrooms were completely covered. The church has for several years received the prize for the most beautiful lawns in the city. They are now covered with two inches of mud. The property loss to this church is about $1,000 and its members, who lived largely in the flooded district, have been scattered to all parts of the city, many of them having their homes completely ruined. The pastor, Rev. John W. Dunning, was in Michigan, and only after three days of traveling on foot and by various conveyances reached the city.

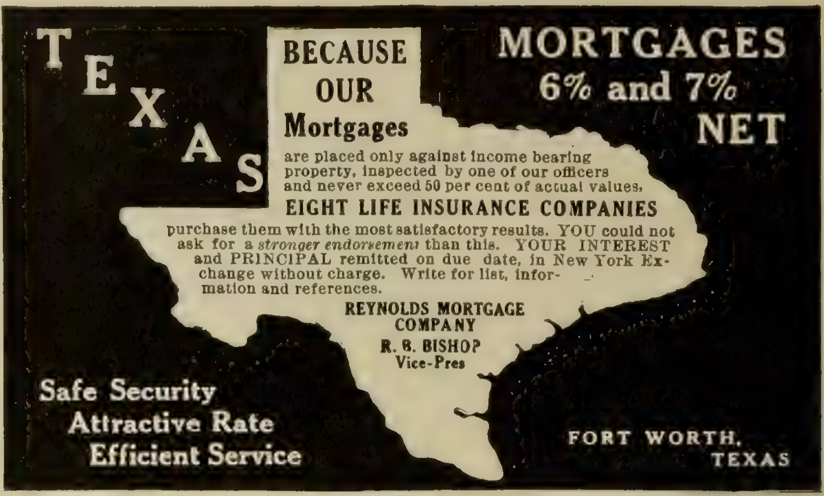
Rev. S. D. Conger lost his library in the flood with the exception of four books.

Elect New Board of Trustees

Under advice of Dr. James E. Clarke, associate secretary of the Board of Colleges, the trustees of Westminster College, in order to make that institution absolutely interdenominational and eliminate all reason for the organization of rival Christian institutions in Utah, have voted to request the corporation to elect an entirely new board of trustees, among whom at least eight members shall belong to other evangelical bodies than the Presbyterian. The present trustees have agreed to resign whenever their successors have been duly elected and qualified for office. This was the policy urged originally by the former president, Dr. Robert M. Stevenson.

Dynamite Illinois Pastor's Home

During the absence of Rev. W. W. Wilson of Tolono at presbytery meeting April 9 a stick of dynamite was exploded at 1 a. m. on the back porch of his home, endangering the life of Mrs. Wilson and their 6-year-old child sleeping over the porch and Mrs. Wilson's mother. Three large windows were broken and the back door splintered, as well as parts of the porch and house. People of the town attribute the act to the liquor interests. During the two and a half years Mr. Wilson has been at Tolono he has been active against the blind pigs of the vicinity.



TEXAS

BECAUSE OUR Mortgages are placed only against income bearing property, inspected by one of our officers and never exceed 50 per cent of actual values,

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES purchase them with the most satisfactory results. YOU could not ask for a stronger endorsement than this. YOUR INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date, in New York Exchange without charge. Write for list, information and references.

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE COMPANY
R. B. BISHOP
Vice-Pres

MORTGAGES 6% and 7% NET

Safe Security
Attractive Rate
Efficient Service

FORT WORTH, TEXAS

4 Per Cent

BONDS SECURING POSTAL SAVINGS FUNDS
BONDS YIELDING 4%-5% PAYABLE SEMI-YEARLY
BACKED BY CERTIFICATES FROM UNITED STATES TREASURY
CERTIFYING THEY PROTECT POSTAL SAVINGS BANK FUNDS
AVAIL YOURSELF OF THIS PROTECTION
SEND FOR OUR BOOKLET "BONDS OF OUR COUNTRY"
BONDS SENT TO ANY BANK OR EXPRESS
COMPANY SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION
THE NEW FIRST NATIONAL BANK COLUMBUS, OHIO

5 Per Cent

Mortgage Money Wanted

an furnish Farm loans on Eastern Washington wheat lands to net the investor Seven per cent per annum.

Thirty years experience. No client ever lost one dollar.

Reference: First National Bank, Litchfeld, Ill; Farmers Savings Bank, Walla Walla Wash.

Write for particulars.

P. O. Box 493

B. F. CULP, Walla Walla, Washington

6½% Net First Mortgages

on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.

GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

6% 7%

We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request

JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

Oklahoma Farm Mortgages

Let your money make 6 per cent—NET

The three or four per cent the savings bank pays does not fairly represent your money's earning ability. It is simply the small end of the profits. The bank keeps the big share as their fee for re-investment—re-investing your money in mortgages—something you refuse to do for yourself. By investing direct you can at least double the profits of your savings as they now accrue to you. Oklahoma first mortgages—amply secured by two to four times the amount of the loan—make this possible—the same kind banks and insurance companies buy.

Why Insurance Companies Buy Oklahoma Mortgages

Experience showed them that in order to meet competition they must secure as high a rate per dollar as sound business judgment allowed. Investigation proved that Oklahoma offered the best field for investments of this kind. Approximately $415,000,000.00 is now invested by the insurance companies in farm mortgages—and a good share of this in Oklahoma mortgages.

Surely you can't do better than follow the example of these trained buyers of conservative investments. So decide now to give your money a chance to make good for you.

Write now for interesting booklets describing our comprehensive investment service and mortgage list No. 716

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Company,
143 West Main, Oklahoma City, U. S. A.

WHERE TO INVEST WITH SAFETY AND GOOD PROFIT

The famous Corn Belt of Eastern Kansas offers the best possible field for safe and profitable mortgage investments. This territory was settled 60 years ago and during that time has been thoroughly tested as a fine agricultural and stock raising country. We have been in this field for 40 years and during that time have never lost a dollar for an investor. Loans negotiated by us exceed $25,000,000. Your money when placed in our First Farm Mortgages will be absolutely safe and net you excellent interest return. Write us for particulars and references.

J. L. Pettyjohn & Company
Olathe, Kansas

These Will Fit YOUR Pocket Book

I can offer you a very profitable and safe investment to fit your particular circumstances, whether you have large or small funds, or only desire to lay by from month to month small sums as savings. These investments are backed by the IDAHO TITLE & TRUST COMPANY, and the NATIONAL TRUST & SAVINGS COMPANY. Look over the following and tell me about which one you would like to have full information. No. 1. First Farm Mortgages, $1,000 to $15,000; 6% interest payable annually; also First City Mortgages, $300 to $5,000; will net you 7% per annum. No. 2. Guarantee Capital fund certificates, $100 to $5,000, 8% annual interest and as much more as the earnings of the company will justify. No. 3. Guarantee Investment Certificates, $3.0C per month or any multiple thereof for 24 months, or as long as you like. You can draw out your money and 8% per annum interest compounded semi-annually any time after 24 months. Write for full information.

CHARLES B. COXE
BOISE President IDAHO

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS

6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. 6%
SEND FOR BOOKLET.

PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%

Write for particulars regarding our investment service
Highest references.

R. C. KITTEL & CO., 108 So. La Salle St
Chicago.

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.

BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

$33,000,000 INVESTED IN ALBERTA MORTGAGES

by insurance, trust and loan companies. The Associated Mortgage Investors, Inc., has applied the FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE of its Officers to making Alberta loans, which yield 6% NET and have many advantages, including GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED TITLES. Inquiries are welcomed and imply no obligation.

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

Farm Mortgages 6%
Our Investments
Appeal to Conservative Investors
Send for pamphlet "C", and list of offerings. 30 yrs. experience, Highest refs.
E. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N.D.

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.

The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

Financial Situation

Crop Reports on Winter Wheat Very Encouraging—Total Interest Charge Against Farms Over $222,000,000 - How $10,000 Doubles.

Reports of the government crop experts as to the probable amount of winter wheat to be harvested will be encouraging to holders of farm mortgages, if indeed there are still investors who are not thoroughly convinced of the safety of both principal and interest of farm mortgages. The government report shows that only twice has the promise of the winter wheat in April been better than now. The rains in the West recently are also counted on to further the crop. If the spring wheat approaches the large total of a year ago the crop promises to be the largest ever produced in this country.

The present methods of getting crops from the farm to the consumer and the waste of products on the farm results in very large losses. Frank P. Holland of Dallas, Texas, before a conference in Chicago recently said this loss amounted to 100,000 carloads last year. An effort is being made by producers in many parts of the country to eliminate the middleman so that the price paid by the consumer will bear a near relation to that received by the producer. An effort will be made to arrive at some national cooperative plan.

Total Amount of Mortgages Large

The amount of farm mortgages now in force has been a subject of dispute since last fall when Myron T. Herrick made his report to the government. He said that the aggregate was $6,040,000,000 and the total interest charge $500,000,000. G. M. J. Badow, a writer on agricultural statistics, has recently shown that the total of farm mortgages is much less than the amount fixed by Mr. Herrick. He uses census figures concerning the number of farms under cultivation and the per cent mortgaged. The government figures show mortgages only for the farms managed by owners. Of these one-third are mortgaged for an average of $11.31 an acre. Estimating the number of rented farms being mortgaged in the same proportion as those operated by owners, the total for the country is given as $2,758,790,179. The average rate of farm interest paid is 7.4625 per cent according to the same authority, so that the total amount paid to the owners of mortgages annually is $222,306,970. This sum, large as it is, is but a small proportion of the value of the total crop possible on each acre, as has been worked out by many farm mortgage investment houses.

For the man who scoffs at the difference between 6 and 4 cents on each dollar the following computation will be interesting. The reader must think far enough to see, however, that an investment at 10 per cent, while promising larger returns than one at 6 per cent, may not at the same time have that assurance of security without which any investment is worthless. Each investment must be judged on its own merits. It is apparent that at the end of twenty years the difference in rates shown amounts to more than the original principal. The money doubles in amount in less than fifteen years at 6 per cent.

	5 Yrs.	10 Yrs.	15 Yrs.	20 Yrs.
An investment of $10,000 at 6%, compounded.....	$13,382	$17,907	$23,958	$32,060
The same investment at 4%, compounded........	$12,160	$14 800	$18,000	$20,900
Advantage of 6% investment over 4%...........	$ 1,222	$ 3,107	$ 5,957	$11,160

Brief Bits of Business News

—The Baltimore and Ohio road alone suffered loss to property amounting to nearly $3,000,000 during the floods in Ohio and Indiana according to estimates of the president, Daniel Williard. The total loss to all roads, not counting the very large item of loss of income, will be nearly $20,000,000 in the two states.

—It is said that J. P. Morgan, although he practically owned at least one large insurance company, carried no insurance on his life. He was one of the very few men of large affairs who do not carry large sums. Although life insurance is of less importance to men of large wealth, most of them recognize its value and some men carry as much as $1,000,000 in various companies. Life insurance gives ready cash for the executors, if it is needed for no other purpose.

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency

Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the

Illinois Trust & Savings Bank

Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidation of Other Banks

Capital and Surplus
$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. &
JACKSON BLVD.

ILLINOIS TRUST SAFETY DEPOSIT COMPANY

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

6 and % Sure 7

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth. - - Texas.

5½% and 6% Interest

The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.

G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

REAL ESTATE LOANS

6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%

During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet R UNIONVILLE, MO.

Pulpit Gowns
and Choir Vestments
Custom Tailoring
for Clergymen. Suits from $20.00
Pulpit Hangings
COX SONS & VINING
72-74 Madison Ave. New York

School and College

J. Alford Hanna of Auburn, Neb., a member of Bellevue College senior class, won first honors in the state oratorical contest and will represent Nebraska in the interstate contest at Wooster, Ohio.

According to a recent report of the federal bureau of education Oberlin College is more cosmopolitan than any other institution in the country save one. Oberlin's chapter of the Intercollegiate Cosmopolitan Club of America includes seventeen nationalities. At a recent entertainment "Nearer, My God, to Thee" was sung in seventeen languages in unison.

Nine students of Jamestown College joined the Presbyterian church March 23. These came forward at special student gatherings under the auspices of the Board of Education and evangelistic committee. Nearly the entire student body are Christians. President Kroeze was given a banquet upon his return from a trip East, when it was announced that a new building was given by a friend of the college. It will be called Gordon hall and will be used as a general college hall and for science.

The religious census at Lafayette College shows a remarkably small number of students without definite religious affiliation. Only two stated no preferences and only twenty-nine represented themselves as merely adherents. The remainder of the 555 are represented as follows: Presbyterians 223, Methodists 80, Lutherans 59, Reformed 42, Episcopalians 38, Catholics 36, Hebrews 15, Baptists 15, Evangelical 12, Congregationalists 10; nine other denominations were also represented.

Recent Evangelistic Activities

The Hendrick and Carter meetings are now in progress in Woodstock, Ill. More than 100 have signed cards signifying their acceptance of Christ.

Rev. F. Tonge of Davenport (Wash.) church has just finished two weeks' special services. The last two nights many stood to commence the Christian life.

The evangelical churches of Delaware, Ohio, united in a successful series of evangelistic meetings three weeks before Easter. Rev. Stephen Mahon, pastor of Asbury M. E. church, did the preaching. Over 500 cards were signed and there is a general spiritual awakening in the community, especially in the high school.

A union campaign conducted by Rev. Elmer P. Loose and party is under way at Wenona, Ill., and has already resulted in many confessions. Two choirs, one for grown folks and the other for young people, have been organized. A banquet to high school students has been one of the pleasant features of the campaign.

A union of the Presbyterian and M. E. churches in an evangelistic campaign at Milan, Ill., resulted in eighty-eight professions and sixty-four united with the two churches Easter morning in a union service, at which the two ministers assisted each other. Dr. H. P. Dunlop was the evangelist and Rev. Alfred Moody, pastor of the M. E. church, directed the music.

Evangelist David M. Conn closed a two weeks' union meeting of the Lemington Methodist and Presbyterian churches in Pittsburg, Pa., March 16. The meeting was full of interest from the start. The Presbyterian church there is the result of a union of two former churches effected last autumn and is in a flourishing condition. Rev. Charles Reed Zahniser is pastor.

Chester Birch held union evangelistic meetings with the Presbyterian and Methodist churches Feb. 19 to March 16 at Greenfield, Ohio. Meetings were held principally in the Presbyterian church. This village has two magnificent church buildings able to seat from 800 to 1,000 people, and each church has nearly a thousand members. Ralph W. Price, organist of the Presbyterian church, organized the chorus. Rev. Freeley Rohrer welcomed a number of members Easter.

What the Men Are Doing

"You can talk back" and "A glad hand from every man" are two mottoes which are said to have much to do with the success of the brotherhood Bible class of First church, Davenport, Iowa. The class was organized in 1908, and now has an average attendance of over seventy-five. Dr. Le Roy M. Coffman, pastor, is leader.

The brotherhood of First church, Woonsocket, R. I., has recently painted and frescoed the church interior.

Rev. Walter Getty, secretary of the national Brotherhood, participated in the formation of a men's club of First church, Battle Creek, Mich., March 19. The club will meet monthly to discuss social and civic matters.

In First church of Antrim, N. H., March 18 as personal guests of the pastor, Rev. F. A. Arbuckle, fifty men assembled at a banquet and organized a men's league, choosing as its object "religious, social and civic helpfulness."

Commissioners to the General Assembly

Birmingham—Minister, J. B. Stovall; elder, P. W. Acton.

Box Butte—Minister, Thomas C. Osborne; elder, C. F. McDowell.

Carlisle—Ministers, Thomas J. Ferguson, Francis H. Laird, Edwin M. Mulock; elders, David A. Kauffman, Joseph H. Graff, James F. Bell.

Central West—Minister, B. A. Filipi; elder, Charles Trutna.

Chester—Ministers, D. Wilson Hollinger, William Tenton Kruse, Charles R. Williamson, Hugh W. Rendall; elders, William A. Hofmann, William T. Ellis, Walter L. Wright, Jr., William H. Ridgway.

Council Bluffs—Minister, Elmer Aukerman; elder, H. H. Dickman.

Grand Rapids—Minister, Melvin E. Trotter; elder, R. B. Van der Veer.

Highland—Ministers, N. J. Lott, W. C. T. Adams; elders, P. T. Casey, J. G. Schaffer.

Jonesboro—Minister, Alonzo Yates; elder, W. J. Love.

Kirksville—Minister, Redmon Whitehead; elder, S. F. Stahl.

LaCrosse—Minister, Robert Audley Carnahan; elder, J. O. Engleman.

McClelland—Minister, William L. Metz; elder, E. W. Pitts.

McGee—Minister, W. C. Atwood; elder, W. A. McRea.

Minneapolis—Ministers, Stanley B. Roberts, James Steenson; elders, C. A. Donaldson, Edward Gamble.

Minnewaukan—Minister, N. E. Koehler; elder, George E. Tallmadge.

Monmouth—Ministers, Arthur Phillips, Frank Lukens; elders, Edward A. Sexsmith, J. Edmund Marryatt.

Morris and Orange—Ministers, John F. Patterson, William R. Bennett, George L. Richmond; elders, J. W. Dewar, R. C. Bartley, William M. Strong.

Mouse River—Minister, G. William Barnum; elder, A. D. Fairweather.

Nassau—Minister, Edward W. Abbey; elder, Daniel Baylis.

New Hope—Minister, A. J. Crawford; elder, J. O. Bennett.

Northern Arizona—Minister, Howard S. Clark; elder, William R. Johnston.

Oakland—Ministers, L. A. McAfee, James Curry, G. G. Eldredge; elders, J. W. Helmke, J. H. Plate, William Culbert.

Pendleton—Minister, B. F. Harper; elder, R. C. Brannin.

Pecos Valley—Minister, H. J. Cumpsten; elder, C. D. Wells.

Philadelphia North—Ministers, R. M. Labaree, R. P. D. Bennett, J. B. C. Mackie, Charles E. Burns; elders, J. Milton Colton, S. S. Chapman, H. S. Borneman, W. J. Mellon.

Pittsburg—Ministers, Maitland Alexander, William L. McEwan, James E. Garvin, Charles B. Wingerd, Stephen A. Hunter, Richard H. Coulter, William F. McKee, Samuel J. Glass; elders, John R. Gregg, William R. Crabbs, E. T. Jackson, John A. McCague, J. D. Grubbs, A. F. Toy, R. A. Bucher, Walter Long.

Portland — Ministers, Jacob E. Snyder, Thomas H. Walker; elders, George Scott, Charles P. Holmes.

Rock River—Minister, William G. Oglevee; elder, James Venable.

Rushville—Ministers, W. R. King, W. T. Reynolds; elders, T. E. Hamilton, C. B. Griffith.

San Francisco—Ministers, T. V. Moore, W. J. Fisher; elders, R. Cadwallader, Otto Hintz.

St. Paul—Ministers, George E. Davies, Farquehar D. McRae; elders, E. C. Stringer, George H. Cook.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Austin—Austin First, April 22, 8 p. m.
Binghamton—Owego First Union, April 21, 3:45 p. m.
Buffalo—Lancaster, April 21, 2:30 p. m.
Crawfordsville—Frankfort, April 21, 2 p. m.
Detroit—Detroit Trumbull Avenue, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Fargo—Erie, April 22, 10:30 a. m.
Flint—Ubly, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Fort Wayne—La Grange, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Hastings—Superior, April 22, 7:30 p. m.
Indiana—Evansville, April 21, 7:30 p. m. Delegates notify Rev. W. F. Padgett for entertainment.
Kansas City—Kansas City Benton Boulevard, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Kendall—Aberdeen, April 22, 7:30 p. m.
Lackawanna—Scranton Washburn Street, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Muncie—Anderson, April 21, 3 p. m. Pres-
Muskogee—Afton, April 18, 8 p. m.
byterial Missionary Society same time and place.
Niagara—Niagara Falls Pierce Avenue, April 21, 9:30 a. m.
Northumberland—Jersey Shore, April 21.
Omaha—Omaha First, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Otsego—Richfield Springs, April 21, 3 p. m.
Pueblo—Trinidad, April 22, 7:30 p. m.
St. Louis—St. Louis Washington and Compton Avenue, April 28, 8 p. m.
Shenango—Leesburg, April 21, 7:30 p. m. Conference 3:30 p. m. Train leaving New Castle 2:35 p. m. will be met at Leesburg.
Southern Arizona—Clifton, April 18.
Steuben—Bath, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Steubenville—Scio, April 21, 7:30 p. m.
Westchester—Peekskill, April 21, 4 p. m.
Wheeling—Wheeling Third, April 21, 7:30.

Resignations

Minnesota—St. Paul Westminster: G. A. Fisher.
New York—Sackets Harbor First: Frank Willcock.
Wisconsin—Oshkosh Second: A. J. Mann.

Calls

California—Los Angeles St. Luke's: W. G. Mills, San Pedro, accepts.
Colorado—Elizabeth and Kiowa: N. B. Cline, Fort Collins, accepts.
Illinois—Savanna: C. C. Brown, Muscatine, Iowa.
Iowa—Albia: W. E. Fisher, Greene, accepts.
Missouri—St. Louis Clifton Heights: Francis L. Goff.
Nebraska—Emerson: H. A. Brown, accepts.
New Jersey—Mount Holly: Frank Willcock, Sackets Harbor, N. Y., accepts.
New York—Lyon Falls: Edward W. Robinson, Auburn Seminary; Ontario Center: Thomas C. Bell, accepts; Rose: W. H. Niles, accepts; Nineveh: J. C. Curtin, accepts; Akron First: W. A. Carrington, Galeton, Pa., accepts.

A Self-Help College in Illinois

Blackburn College is succeeding nicely in the development of plans for a self-help college at Carlinville, Ill. The fact that there is now no such institution in the state makes it evident that there is ample room for it. There are many young people with marked native ability but lacking in the peculiar initiative that enables a boy or girl to leave home not only to obtain an education but to earn a living as well. Next September Blackburn will be in readiness to receive a large number of such students.

All students who avail themselves of this plan will work three hours a day and thus reduce expenses to a minimum. Next year the charge will be only $100 and later the trustees hope to be able to reduce this amount.

Farming, gardening, dairying, will all be done in the most scientific manner. A woman trained in domestic science will be in charge of the young women's dormitory, and will train young women for home making. Equal opportunities will be offered to both sexes and the right kind of young people will find here rare opportunity to work their way through an up-to-date college. The buildings are to be overhauled during the summer vacation. The college will have high educational standards. Eventually the college hopes to be able to say to any student with ability and willingness to work, "Blackburn College is open to you."

Ohio—Marion First: James A. Patterson, New York City.

Pennsylvania—Philadelphia Mizpah: Andrew Neilly, Princeton Seminary, accepts.

Texas—Port Arthur: J. A. Davis, Plano.

Installations

Minnesota—Red Wing: W. S. Middlemas, April 24; Farmington: Joseph A. Johnston, April 18.

Pennsylvania—Masontown: J. Byers Brice, March 16.

Supplies Arranged

Pennsylvania — Philadelphia Knox: H. C. Cooper.

Vacant Pulpits

Pennsylvania—Galeton: Ernest F. Schramm clerk.

Wyoming—Four churches: Rev. L. Harold Forde, Cheyenne.

Accessions

California—Oakland Brooklyn, 25, March 16, Henry K. Sanborne.

Colorado—Denver South Broadway, 14, F. W. Willman; Denver North, 18, March 23, G. W. Arms, Jr.; Denver First Avenue, 31, March 23.

Idaho—Grangeville, 8, March 30, J. A. Hedges; Boise Westminster, 8, March 30, M. W. Davis; Emmett, 3, March 30, S. A. Palmer; Soda Springs, 6, March 30, P. C. Irwin.

Illinois—Albion, 16, April 6, B. T. Watson; Princeville, 12, March 23, Max B. Wiles; Chicago Immanuel, 23, April 6, E. W. Symonds; Woodstock, 9, April 6, L. D. Beck; Chicago South Park, 8, April 6, D. C. Boyd; Joliet Central, 28, March 23, C. D. Jacobs; Chicago Normal Park, 26, April 6, O. M. Caward.

Iowa—Davenport First, 49, April 6, L. M. Coffman.

Indiana—Mishawaka, 11, March 23, A. C. Ormond; Plymouth, 12, April 6, W. C. Logan; Indianapolis churches, April 6: Home, 8, A. S. Buchanan; Sutherland, 2, William Carson; Grace, 8, A. C. V. Skinner; Irvington, 28, John S. Martin; Seventh, 15, Claude R. Shaver.

Kentucky—Winchester, 10, April 6, J. R. Crawford.

Michigan—Grand Rapids, 18, March 23-April 6, G. J. Rea.

Minnesota—Willman, 14, April 6, L. W. Gade; Minneapolis First, 17, J. T. Bergen; St. Paul Merriam Park, 42, March 30, G. E. Davies; Crookston, 11, R. C. Bailey; Minneapolis Westminster, 33, April 6, John E. Bushnell.

Missouri—Kansas City Central, 25, S. H. Jones; Kansas City First, 24, March 23, F. S. Arnold; Marshall Odell Avenue, 15, April 6 A. H. Stephens; Windsor Harbor, 13, March 30, W. A. MacMinn.

Montana—Bozeman, 39, March 25, R. M. Huston.

New Jersey—Laurel Springs, 22, March 30, C. S. Barrett; Phillipsburg First, 40, March 23, W. Brower Johnson.

New York—Brooklyn Greene Avenue, 24, March 23, G. H. Eggleston; New York City Woodlawn Heights, 12, April 6, W. F. Daum; Port Chester, 28, April 6, Ira Barnett.

Ohio—Portsmouth, 53, March 23, J. W. Dunning; Athens, 20, March 23, H. M. Thurlow.

Pennsylvania—Harrisburg Market Square, 53, April 6, J. Ritchie Smith; Susquehanna First, 21, April 6, R. C. Galbreath; Masontown, 16, March 30, J. Byers Brice; Steelton, 21, March 23; North East, 27, March 30; Philadelphia Disston Memorial, 41, March 30, H. C. McBride; Bethany, 59, March 30, R. E. L. Jarvis.

South Dakota—Flandreau, 3, April 6, K. J. Cardy.

Tennessee—Sale Creek, 13, March 23, S. G. Frazin; Chattanooga Third, 8, March 30, I. D. Steele; Maryville New Providence, 56 since January, H. S. Lyle.

Washington—Anacortes, 12, March 30, E. M. Calvin.

Wisconsin—Eau Claire, 15, March 30, W. T. Angus; Milwaukee Immanuel, 16, April 6, Paul B. Jenkins.

Obituary

Death notices will be inserted at the rate of one cent a word. PAYMENT MUST BE SENT WITH THE NOTICE. Those who ask their pastor to write such notices should be careful to hand him the money to forward with the copy.

BUTLER—Mrs. Margaret Graham Butler, beloved wife of Rev. James G. Butler, died at her home in Oswego, Ill., April 2, 1913. She was born in Philadelphia, Pa. At about 18 years of age she experienced religion and lived as a consistent Christian to the end. She was married to Mr. Butler in 1864. In 1870 she came with her husband to Illinois and was a faithful coworker with him in the different churches he served as pastor in the presbyteries of Cairo and Ottawa. By nature she was modest and retiring, of a sweet and loving disposition, unselfish, sympathetic, kind and helpful to all. She had been in failing health for several years, but lately something like pneumonia developed and she soon passed away to be with the Lord she loved. A grief stricken husband and daughter remain to mourn her loss.

The funeral services—tender, delicate and sacred—were held at her home April 5, conducted by Rev. E. H. Montgomery of Aurora. Interment in Oswego cemetery.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

PECK—Miss Mary J. Peck died at her home, 926 North Broad street, Elizabeth, N. J., on March 29.

On the death of her father, Aaron Peck, of East Orange, at the earnest wish of her only sister, the late Mrs. David H. Pierson, Miss Peck came to Elizabeth in 1865. Since that date she had been a constant and cherished member of her sister's household. The outstanding memory of those days, and indeed of the days of her earlier womanhood, is that of service. No one unacquainted with her life in the home can estimate the extent of her devoted ministration.

After the long test of years, to approve a friend's estimate of her, "she had no faults," need not be charged, perhaps, to the exaggeration of indebted kinship. She uniformly inspired confidence and affection by the high tone of her Christian character. Her life may be summed up in one word, "grace," both in its higher divine and lower human senses. The former established and glorified the latter—"Thy gentleness hath made me great."

"Miss Peck was a Christian of very wide sympathies," it was said at her funeral services. "She was a charter member of Westminster church, with which she was connected, and her life in it was a record of good deeds and of service for her Master. She was actively interested in all the work of the church, but her chief interest was in the home mission work of the Woman's Society, of which she was treasurer for upwards of forty years. From the beginning she cooperated with the organizers of the Woman's Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A., and from its early days had been a member of the executive committee. To recite her official service is to speak of only a small part of her life work, for her interest was as wide as the kingdom of God."

One who knew her well says: "Faithfulness, a marked trait of her character, was most apparent to those who labored with her in church and mission work; for no duty assumed by her was too small to claim her whole attention, and in every way her friends could count upon her cordial, prompt and constant cooperation in the work at hand. Her cheerful manner, her kindly spirit, which led her to see the best in everyone, and her courageous optimism heartened many a discouraged worker, her presence at such times being a veritable blessing. 'I always worked better after she had been in my room,' was the loving testimony of a member of the office force at mission headquarters in New York. Tuesday, the board meeting day, was kept as strictly for serving the Master in the cause of home missions as was Sunday for church services.

"Many sought her counsel and found it sympathetic and discerning. Many might testify to the interest, personal and practical, she took in their welfare. She held her time and strength and possessions as trust funds; to be found faithful in stewardship was the primary motive of her life,

"For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the wrong that needs resistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that I can do.

* * * * * *

"Now the laborer's task is o'er;
Now the battle day is past;
Now upon the farther shore
Lands the voyager at last."

Preparing for Children's Day

"This is the best program you have yet published," was the comment of a prominent musical critic who is familiar with the best Sunday school music, after he had examined the Presbyterian board's Children's Day exercise for this year. "Do not lose time by getting a number of samples of programs issued by outside publishers when you can get the best by sending to your own Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work, without a penny of expense to your Sunday school," says Dr. Henry, the secretary.

A plentiful supply of recitations, special exercises and songs is furnished for the younger children, all of which helps to make the Children's Day service particularly interesting to parents. A hymn especially prepared for adult Bible classes is included in this year's program, for the Bible class movement has become such an important feature of the modern Sabbath school that they should be recognized in this great Sabbath school festival. An attractive collection box in the form of a frame chapel building such as is used by many mission Sunday schools has been provided and you will find it effective in developing an interest in the Children's Day offering.

Write at once to Alexander Henry, D. D., secretary, Witherspoon building, Philadelphia, Pa., for a sample set of supplies, or if you wish to save time, write to Dr. Henry stating the number of pupils for whom you desire Children's Day supplies and a complete outfit will be forwarded at once, transportation charges prepaid.

A guaranty of quality

A friend of mine had occasion to buy a fountain pen. He chose one from the stationer's display and asked if it was guaranteed to give satisfaction.

The salesman answered that it was not and handed my friend another, saying, "Here is the ——— pen [mentioning a well known make], which is fully guaranteed."

The first pen had no name. The other was one of the widely advertised kind. Manufacturers who are willing to spend money in advertising are most generally willing to guarantee their product. In fact, advertising is really a guaranty of quality, for if the article wasn't sure to make good it would not be worth while to advertise it —which is another good reason for patronizing our advertisers.

THE ADVERTISING
MANAGER

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES.
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

ACCIDENTALLY DISCOVERED ROOT WILL BRING happiness to slaves of tobacco habit and indigestion. Gladly send particulars. E. M. Stokes, Mohawk, Florida.

WOOSTER SUMMER SCHOOL IS NOT AN ARISTOCRATIC school for a favored few, but a helpful school for the working many. It meets every demand. It does not try to make money. It wants to pay expenses and to help as many as possible. If that is the sort of school that interests you, come and get acquainted. J. H. Dickason, Prin., Wooster, O.

MISS "M," TRAINED NURSE, MEDICAL STUDENT, desires position for summer. Will travel. Care of The Continent.

FOR CHURCH WORKERS—LADIES' AID AND MISSIONARY Societies are raising money without donations selling Valentine's Absorbent Dusters and Dust Mops. The only fifty-cent mop. Special offer by letter. Agents and societies should write. Valentine Duster Company, Urbana, Ohio.

PASTORS AND PARENTS WRITE TO US ABOUT young men who have come to Chicago to enter business or school life. We endeavor by personal invitation and influence to bring them into church relationship. Details gladly furnished. Rev. Francis M. Fox, Presbyterian Brotherhood, 509 South Wabash avenue, Chicago.

REAL ESTATE

MOVE TO COLLEGE TOWN AWAY FROM FLOODS. Miami Realty Co;, Oxford, Ohio.

ALFALFA—THE ROYAL LEGUME IS INCREASING $15 an acre land in the Southeast to $50 and $100 value. Four to six tons per acre, selling at $15 to $20 a ton, net growers $50 to $75 an acre annually. Send for free alfalfa booklet. M. V. Richards, Land and Industrial Agent, Southern Ry., Room 22, Washington, D. C.

HEALTH RESORTS

PENNOYER SANITARIUM (ESTABLISHED 1857), Chicago suburb, Northwestern Railway. Grounds (100 acres) fronting Lake Michigan. Modern, homelike. For rest, recreation, treatment. Booklet. Address Pennoyer Sanitarium, Kenosha, Wis.

TOURS

EUROPE MEDITERRANEAN ROUTE $370
Sails July 1 from New York. Party limited.
University Man, Conductor.
The Shelton Tours, 222 Old South Bldg., Boston, Mass

CHAUTAUQUA ORIENTAL TOURS

Egypt and Palestine May 10, $470. Leadership, Dr. Geo. L. Robinson of McCormick Seminary. Other tours to Central Europe, British Isles and Scandinavian countries.

The Chautauqua Tours (Inc.)
1521 Marquette Building :: Chicago, Ill.

A 4 Day Tour through

Glacier National Park

by Automobile, Horseback, Stage and Launch

for $$22^{\underline{00}}$ Low Fares Every Day

BREAK your journey to or from the coast by a stop-over at Glacier National Park. It will be a wonderful experience. A few days in this scenic wonderland will provide material for a lifetime of vivid, pleasant recollections—and at a comparatively trifling cost.

For instance, $22 covers the total expense of a four day tour to exquisite Lake St. Mary in the very heart of the Park, by automobile, horseback, launch and stage, including a visit to the luxurious Chalet Camps at Many-Glacier and Going-to-the-Sun—the paradise of the lake trout fisherman. An almost unlimited number of other tours covering one day or an entire season may be arranged on the same basis.

Low Fares Every Day

The accommodations throughout the Park cannot be excelled. In addition to the famous chain of Swiss Chalet Camps, a magnificent new hotel has just been completed offering every modern luxury and convenience. It is built entirely of logs on Swiss Chalet lines in perfect harmony with its natural setting. Every room is electrically lighted and heated, swimming pool and shower baths will be found in basement. Enormous open fireplaces typify and crystallize the spirit of hospitality and generous welcome that is evident from the moment of your arrival.

An excellent opportunity is afforded to observe the tribal dances and ceremonials of the Blackfeet Indians—one of the most interesting and picturesque of all the surviving tribes.

Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, 1915.

Write for Aeroplane Map and Special Booklets

Very complete descriptive literature explaining every feature and including a large Aeroplane Map of the entire Park, in colors, will be mailed on request. An interview with one of our representatives who has personally visited Glacier Park may be arranged. Write for full information today.

H. A. NOBLE, Gen. Pass. Agt.,
Great Northern Railway
Dept. 123 St. Paul, Minn.
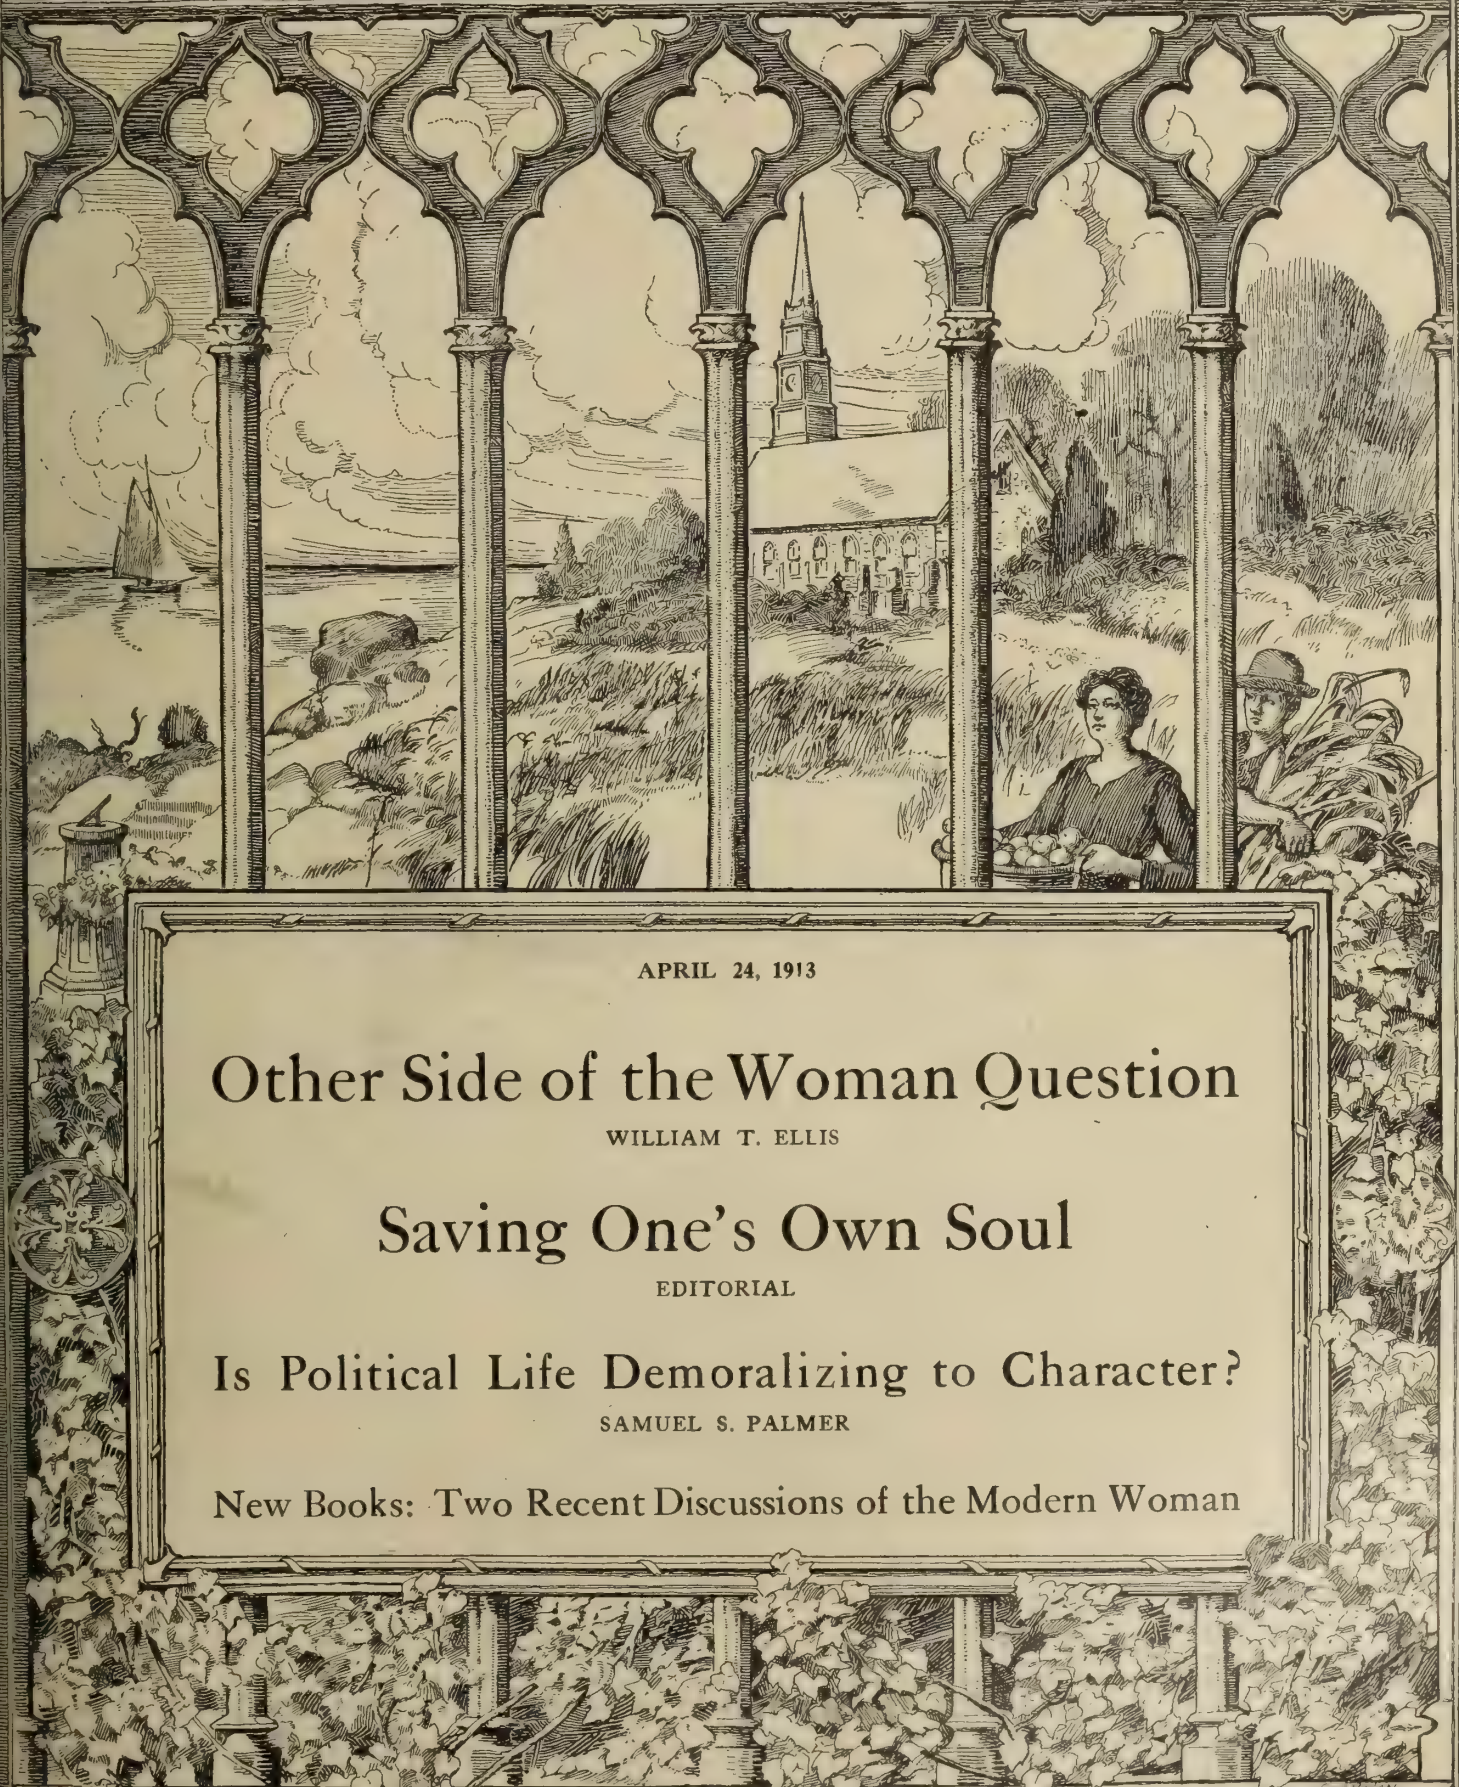
122C

"See America First"
GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY
National Park Route

SparksMarionE †jan14
1205 Springfield av

The CONTINENT



APRIL 24, 1913

Other Side of the Woman Question
WILLIAM T. ELLIS

Saving One's Own Soul
EDITORIAL

Is Political Life Demoralizing to Character?
SAMUEL S. PALMER

New Books: Two Recent Discussions of the Modern Woman

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

The Selection of a School

is a subject which requires the fullest consideration. THE CONTINENT's Educational Bureau has on file information regarding all the principal institutions of the country and will gladly cooperate with parents and students in making a choice. This service is entirely free to readers of THE CONTINENT. Begin your investigation in time to permit a thorough inquiry. Address

The Continent Educational Bureau
509 S. Wabash Avenue - - - Chicago

Illinois

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy. Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Tennessee

Ward Seminary For Girls and Young Women 42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports. For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres., Nashville, Tenn.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY
Ideal location. Coeducational.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN OXFORD, OHIO FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalog of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is one of the largest institutions of learning in the United States.

Thorough Instruction at Lowest Expense.

Catalog mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President.
O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas

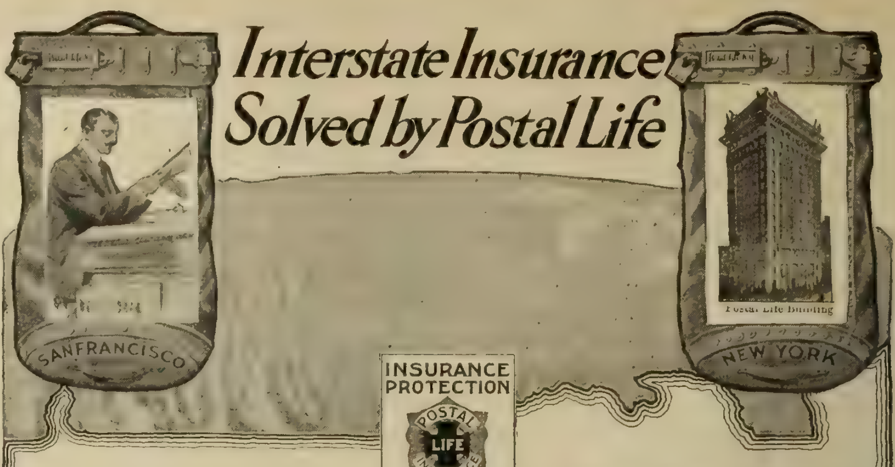
Vocational-Cultural for young women

Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD A Cultural and Practical School
FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE
RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN



Interstate Insurance Solved by Postal Life

Receives business from every State—direct

Pays claims in every State—promptly

THERE are 252 legal reserve life-insurance companies in the country, all operating through agents, yet only 33 of these companies do business in the State of New York.

Similarly, of the largest four New York companies—"the giants" so-called — not one does business in Texas; two of them do not enter Wisconsin, and the fourth does no business in ten States.

The States will not let agents solicit business unless their companies take out licenses, pay so-called "occupation" taxes, and submit to other State exactions, which some companies can not, or will not, do.

The Postal Life, a New York company, complying with all the strict requirements of that State, is the only insurance institution that receives business from every State in the Union, thus enabling everyone to arrange insurance direct.

The POSTAL is, in quite a true sense, an interstate institution and it can transact an interstate business, because it is a non-agency company; it employs no agents and does not send them into the various States.

It is therefore exempt from the various expensive requirements applicable to companies employing agents and agencies. Postal policyholders get the benefit.

THE one who wants insurance in the Postal Life writes, as a citizen of the United States, direct to the Company's New York headquarters shown above—its only place of business. The Postal answers by mail, and it is thus subject to the United States Postal authorities—also to the Federal Courts.

Uncle Sam brings letters from applicants, wherever they live, and takes the Company's answers wherever they are directed.

Insurance policies thus arranged for are valid and binding wherever policyholders may reside; policy-claims are paid by checks mailed direct to the beneficiaries—and promptly.

STRONG POSTAL POINTS

First: Old-line legal reserve insurance — not fraternal or assessment.

Second: Standard policy reserves, now $10,000,000. Insurance in force, $50,000,000.

Third: Standard policy provisions, approved by the State Insurance Department.

Fourth: Operates under strict State requirements and subject to the United States postal authorities.

Fifth: High medical standards in the selection of risks.

Sixth: Policyholders' Health Bureau provides one free medical examination each year, if desired.

⁂

See How Easy It Is

In writing simply say: Mail me insurance particulars for my age as per THE CONTINENT of April 24.

In your letter be sure to give:

1. Your Full Name.
2. Your Occupation.
3. The Exact Date of your Birth.

No agent will be sent to visit you: the Postal Life dispenses with agents and gives its policyholders the benefit of their commissions.

Postal Life Insurance Company

Wm. R. Malone, President

35 Nassau Street, New York

Net Cost Low in the POSTAL because

1st. Commission Dividends, corresponding to agents' commissions, less the moderate advertising charge, go to Postal Policyholders the first year.

2d. Renewal-Commission Dividends and Office-expense Savings, covered by the $9\frac{1}{2}\%$

guaranteed dividends, go to Policyholders in subsequent years.

3d. Contingent Policy dividends, based on the company's earnings, still further reduce the cost each year after the first.

Indiana

—WABASH COLLEGE—
CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks. Ask for Catalog by number only

C105 Church Furnit're	School Desks S105
L105 Lodge Furniture	Opera Chairs O105
B105 Bank Furniture	Office Desks D105

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of THE CONTINENT is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to THE CONTINENT. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing THE INTERIOR (Established 1870) and THE WESTMINSTER (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
EVERETT SISSON, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879.
Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 1913

SAVING ONE'S OWN SOUL.............. 557
EDITORIAL—
Red Flannel Shirts for the Heathen... 560
Fountains of Human Love Smitten Open 560
The Lure of the Far Away........... 560
Right of a Church Board to Have Ideas 561
"Settled" in Canada; Why Not Here?.. 561
THE WORLD.......................... 558
RELIGIOUS WORLD.................... 559
PREACHING ON WHAT LEVEL? ....Cleland B. McAfee 562
INFLUENCE OF POLITICAL LIFE ON CHARACTER...............Samuel S. Palmer 562
THE OTHER SIDE OF THE WOMAN QUESTION (with Illustration)....W. T. Ellis 563
INTERMEDIATE CATECHISM.. D. S. Schaff 565
THE HOME COUNCIL—Two Sides of the "Care" Question..........Ethel Colson 566
YOUNG AMERICA—The Boy and the Near-Boy. Part II....Nora Archibald Smith 567
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 568
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE........E. A. Wicher 569
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE......W. T. Ellis 569
MISSIONARY WORK—
Continuation Pronouncements in China 570
NEW BOOKS—
A New Discussion of Modern Women.. 571
Sermons, Addresses and Lectures.... 571
Novels in Miniature................ 571
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter XXV.—Continued..........Richard S. Holmes 572
THE OPEN HEARTH—
Work Among Negroes in the North.. 574
Sunday School Is Evangelistic........ 574
WAYS OF WORKING.................... 574
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS FIELD—Beginning 575
FINANCIAL SITUATION................ 581
CALENDAR AND RECORD................ 583

Around the Shop

The late J. Pierpont Morgan is said to have been "a harder man to get at" than even the Around-the-Shop Man, whom some good folk have sought to discover in person. It is probable, however, that no check which required Mr. Morgan's indorsement ever failed to reach him, and it is certain that subscriptions to The Continent from the Around-the-Shop Man's mail friends never fail to reach their destination. (Note: In reading aloud, please spell out the word "mail.")

Those who know Mr. Morgan deny that he was without a sense of humor, though the joke may usually have been on the other fellow. But, if the following anecdote be true, he tempered his joke in at least one instance with a saving qualification of a practical character:

A Methodist minister had written Mr. Morgan asking a contribution toward the construction of a new church.

"Being a strict Episcopalian," Mr. Morgan responded, "I cannot consistently help in the erection of a new Methodist church.

"P. S.—It occurs to me that it will be necessary for you to tear the old church down. For that purpose I gladly contribute $250."

—

Always in the world's history there have been folk who would give more gladly of effort and money to tearing down than to building up. The Around-the-Shop Man rejoices that his lot has been cast with an enterprise and with a people who seek to create and not destroy. The Continent is always ready to smash at evil where evil becomes too obstreperous, but it finds plenty to do in helping to establish a Christian world.

You and we are building, but it is a great task and a long one. We need your neighbor with us. Say the word, will you not, that will put him to his task, or that will give him a help that will make his task come easier? (A whole year for only Two Fifty.)

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

Church Chime Peal BELLS
Memorial Bells a Specialty.
McShane Bell Foundry Co., Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

HARRY W. JONES
Church Architect :: MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.

1500 MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS
Now in use. For Catalogues, Address
M. P. MÖLLER, HAGERSTOWN, MD.

Church Organs
BUILT BY
Hutchings Organ Co., 18 Tremont Street BOSTON, MASS

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

PIPE AND REED ORGANS AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros."
on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

—MONEY—
Do you need it in your Church work? The International Banks will help you raise it. Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg., Columbus, O.

TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED
Samples at Wholesale
Get in Business for Yourself
Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.
Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.
MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating; valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company
218 S WABASH AV. CHICAGO
NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

15,000 CHURCHES USE THE THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Noiseless, dust-proof, self-collecting, saves ¼ cost other services. Uses shallow glass—no tipping of head. Our SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER makes purchase easy. Outfits on trial—state number of communicants.
Thomas Communion Service Co., Box L, Lima, Ohio.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

Registered Trade Mark Established Half a Century

Dress Linens for 1913

Our stock of Dress Linens for the coming season is most complete. All the new weaves and shades are fully represented. Attention is especially directed to the following:

At 50c a yard, a 36 inch yarn dyed Linen, French Finish, in a range of 35 shades, also white and black.

At 65c a yard, a 47 inch French Linen (medium weight), special soft finish, in white, black and all the fashionable Spring colors.

At 85c a yard, a 47 inch French Crash (non-crushable), in a range of over 30 new shades; also white, natural and black.

At 85c a yard, a 36 inch yarn dyed Austrian Etamine, correct weight and finish for Dresses and Suits. All the leading shades; also white, cream and black.

At 95c a yard, a 45 inch yarn dyed Mercerized Linen, soft finish, all colors, cream, natural and white.

At $1.10 a yard, a 47 inch French Crepe Linen, very much in demand for smart Dresses, in white, cream and all the latest Paris shades.

At $2.00 a yard, a 45 inch Linen Ratine, the season's smartest fabric for Coat Suits and Dresses, in white and all the fashionable colors.

Dutch Hand Loom Linen, 47 inches wide, white or oyster white, in various weights, 75c to $1.25 yd.

Samples of any of these lines, except bordered materials, mailed upon request.

James McCutcheon & Co., 5th Ave., 33d & 34th Sts., New York

What the Graduates of the College of EMPORIA are doing

MEN

Ministers	51	43 per cent
Missionaries	15
Theological students	6
Y. M. C. A. secretaries	5
College and university professors		16
High school principals and teachers		21
Doctors and Medical students		12
Lawyers and law students		10
Forestry service		5
Other professions		9
Business		20
Farming		10
Total		179

WOMEN

Teachers	54
Wifes of ministers and missionaries	14
Other home makers	64
Total	132

With very few exceptions, ALL the graduates of the college—ministers, college professors, high school teachers, doctors, lawyers, business men, wives and mothers—are active and earnest in the service of Christ.

HENRY COE CULBERTSON, President, :: Emporia, Kansas

Rev. Mark A. Matthews, D.D.
Moderator of the General Assembly

will use the route of "General Assembly Special" from Chicago to Atlanta, via Cincinnati and Chattanooga, en route from Seattle.

Tickets permit stopover at Chattanooga on both going and return trip.

For complete itinerary of the "General Assembly Special," via the Big Four Route, Queen and Crescent Route and Southern Railway, leaving Chicago 11:00 p. m. May 13, write or call on

C. C. CLARK	A. J. LYTLE	STANTON CURTIS
G. A. Big Four Route	N. P. A. Queen & Crescent	N. W. P. A. Southern Ry.
228 S. Clark St.	56 W. Adams St.	56 W. Adams St.

CHICAGO, ILL.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, No. 17 APRIL 24, 1913 WHOLE No. 2239

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

Saving One's Own Soul

"DON'T BOTHER ABOUT SAVING YOUR OWN SOUL; THAT'S SELFISH; THINK ABOUT OTHER PEOPLE."

This is counsel in these days frequently offered to persons uneasy over their own irreligion.

And the counsel is honestly offered for religion's sake. Many church people—and not all of them "liberal Christians" either—today consider that the old evangelical idea of every man's seeking salvation for himself is a straight contradiction of the unselfishness of Jesus.

To follow him, they argue, one must go through the world as he did, looking only to serve the happiness of one's neighbors. To be concerned about whether one is himself going to get safely into heaven seems to them opposite to Christlike self-forgetfulness.

In basic principle they are right. Make out clearly that a certain thing is selfish and you have certainly made it out to be unchristian. If seeking the salvation of one's own soul were really selfish, it would, according to the standard of Christ, not be religious at all.

And no doubt thousands have "fled from wrath to come" in pure selfishness. But they had to travel beyond that before they actually "got religion."

◆

In the real gospel sense, taking care that one's own soul shall be saved is not self-interest at all, but merely the honest answer of an awakened life to the first responsibility that God exacts of a man.

Saving souls is the preeminent undertaking on which the Heavenly Father is asking man's help. When therefore any man rises to the mood where he wishes to help God—which is the beginning of religion—the earliest task God sets him at is to bring his own soul into harmony—get himself saved.

If anybody proposes to serve God in cleaning up the world, the necessary point for him to begin is the nearest—with himself.

"The Son of Man came to seek and to save that which was lost." It is plain what Jesus meant when he said that. The men he called lost—already lost—were not thrust away into torment nor subjected yet to judicial sentence for their sins.

The trouble with them—the loss in which they were lost—was simply that they had no fellowship with God. Therefore they had none of his comfort in their sorrows; no feeling of his presence to support them through their hardships; none of his strength to help them in battle against sin. And not sharing his purposes, they never felt the thrill of laying hands to a work in which God asked their aid.

So wandering through the world aimless and hopeless, laden with iniquity and crushed by trial, untouched by any noble passion and ignorant of any call to usefulness in God's world, dreaming neither of purity nor of peace now or hereafter, these pitiful "sheep without a shepherd" whom the Lord beheld, could be pictured by no other word so well as his own terse, homely, heart-breaking word "lost."

These he came to "save." And saving those wandering souls meant everything opposite to their loss.

◆

A soul's salvation is a soul's restoration to fellowship with its Maker—to partaking of his strength and to partnership in his presence.

And the primal reason why a soul should seek to be saved—as God in Christ is always seeking to save—is not future bliss but present right and present power.

It goes without saying that God's fellowship granted to a soul in the present must reach into eternity, and that for eternity as for time it is assurance of joy—just as separation from God, if the soul persists in choosing that, also extends to eternity.

But the salvation Christ offers is in essence not a mortgage on happiness to come, but a rectification of life and a commission to service beginning forthwith—at any moment when in free will a man consents to accept it.

Nothing therefore can be more perfectly ethical than an intelligent desire to be saved. It is indeed the first spontaneous motion of the soul when a human being perceives that this is a moral universe in which the Creator has put us all to live.

Some things are right; some things are wrong; and God rules over all things to uphold the right and put down the wrong—these are lessons so near to intuition that no child hearing them doubts the teaching. And human nature retains such affinity for primitive truth that most men grown accept all this still as an axiom of existence.

Many, of course, acknowledge it without considering its bearing on themselves. But if once a man connects the being of God with duty in his own life, he cannot get away from this conclusion:

A man's life can amount to nothing of lasting use in the world that God has made, unless like God he too is living to uphold right and put down wrong.

And when any man to the depth of his soul thus wishes to have his own life fitted to the will and work of God, he is seeking to be saved.

◆

As already insisted, this movement of the soul toward God is absolutely ethical. It is absolutely superior to selfishness. It is straight, unmixed response to fundamental obligation.

To be sure, a man knows that if he moves through life on a line with God's organization of the world, he is moving toward peace. Nothing ill can come to a man now or hereafter who sincerely commits himself to the doing of God's will.

But that faith in the safety of righteousness is not selfish; it is only a piece of the comprehensive faith that righteousness is the common safety of all mankind—the sole sure safety for any man.

Moreover, the soul which sees its first and most inevitable obligation to be the squaring of its own purposes and acts with God's will, adopts a principle of life which is in itself most unselfish.

The will of God is not the purification of one life alone, but the purification of all lives. The man therefore who has begun to follow God's will in his own soul must go on with it through all the other lives beyond himself which he has power and opportunity to influence.

Here is complete salvation which comes at length in power to many whose first motive in turning to Christ may have been the selfish retreat to a safe refuge from unhappiness after death.

For their retreat into Christ brings them in contact with an electric power that forthwith forces them out of retreat into advance—advance to unselfish service—which is full salvation.

The World

China Asks for Christian Prayers Next Sunday

For the first time in the history of the world a non-Christian nation has asked for the prayers of Christians. An official request was made by the Chinese government last Thursday to all the Christian churches in China to set aside next Sunday, April 27, as a day of prayer that China may be guided to a wise solution of the critical problems besetting her. The appeal was sent by telegraph to governors and high officials within whose jurisdiction Christian communities are found and also to leaders of the various missions. Prayer is requested for the government and the president of the republic (the latter yet to be elected), for the national assembly, for the constitution about to be drafted, for recognition of the republic by the great powers, for the election of strong and virtuous men to office, and for the maintenance of peace.

Representatives of the provincial authorities are instructed to attend the prayer services where publicly held. A service of this character has already taken place in Peking at the request of the government.

According to the Associated Press, which transmits the foregoing report, the action of the government has given unbounded satisfaction in missionary circles in China and is regarded as most striking evidence of the extraordinary changes which are proceeding in the Chinese nation.

The request for prayer addressed to the missionaries and churches of China has appealed most strongly to all friends of China and Chinese missions at home. Secretary Arthur J. Brown of the Presbyterian Foreign Board, who is chairman of the committee of reference of the general foreign missions conference, and representatives of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America united in a request to the clergymen and churches of all denominations in North America to join with the Chinese churches in prayer. The Methodist board addressed a special appeal to its constituency, as did the Presbyterian Woman's Foreign Missionary Society and the Illinois Christian Endeavor union.

* * *

Japan Affronted by California Land Bills

California's legislature has been giving an exhibition of anti-Japanese sentiment which has produced a counter display of hostility and belligerence in Japan. So dangerous did the situation become that on Saturday President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan felt forced to take a hand. The occasion was the passage by the lower house and the apprehended passage by the state senate of a bill forbidding aliens, ineligible to citizenship, from holding real estate. Naturalization is open only to white persons and persons of African descent, and the Japanese have been excluded as Mongolians. It was not denied that the measure was directed against them.

Secretary Bryan in a telegram to Governor Hiram Johnson conceded in behalf of the President the right of California to legislate according to its judgment, but urged a recognition of the serious international character of the pending legislation. The President advised against the use of the words "ineligible to citizenship," preferring general terms. In several states and in the District of Columbia there are statutes prohibiting alien ownership, but the language is such that no particular nationality can take exception to it.

Under the existing treaty Japan claims she is entitled to receive the same treatment as that accorded "the most favored nation," so in reality her grievance is against the United States rather than against California. The present agitation is likely to bring up the whole naturalization question, possibly before the supreme court. The Japanese object to being classified as Mongols, but doubtless they were so considered by Congress when the law was passed in 1802 and amended in 1870. It is also asserted that the technical force of the Japanese protest is broken by the fact that Americans are not in practice permitted to own land in Japan, though nominally permitted to do so under the treaty.

Meanwhile mass meetings have been held in Japan to protest against the alien land legislation in America and to denounce the "supine" attitude of the Japanese government. Talk of a resort to arms was cheered, and one speaker, a deputy, suggested the dispatch of a Japanese fleet to California as the first step toward establishing Japan on an absolutely equal footing with the United States. The most unfortunate phase of the anti-American clamor is the feeling it aroused against the American Christian missionaries and their work. Five years ago California proposed school laws strongly resented by the Japanese, and it seems evident that the resentment has far from subsided.

* * *

The Belgian Strike as a Political Force

Belgium's great political strike came quite as predicted by the leaders of the manhood suffrage movement. Man after man in the cities and towns of the kingdom laid down his tools or quit his work because the Socialist party's demand for the abolition of plural voting was unheeded by the government and the Clerical majority in the parliament. The number on strike was estimated at 350,000, and all the provinces were affected. Among the last of the workers to go out were the union printers in Brussels, and on Saturday the fifteen daily papers of the capital were crippled. The hosts of the idle were reported to be remarkably orderly, while the government's attitude was firm to the point of stubbornness, pending action by the parliament.

Active or tacit support is being given the strike by many employers. Some of them promised to continue their workmen's wages during the strike, and other Liberals and Radicals of the wealthy class are said to be privately contributing funds. Unions of Catholic workmen, known as Christian unions to distinguish them from the Socialist trade organizations, did not join the crusade.

One of the most serious results of the strike was its effect on the international exposition which was to open at Ghent on April 26. Three-fifths of the British exhibitors decided to withdraw from participation, and many of the French and other foreign exhibitors have done the same.

A political as contrasted with an industrial strike is unknown in America, though it was tried with some success in Russia in 1905. Twenty years ago there was a similar strike in Belgium for universal suffrage, which was granted with the plural vote feature included. But never before has the cessation of work been so extensive or unanimous nor so carefully prepared for in advance. With no effective constitutional way of making themselves felt the working masses turn to the strike as a natural weapon, and even though the immediate object is not attained the effect will be tremendously educational to all classes, and especially encouraging to the organized Socialists. In this country there are probably sufficient safety valves to prevent such an outbreak, but the continent of Europe has still some lessons to learn in the matter of democracy and freedom.

* * *

Three-Class Suffrage System in Prussia

Prussia is another European country which has the three-class suffrage system. Each group of voters pays an equal sum in taxation and has equal political power, the result being that in some districts one voter of the first class has the power of a thousand third class voters. Thus in the diet 600,000 Socialists were able to elect only six representatives in 1908, while one wing of the Conservative party with 60,000 voters elected sixty. Two wings of the Conservatives with 417,000 voters elected 212 members, but the Socialists and Radicals with 710,000 voters elected only forty-two members. A surprising fact chronicled by The Daily News of Chicago is that the German chancellor and six Prussian ministers must vote in the third class at the elections for the Prussian diet May 16—presumably because their financial status is lower than their political standing.

* * *

Belligerents Accept Basis of Peace

The Balkan alliance, very considerably weakened by internal dissensions, will follow Turkey in accepting the peace proposals of the European powers, according to reports the first of the week. Servia, yielding to outside suggestions, several days ago withdrew her troops from before Scutari, and King Nicholas of Montenegro was thereupon reluctantly impelled to abandon the siege. Bulgarian and Servian troops are believed to have clashed at Monastir, and Greece is uneasy. The final disposition of the conquered territory and the erection of the autonomous state of Albania are two problems which it may be difficult to solve without further bloodshed.

* * *

Progress of the Tariff Anxiously Watched

From the standpoint of politics, and in less degree of commerce also, the most important current happenings in the country are at Washington, where Congress is working over the new tariff schedules and the new income tax. The outcome is as yet indeterminate and cannot now be forecast. A word of warning may well be uttered to those persons—and there are not a few such—who expect a secular millennium to come by way of the national capital. The tariff is only one incident in the nation's prosperity or adversity—good or bad crops, peace in Europe, the increased production of gold; these and other less apparent factors are also determinant influences in the country's welfare.

President Wilson is said to apprehend no serious business disturbance as a result of the pending tariff bill except here and there "for effect." Any attempt to touch wool and sugar has always brought forth strong protests. For example, a planter at a small town in Louisiana has sent The Continent and other journals of the country an elaborate series of arguments against free sugar. However, various editors have been pointing out that a state which is strenuously opposed to the Democratic tariff policy should not regularly vote the Democratic ticket by large majorities and send delegations to Congress bearing the Democratic label but advocating high protective policies. In other words, the state is advised to forget civil war issues to vote on present-day questions.

Meantime President Wilson appears to have "charmed" Congress through his policy of going to meet the members face to face and cheerfully insisting that he is a human being and not merely an institution—"a remote island of jealous power," as he phrased it. The New York Tribune declares that the President's policy is making it easier for the average legislator to keep a mind on duty rather than on spoils.

* *

Religious Belief of Morgan as Expressed in His Will

J. Pierpont Morgan's will was made public Saturday, a few days after his burial at Hartford, Connecticut. It opens with a striking expression of his religious belief, as follows: "I commit my soul into the hands of my Saviour in full confidence that, having redeemed it and washed it in his most precious blood, he will present it faultless before the throne of my Heavenly Father; and I entreat my children to maintain and defend at all hazard and at any cost of personal sacrifice the blessed doctrine of the complete atonement for sin through the blood of Jesus Christ, once suffered, and through that alone."

The will leaves $500,000 to St. George's Episcopal church of New York, $100,000 to the New York diocese for missionary stations in the state and a like sum to the House of Rest for Consumptives. Liberal provision is made for relatives, friends, employees and servants, and the residue is left to his son, J. P. Morgan the younger, who is regarded as his father's financial successor. The son is specially requested to continue to contribute to the great maternity hospital in New York City, but no other charitable bequests are made.

In regard to the vast and valuable collections of art treasures, which are left to the son and the grandson, Mr. Morgan's will states that his intention was to make them permanently available for the instruction and pleasure of the American people, and voices a hope that the legatees will carry out this intention. No appraisement of the estate has yet been made, but estimates are from $100,000,000 up.

* *

—The romance of war is passing. Instead of being seated on the back of a spirited charger when he made his recent triumphal entry into Adrianople King Ferdinand came into the town by motor car. But the Bulgarian victory was none the less real, even though its setting was modernized.

Religious World

Russell Libel Suit Fails in Canada

The suit for criminal libel brought by "Pastor" C. T. Russell of Brooklyn against Rev. J. J. Ross, minister of the Baptist congregation in Hamilton, Ontario, has completely failed. The action was based upon a pamphlet which Mr. Ross published dealing with Russell and Russellism. The suit was instituted last December. In the first trial the sitting magistrate refused permission to the defense to cross-examine Russell, and on this point appeal was taken to the court above, which promptly reversed the ruling.

A citation for Russell to appear in court in Hamilton was, of course, unenforcible upon a resident of the United States, but after long delay the "Millennial Dawn" leader consented to go to Hamilton voluntarily. His examination and cross-examination occupied five hours, and was an ordeal so severe that the "pastor" evidently decided that he did not wish to risk going through it again, for immediately after his return to Brooklyn, he wrote to Mr. Ross offering to withdraw the case if the latter would "apologize in a mild form" and promise not to write any more pamphlets.

Mr. Ross emphatically refused apology, however "mild," and the case went to the grand jury with a full transcript of Russell's testimony. On examination of this the jury promptly returned "no bill," and thus the case was completely thrown out of court. The ministers' association of Hamilton stood by Mr. Ross steadfastly through the whole controversy, and the entire city congratulated him delightedly on the overthrow of his antagonist.

* *

Foul Liquor Gang Impugns Girl's Honor

One of the most tremendous moral upheavals ever known in any city of the United States has been accomplished this spring in Elmira, an enterprising town of 40,000 people in the southern tier of counties in the state of New York. Dr. Henry W. Stough of Wheaton, Illinois, an evangelist of distinction who travels with a large party of helpers, went to Elmira in January to conduct an evangelistic campaign.

Dr. Stough is well known to be merciless in his attacks upon ringleaders of corruption in the cities which he visits, and before he went to Elmira he was requested by certain business men not to assail Mrs. Harriet Rathbone, the owner of a big local brewery. It was represented that Mrs. Rathbone had inherited this property, disliked the business and was anxious to get rid of it. After his arrival in the city, Dr. Stough found, however, that quite on the contrary Mrs. Rathbone had used of all her phenomenal business abilities to develop the trade of her brewery, and had bought up saloon after saloon, until she owned fifty-eight of the 150 licenses in town, although the limit for licenses in Elmira is fifty-two.

With this knowledge in his possession, Dr. Stough denounced the woman publicly and called upon the city government to enforce the liquor laws. Mrs. Rathbone immediately began to fight back through the agency of her business superintendent, John J. Hassett. After threats of libel suits had failed to silence Stough, Hassett entered into a conspiracy with Chief Casseda, head of the local police, to ruin Professor D. L. Spooner, Dr. Stough's leader of song, and Miss Hester Cartwright, who was traveling in the evangelistic party with her father, and served as its pianist. Warrants were sworn out, and by trick maneuvering the police succeeded in arresting the singing master and his pianist when the two chanced to be alone together in their practice room for five minutes.

Conspiracy Reacts Ruinously on Conspirators

The Elmira conspirators had calculated that the arrest of Professor Spooner and Miss Cartwright, which was planned for the last day of Dr. Stough's meeting, would drive the evangelistic company out of the town in disgrace. But their reckoning was astoundingly mistaken. Dr. Stough promptly announced that he would continue his meetings until his two associates were tried and vindicated. An absolute tornado of popular indignation broke loose in the town. Miss Cartwright in jail was besought to sign a "confession," being promised instant release, but spurned the suggestion with splendid courage. The trial came on amid the greatest excitement. Alibis for both the defendants were proved by a multitude of witnesses, and the witnesses for the prosecution were discredited out of their own mouths. As a climax, Burns detectives arrested a liquor spy with $500 in his pocket which he had just offered to a juror for standing out against acquittal. The verdict of the jury was returned in two minutes and was, of course, a certificate of absolute innocence.

The service of thanksgiving and rejoicing held that night in the evangelistic tabernacle was a scene of unrivaled intensity of feeling. Many of the church people of the town, considering Dr. Stough a sensationalist, had held off from participation in his meetings, but the scandal of this liquor gang's assault solidified the churches absolutely. At this thanksgiving service all the Christian and decent citizenship of the town united to form a civic league. This organization immediately took up the prosecution of conspiracy charges against the chief of police and the brewery manager. The trial of the chief has been the latest feature of the fight, and the trial of Hassett will immediately follow.

Meanwhile the police inspector who serves as acting chief enforced law as to saloons and other forms of vice with a stringency never known before in Elmira. The uplift of public sentiment is astonishing and has affected towns in every direction surrounding. Dr. Stough, who has been holding meetings at the near-by cities of Hornell and Cornell, continues to inspirit the forces fighting for righteousness in Elmira. All together, a victory of incalculable significance has been attained.

Editorial

Red Flannel Shirts for the Heathen

IN A CAPITAL article recently in The Saturday Evening Post, on "The Business Side of the Church," are some excellent suggestions about the country church. Interesting instances are given of the renovating and revival of such churches. The point is well made that they set out to serve their own communities and found in them large tracts of need which were poorly covered. Our own department of church and country life in the Home Board has been sounding that note for some time, though there are some who would like it silenced.

The article is so interesting, and its points are so well made, that it seems almost ungracious to make a critical suggestion. Yet the trite observation comes to mind, that some men seem not to know how to favor one position without undervaluing another equally important. The only way some men can favor foreign missions is to belittle home missions. And the case is often reversed. In this particular instance the writer describes a church, of which he says:

"Money comes without trouble. This church makes a point of spending most of it at home, and the minister admits that he is a bit lukewarm on the subject of missions. He does not consider it right to send money to foreign countries so long as there is in his home parish one man who is hungry, one child without proper clothing or the family without a roof. If there is nothing left to buy red flannel shirts for the heathen after home needs have been met he does not worry."

Now that, of course, is intended to state the case humorously. Probably no intelligent person supposes that the Foreign Board is in the business of exporting red flannel shirts. But we really wonder whether this cheap idea of foreign missions is not quite a common one. Generally, foreign mission workers suppose that it is outgrown until they get close to the situation in the church, and they discover there are a good many who are still talking about there being so much to do at home that nothing can be done abroad.

There is, of course, no difference of opinion about the duty to the man who is hungry in the home parish, and the child without proper clothing, and the family without a roof. It is not too late to be urging, however, that a man ought to have a bit of worry in his life if he does not bring his people to any wider vision than that. If he thinks of the needs of the heathen in terms of red flannel shirts, of course that explains fully his ability not to be concerned if he has no money for their needs. It is not the leaders in the movement for social service who are responsible for this narrow view, it is belated followers. The constant danger is that there will be those who will be so concerned with the social needs of a community that they will think lightly of needs which have an eternal connection more directly than these social needs, and so will bring the social service work into unnecessary collision with the other phase of the church's task, namely, that of serving eternal purposes.

How would the last sentence in this quotation sound if we put it on the other basis? "If (after supplying food and clothing and dwelling) there is nothing left to supply the saving gospel of Jesus Christ to dying men among the heathen this minister does not worry." All we can say is, that he ought to worry. He ought to keep his splendid social service always vitalized, always widened by a vision of larger opportunities, to which he will constantly be pointing his people. The minister who confesses that he is "a bit lukewarm on the subject of missions" acknowledges also that he is belated in the present strong movement of the church.

We are all greatly interested in social service. We should have been interested long ago, and the task would not be so great now. It is natural enough that there should be some who, in the new and fresh interest in this part of our service, have lost sight of the work which yet remains to be done in other fields. It is peculiarly important, therefore, that all men who try to see things widely should hold themselves steady and broad-minded in these days.

The Fountains of Human Love Smitten Open

Out of the wide regions of the Central West devastated by storm and flood there comes just one invariable comment from every locality: "Everybody has been so astonishingly generous." All the Utopias of fellowship and unselfishness that the dreamers of dreams have ever imagined have been outdone in the wonderful brotherhood of all sorts and conditions of men in these stricken towns. Once more it was true as is written in the book of Acts: "Not one of them said aught of the things which he possessed was his own." Those who escaped the disaster were eager to share their homes and comforts with those who had been losers in the flood, and the only danger of shadowing the general good will was in offering to pay for kindnesses rendered.

The giving of the country at large to the national relief fund was magnificent, but not so beautiful as the spontaneous compassion which dictated aid rendered by neighbor to neighbor—sometimes the mutual helpfulness of companions in misfortune. All this answered no appeal but the appeal of human necessities and bespoke no motive but the instant motive of human sympathy. And it disseminated a wholesomeness of community feeling unknown before. The Zanesville Signal says from one of the cities which suffered most: "This great disastrous flood has shown us that we are all just one big family. It has shown us the bigheartedness of our neighbors. It has illustrated the joy of helping one another. It has shown our dependence on one another." What better boon could any town ask than to have such results of the flood abide?

And then the innumerable heroisms that the flood became the occasion for—what a glory they shed over the devastated scene! The risking of life for others became a commonplace of every hour in all the flooded regions, and the risk very often cost "the last full measure of devotion." It must have been many a long day since heaven's book of remembrance had before acquired so many illuminated pages in so short a space. Here is a story from Dayton for which The Western Christian Advocate vouches as a literally true example of what was repeated there in substance of courage and sacrifice many, many times over:

A husband, wife and four children were floating down the Miami on a loose pile of lumber likely to go to pieces any moment. A crowd gathering on shore discussed their plight and decided that rescue was impossible. But a colored man who said nothing got hold of a boat and put out into the river. He missed the lumber pile and was swept far down stream before he could touch shore again. Resting a minute, he put out once more. This time he got off the wife and two children, and having landed them, he rowed out a third time and saved the husband and the other two. The crowd which had voted the feat impossible met the colored man as he landed and offered him a generous purse of money. But he pushed the purse away. He wasn't working for money—and besides, money was nothing to him any more. His own wife and little girl were lost. But even while he spoke, there was a cry of "Daddy!" at the edge of the throng, and as the people made way the missing wife and daughter rushed to the dusky oarsman's arms. Some other hero as humble and as true as himself had saved them and brought him for his courage the only reward that could have meant anything to him in that hour.

People say, "What mystery that God permits these great afflictions to come on the world!" But if the good God looked down out of heaven and saw a great people all bound and tied with chains of selfishness—the rich regardless of the poor and poor hateful toward the rich—and if he knew what a terrific flood of destructive waters would do for those people, who can say that his kindness would not send them a flood?

The Lure of the Far-Away

How much better we could do, and how much more we could know, if we were only somewhere else! A wise naturalist said to his class, "If you knew what is in one square mile of earth where you live you would know the whole earth." That seems a rather large remark. It is true, however, that no man knows what lies nearest to him. The far-away draws him and seems more attractive. Practically, we all live by the telescope rather than by the microscope.

Two travelers met on the great pyramid in Egypt. One of them said to the other that this seemed to him the most wonderful work of man, as Niagara falls seemed the most wonderful work of God. The other said he had never seen Niagara falls—though he had lived all his life within fifty miles of it! Half way around the world to see the greatest wonder of man, but not fifty miles to see the greatest wonder of God! The recent Sabbath school lessons have been contrasting the two methods. Noah was called of God to stay in his own place, among his familiar friends, and stand for him. Abraham, on the other hand, was called to leave his familiar surroundings and go into a new land, and there stand for God. Both things were difficult to do, but for most of us Abraham's call would have been the easier. We seem to get a better start in new surroundings. The far-away lures us.

It happens also that some men who pay little heed to Christian work, or the winning of their fellows to Christ in this country, want to go to the foreign mission field to do the very work which they are not ready to do here. Our board wisely inquires about all its candidates, whether they have shown in the home surroundings the kind of zeal and interest which will be wanted in the new surroundings. One of the ways to test ability for a far-away enterprise is to lay out one's ability in the near-by enterprise.

The Right of a Church Board to Have Ideas

The worst stupidity yet perpetrated in the discussion of Home Board policies is the answer which some people make to the observation that all the board's progressive innovations have been authorized by acts of the General Assembly. "Yes," is the response, "the Assembly, of course, passed the approving resolutions, but that means nothing, because the board itself always recommended these changes and additions. It's the board's doings after all." But talk of that kind is self-evidently talk for effect. These very objectors would be the first to vote the Board of Home Missions or any other board insufferably inefficient if it should come year after year to Assembly with no suggestion for enlarging its sphere and improving its methods. Just imagine what would be the ridicule incurred by a board that came meekly to Assembly whispering: "Can anybody here imagine what would be wise for us to do next?" It's the board's business to know what to do next if it knows its business at all. A board that could not propose something bigger to do next year than it did last year would not even have a name to live; it would be too far gone for a coroner's inquest.

"It Is Settled" in Canada; Why Not Here?

The United States has an "Uncle Sam" who is imaginary. Canada has a "Colonel Sam" who is real. "Colonel Sam," whose other name is Hughes, is minister of militia in Canada, an office corresponding to secretary of war in the United States. Canada has a different name for the job because—happy country that it is!—it has no army and dreams of no war. But Colonel Sam has a canteen problem on his hands. Just as in the United States, there are people in Canada who say that if soldiers are permitted to drink beer they will never get drunk. So Minister Hughes tried it on. He let one of his camps have beer, but when he inspected the consequences he found fourteen men dead drunk—and drunk on nothing but beer at that. Then he spoke his mind, which was after this fashion: "So long as I am minister of militia there will never be allowed in the militia camps any wet messes, 'mild' or 'light beer' canteens. You will kindly not waste time discussing this question further. It is settled." Why can't the United States manage to muster an army officer who will say "It is settled" with the same conclusiveness?

What Poor Tom Gilmore Can't Understand

The Continent has before commiserated the saloon element in American politics on its sad deficiency in horse sense, and has had occasion to cite Tom Gilmore, head of the Model License League, as a singular example of that poverty. Gilmore's latest outbreak demonstrates his brain deficit again. He has published all over the United States the charge that the people who work for prohibition laws are liquor drinkers themselves. The assertion is such nonsense that even papers friendly to the saloon point out the absurdity of it.

The disappointment that started Gilmore off on this silly tangent was his failure to entice the Anti-Saloon League into the support of a law prohibiting the purchase of intoxicating drinks as well as their sale. Tom pretends to think that the reason the league refused was because its leaders want to buy whisky themselves. Of course he cannot really suppose that, yet he is probably not bright enough to appreciate the real reason. Liquor drinking is a matter of "personal liberty," and therefore the right of law to stop it is dubious. But liquor selling is a social matter, and to that the application of law is indisputable. So prohibitionists stay on the nondoubtful side of the issue, and it will take somebody smarter than Tom Gilmore to drag them off.

—In Washington City now it is unlawful to have a saloon within 400 feet of a church or school. The number of licenses for liquor selling is also to be limited hereafter to 300. This is the effect of the Jones-Works law, the passage of which was a good deed added to the record of the last Congress in its closing hours. Of course the law means most of all to the good people who live in Washington all the year around, but the whole country ought to be grateful at least for the fact that Pennsylvania avenue will look a little more decent after this. The solid bank of disreputable looking liquor dives on the south side of that great avenue has been one of the most discreditable sights in all America.

—Instead of complaints because the Board of Home Missions has so many departments and so many superintendents of special work, the church ought to be insisting on the development of at least one more department under effective direction—a department for organizing and stimulating missions in the negro quarters of the larger northern cities. It is notorious that the colored people in the densely crowded sections which they occupy in northern centers of population are most inadequately provided with religious privileges. Something far more generous and brotherly ought to be done for them by the white Christians of these cities. But nothing much is likely to be done where so many other needs are so clamorous, until it is made the job of some one strong leader and organizer to start work of this kind in various towns and collect finances to support it. Everybody's business begins to be looked after only when it is made a definite somebody's business. And this particular task should not be left as everybody's business any longer.

—A. C. Tapley, railroad agent at Haverhill, Massachusetts, is resuming this spring the Sunday afternoon preaching which he has held for a dozen summers on the platform of his station. Mr. Tapley gets ministers to do the preaching, but it is accurate just the same to say that he holds the service. When first appointed ticket agent Mr. Tapley was distressed at having to spend all day Sunday at his office, unable to get to church. But he had to make the best of it, and his way of making the best was a mighty good way, for he soon turned the railroad station into a place of prayer, praise and preaching. There are many conversions every summer, for the service is always evangelistic. The Christian Endeavor World tells us that Mr. Tapley will have nothing else than that; if the preacher should happen to get off a strict gospel line Mr. Tapley rises up in meeting and tells him to come back to the subject. People travel long distances to attend this unique summer afternoon meeting.

—Protestant citizens will hail with pleasure the authorized announcement that the "Bureau of Catholic Information" has been formed by a group of Catholic laymen to arouse "opposition to a custom that in some states has become almost a habit—using Catholic societies for political profit." The promoters of the new bureau pledge themselves to "oppose for the head of any Catholic society any man or woman who is now holding or aims to hold a political position." They expect to awaken the antagonism of both priests and laymen by their "radical departure," and do not therefore seek clerical approval "in the usual manner of such bodies." If they have the grit to stick by their program against all antagonism it will be an excellent aid to mutual confidence among Americans of diverse faiths.

—It cannot be questioned that church attendance is on the increase in New York. Attendance of men is particularly improving. All observers agree in that impression and every count of audiences recently made confirms it. The same thing seems to be true of most of the other cities of the United States. The turn of the tide has evidently arrived. The sag of religious interest has passed the low point. Just what is making the difference may be hard to analyze, but the meaning of the fact is plain. It spells for the church hope, of course, but more particularly opportunity. And the great question now for the church is whether as people come back hungry to the old table it is going to have anything nourishing to feed them with If it hasn't, they'll soon be going away again.

—Rabbi Schulman of New York proposes a commission representing all religious bodies and uplift agencies to consider and agree on the right kind of Sunday observance legislation for the big metropolis. Though a Jew, believing in Saturday as the Sabbath, he says that Sunday is the only possible legal rest day and believes that in that character it ought to be strictly protected by statute. The idea of a commission on the subject is an excellent one and should be put into effect not only in New York but in the rest of America's greater cities.

—"I can't think of asking my children to go to both Sunday school and church; it is too much to expect them to sit still through two services," is the voice not of real maternal care; it is simply sentimental coddling. No children of normal health are the worse for two and a half hours of enforced quiet on Sunday morning Apart altogether from the religious benefit of it, the experience is an excellent antidote to the ever-present American poison of restlessness.

—Even in California, where the churches are reputed to have less influence than anywhere else in the country, Christian citizens can compel moral legislation when they get sufficiently in earnest about it. The passage of the injunction law to wipe out the red light districts of big California cities was clear-cut proof of that.

Preaching on What Level?

BY CLELAND B. McAFEE

THERE is a saying of Luther: "I preach as simply as I can, that common men, servants and children may understand; for the learned already know it all, and I do not preach for them." Up to the last clause that saying illustrates what many ministers of the gospel have found a wise course. It is easy for us to single out a few more intelligent men in our congregations and try to preach on what we count their level. As a matter of fact, we very often miss their level, and would find them much more readily if we preached for the simple-minded.

It is not uncommon to hear a man in an important church say that he learned to preach in some country place. Professor David Smith, who has recently been lecturing in America, said many times that his great life of Christ, "The Days of His Flesh," was written in a little country parish in Scotland. It was there that he learned to speak plainly and simply, to put large meanings into simple words. There are some men who do not know the difference between great ideas and long words, who feel that if the words are long the preaching must therefore be profound, without realizing that the greatest art in preaching is to take the widest truths and bring them into sight of the simplest minds.

Danger in Talking Down to Children

Of course, that does not mean for a moment the talking of twaddle, or saying petty things. Only a few men know how to talk to children, and more of them fail from talking meaningless things to them than from talking over their heads. Children are quick to detect when nothing is being said, and more men have failed on Sunday school platforms because of talking down to children than because of talking above them. There must needs be a great idea in any simple talk to make it effective. Granted a great idea, it is the minister's business to put it in simple enough words so that it can be grasped by the simplest people of the congregation. The others will recognize the greatness of it in the simplicity of the expression.

In the preface of Robert W. Dale's "The Living Christ" is a story of his preaching in Augustine church, Edinburgh, a few months after Dr. Lindsay Alexander, a scholar and theologian of distinction, had resigned the pastorate. He walked home with one of the deacons after the morning service, and the deacon spoke regretfully of the ministers who had served the church since Dr. Alexander's resignation. The burden of his criticism was this: "Sir, they have preached to us as if we were all masters of arts!" Dr. Dale set out to preach to men as though they were not masters of arts, and men who were masters of arts followed him with profound interest.

Two Judges Who Wanted Simplicity

Two instances in the autobiography of Bishop Whipple carry the same suggestion. In his early days he was invited to preach in a big church in Utica, New York. He took a sermon which he counted his best, proving certain important things in the Christian faith. The next day he met a prominent judge, who had known him from his childhood. The judge laid his hand on his shoulder and said, "Henry, never preach that sermon again, no matter how long you live. I know more philosophy than you have ever learned. You must not try to preach to the judge, but to the tempted, sinful man, telling him of the love of Jesus Christ; then you will help him." Some years after the bishop was in the South and found Hon. Isaac H. Bronson, a judge of the United States supreme court, in Palatka, Florida, an invalid and unable to attend service. He talked with him of the fatherhood of God, showing reasons for our acceptance of this profound truth. Suddenly the judge exclaimed, "Mr. Whipple, tell me of Jesus Christ, as you would tell my black boy Jim, and I shall be grateful! I am bewildered by the theories of men."

The fact is, whatever our theories about it, the sermons that are on the level of the black boy Jim do get to the heart of the judge, while the sermons which seek the level of the judge are apt to miss him, and are certain to miss black Jim. Let a man set out with a thought great enough for the greatest man and work it out so thoroughly that it can be stated simply enough for the simplest man, and he has found the level for effective preaching.

Influence of Political Life on Character

BY SAMUEL S. PALMER

TRUE LIVING in public life is being called for today as never before. Investigation seems to be the order. To ferret out the dishonest man and rid society of such a deceiver is common. In Congress and legislature probing committees are appointed. In our cities councilmen are resolving to find the rascal. In not a few cases the names of the dead are linked with grievous wrongdoing, and the very publicity of names drives others abroad.

The question naturally comes, Is there something in public life antagonistic to good morals? There seems to be a feeling on the part of many that public men are not to be trusted. As long ago as 1863, when Senator Wade went from the senate to the White House and told President Lincoln that our country at that moment was "within a mile of hell," President Lincoln replied, "That is just about the distance from the White House to the senate."

Recent legislation has tried to provide safeguards against men in public office. The initiative, referendum and recall are urged to help save society from some of the men who have been chosen for public positions.

Let it be said at once that public office does not make a man bad. It may reveal the badness that is already there and provide an atmosphere for the growth of evil that had never been suspected, so that the conscience becomes weakened, and the will loses its strength.

Every calling has its own peculiar difficulties. We need not imagine that any work is free from peculiar trials. The work of some men brings them into an atmosphere of trickery where the whole truth is not to be spoken and where weak points are covered. The preacher is not free in this regard. His very life may become perfunctory. The expressions that are so frequently upon his lips may lead him to believe that they belong to his heart. The man given a public trust is simply brought into new relations with new influences, and therefore with new trials, and too frequently he yields to the unexpected. The man in public life is put to a test that he had never known before. He enters upon a new experience, for temptation is an experiment. Temptation does not make us; it reveals us. Every man is tempted. The difference between men is not that some are tempted and some are not. The difference is that some stand and some do not. Men do not become corrupt because the evil is so great. They are corrupt because they have yielded to the evil. A man's prudence may pass into selfishness and selfishness into avarice and falsehood, and soon he is sacrificing the public good to his own personal ambition. When Mr. Lincoln was a candidate for reelection to the presidency a committee from a great state made an appeal and a promise of what that state would do on condition that he should remove a member of his cabinet. At that time Mr. Lincoln said he would rather lose the office than yield to their demand. That temptation did not make him. That was a temptation that revealed him.

Many who come into public life step over boundary lines that hitherto held them. They are attracted by the new life. They meet with dangers that they had never known before. They see other men who have a good reputation doing things that they had supposed to be wrong. "Perhaps we are mistaken," they say. "We do not want to set up ourselves as examples to these men." At Bypath Meadow Christian said to Hopeful, "If this meadow lieth along by our wayside let's go over into it." Many men come into public life knowing that there is a distinct boundary line between right and wrong, that right is right everywhere. They see men walking on the other side of their boundary line. They seem to be getting along well, and finally they say, "It is easy going on the other side. Perhaps I might try it."

When a man first reads the political code that is practiced by many he is amazed that any self-respecting person would hold it. In time he finds himself growing used to it unless he has positively taken a stand against the iniquitous thing. Unconsciously perhaps he is growing to feel that political dishonesty is not dishonesty. He forgets that dishonesty in one place means dishonesty in every place. He comes to feel that in the time of political excitement the character of a good man may be assailed in the hope of temporary success. One of the maxims commonly heard is, "We must meet them on their own ground," which is the same as saying that "it takes the devil to fight the devil." In the world of evil unity prevails. Vices are not mutually destructive. No sin has ever been against any other sin. Evils are mutually attractive. Satan is not divided against himself. The men who are doing wrong and finding excuse for it on the ground of bringing about good, will be found to be under the influence of evil in some form. "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good."

We have had to witness in our own state of Ohio disclosures of trickery and chicanery and greed that have brought the blush of shame to many. Men whom people believed to be honest have been found guilty of betraying their trust for gain. Men combine to practice fraud and sell their votes for a pittance. In going wrong many become cynical and sometimes coarse. In losing their own virtue they think that few people are virtuous and go to such lengths that the state has to confine them in the penitentiary.

It may be properly asked now, What can we do? Let every man entering upon public life avoid the possibility of ever having a secret to keep. It is a sad day when any man feels that he must keep some things covered. The moment that such a thought is entertained he is erecting a barrier between himself and those dearest to him. The man who comes into public life should make a careful survey of all that it means. He should note the danger places that he may be on his guard. The man who is careful to do right always and everywhere need have no fear of a dictagraph or the witness stand.

The Other Side of the Woman Question

A Study of the Young Women's Christian Association

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS, Editor Afield of The Continent

EVERYBODY is ringing alarm bells nowadays. Let me follow the prevailing fashion. Amid the clanging and the jangling of all sorts of real and needed and artificial warnings, I would attract attention to what is possibly one of the gravest dangers of our present social order. This is nothing less than that society will lose sight of the fact that the average American young woman is a pure, self-respecting, wholesome and helpful member of society.

New Headquarters of the Y. W. C. A., New York

The recent uproar, not unwarranted, about the social evil has diverted public attention to the wrong side of the question. No ideas now seem too neurotic or erotic to find their way into the public print. This menaces our sound, common, public judgment. Our mental processes are in peril, as we front the conditions of the life of young women in our great cities. The notion is being given currency that all young women, and working girls especially, are fools and weaklings, looking for gaps in the social or economic system through which they may slip into lives of sin. Recently applause greeted the statement, in an Illinois investigation, that a girl was not blameworthy if she eked out an inadequate wage by the price of dishonor. The obvious deduction which the loose-thinking young person would make from this is that she has society's warrant for abandoning the ancient standards of chastity. The hour has struck for men and women of sane minds to speak up in behalf of the good old usage of suffering or dying, if need be, for the sake of principles.

Shall we mark down virtue and put it on the bargain counters? Or shall we, as of yore, keep it on the highest shelf as the most priceless possession of society? Withal, there is the danger of stimulating prurient imaginations, and of overstressing the sex problem. Along with much that is good in the present discussion of social hygiene, there lurks not a little that is gravely dangerous to young womanhood.

Agency of Strong Christian Womanhood

It is a delight to turn our thought from the more sinister side of our complex modern life to an agency which represents the normal, sweet, strong Christian womanhood of America. Amid the excited appeals for all sorts of new methods for meeting our suddenly accentuated social problems, we find the field already occupied by a nationwide agency, equipped to the point of scientific efficiency and directed by a host of women whose training includes not only a college course but also that higher ability of the consecrated devotion of those who have learned, in Christ's school, love for their fellows. The Young Women's Christian Association is a force and a factor in America's life meriting study. An observation of the association is a course in optimism. For all the jaundiced, jaded, disheartened folk, who are fearful for the future of the race, I would prescribe a visit to the great office building at 600 Lexington avenue, New York City, which is the national headquarters of the organization. There he will find an atmosphere of sanity, efficiency, wholesomeness and health. There is concentrated a force more potent than any vice commission. In these headquarters center the interests and activities of 875 Young Women's Christian Associations, with a membership of a little more than a quarter of a million women.

These organizations are scattered all over the world, 208 being city and town associations and 660 being in higher institutions of learning. There is a magazine article in this great office building itself, as a study in efficiency—and feminine efficiency at that. This is the clearing house for what is accepted as the church's great agency of work with and for young women. The association is significant alike for what it is doing and for the character of the persons who do it. From the angle of this great office building one gets a new vision of the so-called "society woman," the woman of wealth and the graduate of the women's college. Literally thousands of these find the association the most congenial agency for social service and Christian ministry.

Just How the Work Affects Mary Jones

To talk about the subject in the large is less impressive than to see it in its detailed workings. Let us look at this organization, which may have meant to us merely one in a set of familiar initials that stand for religious work, through the eyes of Mary Jones. Mary's home is in the country. She and her family have seen, however, that there is no future for her in the place in which she was born. For the family's sake as well as for her own she must make the flight into the city. Innumerable family conferences have been held on the subject. With a high heart that is yet trembling, Mary fares forth cityward for the great adventure. Home folks and friends gather at the train to wave her farewell. Her new clothes and her cheap traveling bag, with the newness of the store still upon it, make her the envy of the stay-at-home friends, just as they mark her as a country girl in the eyes of the sophisticated travelers.

Mary and the family are alarmed at the possible dangers which may lurk in the city. True, their knowledge of these is altogether vague, but they know that the city is a place of hurt as well as of help. Mary finds awaiting her at the train a representative of the Travelers' Aid branch of the Young Women's Christian Association. This is a relief beyond words, for safety is the first requisite for the young woman in the city. Mary is not yet interested in the fact that this Travelers' Aid Association work is being extended into a national organization, comprehending Protestant, Catholic and Jewish agencies. Perhaps Mary's mother would be more anxious if she knew that in the year 1910 1,700 young women immigrants were "lost" en route between New York and Chicago. But Mary Jones is safe in the care of a sober-clad woman of whom the most skillful criminals are afraid. She guides Mary to the boarding house maintained by the Young Women's Christian Association. Thus the second desideratum of the country girl in town is secured, a shelter. If Mary were accustomed to view things in the large she would at this stage of her experience give sympathetic thought to the million and a half of girls in this country who last year were housed away from their own homes. Over 145,000 of these were cared for by the Young Women's Christian Association, which indicates that the extension work of the association in this field deserves the cooperation of the Christian public.

Big Figures from the Employment Agency

Mary's fund of money is small, and she must quickly find work. The city is surely full of opportunities for a strong, bright girl. This seemed apparent down home; but in the midst of the formidable city itself the opportunities are not so easily seen. Mary quickly learns, in the shelter of the association, that an employment bureau is maintained, where last year 51,411 applications for girls to fill positions were made by employers—within 3,000 of as many as there were applications on the part of girls. Not always, of course, can the needs of employers be filled, but 33,873 girls secured employment through 103 of the associations in the year 1911-12.

Mary, to her chagrin, had to take a position as an untrained worker, but she found that in this new city home of hers there were opportunities to learn how to join the ranks of the skilled workers of the city. Within a year 33,516 students were enrolled in Young Women's Christian Association classes, of whom 25,000 were in evening groups. In addition to these distinctively educational classes, Mary found a library, and a girls' club, which helped sharpen her wits, which were by no means dull. Like most of the girls situated as herself, she studied stenography, with domestic science on the side.

Despite the newness of the life, and also because of it, Mary quickly grew homesick. She missed the home folks; but in the association she found friends—girls whose lot and whose tastes were quite akin to her own. Moreover, she found scientific recreation provided by the association, of a variety and of an attractiveness that opened her eyes, for she had thought of good times chiefly in terms of the "parties" and picnics back home. These Christian association women made a study of good times and of how to live happily as well as efficiently in a city. Thus Mary found herself introduced to the gymnasium of the association, with its swimming pool, and its talks on hygiene.

Animated by the Christian Impulse

It was a revelation to the girl from the country to find that religion, which at home had been so simple and so matter-of-fact, was here an organized activity with a bewildering number of sides. It made Mary Jones feel at home, however, to learn that these other women put religion first. They apparently had come, by scientific study, to what she had always taken for granted, namely, that a primary function of the life of woman is to keep the altar fires of religion alight. It had never occurred to her before that there should be special studies and activities looking toward this end; but when she came to know the life of the city girl, she saw that the altar fire was in danger. The most helpful part of the association was the fact that from bottom to top it was animated by the Christian impulse. The devotional meetings, the Bible study classes, the mission study groups, all were a delight as well as an education to this normal girl from the country. That there were 31,094 girls enrolled in religious classes seemed to her not a large total.

In more ways than one the association opened Mary's eyes upon the big world. From the secretaries—and, incidentally, she learned that there are 1,269 employed officers in the associations—she acquired a sophistication concerning city life that many young women have to gain in a hard and unlovely school. In addition she learned, through the outreach of the association's world work, lessons in cosmopolitanism which gave horizon to the dingy little office in which she worked every day. The atmosphere of the association quickly instilled into her mind a spirit of sisterhood with the associations in Calcutta and Bombay, Colombo, Shanghai, Tokyo, Buenos Aires, Honolulu and San Juan.

The big lessons of life came to Mary, by the way, through her contact with the association. She learned more about democracy than she had ever dreamed of before. Back home, of course, democracy was real, and taken for granted. The other people were simply folks and neighbors. The community was of a kind. In the city all sorts and conditions of people abounded, and in her work Mary learned something about class distinctions. But in the association she found herself constantly in relation with young women from all walks of life—the college girl of wealth side by side with the young immigrant who made such funny mistakes in her use of English. The working girl and the girl of leisure become associates in pursuit of common aims. If Mary had been a journalist, or a political economist, she would have found considerable material for discussions of the future of America in the splendid democracy of the association life.

Experiences of Olga, an Immigrant Girl

If we may leave Mary Jones, growing, busy and happy in her association life, a help and a comfort to her parents and a wholesome influence in her ever-widening sphere, we may contemplate another girl coming to an American city from abroad. This girl is Olga Svensen. Mary Jones had a tremendous advantage over Olga, for she was a quick-witted American, speaking the language of the city in which she found herself, and used to American ways. Olga looked upon the statue of liberty in New York harbor with mingled hope and terror in her heart. What was the truth about this new land—the dreadful stories told her by fellow passengers, or the great dreams which she had nursed at home? To Olga's delight she found awaiting her at Ellis island a Young Women's Christian Association missionary who could speak her language; and in the group of a dozen such welcoming sisters she learned that every language spoken by the immigrants is also spoken by these young women, whose pentecostal ministry is one of the many forms of Young Women's Christian Association service. The forces of ill have been ingenious and resourceful in tripping the unwary immigrant. Now the forces of good are becoming equally as sophisticated and as efficient. Step by step through her long journey to Minnesota, Olga felt the protecting and guiding and comforting touch of this sisterhood of helpfulness.

One of the practical forms of association ministry may be illustrated by the relationship to the Panama exposition in San Francisco in 1915. Already the association has sent out its warnings to girls to beware of the promises of employment at San Francisco. It is also undertaking to be ready for every young woman traveler who may go to San Francisco to assure her of guidance and safety.

There is another side to the association, and a bigger side, than that of mere protection work. For most of its members the association is a field of fellowship and of ministry. In company with other and like-minded young women, the members are following the immemorial American beacon of ambition which summons to larger life and work. The impulse for self-improvement is actively an association influence. Girls within its membership are learning how to be better in character and to do a nobler work in the world. No statistics can tell of the number of young women who have been fired with the purpose to achieve a college education in the association. Still others, a great company, are recruited for trained association work.

Systematic Methods of Religious Activity

The old haphazard methods of doing religious work have gradually evolved into the new and more methodical association way. I have before me the association's leaflet on the secretarial department, which recruits and trains and recommends employed officers. This involves, as the name implies, a system of recruiting of college-trained young women, through the summer conferences and through visitors to schools. Then follows the elaborate plan of training, culminating in the national training school in the new building at 52d street and Lexington avenue, New York. Then the bureau of reference supplies, without charge, to local associations the names of qualified candidates for the various branches of secretarial work. The training itself is no narrow or technical matter. Of course it goes into the history and polity and methods of the association movement, but it also includes English, Bible study, religious pedagogy, economics and sociology, missions, current movements, personal, home and community living, public speaking, executive and financial management, home life and hospitality.

One of the unsuspected ways in which the association is ministering to the world at large is its practice of canvassing the graduating classes of the higher institutions of learning to secure pledges from the girls for definite Christian work after leaving college. In 1912, for example, in forty-eight institutions scattered over twenty-one states, there were pledges to the number of 1,339 given by girls who chose 2,831 forms of work. The distribution of these is rather interesting—1,159 chose Sunday school and church work, 561 chose social and philanthropic work, 295 chose Young Women's Christian Association work, 238 chose women's clubs and granges, 578 chose mission work. These girls represented twenty-two different denominations. An incidental tribute to the student branches of the Young Women's Christian Association was the fact that 722 of these young women, or about half of the total, had already had experience in active Christian work.

The college girl and the shop girl find themselves in one organized sisterhood in the Young Women's Christian Association. The high strategy of putting the association into the institutions of higher learning is manifest to anybody who gives the subject thought. The 660 college associations are planting or strengthening Christian ideals in the lives of girls at the formative period, when they are fixing their life standards. The college association gives the girl a chance to minister and to put into practice the idealism of which she hears so much. Usually the Young Women's Christian Association is the one organization in the college which specifically cares for the religious life of the student. The association greets the freshman upon her first appearance and shepherds her over the trying early days of her college experience. It maintains mission study classes, Bible classes and a social life, as well as the larger devotional meetings. This is religion at work at the very springs of the social order.

A story all by itself is that of the eleven summer conferences for college girls conducted by the Young Women's Christian Association. The conditions are psychologically right for giving a girl a broader outlook and a nobler uplook. The leader of Christian thought brings before the assembled students, all moved by the common impulses of the crowd, the world's call for Christian life and Christian work. There are classes for Bible study and for study in life work. Also there are good times a plenty. I cannot imagine any company of young women having a happier time than these college girls at the summer conferences, as I have seen them. Life can never again be the same for most of the girls who are permitted to go up to this mount of vision. They must thereafter be like Olive Schreiner's hunter who caught a glimpse of the bird of truth. The memory of the noble women to whom they have listened, and with whom they have associated, and the insight they have had into the best selves of other girls, must forever remain a support and an inspiration to these young women in their subsequent life.

To go into the varied phases of the work of the Young Women's Christian Association, citing instances, would require a volume. Perhaps enough has been written to show that there is steadily at work throughout the land an agency representing Christian efficiency at its best, serving the world in the name of the church and the church's Master.

The Intermediate Catechism

BY DAVID S. SCHAFF

THE INTERMEDIATE catechism was prepared to meet not an imaginary need but an expressed one. The Assembly of 1908 was overtured by thirteen presbyteries on the subject. Certainly the only fair deduction was that in some quarters there was a serious questioning in regard to the responsibility of systematic religious instruction in home and Sabbath school, and the hope felt that a form of catechetical manual, not then in use, might be constructed which would aid in meeting this responsibility. There was another source from which it was apparent that a new catechetical manual was felt to be a real need. The Board of Publication had been receiving constant appeals for a catechism in addition to those it had on its shelves. The board had not been remiss in making attempts to secure the general use of the shorter catechism in all parts of the church. In spite of these attempts, the appeals for a new manual continued to come to it. Moved by these requests, the board appointed a committee to prepare such a work and the committee actually set itself to the task. When the Assembly's committee was appointed the board desisted from further effort and turned the whole matter over to it. So far as appears no attempt had been made to develop the need by any artificial measures.

After four years of study and work the committee presented the intermediate catechism, so called, to the Assembly meeting in Louisville in 1912. Whatever the judgment passed upon the catechism may be, it can be shown that the committee was not hasty in preparing it, nor did it bring it forth out of its own brain without the study of other manuals, old or recent. It received definite directions. One of these was that the catechism should conform to the Presbyterian system of doctrine and practice and to the truth as taught in the Scriptures. The other was that it should be simpler in language than the shorter catechism. These principles, it would seem, were sufficiently exacting without at the same time cramping the committee's liberty. After serious discussion it was decided to follow substantially the plan followed in the Westminster type, laying down in the opening portion the definitions of God, Scripture and other fundamental doctrinal tenets and then proceeding to matters of practice in approaching God and doing his will in daily life. In these latter portions the committee greatly curtailed the questions and answers on the decalogue as they are found in the Westminster catechism and omitted all detailed questions about the clauses of the Lord's prayer, not omitting, however, the Lord's prayer itself and some fundamental questions on prayer.

How New Material Was Used

Whatever of new material was incorporated was made use of because of the importance which such material is taken to have at the present time, whether we look into the religious books that are being issued from the press, the questions that are discussed in ministerial gatherings or the subjects presented from the pulpit. The body of religious truth included in the Scriptures and necessary for a man to know in order to be a well informed believer is the same today as it was in the seventeenth or the eighteenth century, or the second century. It is not subject to change. But new problems which confront the church, as the centuries go on, may need, in greater or less degree, a new form of statement.

The simplicity of the intermediate catechism does not imply that its statements are unsusceptible of easy backing from Scripture. The committee cannot, I think, be laboring under a delusion when it feels that, as a whole, the catechism in its various parts and in its use of language is scriptural. This simplicity may seem to be secured at the expense of a certain solemnity of style which marks the product of the Westminster Assembly, and in fact the productions of the Puritan age as a whole. Should it appear that reverence—a reverential attitude—does not mark the new catechism the book, its seems to me, would be defective at an essential point. I hope, however, that such an impression, if made on the first reading, will not be confirmed by further reading. The language is biblical, though sometimes new to catechetical manuals, and the obtaining of salvation is taught with reference, on the one hand, to the nature of God, the atonement of Christ and the necessary operation of the Holy Spirit and, on the other, with reference to a life of Christian prayer and thankfulness issuing in Christian practice.

No one, I think, can seriously undertake the preparation of a catechism who had made any study of the great catechisms of the past without hoping to make it exhaustive and wishing to construct it with theological terminology whose meaning has become exact through long discrimination and polishing and has become endeared. But much as the committee may have at times wished to present a treatise at once exhaustive and theological, it kept in mind the Assembly's instructions and held firm to a certain assurance that what was wanted in a new catechism was not what was so excellently done by the Westminster divines 270 years ago but a manual such as the Assembly of 1908 seemed to call for.

When the Assembly met in 1912 the committee supposed its work was all done. However, in approving the catechism as presented, the Assembly gave direction that a body of Scripture proofs should be added. This work the committee has now completed. It appears that likewise, when the shorter catechism was sent up to parliament in 1647, the bare text was sent without any addition of Scripture texts. In the spring of 1648 the catechism with this addition, made at parliament's order, was again sent up to parliament.

A second direction which the Louisville Assembly gave was that the committee should receive suggestions and make such revision as might seem advisable. This action has given opportunity to individuals and to presbyteries to offer proposals for the improvement of the catechism and give welcome aid to the committee in further perfecting it. Careful consideration has been given to suggestions thus far made. Whether this intermediate catechism is adapted to meet the need which in 1908 was treated as a plain fact only its use can prove. If in any appreciable measure the need is met, it is fair to say the Assembly's action will be recognized as justified.

THE HOME COUNCIL

Two Sides of the "Care" Question

BY ETHEL COLSON

"I DON'T WANT to make you sad," said a distinguished clergyman, addressing a body of women, "but I do want to make you thoughtful about a certain matter. This morning's newspapers contained accounts of a young woman, brilliant, beautiful, but unsuccessful and lonely, who last night threw away the life that might have meant so much to her and her fellows by jumping into the river. The newspaper writers wonder why she did it, since there was no apparent adequate reason for her rash act.

"But I know why that girl committed suicide. She was tired and sick and pitifully discouraged, and—nobody cared!"

"We must not judge anyone too harshly, even ourselves," said another wise and loving minister to the parishioner who had admitted spiritual discouragement. "We are always sure of God's sympathy, so long as we are really trying to do right, no matter how many or frequent our falls and failures; just as we are always sure of his judgment when we are not trying. And where he can forbear, it ill becomes us to be too harsh or exacting. Just remember, when the battle seems going against you, that God always cares."

Here are two sides of a great opportunity, a great block of comfort. When "nobody cares," in the ordinary sense of the term, Somebody—our loving Elder Brother—always cares, perhaps cares all the more strongly and tenderly because so many of his children seem to be forgetting. "God cares!" is a strengthening soul whisper in moments of stress, strain, discouragement, perhaps despair that each soul must sometimes face and suffer under.

"God will remember!" was the simple phrase that, flashing out of a bit of secular reading, once tided a struggling Christian over and through a bitter trial. And if God cares—why, then we need no longer feel lonely. Then, of course, we can begin all over, go on again with new heart of grace. Write it on the wall of your heart, if not your chamber—God cares! God always cares!

And as for the other side, the "nobody cares" problem. Why should we not be a little more careful, all of us, to let our friend, our neighbor, even the stranger within—and without—our gates see that we "care," and care greatly, about what happens to this fellow human? Why not, even at cost of distressed shyness, endangered conventions or the possible risk of an occasional snub, go out of our way to be friendly to those who may need a friend, whose very life, for all we know, may depend upon some casual word, some timely deed of kindness, some slight and seemingly unimportant refutation of the belief that nobody cares!

The weight of a hair sometimes turns the soul scale one way or another. Even Christ in his Gethsemane loneliness and soul torture felt the need of a sympathetic word, some touch of human friendliness and affection. We are breathless busy these days, with not much of either time or strength to spare. And yet it is easily possible that the good clergyman was right, and that the lonely girl who so mistakenly rushed, unbidden, into eternity, might have stayed her steps and lived out her life in gladsome courage if only, at the critical moment, somebody had taken a moment to assure her that she really counted, that somebody did care whether she lived or died.

A Thought for the Week

Give what you have. To someone it may be better than you dare to think.—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

How Verdi Wrote the "Miserere"

When the composer Verdi was working on his well known opera, "Il Trovatore," he stopped short at the passage of the "Miserere," being at loss to combine notes of sufficient sadness and pathos to express the grief of the prisoner, Manrico.

Sitting at his piano in the deep stillness of the winter night, says The Detroit News-Tribune, his imagination wandered back to the stormy days of his youth, endeavoring to extract from the past a plaint, a groan, like those which escaped from his breast when he saw himself forsaken by the world. All in vain! One day, at Milan, he was unexpectedly called to the bedside of a dying friend, one of the few who had remained true to him in adversity and prosperity. Verdi, at the sight of his dying friend, felt a lump rise in his throat; he wanted to weep, but so intense was his grief that not a tear flowed to the relief of his anguish.

In an adjoining room stood a piano. Verdi, under one of those sudden impulses to which men of genius are sometimes subject, sat down at the instrument, and there and then improvised the sublime "Miserere" of the "Trovatore." The musician had given utterance to his grief.

The South African "House Boy"

There is a real servant problem in part of Africa, inasmuch as only the well-to-do can afford to keep white servants. Other folks must content themselves with the well-meant, if casual, ministrations of the native "house boy." The best of all servants is a Zulu, says Harper's Weekly, especially if he is raw—that is, fresh from his native kraal and totally unspoiled by the wiles of civilization. Such a "boy" is honest, sober, quick, clean and anxious to learn the ways of the white man. He soon becomes as deft as an English butler, and as handy as the ideal housemaid. He does everything, from cooking to answering the door, and after a little practice he does it well. The boys have all manner of strange names, usually chosen by themselves from some one or other of the words that they hear often used, such as sixpence, "tickey" (threepenny piece), shilling, breakfast, kettle, ugly, pint pot, scrubber, chopper, or whisky.

"Leezie, wumman," the old Highlander complained to his wife at breakfast, "thae eggs are michty hard-boiled again."

"Nae wonder, John dear," replied his wife, triumphantly, "whaen the lassie boiled them by the kitchen clock, and forgot it was five meenits slow."

BITS BY THE WAY

KILL THE FLIES NOW

Now is the time to inaugurate your annual fly-killing campaign, if you have not already done so. "A mature fly of April," says Dr. L. O. Howard, chief of the United States bureau of entomology, "may be the ancestor of over 6,000,000,000 flies by the first of September, according to a careful scientific calculation. The young flies killed in April have had few offspring and that is the time when they should be annihilated. The killing of all the winter flies would do away with the great work required in the summer."

The favorite breeding place of the fly is the horse stable, although, failing that, garbage cans, slops or any collection of fermenting vegetable matter will suffice. Therefore, in order to prevent the development of the fly, accumulations of stable refuse must be avoided, yards, garbage cans and kitchens must be kept clean, and all foodstuffs must be kept covered and screened where flies cannot get at them.

Cleveland, says The Chicago News, expects to be almost flyless this summer, as a result of the vigorous work which has been in progress for the last three months. The normal school of the city acted as a committee to count flies collected by the boys. Money has been raised to pay for the winter flies at the rate of 10 cents per hundred. Over 300,000 have been paid for at this rate and the crusade is still on. After next month the price will be lowered to 10 cents a thousand.

In cities where proper street cleaning conditions prevail the matter of taking care of stable refuse may be disposed of with comparative ease. But in smaller towns where the provisions for street cleaning are limited the collection of stable refuse has been one of the features made prominent in the antifly crusades. Public-spirited citizens, says The News, have contributed money to pay for this work, and in a number of instances it has been undertaken by the school children. In New York state the Boy Scouts recently have taken up a certain amount of street cleaning with a view to fly extermination.

One of the most essential features in a town or city fly crusade is that households shall all cooperate. It has been found that one ignorant or careless home can breed flies enough to vitiate the best endeavors of a whole town. The fly is a nuisance, aside from being a conveyer of diseases, and the zealous effort to exterminate it should be countrywide.

ORIGIN OF MRS. GRUNDY

Mrs. Grundy, that awesome personage who stands for that part of society whose opinion as to the proprieties is narrowly conventional, had her origin in the drama. She made her debut, according to The Chicago Tribune, in a London theater in 1798 in a comedy entitled "Speed the Plow."

In the play Dame Grundy is the wife of a rich and successful farmer. Dame Ashfield, another farmer's wife, for whom she is the object of innocent envy and idolatrous adoration, can do nothing but talk of her and quote her and invoke her approval on every occasion and with reference to every subject.

When she returns from the market Dame Ashfield tells her husband that Mrs. Grundy's eggs and cattle are the best she has seen there; and when news comes that their daughter has married a title, she exclaims: "Our Nellie married to a real baronet! I wonder, Tummas, what Mrs. Grundy will say?"

Her husband betrays great irritation at every such reference and finally breaks forth: "Be quiet, woll ye? Always din, dinging Dame Grundy into my ears—what will Mrs. Grundy say? What will Mrs. Grundy think? Can't thee be quiet, let us alone and behave thyself, Matty?"

But the good dame is not to be silenced. And no more are her sister dames today. For we still wonder what Mrs. Grundy will think and say. We may make great shows of independence, and cry, "Plague take her, anyway!" But we bow to her opinion just the same. Mrs. Grundy dies hard. It will take a long time fully to emancipate us from her domination.

KNELL OF LONG HATPIN

New Orleans has passed a "hatpin ordinance" which provides that no hatpins shall protrude beyond the hat unless the point is covered. The penalty is a fine of $1 to $10, or imprisonment from six hours to five days. Policemen have been given special instructions to arrest any woman found violating the ordinance.

Loss of eyesight is a heavy price to pay for woman's vanity and thoughtlessness. Last winter, it is reported, two elevator operators in a Chicago dry goods store had eyes put out by these deadly spears. How many other serious accidents they have caused one can only conjecture, and women and men alike have suffered not only discomfort but actual danger from them in crowded conveyances. It is a public beneficence that in one city at least their inches must henceforth be numbered.

S. C. R.

YOUNG AMERICA

The Boy and the Near-Boy

BY NORA ARCHIBALD SMITH

PART II.

AS IT TURNED OUT, however, Max's father and mother were quite mistaken in saying they would have to try a new plan to make their little boy remember. The experiment hadn't been tried long enough, that was all; and on that very day the spell began to work. Every Thursday afternoon after school Max's father drove out to his factory in the country and took with him the boy and the near-boy for an hour or two of play in the fields. This was one of the things, as his mother had remarked, that Max never forgot; and this special Thursday he turned up at the exact moment, bareheaded and panting, was sent in to get his coat and cap and set off in high feather with Mumps.

Now, as it happened, this overcoat was Max's only one, and he had but two caps, one of which he had left on the stone wall where he was setting up a windmill that afternoon. This, being seen by Ellen, promptly made its way to the camphor chest, and before dark, alas! it was joined by its fellow and the little coat which Max, excited and happy, had tossed on the hall floor as he came in from his drive. On Saturday was to be the picnic to which he and his father and mother and Mumps had all been invited, and to which they were to drive in a neighbor's coach with a host of other people.

Friday morning was fair, and, when neither coat nor cap was to be had for school, little was said, for it wasn't a long walk, and Max clearly had not yet remembered that if he were coatless and capless on Friday he would be likely to be so on Saturday. But his mother had remembered, in a way mothers have, and had made the last additions to the camphor chest with an aching heart.

Friday night at tea Max suddenly asked, "Isn't tomorrow the picnic, mother?"

"Yes, dear," she answered.

"But I've got to have my coat and cap for the picnic, mother."

"Have you, my son?" asked his father. "But how can you, when they're both in the camphor chest?"

"But—mother—father—you wouldn't keep me home from the picnic?" There was a break in Max's voice and a catch in his breath.

"We couldn't let you drive twenty miles, son, even in May weather, without proper clothing," said his father gravely.

Max looked from one to the other, and felt as if a door had been shut in his face.

"Then you're n-n-not g-g-going, either?" he quivered.

"We must, Max," said his father. "You can imagine that we shan't enjoy it very much, but we have no real reason for staying at home; and I think that Mumps should go, too. You will be quite safe here with Ellen, and she will give you your luncheon."

Mumps, too! Oh, that was the last straw! Max tried to gulp down his sobs, but it was too much, and the boy fled from the table, followed by the near-boy, distracted with grief and sympathy. The two people they left behind them were no happier than they. The prospect of a long day in the country without their boy, who would have enjoyed the outing a thousand times more than they, and the grief that he seemed to have learned nothing from the long-planned camphor chest experiment, weighed heavily on their hearts.

—

When the coach drove up next morning in a whirl of sunshine and laughter and boyish hurrahs Max's mother went sadly to meet it, and his father, with Mumps by the collar, climbed reluctantly over the wheels. Max didn't appear at all. He couldn't bear to hear the questions that he knew would hail from every side: "Where's Max?" "Isn't Max going?" "What's the matter with Max?" "Is Max sick?"

He had had a long talk the previous evening with his mother and he understood perfectly that neither she nor his father was attempting to punish him. His bitter disappointment was entirely his own fault. There was no spark of anger in his heart, unless it might have been because Mumps had been taken away from him. "He won't have a good time without me, anyway," he said to himself bitterly, as he peeped at the departing coach from behind the curtain.

He had kissed his parents good-by in the hall without a tear, but it had been hard, there was no denying that; and the sight of Mumps, struggling in his father's arms as they turned the corner, was just the last thing that couldn't be borne. Max clattered downstairs the moment they were out of sight, and Ellen saw him take refuge in the hayloft. No such tempest of grief had ever swept over him before, and it is small wonder that after a while he fell asleep in the hay, exhausted.

By Canoe in the Philippines

One of our mission stations in the Philippines is Pagsanjan, which is becoming a very popular excursion point from Manila now that the railroad has brought it within four hours of the capital. Sightseers here change from the car to the canoe and journey up the river a few miles over the rapids. The illustration gives one an idea of the rocky places over which, at times, the Filipino boatmen must carry the canoes; and it also shows how the American boy and his sisters enjoy a holiday.

The canoes are simply hollowed out trunks of trees, yet they are very thin and easy to carry over the portages until the falls are reached. The boatmen usually put in the bottom a few stones, with which they disturb the rest of many long yellow and green lizards which sun themselves on the trunks of overhanging trees. Occasionally a monkey is seen, while cocoanuts and palms add the tropical touch to the picture. Below the rapids huge rafts are made by putting thousands of unhusked cocoanuts inside an inclosure.

That the Filipino is becoming Americanized is realized when the boatmen begin their journey singing or whistling for the travelers' benefit "Star Spangled Banner" or "Yankee Doodle."

S. A. H.

—

"Max, Max, where are you?" called Ellen at noontime. "Come down to your luncheon. It's all ready, and it's a good one, and I've set it for you on the little table in the window."

The boy awoke then, suddenly, wondering what made his heart so heavy, and was halfway to the house before he knew what was the matter. He sat soberly down to his lonely meal.

"I wonder, Max," said Ellen, bursting in, "if I could leave you alone for an hour or so this afternoon? My sister has just telephoned that my cousin's in from the country and I'd like to see her. Would you be afraid if I left you alone?"

"Afraid!" repeated Max, disdainfully. "How old do you think I am?"

"I don't think at all; I know," Ellen replied cheerfully. "Wasn't I here when you was born? But if you don't mind, then, I'll go out when I've done my dishes, and I'll be back in two hours at most. What'll you do—go out in the garden and play?"

"I shall read in my own room," answered the boy with dignity, and went his way upstairs with proudly lifted head.

Max lived in a small town where all doors stood open in ordinary weather, where no gates were ever latched and where, in the middle of a warm day, everything was as still as a church. It was so still, in fact, when he had chosen his book, and had answered Ellen's good-by and warning to take care of the house in her absence, that he could even hear the clock tick in the hall downstairs. Still and warm, warm and still, it was, like a bed of mignonette in the sunshine.

"I'll read on the sofa," thought Max, and there he stretched himself, and before long, in the warmth and stillness and the soft air that floated in from the garden, his eyelids closed in spite of himself, and the book tumbled to the floor.

—

At about that same time a collie dog, his tongue lolling from his mouth, was making the dust fly on the outskirts of the town. He was panting; it was plain to see that he was exhausted; but he stopped for nothing. He had been torn away from the beloved of his heart by main strength in the morning, and by main strength been held in the coach until the merrymakers reached the picnic grounds. It then occurred to him that Max might have arrived by some other route, and he began at once to look for him, soon satisfying himself that he was not to be found.

"If he's not here, then he's at home," said this wise doggy to himself, and, putting his nose to the ground, he was off like the wind.

—

A fly tickled Max's nose. Max awoke and slapped at it. Then he suddenly sat up and listened. There was a noise on the piazza like the pat-pat of paws. A splendid hope dawned in the boy's lonely heart. Was it—could it be possible that it was the near-boy? Could he have come back from the picnic, the whole ten miles, and all by himself? His throat choking so that he could hardly speak, Max gasped out, "Mumps!" And immediately there was a scramble on the stairs, accompanied by short yelps and barks, and into the room flew a yellow whirlwind. Mumps was hot, panting, dirty; his eyes were blurred, his ears were scratched, one of his paws was bleeding; but nothing and nobody had ever looked so beautiful to Max in all his life. Mumps cried aloud for very joy, and Max cried, too, while they kissed and hugged each other.

"Oh, Mumpsie, my little Mumpsie, you didn't forget me, did you?" sobbed Max. "And I forgot you so often, and forgot everything else; and you came all alone. I deserved every bit of my punishment, I know; but I was so lonesome! And now if I ever forget you, or anything else, again, I just ought to have you taken away from me altogether."

So the boy and the near-boy talked to each other until they had talked their hearts out; and then the boy washed and brushed and fed the near-boy, and washed and brushed himself, and when the coach drove up at dusk there they both were at the gate to meet the picnickers. Max's face looked like a lovely sunset after a storm and Mumps looked like a yellow roll of solid comfort, which he was.

A Matter of Mathematics

The minister was making friends with Willie, his host's son.

"And how old are you?" he asked.

"I'm 5," said Willie.

"Oh, quite a little man! And what are you going to be?" questioned the minister.

"I'm going to be 6," replied Willie.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

May 4, 1913—Joseph Interprets Dreams

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 40. Golden Text, Job 32:8: The breath of the Almighty giveth them understanding.

Joseph began life as a dreamer, and whereas many dreams go astray, his came true. The natural and the supernatural were strangely blended in him. As a farmer boy he dreams of binding sheaves in the field. That was entirely natural. Every farmer boy is likely to do the same thing. But Joseph's sheaf stood upright, while the other sheaves made obeisance to it. That was more than nature. Libraries have been written on the philosophy of dreams, but the life of Joseph is intelligible only on the basis of the divine.

Last week we witnessed the sale of Joseph back in the land of Canaan. He became the property of a Midianite caravan on its way to Egypt. The distance was not so very far, but to him it must have seemed a journey of death. The capability for suffering comes earlier than the world thinks. The thought of the old father at home and the memory of Benjamin must have filled his young heart with despair. If ever one seemed forsaken of man and of God, that one was the little 17-year-old prisoner on his way to the markets of Egypt.

Joseph's Friendship with God Began in His Father's House

But God was with him, not as a hope but as a reality. As the sun went down in the great west and night flung its shadows across the desert Joseph must have felt the touch of the same hand that had guided his fathers through the long years of their pilgrimages. Most important history lies between the lines. Joseph was a boy in years but a man in faith. The experiences of his father had undoubtedly become his own. The story of Bethel we assume had not been kept from him, and the meeting with Esau must have been as familiar as the scenes of his own life. Here is a suggestion that all Christian fathers might do well to consider. Too often they neglect the importance of companionship with their children. How many boys of 17 could leave home equipped in character as was Joseph? God went with him because he had been with him, and the friendship began in his father's house.

The difference between Egypt and Canaan was that of two worlds. In those days intercourse was difficult and the nearest neighbors might live in absolute ignorance of each other. The young lad had never seen civilization beyond the crudest form. The palaces and monuments of Egypt must have smitten him with astonishment. But he was a slave and the market awaited him. History passes over the scene in silence, but such incidents were common and this probably did not vary from the rest.

For some reason the young captive attracted the favorable attention of Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, who paid the price and added one more to the number of his household slaves. Character never changes. It adapts itself to all conditions. The presence of God fits one to his work. The captain of the guard marked the faithfulness of Joseph and determined to advance him. The law of promotion is usually that of merit. The one who is faithful over a few things is most likely to be given the charge of many. Faithfulness is the highest virtue in life.

Joseph's Elevation but the Natural Result of His Faithfulness

Joseph's position was a menial one, but he dignified it by his faithfulness. Positions become honorable only as they are well filled. Potiphar was looking for just such a man as Joseph, and so does everyone who has positions at his command. He was faithful downstairs, so the invitation to come up higher was only natural. Things bring forth after their kind and one success leads to another. The ladder reached upward, until Joseph from the topmost round looked down upon all that he saw.

But the devil dwells upon the top of every mountain. Potiphar's wife fixed her voluptuous eyes upon Joseph and resolved upon his ruin. His conscience saved him. He had a sense of honor toward his master, but something more than personal honor came to his rescue. "How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" The teaching of his home grappled him with hooks of steel. And to this he added flight. Retreat is sometimes victory, and the surest way to overcome evil is to avoid it.

So far Joseph's rewards had come to him for doing right, but now he must go to prison for not doing wrong. This is one of those contradictions over which thousands have stumbled. But tomorrow is essential to the vindication of the present, and Joseph has a further trial before him. Some would have abandoned their faith, but Joseph went to prison still trusting in God. His experience there was the same as with the captain of the guard. God was with him and soon he became master of his little world. This must not be regarded, however, as purely miraculous. Miracles belong to the few, while faithfulness is the possibility of all.

Joseph, as Result of Ingratitude, Continues Two Years in Prison

As warden Joseph was kind to his fellow prisoners and took a personal interest in their comforts. One morning while engaged in his daily inspection he observed that two of the king's convicts seemed especially sad and asked the cause. Few wardens would have noticed it, but sympathy has keen sight. The prisoners were of high rank in the king's household, one being his chief butler and the other his chief baker. Each had had a dream the night before, the butler dreaming of wine and the baker of bread. The dreams seemed natural, but their interpretation perplexed the dreamers. Joseph unfolded their meaning. The baker was to be slain, while the other was to be restored to the favor of the king. And so it came to pass. The chief butler went back to his service of wine, while his fellow was hanged as Joseph had said.

And then follows ingratitude. As the king's cup bearer was leaving the prison Joseph asked his kindly mention to the king, but for two years he served his wine and forgot his friend. Those two years were the test of Joseph's life, but he held fast his faith, and without complaint did his daily work.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins.

ANALYSIS—Joseph in prison. "Good thoughts in bad times." Egyptian belief in supernatural origin of dreams. Prison chain grows heavy. "The one shall be taken and the other left."

In a previous year we studied the incidents which are passed over this month, but we should remember that Joseph is in prison for no crime. Falsely accused of a great wrong, the master who had honored him compromised between condemning him to death and ignoring the false charge by consigning him to prison. This of itself is pretty good evidence that he did not believe Joseph guilty, but removed him from his home for the sake of peace.

In the prison Joseph speedily made friends and came to be trusted as a keeper's assistant. There is a great deal of truth in the current phrase, "You can't keep a good man down"; because, whether in a palace or a dungeon, the spirit of the man will make itself felt (ch. 39:3, 23).

An interesting volume might be made up of what Thomas Fuller would call "good thoughts in bad times," the meditations of men confined in prisons. It was in prison John Bunyan wrote his "Pilgrim's Progress," and in prison that Sir Walter Raleigh penned some of his most famous verses. Much of what is best in Luther's works we owe to his enforced seclusion in the Wartburg. The child of God knows how to make the best of things. Joseph's usefulness was not destroyed but increased by his imprisonment. He was later to learn what it means to live at court, but now he was taught what it means to live in a cell, and he was a better man for his sympathy with suffering.

Verse 9—The Egyptians have always believed that dreams are supernatural and significant. The present khedive of Egypt sent as a valuable gift to the emperor of Germany a dream book, and in many eastern countries such a book occupies the place of honor which we reserve for the Bible. It is indicative of the respect Joseph had won among his fellow prisoners that they should confide in him as one who would be likely to know the will of the invisible deities.

Verse 10—Our dreams are usually a strange mixture of the normal and the inexplicable. They are usually suggested by our avocations (Ecc. 5:3), but not bound by or conformed to our actual experiences. Dreams are indicative of character rather than prophetic of fortune. No devout soul who spends his wakeful hours in prayer spends his sleeping hours in cursing. If our dreams are not ruled by our wills they are by our characters.

Verses 11-13—It is quite probable that what Joseph knew of the butler and what the butler further revealed of himself in this dream guided the young Hebrew, under God, to a truthful interpretation of the incident. Joseph had seen this man, weighed him and formed his opinion of him during their common captivity. It is probable the dream only confirmed the thought of Joseph's mind that such a man as this must soon be vindicated and so restored to royal favor.

Joseph Prays to Be Remembered, but Is Easily Forgotten

Verse 14—"This plea," says Joseph Parker in his exposition of this passage, "is the first touch of humanity we have seen in Joseph. He has been almost superhuman (in his patience) up to this point. Now the poor lad says, 'The chain is very heavy. I cannot bear this any longer.' And he tells the butler that he wants to get out of this dungeon. I am glad of this revelation of Joseph's real self. It brings me near to him." And God heard in heaven the appeal the man forgot.

Verse 15—But in all his distress—for no vision of approaching release had been vouchsafed to Joseph—he did not demean himself. His plea was straightforward and dignified. He asked nothing except what was justly due him. He offered no bribes, he attempted no fraud. He does not go into a history of what he had suffered from his own brothers and from his vile mistress. He is content to assert his innocence rather than to charge others with wrong.

Verse 23—However innocent the butler may have been, he was not the man he ought to have been, for he readily forgot Joseph's plight in his own good fortune. But while the restored servant of the court left his friend to suffer a prolonged imprisonment, God was accomplishing two purposes during this delay. He was first of all preparing Joseph for an exalted place in which he could be of unspeakable value to the state and to the suffering, while he was preparing Pharaoh through the good office of the restored butler to listen to his late appeal. God meant to do more than free this young Hebrew. He meant to exalt him and make him a covert for his father's family in distressing years not far removed.

Joseph Delivers Message Faithfully Regardless of Its Purport

Verse 16—The chief baker seems to have been a different sort of man from the chief butler. He had, probably with reason, a suspicion that no vindication and release awaited him. He kept his dream to himself until the cheerful prospect before the butler made him venture to ask what has own dream might mean. His was a dream of disaster and Joseph had to tell him it would be fulfilled. It is a pleasant thing to tell a good man that it shall be well with him, but it requires some courage to say to the wicked that it shall be ill with him. Too many of us are quite eager to assure the butler of his coming reward, but keep silent when asked the fate of the wicked and ungodly servant of the great King. And yet it was far more important that the baker should be warned of his fate than that the butler should be congratulated on his fortune. Many a husband and father has left his family in the very trough of the seas because no one had the courage to tell him that he had but three days to live, and many a son has died impenitent and unsaved because neither parent nor pastor ventured to say what each saw, the brief remnant of time left to him in which to "get right with God."

NEW BOOKS

A New Discussion of Modern Women

WHY WOMEN ARE SO, by Mary Roberts Coolidge; MAKING A BUSINESS WOMAN, by Anne Shannon Monroe. Those who object to "the new woman" are prone to overlook two important facts regarding her—first, the conditions from which she has evolved; and second, her justification of herself as a highly efficient human being. In "Why Women Are So" Miss Coolidge has so summed up feminine traditions and ideals of the nineteenth century as to convince most thoroughly of the wholesomeness of the twentieth century reaction. In "Making a Business Woman" Miss Monroe, relating her own industrial experiences, has proved how extraordinarily capable a woman may be—how fully justified in rebelling against a narrow life of inaction and matching her brains with man's in a struggle which furnishes her with "a new hope and a new motive."

When one stops to think of it there is nothing amazing or repellent in the modern emancipation. Consider the conventional ideal of womanhood in 1800—docility and prettiness, ignorance of life, prudery, perverted physical impulses, anæmia, sentimentality, inactivity (except in regard to domestic drudgery), the polite practice of gossip and fancy work, lack of any intellectual horizon, insincerity, subordination, eternal self-sacrifice instead of self-development, and so on ad infinitum. Contrast with it the being who has emerged, by her rebellion, from this chaos of feminine "virtues" and there is very little doubt left as to which is the superior type. Miss Coolidge is a convincing analyst and her book is one of the significant reflections of the modern tendency. It is heartily to be recommended to those people who are impatient or disgusted with the new woman.

Miss Monroe's book is almost equally stimulating, though it takes the direction of a personal narrative. Its author, tired of being poor and lazy, and convinced that "brains were brains, whether in a boy's head of a girl's," left her home and secured a typist's position in Chicago at $4 a week. At the end of four years she had gained her independence and $50,000. The story is entirely true, though the characters are fictitious, and it gives one a very definite idea of the big and fine things a woman may accomplish in the business world. [Henry Holt and Company, New York. $1.50 net and $1.30 net. MARGARET C. ANDERSON.

Sermons, Addresses and Lectures

THE WOMAN OF TACT, by W. Mackintosh Mackay. This new volume of Sunday evening sermons by the pastor of Sherbrooke church, Glasgow, is a good one to stand beside his "Bible Types of Modern Men." After a striking address on "The Womanliness of Jesus," Mr. Mackay gives twenty-one sermons on typical women of the Scriptures. The book gets its title from the one on Abigail, whose story is well told. The selection of texts is unique. A sermon on the factory girl is taken from the text, "Two women shall be grinding at the mill; one shall be taken and the other left." The society woman is discovered in the text, "Remember Lot's wife." And starting with the text, "Greet Priscilla," we have a sermon on the ideal minister's wife. Other sermons are on the discontented bride, the woman that can make up her mind, the woman of self-importance, and similar themes. The book closes with a valuable sermon on Mary, as the mother of the gifted Son. Like Mr. Mackay's other book, this one is full of literary illustrations. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.50 net.

MEN AND THE KINGDOM, by J. C. Massee. The author makes grateful mention of the fact that he has regularly preached to an audience in which 40 to 50 per cent were men. It must be said that they received strong food, if this book is a sample. There are ten chapters. One is a very urgent address on the tithe, with the thesis that "honesty with God has only one question involved—that of tithing." "A selfish, stingy man cannot be a Christian." Dr. Massee finds the neglect of the Bible due in part to the lesson helps system in the Sunday schools. He thinks also that it is a crime to commit the teaching of the Bible "into the hands of half-grown, immature schoolgirls." Instead, he calls men to undertake the work. It is not often charged that ministers have been preaching too much theology; generally it is the reverse. But Dr. Massee means that there should be more expository preaching, which will, of course, be theological. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. 75 cents net.

THE RULE OF FAITH, by W. P. Paterson, constitutes the Baird lectures for 1905, whose publication has been delayed for the sake of more thorough treatment than the brief course of lectures permitted. Dr. Paterson is professor of divinity in the University of Edinburgh and has produced a book which will constitute a capital introduction to theology, especially in the field of bibliology. The first part discusses the seat of doctrine, presenting the Roman Catholic theory of the church, the Protestant theory of the Bible and the rationalistic theory of the reason, together with the variants of the last theory. The analysis is both fair and thorough. The second part deals with the substance of doctrine. We trust the book will be widely read by ministers and laymen. It will help to make clear-cut the Protestant position as against the Roman Catholic on the one side and the rationalistic on the other. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.50 net.

THE LADDER OF CHRIST, by Reginald J. Campbell, will give to many American readers a more kindly feeling for a preacher who has been most widely known by his radical and sometimes unseemly utterances. The sermon upon the failure of radical criticism to eliminate the supernatural Christ from the gospels is reassuring as to his allegiance to our risen Lord. His style is captivating, his spiritual interpretations inspiring and his homiletic power unquestionable. While evangelical Christians will not readily accept his views of the Bible, what he gets from the Bible is, as he says, "that Jesus was all the Christian church throughout the ages unceasingly has declared him to be." [Pilgrim Press, Boston. $1.25 net.

SUNSHINE ON LIFE'S WAY, by Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins. This book consists of twenty-eight brief papers selected by Mrs. Winthrop Curtis Knowles from the articles which Dr. Tomkins has published from time to time in The Philadelphia Public Ledger. They are of the most practical and most Christian sort, and we strongly commend the book to ministers for their young men. [E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

ALL THE YEAR ROUND: An Outlook Upon Its Great Days, by Newell Dwight Hillis. The dozen addresses in this volume on themes appropriate to our religious and patriotic anniversaries were delivered by Dr. Hillis in the course of his regular ministry from Plymouth pulpit. They are in characteristic style, and the reading of them will put one in the spirit of these great occasions. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1.20 net.

QUIET TALKS ABOUT OUR LORD'S RETURN, by S. D. Gordon. This is the ninth volume in the "Quiet Talks" series. It has the same gentle tone that has marked the others, and its spirit is helpful in the straining, strenuous life which most men live. Mr. Gordon is minutely literal in all his interpretation of the Scriptures which deal with our Lord's return. He is a strong believer in the imminent coming of Christ as an introduction to the millennium. The book may not prove convincing to those who hold another view of the passages involved, but it will be helpful because of its reverent spirit. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. 75 cents net.

Novels in Miniature

PRUDENT PRISCILLA, by Mary C. E. Wemyss, is a story of a charming and ingenuous young person whose aim in life is to be a universal sympathizer, and whose lofty and self-imposed mission to the troubled and unhappy resulted in the direst confusion. The romance is one of young wedded love, and holds a note of wistfulness which turns to fullness of joy at the story's close. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

TANGLES, by Margaret Cameron, is made up of short stories that are meant to fill a big mission—that of making the world laugh. We believe that if Miss Cameron had been a little more real in the solution of her humorous situations she would really have been a little more humorous. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.30 net.

CLARA, by A. Neil Lyons. A collection of short stories dealing with strange life dramas of London's East side. Mr. Lyons's facility at characterization, coupled with a splendid human interest, has enabled him to write a book that is conspicuous for its humor and personality. [John Lane Company, New York. $1.20 net.

THE HEATHER MOOSE, by A. N. and A. M. Williamson. A typical Williamson motor romance laid in Scotland. It has, however, more substance than is usual with these entertaining writers—a more vigorous characterization and descriptive passages of charm and value. [Doubleday, Page and Company, New York. $1.20 net.

THE KEYNOTE, by Alphonse de Chateaubriant; translated by Lady Theodora Davidson. This novel is last year's prize winner for the best piece of imaginative writing done in France. It concerns a French boy's dissolute career and his father's successful efforts to regenerate him. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.20 net.

SONNICA, by V. Blasco Ibanez. Ancient Greece and Rome serve as a background for the story of a beautiful courtesan who heroically goes to her death in battle. There are several romances in the story—all linked with tragedy and woven with the hands of a poet. [Duffield and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

CÆSAR'S WIFE, by Marguerite Spalding Gerry, is a tremendously interesting novel dealing with a man and wife who became estranged through a miserable misunderstanding. The story is vital until its author resorts to worn-out expedients in her climax. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.30 net.

THE GHOST GIRL, by Henry Kitchell Webster, is burdened by impossible situations and a weird mystery plot. A young American artist and a girl who is supposed to be dead are the principals; but the details of their story are too intricate to enter into. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

THE VALLIANTS OF VIRGINIA, by Hallie Erminie Rives. The charm of the southern romance has full sway in this talented author's new novel. There are some delightful characters and an atmosphere of wholesome sweetness. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.35 net.

AS HE WAS BORN, by Tom Gallon. The narrative of a care-free man whose penniless condition forces him to accept the terms of an obnoxious will. The book seems inferior in ideas and craftsmanship. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.20 net.

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

CHAPTER XXV.—Continued

IT WAS Rosalie Horton's letter. Bradford read it and his face grew colorless. He read it again, and yet again. "There! I can repeat it now," he thought. "This precious thing is burned into the tissue of my brain." He flung it down upon the table.

"A lie as false as hell," he said in a shaking voice. "And yet it is true, in part." Then his anger blazed out. "And you," he cried, "you, who call yourself so fine a gentleman, you have kept that letter for more than three years and never so much as asked me for an explanation. This, then, is the secret of your change toward me before my second arrest. This is why you still believe the 'Drum' story, which no one else believes, and which was absolutely false. This was the secret of your rude repulse of me on shipboard. This is the secret of the present insult. Why did you not ask me to explain? Why did you not give me what any criminal has, a chance for self-defense? There lies your letter," with an eloquent gesture. "Keep it! Cherish it! Read it, reread it! Think how noble you were, proclaiming through a whole city that a friendless young man was an impostor, unworthy of confidence. The day will come when it will sting you to remember what that letter has made you do tonight. Good night, sir." And before Mr. Elmore could reply he was gone.

With some misgivings that gentleman replaced the letter in the file. "'False as hell, yet true,'" he repeated. "What did he mean? What did he mean? He was never so fascinating, even in his anger. Who is he? What is he?"

* * * * *

A knock at the door of Jake's house on Long Point at 7 o'clock next morning brought Jake himself to answer.

"Vell? Vhat you vant?" he asked gruffly.

"Breakfast. I've rowed from the foot of the lake. I'm Professor Horton of the seminary."

"Ya. I haf seen you in der pank alreaty. I haf seen you in der poat."

"Yes, I know. Can I get breakfast?"

"Ve keeps no poarding house, yet."

"Ya, ve do," a woman's voice broke in. "Ve gif him der preakfast, Jake." It was Jake's sister calling from the breakfast table. "Pring him in, Jake."

"You row up dis morning alreaty?"

"Yes."

"Vere is der poat?"

"Down on the point on the gravel."

Jake disappeared, leaving Bradford at the table with Gretchen.

"I'm looking for a place where I can spend the summer and be out of sight," he began. "I want to work where no one will disturb me. If I go over yonder to Kenton's I'll be bothered all the time; there's too much noise and too much whisky over there. Can't I stay here?"

"Ve keeps no porting house, yet."

"I know. I don't want a boarding house. I want to come here just because you don't keep a boarding house. I'll eat what you put on the table and find no fault; I'll sleep in the barn if you haven't an extra room; I'll pay $10 a week in advance and I'll stay till September. What do you say?"

The arguments were strong, and appealed to the thrifty mind of Gretchen. She showed signs of yielding. "Ve haf rooms, alreaty," she said. "I go talk mit Jake."

By the time Horton had finished his breakfast the brother and sister returned, the former carrying Horton's trunk on his sturdy shoulder. Matters were evidently to be taken for granted.

"I findt der trunk in der poat," began the German. "I make der poat in der parn. Gretchen say you shtay mit us alreaty."

"I am to have a room in the house, then?" Bradford smiled faintly at the success of his persuasions, and added, as Jake nodded, "There's a box of books in the boat. I'll go for it."

"Nein, nein," the other remonstrated. "I pring dem, yet. Und ve vill pull der poat up in der prook, also," pointing to the deep, wide stream that flowed near the barn and offered excellent mooring.

Before midday the young man was installed in a comfortable room overlooking the lake. But there were no signs of pleasure in his face at the arrangements which suited him so perfectly. His mouth was stern and set, and at intervals his eyes flashed dangerously, as from time to time the storm which had raged all night in his heart swept over him afresh.

In the first bitterness of his anger the knowledge had come to him that Glencoe was an impossibility for him that summer, perhaps forever, and he had written his sister that a sudden change of plans would make it necessary to give up his visit to her. He had given no reasons; he had made no mention of his probable whereabouts. It was his foster mother's malice that had been the cause of Mr. Elmore's injustice and he dared not trust himself to see her. He was far too deeply wounded to seek an explanation; that could never remove the sting of her unkindness, nor annul its effects. The original letter, written in anger, he might have forgiven; what seemed unforgivable was her silence the past two years, in view of all that he had done for her and of her reconciliation with him. "She might have taken it back; she might have told the rest of the truth," he said over and over during that night of misery.

Prestonbury, he realized, was as impossible for him just now as Glencoe. To see on its streets the man who had defamed him, the woman who was forever beyond his reach, was more than his strength could endure. Silence and solitude, he knew, would be his only remedy; and he turned in flight to the wooded shores of the lake that he loved as a refuge alike from friends and enemies. The softness of the early morning air, the early twittering of the birds, the lapping of little waves against his bow as he rowed up the lake, all failed to soothe him.

"'Visiting the iniquities of the fathers,'" he quoted bitterly. "Where is the justice in that? Because God made me the son of my father, must he make me carry my father's curse as well?"

"Jake," he said to his host at dinner that first day, "promise me that when you go to town you won't tell anyone I'm here." Then, as he saw a shade of suspicion cross the German's face, he added, "There's nothing wrong about it—I only want entire rest. Understand?"

"Ya," said Jake, with a searching look that appeared to satisfy him.

June passed into July, July into August, with its sultry days and sudden storms. Days of determined, albeit mechanical, reading and study had disciplined his mind into calmness, though far beneath the surface the bitterness remained unsoothed. In daylight he avoided the lake; at night, after there was no longer likelihood of his being observed or recognized, he would row or drift, sometimes till midnight. The afternoons he spent under the shade of the sycamores that lined the shore of the point.

One such afternoon, hot, humid and oppressive in spite of a breeze from the north, he lay there watching the clouds and dreaming day dreams, through all of which moved ever the figure of a lovely girl with bronze hair and lustrous eyes. Suddenly, half way across the lake, a sail boat came in sight, and surprise and curiosity brought the observer to an upright posture.

"That fellow can't know much about flaws and cross-currents from the ravines," he thought. "If he does, he's either a good sailor or a lunatic, for there's a storm over the bluff yonder."

Presently he could make out two figures in the boat, a man and a woman. The wind was rising rapidly now, and the whitecaps began to chase each other over the lake. As he watched he once more made comment. "That man doesn't know how to sail a boat anywhere in a smooth sea, much less in this rough one."

The storm was coming on very swiftly. Clouds black, white-edged and thunderous rose fast. Fiercely and more fiercely blew the wind. "I'll get my boat," he said, and starting, stopped at the house to ask Gretchen to send Jake down to the point. As he pulled out of the brook he saw Jake hurrying down; rowing toward him, he yelled, "Be ready if I want you!"

"Ya," came the answer, but faintly, so loud was the gale. The man with the sail was trying to get his craft before the wind, but it blew now from one quarter, now from another, and the cross-currents rocked and twisted the boat terribly. To furl the sail was impossible. Jake shouted directions, but it was useless; his voice was lost in the gale. Suddenly the bow lifted high, the boat twisted round, shivered and capsized. With a few strokes Horton was close to Jake. "Wade out and climb in, Jake. I can't get nearer shore."

The distance to the sailboat was not great, but it seemed to Bradford as if all eternity was passing, for he had recognized the occupants of the boat. Rather would he die than fail in the rescue. The craft was sheer over, and Charlie Elmore had succeeded in climbing up on its bottom, where he lay flat and was holding Eleanor by one arm. He was not strong enough to lift the unconscious woman out of the water to his place of comparative safety. The poor boy thought the end of all things earthly had come for his Aunt Eleanor.

"Hold hard, Charlie, hold hard!" called Horton as he neared him. "Jake, I'll pull alongside the lady and you reach her and draw her in while I hold the skiff steady. Be quick! Now! Now, Jake, now!"

The German was strong, but it took all his power to drag the dead weight from the tempestuous water, and there was imminent danger of a second capsizing. To take Charlie off was easier, though when once he saw his aunt and himself safe in the rescuing boat the lad collapsed weakly. He was able, however, to help Horton run the "Antigone" in shore in the shelter of the quiet brook, while big Jake, taking Eleanor in his arms like a baby, carried her, still unconscious, in to Gretchen. At the end of half an hour the girl was in bed, and Gretchen, with such means as were at her command, was striving to restore her to consciousness, while Charlie, dressed in an outfit of Horton's, was quite himself again.

"Charlie," said Horton, "when Miss Elmore is conscious and you can see her, tell her that someone has gone to Prestonbury to tell her father she is safe, and a carriage will be here for her by midnight."

"Who'll you send, Mr. Horton?" asked the boy, with a glance at the lake, still rolling heavily.

"I'm going myself," he said, simply, unhesitatingly.

It was 5 o'clock when Horton started for his hard journey. The pull down the lake was with the wind, so that it was only 7 when he reached Wilton's boathouse at the foot of the lake and hired a man to go with a message to Ansley Jickers. "Tell him," he ordered, "that a man sent you to report that Charles Elmore and a lady were caught in a storm on the lake this afternoon, nearly drowned, and rescued by Jake. They are at his house now."

The lake was quieter on Bradford's return trip, but the pull against the wind was hard, and it was 11:30 when he moored his sturdy craft in Jake's inlet. His first inquiry was for Eleanor.

"How's the young lady, Jake?" he asked of the German, whom he found in the barn.

"Badt—fery badt," was the reply, with a grave shake of the head.

"How bad? What do you mean?" cried Bradford, with a shiver of fear that shook him more than the hard physical trial of strength he had just passed through.

"I mean badt, fery badt," was the laconic answer. "You petter see Gretchen, yet."

Gretchen, called away from her patient, told but a brief story. "The fraulein wake. Den she ask vere she be alreaty. Ve tell her. She begin to vorry for her family's not knowing vere she be. Ve tell her you haf gone to make it right. Den she cry; she say, 'Oh, Sharlie, Sharlie, I haf killt him—he will trown, alreaty! Oh, Sharlie, Sharlie!' Till now," said Gretchen, "do as ve may, ve cannot get her qviet."

"Tell her that I am here all safe, Gretchen," said Bradford. "I did not mean her to know who it was had gone." To himself he could not help adding the exultant thought, even in his anxiety, "Does she care like that, then?"

In a moment more Charlie appeared. "Aunt Lennie wants to see you, Mr. Horton. You'll have to go up; it's the only way to quiet her."

Again Bradford did not hesitate. As he entered the room, dimly lighted, a smile crossed the drawn, tense face that lay so eagerly watching the door. "Oh, God, I thank thee," Eleanor said weakly, and buried her face in the pillow.

Perplexed, uncertain, helpless, like every man in the presence of a woman's tears, Horton stood waiting beside the door. At last, raising her head, she saw his troubled look, and quick to divine its cause reached out her hand to him. He crossed the room and took it in his own.

"Is it you, Bradford? Really you?" she asked faintly. "And you're not drowned?"

"Yes, it is I, Eleanor, really I; and I am not drowned." His words were only trembling repetitions of her own, but his heart bounded with fullness of joy.

"I've been so afraid—so afraid," she whispered, raising to his the lustrous eyes that he had seen in dreams so long. Forgetful of all else he stooped and took her in his arms and kissed her, careless of Charlie's presence behind him.

"You need not be afraid any longer, dear heart," he said. In that moment while she clung to him they did not hear the opening door, but footsteps behind him made him turn to see in the doorway Ansley Jickers, smiling, and Richard Elmore, glowering and stern and pale as death.

Standing at the bedside, the clinging hand still in his own, Bradford faced the interruption. At sight of her father's face the girl's eyes dilated. "Oh, daddy, daddy!" she began.

"Hush! Not a word!" The anger in his voice frightened her. "Ansley, you take Charles home. I will stay till morning. Tell Mrs. Elmore to send up the carriage early. As for you," starting with fierce wrath toward Horton, "you reptile——"

"Don't, daddy!"

He turned on her as fiercely. "Silence! Remember your promise to me!"

With a sob she turned her face away. Shanghai and her word of honor given there seemed to her to rise like an impassable barrier between her and the man whom the terror of the night had shown her she loved well.

"Mr. Elmore"—the voice was that of Ansley Jickers—"this is one of the times, I think, when silence for all parties concerned is a safety valve. Come along down, Charlie; I have dry clothes for you. And, Eleanor, I congratulate you on your rescue and your rescuer. Jake told us outside what Bradford did."

When the lawyer and his stepson had gone, there was dead silence in the room save for Eleanor's sobbing. The two men faced each other, eyes meeting with sharp impact, neither speaking, neither flinching. At last the elder man walked to the door, opened it, stepped back and pointing to its threshold said with unutterable scorn, "Go!"

"Mr. Elmore," Bradford replied with calm, soft voice, "there lies your daughter. But for me she would be lying at the bottom of the lake. I periled my life to save here. Here you stand. But for me you and Mrs. Elmore would be in awful suspense this livelong night, not knowing what had happened to your daughter. I periled my life to carry to you the tidings of her safety. For this, your only word to me is one of scornful dismission. I will obey it.

"No—wait one moment,"-as the other started forward to break roughly his detaining clasp upon the hand in his. "I have not finished till I say that though your will may keep our lives, hers and mine, apart forevermore, you have no power to make her stop loving me, to make me stop loving her. Now, I will say good night, and I shall never speak to you again."

He raised the hand he held to his lips, then gently relinquished it, with a calmness and assurance that by its force held Mr. Elmore back from interference. "Good-by, Eleanor," he said. "Good-by, dear. God will watch between us both."

Before Mr. Elmore recovered from his surprise at being so dominated by the will of another stronger than he the door had closed and left him alone with his daughter.

(To be continued)

The men's glee club of Carroll College has just returned from a most successful two weeks' tour in northern Wisconsin.

In the morning serve with sugar and cream. Or mix with any fruit. The grains are thin and crisp and dainty. They taste like toasted nuts.

The Best Cooked Cereal Foods

Every kernel of wheat or rice contains not less than 100,000,000 granules.

Those encased granules must in some way be broken, so that digestion can act.

Cooking and baking break part of them. Toasting breaks up more. But in Puffed Wheat and Rice—and in these foods alone—all of these granules are blasted to pieces.

This is done by steam explosion—by a process invented by Prof. A. P. Anderson.

A separate explosion occurs in each granule. The center of moisture is turned to steam—in huge, sealed guns, revolved in ovens heated to 550 degrees.

Inside of each grain there occurs not less than one hundred million explosions. So Puffed Wheat and Rice are easier to digest than any other form of grain food.

Puffed Wheat, 10c
Puffed Rice, 15c
Except in Extreme West

The Best-Liked Ready Foods

For many months, in the heart of New York, we maintained cereal lunch rooms.

There we served all sorts of cereals, all at equal prices. And four out of five who took ready-cooked cereals chose the Puffed Wheat or Puffed Rice.

Now countless homes have offered the same choice to folks at their morning tables. As a result, it took 250,000,000 dishes last year to supply the demand for these foods.

These great crisp grains—eight times normal size—form delightful foods.

Thin, airy, whole-grain wafers—like no other foods you know. There are a dozen ways in which your folks would enjoy them.

Let them try them. Serve them tomorrow morning. Let them say which cereal foods they like best. There are four chances in five that they will choose these scientific foods.

The Quaker Oats Company
Sole Makers—Chicago

In the evening serve in bowls of milk. The grains will float like bubbles. And these foods, as all physicians know, do not tax the stomach.

(413)

The Open Hearth

Work Among Negroes in the North

One of the striking facts brought to light by the census of 1910 was the remarkable movement of the colored population into cities of the North. Whatever the cause of this movement, the negro problem is therefore beginning to assume national proportions and will soon be peculiar to no one section of the country.

The census showed that the total colored population in the United States was 9,828,284, which was 10.7 per cent of the whole population. There were 1,625,640 negroes living in 229 cities. In twenty-seven cities one-fourth or more of the population were negroes; while in four cities the negroes outnumbered the whites; viz., Charleston, S. C., Savannah, Ga.; Jacksonville, Fla., and Montgomery, Ala. In the North there were forty-six cities having over 2,500 negroes each, or a total negro population of 775,927.

The presence of the negro in such large numbers in these cities must have an appreciable effect upon the life of these communities. Will it be good or bad? This will depend largely upon the kind of leadership these negroes will have, and this will depend in no small measure upon the way in which the church takes hold of the situation. The leadership of the negro race in America is largely in the hands of the negro ministry. The good work already accomplished by Presbyterian churches for colored people in several northern cities assures us that this can be extended with good results.

These facts are not known to Presbyterian ministers and home mission committees, who do not seek out these Presbyterians with black faces as they seek out the immigrants and foreigners with white faces. For this reason it seems the wise and proper thing to do would be for the Home Board to employ a colored man acquainted with conditions to act as a field secretary to go into these cities and supervise the organization of missions and churches, working in cooperation with the home mission committee of the presbytery or synod.

Among the many cities where Presbyterian churches should be opened and Presbyterian ministers of their own race provided are Kansas City, Mo.; Columbus, Dayton, Cleveland and Springfield, Ohio; Detroit, Mich.; Buffalo, N. Y.; Boston, Mass.; Providence, R. I.; New Haven, Conn.; Wheeling, W. Va.; Evansville, Ind.; Springfield and East St. Louis, Ill.; St. Joseph, Mo.; Kansas City and Wichita, Kan.; Omaha, Neb., and Oakland, Cal. These cities have negro populations ranging from 2,500 to 25,000 and no Presbyterian church.

Will not the Presbyterian Church take hold of this situation with vigor? What better way of celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of emancipation than by our beloved church rising up and saying that no Presbyterian because of his color shall be denied shelter and care within the Presbyterian Church, whether he live in the North or South or at the very ends of the earth? C. B. ALLEN.

Sunday School Is Evangelistic

I want to express my surprise at a letter in The Continent for March 27. Where are the young people that never get any Christian training at home to learn of Christ if it is not in the Sunday school? When mothers and fathers never go to church, never read the Bible, never pray, where are the children going to learn?

I have taught for fifteen years in the primary and beginners' departments of one church, and looking over that roll today I can see forty children and six parents that I know positively were got into the church through the Sunday school. I know my pastor could add many names to the list. Every communion service children of the junior and intermediate departments, coming from homes that care nothing for the church or the Bible, come into church membership. I pity the church of which the writer of that letter is pastor, for if none of the children joining the church were gathered in by the Sunday school that church is not doing its full work for the Master.

Some of the children that I have had in my beginners' department actually did not know the stories that we suppose all children know. When I have asked some of these mothers about church attendance they say no, they "never go to church, got out of the way when the babies were small; have to get dinner in the morning, the husband is tired, his only free day, so they go to the park or lake, or someone comes in; don't have time to read the Bible, don't understand well enough to explain to the children, don't know how to pray." How are these children going to be evangelized in the home?

Many of our best church workers were gathered in by the Sunday school. What if a few are indifferent, at least their name is on a church roll, and at some time they have taken enough interest to stand up and profess Christ.

The idea of the writer is an ideal one, but in this world we have to work with conditions as they are, not as we would like to have them. So, as long as that is true, we will have to gather in the children, teach them of Christ, his love for them, and have them go home and teach the parents.

JESSIE CONSTANCE DONAHOWER.

Leave Them Optional Anyhow

One of the leading educational experts of the country has said that the graded lessons are an attainment in pedagogy that he had not dared hope for from the Sabbath schools in his own lifetime. The action of the General Assembly's committee which appears to have withdrawn courses of studies approved by three General Assemblies would seem, to one who has found the graded lessons workable, a procedure requiring great caution.

Many Sabbath schools will not feel obliged to choose courses prepared by our own board if they find better courses elsewhere. And while outside agencies are making such a strong bid as they are to supply our schools, the suggestion may be in order that the present courses be allowed to remain as optional for those who prefer them, alternative courses being provided for those who want something different, and are not satisfied by the international ungraded lessons. GRAHAM C. HUNTER.

Ways of Working

The Cabinet in Sunday School

A Sunday school patterned in organization after the executive departments of the federal government is the novelty which Rev. Alfred L. Taxis has introduced into the school of the church at Havre de Grace, Md. Something seemed needed to coordinate the work of the members of the school to accomplish greater results. Mr. Travis tells how the plan works.

"One day during my reading I took from my shelf Haskins's 'The American Government.' The different departments were explained and the thought occurred to me, 'If this system has been used so successfully in the government, why can't it be used to advantage in the church?' Plans were laid and submitted and we agreed to try it for a time. Every need and work in the school was tabulated. Then we apportioned these under various bureaus. At the head of each bureau there is an active practical worker whose title is secretary of the ——— bureau. This secretary has five assistants and is absolute in his bureau, with the exception that he cannot foist any plans that will interfere with another bureau. His position is exactly as that of our secretary of state, or war. When any problem comes up it is turned over to the secretary of the bureau under whose jurisdiction it falls. He is expected to consult his assistants and report a working scheme or plan which is put into operation.

"To illustrate what I mean: Several weeks ago I received notice of Young People's Day, with plans, purpose and a tentative program. I turned this over to the bureau of ways and means. The secretary with his assistants laid plans for a rousing evening for this cause. The consequence? The church was crowded. Everything went off smoothly and new recruits were got.

"The problem of teachers arose. This was given into the hands of the same bureau. They planned well, so that now we have enough

The Spirit of the West

The Secretary of one of our Presbyterian Boards recently made two flying trips to the West. One covered a number of the great cities of the Middle West, some of which have since then been severely stricken. The other embraced the Pacific Coast Centers, as well as touching the Rocky Mountain Empire.

This Secretary came back to his desk with a new appreciation of the Spirit of the West. He found some great and wonderfully growing Churches, many others holding the Fort with courage and patience in the midst of hostile conditions. He met many Ministers who are pouring out their lives as willing sacrifices in order that the Church of Jesus Christ may win the great Empire of the West.

He reports that no single movement in the Church in late years has been more fully appreciated by these Pioneers of the Cross than the Endowment Campaign for Ministerial Relief and Sustentation. "It gives us new life to know that the Church believes in our work enough to provide for our days of disability," one of these patient heroes said.

If the Church wants to touch the nerve of Home Missions on the Frontier let it provide for the disabled and dependent Home Missionary and it will put new life in the men who are now "on the firing line."

The Spirit of the West is wonderful.

Will the Church match and enrich it by the Spirit of Jesus Christ?

Do you want to get behind the "man who is behind the gun"?

If you are interested write

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building :: Philadelphia, Pa.

teachers and several substitutes. Our Sunday school needed repairs. It needed new books for the library. The secretary of the bureau of property was notified. He called his assistants, who planned a complete renovation. So well did they do their work that our Sunday school room is 'new.'

"At present we have the following bureaus: The bureau of property, the bureau of ways and means, the bureau of recruiting, the bureau of socials, the bureau of music. These are arranged in the order in which the secretaries must assume the superintendency in case of sickness or inability of the superintendent and assistant superintendent. This keeps someone at the head all the time.

"Every secretary and the officers of the school, with the pastor, who is ex-officio member of every bureau, constitute the cabinet proper. This meets once a month to discuss the problems and needs and directs the proper bureau to handle the case.

"The advantages of this system are obvious: The system employs talent not otherwise used; it trains many for active service; the bureaus learn to work together and gain much experience which makes them specialists in their line; the work is expedited and does not depend on one or two individuals. The results financially, numerically and spiritually are very noticeable. Everybody feels a responsibility now and the work goes on with alacrity."

—The pastor of Calvary church, Camden, N. J., Rev. Samuel D. Price, sometimes finds in The Continent helpful things to add to the items printed in his church calendar. He recently republished the beatitudes as written by Dr. Work.

—The Sunday School Association of Baltimore, Md., through The Baltimore News, is conducting a contest in attendance. The class in the city having the largest percentage of attendance for the five Sundays will be given the place of honor at the head of the procession to be held at the end of the contest. Reports of the weekly attendance of each class are being published in the paper.

What Presbyteries Are Doing

Dayton Presbytery in Springfield appointed a committee to secure funds for flood stricken churches to aid in rehabilitating their edifices and in helping to maintain services. After a careful consideration it was found that $175,000 would be needed. This is not intended as relief for general purposes but exclusively for the churches of presbytery. Most of the people in the afflicted churches have suffered untold loss, their homes are utterly ruined or most seriously damaged, their business has been crippled and many farms have been rendered almost worthless. The situation demands prompt and most generous help from Presbyterians throughout the entire country. The committee is as follows: Dr. John Clark Hill, Springfield, chairman; John L. Dorst of the Y. M. C. A. of Springfield, secretary; John S. Crowell, Springfield, treasurer; Daniel Brownlee, D. D., Dayton, and William K. Swan, Camden.

Alton Presbytery at Carrollton, Ill., chose Rev. Charles A. Highfield moderator. Carrollton church after extensive improvements was rededicated with sermon by A. B. Korey, D. D., of Jacksonville. Addresses were made by W. J. Darby, D. D.; Miss Marie Brehm, Reverends W. S. Neely, James R. Sager, W. S. Ward, W. P. Baker, W. M. Hudson, J. G. Reynolds, C. N. McManis and E. L. Gibson, and Elder S. G. Brown.

Zanesville Presbytery in Newark Second church elected Rev. Theodore Crowe moderator. Stewart V. McClelland was received as a student for the ministry. Rev. D. D. Tullis was chosen visitor to Lane Seminary.

Sioux Falls Presbytery met in First church at Sioux Falls, S. D. George Sprague of Omaha Seminary was examined for ordination.

Brownwood Presbytery at Blanket elected Rev. T. W. Davidson moderator. Overtures 1-5 were negatived and 6-8 affirmed. The Presbyterial Woman's Missionary Society had charge of the program April 9.

Overtures on federated churches and reduced representation were denied by Carlisle Presbytery. Rev. D. I. Camp was elected moderator. The committee on evangelistic work urged the use of the Sabbath school as a field of work.

Dallas Presbytery adopted resolutions expressing confidence in the wisdom and administrative ability of the Home Board.

Overtures 6 and 8 were affirmed by Lansing Presbytery at Dimondale, Mich. Rev. M. Grigsby was moderator.

Rev. D. H. Fisher was moderator of Topeka Presbytery. Most of the overtures were negatived.

Rev. G. A. Wickwire of New London was elected moderator of Iowa Presbytery, which met at Winfield. Rev. J. K. Alexander was retired on request. A large increase in per capita gifts to Iowa home missions was reported. Presbytery held a rally in the interest of the endowment for Parsons College.

Mankato Presbytery meeting at Marshall, Minn., elected Dr. W. M. Jennings of Blue Earth moderator. Overtures 1-6 were answered in the negative and 7 and 8 affirmed. Council on rural work was held one day of the session. Green Valley church was dissolved.

Grand Rapids Presbytery is making an effort to find out why the ten members of Presbytery who are not now preaching have not found pulpits. Comment was aroused at a recent meeting when an insurance agent in a western city asked to be dismissed to another presbytery. Low salaries paid ministers were blamed for the desertion of pulpits. Rev. George Cleaver of Big Rapids was elected moderator.

Solomon Presbytery answered all eight overtures in the negative. Rev. A. E. Vanorden of Salina was moderator. Rev. M. B. McNutt addressed presbytery on rural work.

Houston Presbytery met at Port Arthur, Texas. J. L. Dickens, D. D., was chosen moderator. W. C. Kunze, one of the candidates under the care of the presbytery, was examined and licensed. A group of three churches has been placed under his care.

Newton Presbytery was most hospitably entertained at Branchville church. Rev. Hugh Walker was elected moderator. Overture on reduction of Assembly was denied, presbytery not favoring the proposed method of reduction. An affirmative answer was given to overtures on sessional rolls and suspended members.

Highland Presbytery at Axtell, Kan., enjoyed a number of papers and conferences. Members said it was far better than the monotonous business grind of the average session. Rev. S. A. Fulton, who was filling the unexpired term of Dr. G. F. Moorehouse, was elected moderator. A few churches of the presbytery showed a decided increase in membership and benevolences, several showed a very healthy condition, while several pastorless little churches seem to invite some sort of federation.

Birmingham Presbytery met at Green Pond. Elder W. M. Cosby, Birmingham, was chosen moderator. Chester Leonard was received as a candidate for the ministry.

Oakes Presbytery met at Edgeley, N. D., and elected Rev. Axel Rasmussen moderator. The attendance was the largest in the history of the presbytery. A special program was filled with carefully prepared addresses. Rev. B. G. Jackson, who was dismissed to Chicago, began work in this presbytery ten years ago as Sabbath school missionary and has spent seven years of service within its bounds.

Neosho Presbytery at Cherryvale, Kan., held a very interesting prepresbyterial conference, consisting of addresses on evangelistic work by Rev. C. G. Hamilton and Rev. J. A. Smith. Rev. C. C. Russell, a former pastor of Cherryvale church, made an address on "The Message to the Churches." Rev. J. M. Douglass, retiring moderator, and Rev. William Cady also spoke. Overtures 1-6 were answered in the negative.

Grande Ronde Presbytery met at Union, Ore. The pioneer character of this large presbytery is evident in the fact that the moderator, Dr. C. C. Babbidge of Burns, could not be present by reason of the long stage drive he would have to take. Rev. W. Baird, his successor, and Rev. D. K. Laurie, in the capacity of Sunday school missionary and pastor-evangelist, are diligently and successfully developing a large area of virgin soil. Rev. Evert Smits of Elgin was elected stated clerk.

Council Bluffs Presbytery at Carey, Iowa, chose Rev. William Lampe moderator. It was resolved that at the fall meeting a convention of the Y. P. S. C. E. should be called with view to forming a presbyterial union.

Twin Falls Presbytery at Burley, Idaho, elected Rev. Dwight Dunham of Heyburn moderator. A petition for the organization of a church at Riverside was granted. Since last

(Continued on page 580)

DOCTOR TALKS ON FOOD
President of Board of Health

"'What shall I eat?' is the daily inquiry the physician is met with. I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment a large percentage of disease is caused by poorly selected and improperly prepared food. My personal experience with the fully-cooked food, known as Grape-Nuts, enables me to speak freely of its merits.

"From overwork I suffered several years with malnutrition, palpitation of the heart and loss of sleep. Last summer I was led to experiment personally with the new food, which I used in conjunction with good rich cow's milk. In a short time after I commenced its use the disagreeable symptoms disappeared, my heart's action became steady and normal, the functions of the stomach were properly carried out and I again slept as soundly and as well as in my youth.

"I look upon Grape-Nuts as a perfect food, and no one can gainsay but that it has a most prominent place in a rational, scientific system of feeding. Anyone who uses this food will soon be convinced of the soundness of the principle upon which it is manufactured and may thereby know the facts as to its true worth."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

No Alum
in ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely
Pure

News Notes from Various Fields

Colorado

Denver Hears Dr. Foulkes

The ministerial association was addressed April 7 by Secretary Foulkes of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation. The day previous he had moved the audiences at Central and Twenty-Third Avenue churches.

Twenty-Third Avenue church, P. V. Jenness pastor, has closed the year with a clean slate as to indebtedness, $2,600 having been paid in the last few weeks to attain this end. The men of this church are doing citywide service in personal work and Bible study promotion.

Mountview Boulevard church, Rev. F. W. Evans pastor, has made a gain of 100 per cent the last year on all benevolences. The Sabbath school and membership rolls reveal a good net increase.

Berkeley church, Rev. S. E. Taylor pastor, in the neighborhood of "White City," presents unique features. Without any sensational elements in his ministry and preaching the pastor has built up a Sabbath school of 170, a church attendance equally large, a prayer meeting averaging seventy-five, and after enlarging the building twice it seems imperative that it be done again, or an entirely new structure erected.

Immanuel is the new name Union church congregation adopted on going into its new building. Rev. W. E. Fry is pastor. The Christian Endeavor and Sabbath school are both growing in every way. The congregation is now worshiping in the commodious basement of the edifice in process of construction.

It has been decided to proceed with arrangements for the enlargement of First church, Pueblo, at a cost of $25,000. The building will be extended to cover the lot owned by the church and will then seat 1,400 instead of 400, as at present. I C. W. Weyer is pastor.

Iowa

Mrs. J. W. Countermine, wife of the stated clerk of Des Moines Presbytery, died recently after a long illness. She was at one time a member of the faculty of Buena Vista College.

First church, Oskaloosa, is in better condition financially and otherwise than for many years. A debt of $1,600 has been paid and all current expenses met. There has been an increase in church attendance both morning and evening.

A union tabernacle revival campaign began in Fort Madison April 17 conducted by Evangelist C. E. Hillis and party. Seven churches are united, including the Evangelical Lutheran and Episcopal. The campaign will last about six weeks.

Idaho

A church of twenty-two members was organized at Hillsdale April 6. It is grouped with three other points under the care of Rev. W. L. Strange.

Rev. J. B. Currens, Sunday school missionary for Kendall Presbytery, has been developing work at Driggs, Felt and three or four other points along the line of a new railroad that has recently been built into the Teton basin. E. P. Linnell, a student of McCormick Seminary, will serve some of these points during the summer.

Missouri

Eight mission study classes have been conducted by Westminster church, St. Joseph, during the past winter, six of them for young people. The benevolent contributions of the church for the year amounted to $1,628.

Kansas

Walter M. Irwin, D. D., closed a pastorate with Wichita West Side church of nine and a half years the middle of April. A fellowship service, at which seven brother ministers brought greetings to pastor and people, was the last meeting. Dr. Irwin assumes the duties of synodical superintendent of missions for Kansas. During the past year the full China propaganda apportionment was raised. A Sunday school cabinet, installed April 13, will add efficiency to that part of the church's work.

New York

First church, Hobart, recently broke ground for a $12,000 church. The past year has been the best the Bible school of the church has ever experienced. Rev. W. A. George is pastor.

An Easter offering of $2,000 was made at Hemstead church for the debt of the edifice. This large amount was in appeal to a letter by the pastor, Dr. F. M. Kerr. This church was organized in 1644.

The enrollment of First church, Auburn, Dr. Charles G. Richards pastor, is 1,168. The increase in benevolences during the year has been nearly $500, or one-sixth. The total enrollment of the Bible school is 1,131.

First church, Port Chester, is growing under the pastorate of Dr. Ira W. Barnett. In his nine months of service the church membership has increased largely. At the recent annual meeting the growth in members for a number of years was shown by charts. A nursery has also been successfully introduced, so that babies can be watched while their mothers are attending services.

"Old" First church, Glens Falls, has had a gratifying year. Its membership has crossed the 1,000 mark and its contributions for benevolences and church support total over $18,000. This church has a men's Bible class of over 100 members and two adult classes for women of nearly the same number. The men's club, recently organized, has committees which look after the unemployed, also matters of civic welfare. At the church banquet April 8 the pastor, D. H. Martin, D. D., announced that his associate, Rev. L. S. B. Hadley, has decided to join the missionary forces in China and has been accepted by the Foreign Board. Mr. Hadley was among the first of his graduating class in Williams College and also took high rank in Auburn Seminary. After a brief pastorate at Sackets Harbor he came three years ago to be assistant minister at Glens Falls church.

Ohio

Nearly a thousand persons attended the annual dinner of Wooster Westminster church in the gymnasium of Wooster University. This mingling of college and church was arranged by Dr. William F. Weir, Westminster and university pastor.

The Y. W. C. A. of Hamilton has issued a striking appeal for help in rehabilitating the association, which was all but wiped out by the flood. Only a few homes in Hamilton were not submerged and bankers estimate the damage in the city to reach $15,000,000. The appeal is accompanied by pictures showing the ruin in and about the association headquarters.

Wisconsin

Four young people's societies with a total membership of 109 are affiliated with First church, Ashland, Rev. Carlton L. Koons pastor.

Waukesha has had in the last few weeks one of the greatest revivals in its history. Rev. James Rayburn conducted the services, in which five churches united. There was a large number of conversions and the religious life of the churches has been wonderfully helped.

Pennsylvania

The gifts of Grove City First church to missions last year exceeded the amount used for running expenses. Rev. Herbert Hezlep is pastor.

The last of a series of meetings by the brotherhood and ladies' auxiliary of Langhorne church was held April 24.

Men of the state are rallying to support the brotherhood movement under the direction of the newly appointed secretary, Rev. Frank B.

Pears'

Most soaps clog the skin pores by the fats and free alkali in their composition.

Pears' is quickly rinsed off, leaves the pores open and the skin soft and cool.

Established in 1789.

PRESBYTERIAN TRAINING SCHOOL
of Chicago
for Christian Workers
Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

"The World in Chicago" and the great Missionary Pageant will draw many Presbyterians to Chicago during May. This will furnish opportunity to become better acquainted with the School. We can furnish satisfactory accommodations in the School buildings for both men and women guests at these very modest rates:

For a week or longer—
Room and Breakfast (per week) $4.50

For a day, or less than a week—
Room, Breakfast and Dinner.... 1.00
Room and Breakfast..... .... .75

Single Meals—
Breakfast and Luncheon, each... .25
Dinner, 6:15 p. m. (Sunday, 1:15) .35

Street cars passing our door reach "The World in Chicago" and the Pageant direct (20 to 30 minutes' ride).

We suggest to pastors and parents of young women, especially those living near Chicago, that you urge them to attend "The World in Chicago" and at the same time get in touch with the Training School.

Some life decisions may result.

For boarding reservation or information regarding the School address

H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

The Only Self-Help College in Illinois
BLACKBURN COLLEGE HAS $23,000 TO EDUCATE YOUNG MEN FOR THE PRESBYTERIAN MINISTRY
WRITE President Hudson, Carlinville, Illinois

Everitt of Allentown, who was formerly state Christian Endeavor secretary for New Jersey. Dr. J. T. Henderson, associate national secretary, has been visiting Pittsburg Presbytery, and other portions of the state will be visited this spring. Strong emphasis is being placed upon evangelism.

New Jersey

West Side church of Englewood entertained Presbytery of Jersey City. Rev. James G. Bailey was elected moderator.

Frank S. Niles was ordained in Park church, Newark, April 15, his father. Rev. W. H. Niles of Rose, N. Y., taking part. Mr. Niles in the fall will become a missionary of Central church, New York, at their station in Hwaiyuen, China.

To fill a need felt to exist for Christian education among the Jews of Newark, the churches have united for a campaign among them. Several offers of large financial assistance have been received by presbytery and it is probable that the mission work will be carried on in connection with Bethany church.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. Thomas Tyack at Hightstown was celebrated in connection with the meeting of Monmouth Presbytery recently. At an evening meeting addresses were made by Dr. W. P. Finney of Lincoln University, Dr. George Swain of Allentown, Rev. Frank Lukens of Burlington and Dr. J. S. VanDyke of Hightstown. A number of letters were received from friends of Dr. Tyack on his anniversary.

Convention of the Y. W. C. A.

Historic Richmond opened its hospitable doors to this gathering of a thousand women, who came from all parts of the country for this the legislative as well as inspirational meeting of the national organization of the Y. W. C. A. From its opening the convention was noteworthy for the orderliness of its procedure. The quietness and efficiency of its machinery, careful attention to the many details which mean much in saving time and in keeping information before delegates all reflected great credit upon the work of the department of conventions and conferences of the national board. Technical and strictly associational matters were presented, and in addition addresses on related but outside subjects by such speakers as Professor Graham Taylor, Mrs. Raymond Robins of Chicago and J. D. Eggleston, chief of field service in rural education, Washington, D. C., served to keep the touch with the progressive social thought of the day.

Interest in the world's womankind and realization of what may and should be done for the sisterhood of foreign lands was stimulated by the presence and words of the Misses Tritton, Miss Picton-Turbervill, Miss Ruth Rouse and Miss Clarissa Spencer, all of London and all connected with the world's committee of the Y. W. C. A., and by the address of Rev. Frank W. Bible of Hangchow, China.

The national board had appointed four commissions, which presented notable reports on the assigned subjects of social morality, thrift and efficiency, character standards and training of volunteer workers. From the list of addresses by trained association workers mention should be made of one on "The Life of the Girl in the Country" by Miss Jessie Field, national secretary for small town and country work, and of Miss Ella Schooley's presentation of plans for work at the Panama-Pacific exposition. The coming together of delegates and Richmond friends for social enjoyment was not overlooked. Two large and beautiful receptions were given —one by the national board at Hotel Jefferson, Miss Grace H. Dodge occupying the place of prominence in the receiving line, and the other at the executive mansion, which Governor and Mrs. Mann generously opened.

But doubtless in no other way was the great present-day lesson of association possibilities brought home so forcibly as in the graphic display of the exhibit and, most of all, of the Saturday afternoon pageant. This pictorial production was planned for out of doors, but it lent itself immediately to indoor production, which the inclement weather made necessary. Fortunately, the large horse show building was available, and was ample even for a performance in which 800 young women participated, with 4,000 people as spectators. Here with all the devices of the pageant of old was enacted a living representation of what the association spirit, impersonated in queenly manner by Miss Louise Holmquist of New York City, can do for all groups of young women. Heartiest congratulations were offered Miss Helen Thoburn, the author, for her achievement in its writing.

The great spiritual motive of the organization, to show the transforming power of the love of God through his Son in the lives of girls and women, was felt in every session. The mass meeting on Sunday afternoon, addressed by Miss Oolooah Burner of New York City, was a simple gospel service, with a talk making a direct appeal for the surrender of wills to the control of Christ. Readers of The Continent need only to be told that Dr. J. G. K. McClure of McCormick Seminary gave a series of talks on spiritual themes to be assured of the deep inspiration of the devotional hours. Besides Dr. McClure and Mr. Bible other Presbyterians who appeared on the program were Miss Elizabeth Dodge of New York City, Mrs. Wallace Radcliffe and Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson of Washington. Naturally, great interest attached to the daughter of the President, and an overflow meeting was necessary when she spoke, a second church being quickly filled. The convention was further indebted to Miss Wilson for the preparation of a daily prayer calendar.

ALICE REBECCA MARSH, General Secretary.

Princeton Seminary Commencement

The 101st annual commencement of Princeton Theological Seminary will be held Tuesday, May 6, at 10:30 a. m. The graduation exercises will be followed by the meeting of the alumni association and the alumni dinner at 1 o'clock. On the preceding Sunday, May 4, the president of the seminary will preach. The board of directors will meet May 5 at 10:30 a. m. and the trustees May 6 at 3 p. m.

Dr. A. M. Brodie recently delivered an address at Emporia College on the English Bible.

THE WORLD IN CHICAGO
EVERY WEEK DAY—MAY 3 TO JUNE 7, INCLUSIVE

COLISEUM
GREAT MISSIONARY EXPOSITION
REPRODUCING LIFE AND SCENES IN EVERY LAND
Open 12 Noon to 10 p. m.
ADMISSION 25c CHILDREN 15c

AUDITORIUM
PAGEANT OF DARKNESS AND LIGHT
PORTRAYING FOUR TRIUMPHAL EVENTS IN THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS
2:30 and 8:15 p. m.
RESERVED SEATS—50c TO $1.50

The Way to Choose a School Is By Personal Observation

LAKE FOREST ACADEMY is located twenty-eight miles north of Chicago on the Chicago and Milwaukee Electric, the Chicago and Northwestern railroad and Sheridan Road, the automobile highway.

LAKE FOREST ACADEMY just commemorated its fiftieth Commencement. It has a record of fifty-four years of accomplishment. You will be interested in what this school has to offer.

If you cannot make a personal visit send for finely illustrated booklets to

WILLIAM MATHER LEWIS, Headmaster
Box I
LAKE FOREST, ILLINOIS

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

Good subscription man wanted to travel in Eastern States. Address with references The Continent, 156 5th Ave., New York, N. Y.

THE LOCAL SUPPORT OF Hastings College

HASTINGS COLLEGE was founded among friends. It has a loyal base.

HASTINGS gave half of the college's first $100,000 endowment.

The average annual support from Hastings for the past thirty years has been about $8,000.

Hastings gave the college twenty-eight students last fall.

The Synod is loyal, and made Hastings the Synodical College three years ago.

Thirteen persons, outside Hastings but within Nebraska, have recently given 1,000 each toward the Second Hundred Thousand.

The total to date is nearly $60,000. Two and a half months left; $40,000 to raise. Let many help and we shall surely win. Without eastern help we cannot win.

Address, HASTINGS COLLEGE, HASTINGS, NEB.

Dr. Eckels Wants to Resign

Has Been with Arch Street Church for Nearly Twenty Years—Influence Widely Felt—The Social Union Elects Officers.

PHILADELPHIA—Dr. Mervin J. Eckels, pastor of Arch Street church, absent for some months on account of impaired health, officiated at the April communion. He then announced his intention of asking for a dissolution of his pastoral relation at an early day. His many friends and a devoted people deeply sympathize with him in the providence which necessitates such a step. For nearly twenty years he has ministered to the church and the fruits of his labors have been abundant. As president of the board of trustees of Philadelphia Presbytery and as a member of the Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work, as well as in other influential positions, Dr. Eckels's usefulness has been manifest to the church throughout the city and beyond. The congregation will meet April 30 to consider his resignation.

The Presbyterian Ministers' Social Union has elected Dr. F. W. Loetscher of Princeton president, Dr. Charles E. Dunn vice-president, Rev. M. J. Hyndman secretary and Rev. F. J. Collier treasurer.

PUSH THE VACATION SCHOOLS

In a meeting in the Witherspoon building, called to form plans for vacation Bible schools the coming summer, the custom of fitting sacred hymns to ragtime music was sweepingly condemned by Mrs. Edwin C. Grice.

Hermon church, Frankford, has suffered a severe loss in the death of Elder Alexander J. H. Mackie, M. D. He was the father of two ministers—Rev. J. B. C. Mackie of Edge Hill church and Rev. Alexander Mackie of Sharon Hill.

Oxford church, Rev. J. W. Francis pastor, is using the $1,000 bequest of the late Samuel H. Cramp as the basis for a church endowment, which it is hoped to increase. The every-member canvass for congregational expenses and benevolences recently undertaken yielded encouraging results.

Miss Mary Lattimore of Soochow, China, and Rev. and Mrs. Charles H. Bandy of Fatehgarh, India, addressed the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society here recently.

W. P. WHITE.

Remember the McAll Mission

Anniversary Luncheon in Pittsburg—Convert of W. A. Sunday Exposes Vast Waste of the Liquor Traffic in County.

PITTSBURG—The twenty-fifth anniversary of the establishment of the McAll mission in Paris was observed at a luncheon in the Fort Pitt hotel April 16. There were 375 persons representing twenty-eight leading churches of the city present. Addresses were made by Dr. W. L. McEwan, pastor of Third church; Bishop Whitehead of the Protestant Episcopal Church and George T. Berry, general secretary of the McAll mission in this country. Plans were made for a new $30,000 building in Paris, and announcement was made that $25,000 was already subscribed. Pittsburg churches give about $1,000 per year for this mission.

J. Denny Oneil, one of the Billy Sunday converts at McKeesport and a leading politician of Pennsylvania, in a stirring speech before the union ministers' meeting showed the liquor traffic is costing Allegheny county more than $700,000 a year in the way of providing for the paupers, the insane and the criminals produced by it, while the county received only $89,000 a year in revenue. The committee having in charge the organization of the Federation of Churches reported that it did not deem it wise to complete the organization by securing a permanent secretary. The executive committee, representing all Protestant denominations, will be called together to advise whenever occasion demands.

Dr. John Timothy Stone of Chicago addressed on April 15 a company of ministers and laymen at a noon luncheon in the Fort Pitt hotel and a large audience in First church in the evening.

In response to the offer to Washington and Jefferson College by the general educational committee of New York that $100,000 would be given toward the endowment, providing an additional amount be raised by the college and its friends within the next few months, a committee was selected and a campaign started April 16. Former Congressman Ernest Acheson was made chairman. Already $100,000 of the college's share has been subscribed.

The Presbyterian Union has planned a special luncheon at McCreery's Monday evening, May 5. Officers will be nominated and an address will be made by Dr. R. M. Russell, president of Westminster College.

P. W. SNYDER.

Send Many Home Board Members

New York Willing to Stand by Mission Body—Only Half of Church Members Attend Communion—New Church Gets Name.

NEW YORK—Presbytery held a memorable meeting April 14. Aside from licensing six candidates, including four from Union Seminary against whom Dr. John Fox protested, presbytery put itself on record as being willing to stand by the Home Board in electing half of its sixteen commissioners from the board itself.

Presbytery voted after long discussion to dissolve Mount Tabor negro church in Harlem. Trouble is due to misunderstanding between the church and the pastor, Rev. Horace R. Miller, which has caused such a falling away that there is literally no one left to preach to.

Presbytery appointed a committee to go to Albany and represent it in the fight against open Sunday saloons.

The advisability of appointing a permanent committee on spiritual conditions in the presbytery was considered. The report on the "state of the church" by Rev. Albert L. Evans of John Hall chapel showed that not more than one-half the church members come to communion. During the year there were 722 persons received into forty-five churches, one-half of those received coming from the Sunday school. There were 1,046 baptisms.

Bayard Dodge, son of Elder Cleveland H. Dodge, who withdrew his request for examination, may enter the Congregational ministry. After he graduates from Union Theological Seminary he has agreed to be Y. M. C. A. secretary for the students in Beirut Protestant College for three years.

Rev. Walter Laidlaw, secretary of the Federation of Churches, and Dr. William P. Swartz, secretary of the New York Sabbath committee, with others, appeared at Albany April 15 against the bill which proposes to legalize Sunday afternoon and evening saloons.

NAME IT FORT WASHINGTON

Fort Washington church is the name decided on for the new uptown branch of West-Park church, the corner stone of which was laid April 17 by Doctors Anson P. Atterbury and Anthony H. Evans. There were addresses by Dr. Edgar W. Work, moderator of New York Presbytery, and Dr. Howard Duffield of "old" First church.

The session of Fifth Avenue church has decided to close Alexander chapel. The few Italians who live in the neighborhood now are well provided for by other Presbyterian churches.

The total attendance at the Labor temple for the year just closed was 156,000. This was an average of 3,000 per week.

The Salvation Army has purchased property at No. 225 the Bowery and will build a hotel for workingmen, one of a network of such agencies in all large cities of America, as part of the memorial to William Booth.

BIBLE TEACHERS TRAINING SCHOOL
SUMMER TERM
JULY 9—AUGUST 5

The Courses of Study

Bible Study, Biblical Theology and Philosophy, Religious Pedagogy and the Psychology of Religion. Evangelistic Principles and Methods of Work (including summer tent work and street preaching). Missionary Efficiency at Home and Abroad, Comparative Religions, Social Teachings of Jesus and the Prophets, Phonetics and Language Study.

Courses conducted by a Faculty of specialists. Lectures by prominent leaders from various churches. For further information, address ROBERT WELLS VEACH, Dean of the Summer Term, Dept. N, 541 Lexington Avenue, New York. Send for General Catalogue.

For the General Assembly
PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES
May 14 to June 1, 1913
Atlanta, Georgia
SOUTHERN RAILWAY
Premier Carrier of the South

3 Through Trains Daily—Each Direction, Affording Highest Class Service. Dining, Drawing, Stateroom, Sleeping and Observation Cars 3

NEW YORK TO ATLANTA, GA.

Lv.	New York	12:30 a.m.	11:08 a.m.	4:35 p.m.
Lv.	W. Philadelphia	3:30 a.m.	1:20 p.m.	6:52 p.m.
Lv.	Washington	8:50 a.m.	4.35 p.m.	10:45 p.m.
Ar.	Atlanta	5:00 a.m.	11:15 a.m.	5:00 p.m.

Only Line Operating Exclusively Pullman Train Between New York and Atlanta

SPECIAL RATES FOR ABOVE OCCASION
WRITE FOR RATES AND FULL INFORMATION

NEW YORK OFFICE: 264 Fifth Avenue
A. S. THWEATT, Eastern Passenger Agent

PHILADELPHIA, PA., - - - - 828 Chestnut St.
BALTIMORE, MD. - - - - 119 E. Baltimore St.
WASHINGTON, D. C. - - - - 705 15th St., N.W.

The art of spending

A very eminent editor has said: "The gospel of advertising is 'Prepare to buy.'"

Very true!—and a tremendously illuminating text. There are many schools which teach the art of making money; but none attempt to teach the best ways of spending, or buying.

In this respect every good publication is an educational force. Through its advertising columns you may "prepare to buy"—you may secure advance information on anything required from mittens to monuments.

Advertising teaches you what is WHAT! It makes you a better judge of values—it enables you to pick and choose, and to get the most for your money.

Be thankful for advertising, and prove it by your works.

THE ADVERTISING MANAGER

CHURCH MONEY

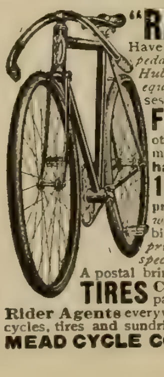
Is being raised in large amounts by churches which ship to us all their

OLD NEWSPAPERS, BOOKS
MAGAZINES, OR WASTE PAPER

This is a splendid plan to raise church money or pay off the church debt; and it is the long-sought "something out of nothing" plan, as the material is usually thrown away.

Write us at once for information and prices.

THE WESTERN PAPER STOCK CO.
1452-60 Indiana Ave., CHICAGO



"RANGER" BICYCLES

Have imported roller chains, sprockets and pedals; New Departure Coaster-Brakes and Hubs; Puncture Proof Tires; highest grade equipment and many advanced features possessed by no other wheels Guaranteed 5 yrs.

FACTORY PRICES direct to you are less than others ask for cheap wheels. Other reliable models from $12 up. A few good second-hand machines $3 to $8.

10 DAYS' FREE TRIAL We ship on approval, freight prepaid, anywhere in U. S., without a cent in advance. DO NOT BUY a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you get our big new catalog and special prices and a marvelous new offer. A postal brings everything. Write it now.

TIRES Coaster Brake Rear Wheels, lamps, parts, and sundries half usual prices.

Rider Agents everywhere are coining money selling our bicycles, tires and sundries. Write today.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. S304 CHICAGO

Wilkes-Barre Campaign Closes

Converts of Mr. Sunday Number 16,584—Sunday School Parade Is Big Feature—Roman Catholics Praise Him.

WILKES-BARRE—No religious movement in the history of this city has ever approached the enthusiasm that has prevailed throughout the evangelistic campaign of Rev. William A. Sunday. The evangelist and his party won their way at once to the hearts of the people. Thousands who went at first out of curiosity deemed it impossible that a baseball player who had drifted into the ministry could move the self-complacent, intelligent element in the Wyoming valley into such a spirit of enthusiasm as was reported from other places. But already thousands of applications for church membership have been made, and other thousands will follow.

A total of 16,584 persons were dealt with and recorded as beginning a new life, including many Roman Catholics. Many more thousands will lead better lives. Hundreds of drunkards have been reclaimed and have renounced their old ways. Thousands of homes have been made happier and countless lives influenced for good.

The Sunday school parade on the last Saturday but one of the campaign was one of the biggest things of its kind ever seen in this state. More than 12,000 were in line, and after the tabernacle, two churches and a theater were filled there were still hundreds turned away. This most extraordinary spectacle made a profound impression upon the city.

It is conservatively estimated that 668,300 persons attended the meetings of the campaign of seven weeks. The personal collection for Mr. Sunday and his workers on the last day amounted to $23,188.

It may be said, in all fairness, that while critics carped to the last, the only ones who did not yield to the unusual sincerity and earnestness of the evangelist were those whose business interests were attacked or somehow affected by the campaign.

Many churches closed even their Sunday schools during the seven weeks. That seemed to be a most unreasonable thing at first glance and met with outspoken objection. But it will be hard now to find one of the churches that regrets doing so. Father Curran, a local priest, said publicly: "I sincerely believe that Wilkes-Barre has been immensely better morally and religiously by the presence and work of Mr. Sunday." S.—C.

Reduced Prices to Exposition

Effort Made to Stimulate Attendance the First Week of World in Chicago—Brotherhood Finds Homeless Boys in City.

CHICAGO—The biggest missionary project ever attempted in the Middle West will open in less than two weeks. The thousands of men, women and children who have been studying for the various parts in "The World in Chicago" have been attending an increasing number of meetings and rehearsals during the last few weeks in order to be ready for the opening. Extra efforts are being made to insure a large attendance during the opening weeks of the exposition, which is to be in the Coliseum. Specially priced tickets are to be sold at all the churches participating, good only during the first six days or on Mondays thereafter. These tickets for children will be only 10 cents and on Saturday mornings in groups in charge of a Sunday school teacher children are to be admitted at 5 cents each. The general admission ticket for adults during the entire exposition will be 25 cents, with season tickets for $5, good for reserved seat at the pageant and for all parts of the exposition at any time. A train load of scenery is needed for the pageant. This will arrive soon. Inquiries are being received from church workers in cities within 200 miles of Chicago concerning the exposition. It is expected that there will be a considerable number of persons come to the city to see this assemblage of missionary curios and get the stimulus for missions which similar expositions have given in other cities.

Many requests are being received by the local brotherhood council from parents of the Middle West to look up boys who have come to Chicago for work. One young man found in a wholesale house confessed that although he had been in the city two years he had no idea which was the nearest Presbyterian church.

South Park and Crerar Memorial churches both had dinners by men last week. The South Park affair was for the men of the neighborhood by the men of the church. The other dinner was by the men for the boys of the church. Dr. Francis M. Fox, associate national secretary of the brotherhood, was present at both meetings.

SOCIAL UNION WILL BANQUET

"Ralph Connor," Dr. Charles W. Gordon of Winnipeg, will be the guest of honor at the last dinner of the Social Union this year. Ladies are invited to the dinner and reception to be held at the LaSalle hotel April 28. The report of the nominating committee to be presented then will be as follows: President, Cornelius D. B. Howell; vice-presidents, Frank J. Loesch, Oliver R. Williamson, Colonel Joseph H. Barnett; secretary, Thomas G. McCulloh; treasurer, Louis Boisot; directors, Dr. George N. Luccock, Dr. Martin D. Hardin, Rev. Alexander Alison, Jr., Willis Smith.

Mrs. George L. Robinson is under the care of Doctors Herrick and Billings at the Presbyterian hospital ill with leukæmia. The trip abroad which was contemplated has been postponed until fall, when it is hoped Mrs. Robinson can visit her mother in Cairo. Dr. Robinson's duties as director of the American School of Biblical Research in Jerusalem do not begin until Oct. 1.

First church has completed the task of raising $75,000 needed to add men and boys' clubrooms and Sunday school rooms to the church and to buy a manse. Additions to this fund are being solicited for further improvements.

Exercises incident to the end of the year at McCormick Seminary will be held this Thursday afternoon, April 24, when Dr. Cleland B. McAfee will be installed professor, and the same evening, when the graduation service will be held in the Church of the Covenant. Dr. S. S. Palmer of Columbus, Ohio, will be the speaker.

The new Bohemian settlement house will be opened Thursday afternoon and evening and dedicated next Sunday with exercises at 3:30 o'clock and at 8 o'clock. Doctors Shaw and Hill will make addresses Sunday afternoon. Dr. Stone will preside.

The Cook county Sunday school convention closed an exceedingly profitable session last Friday evening with a dinner to the adult Bible classes of the county.

Rev. Norman B. Barr of Olivet church has been spending a week in Winnipeg. While there he delivered an address at the dedication of the chapel of St. Stephen's church, of which Dr. C. W. Gordon (Ralph Connor) is pastor. He also filled several other engagements before Winnipeg organizations.

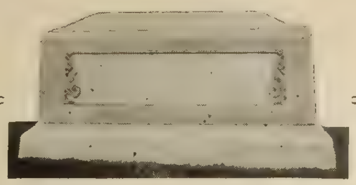
Clergy and Laity

The mother and two sisters of William W. Borden, the young millionaire missionary whose lamentable death occurred in Cairo April 9, had the melancholy satisfaction of reaching his bedside before he died.

Dr. J. T. Henderson, field secretary of the National Presbyterian Brotherhood, spent two weeks in New York City in the earlier half of April. He had a conference with the executive committee of the New York brotherhood and diplomatically established several new points of contact between the New York work and the national conference. Secretary Henderson aided the New York committee by raising a considerable sum of money for its work in the "stranger's bureau."

Andrew and Philip Anniversary

Chapters of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip over the world will hold special exercises May 4, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization. May 5 there will be addresses in Second Reformed church of Reading, Pa., where the first chapter was organized, by Dr. Miller, the founder, and by Nolan R. Best of The Continent. May 8 there will be a celebration in First Baptist church, Philadelphia, and the next day conferences will be held in Bethany church, Philadelphia, and in the evening Bethany chapter house will be dedicated.



SMITH GRANITE
Monumental Productions

Perfection in the granite cutter's art because every detail, design, originality, workmanship, and the granite itself (the world famous WESTERLY) are given the careful individual attention which guarantees satisfaction in every production.

Booklets Mailed on Request

The Smith Granite Co., Westerly, R. I.
Representatives in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Syracuse

W. W. Kimball Company CHICAGO
Builders of PIPE ORGANS for Churches, Auditoriums, Residences
Hundreds of Kimball Pipe Organs have been built in prominent churches throughout the United States. Plans, Estimates, etc., furnished on application. Prices from $1,500 to $100,000.

John Galsworthy's story
The Dark Flower
(The Love Life of a Man) in SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE
is the best LOVE STORY of years. It began in the APRIL NUMBER. It appeals to all who love or have ever loved.

We Will Pay You $120.00
to distribute religious literature in your community. Sixty days work. Experience not required. Man or woman. Opportunity for promotion. Spare time may be used. International Bible Press, 410 Winston Bldg., Philadelphia.

THIS IS ABOUT DUBUQUE

Getting ready for seminary

We are firm believers in a thorough preparation for the ministry. The young men who come to us are of the same mind, for the other sort cannot pass our scrutiny when they come to us.

But—

Unfortunately for any "hurry up" plan, the majority of them haven't laid the foundation for it. They need a good college training.

The "Why" of the college

It is not easy for men of foreign speech to get it in American colleges. We take them — German, Bohemian, Hungarian, what not, and give them what they need. Then they are really ready for our seminary or any other.

It's all very interesting to us, and it will be to you if we may tell you about it. That's all we ask of you by way of initiative—give us your name and address. Write to Dubuque German College and Seminary. President C. M. Steffens, Dubuque, Iowa.

What Presbyteries Are Doing

(Continued from page 575)

fall churches have been organized at Arcadia, Rogerson and Hillsdale, making six during the past year and eleven in less than three years. This is a new presbytery and had only seven churches three years ago. Rev. J. K. MacGillivray resigns as pastor-evangelist to go back to Sunday school missionary work in the same territory.

Bloomington Presbytery met in Hoopeston, Ill., April 8. Rev. W. A. Bodell of Bloomington was chosen moderator. No action was taken on overtures 1-5; 6 in negative, 7 and 8 in affirmative. Rev. W. J. Darby of Evansville, Ind., addressed presbytery on "Ministerial Relief and Sustentation."

Dr. Palmer for Moderator

Columbus Presbytery at Westerville, Ohio, adopted resolutions presenting to the church at large Dr. Samuel S. Palmer as moderator of General Assembly. He is pastor of Broad Street church, Columbus. Dr. Palmer is an Ohio product. He graduated from Wooster University in 1887 and from McCormick Seminary in 1890. He served as pastor at Sterling, Ill., for three years and at Brooklyn church, Oakland, Cal., five years, when he was called to Columbus. During his fifteen years there the church has expanded from an organization of less than 500 members to one of 1,557, the largest in the synod.

Rev. J. R. Bardemeier, Antwerp, was elected moderator of Maumee Presbytery at Tontogany, Ohio. Presbytery reaffirmed five overtures adopted last fall and appointed a committee to organize Lodge Avenue church, Toledo.

Cedar Rapids Presbytery met at Shellsburg, Iowa. Rev. W. Z. Allen was elected moderator. Dr. R. Hughes of the Board of Education addressed the presbytery on the university student work. Steps are being taken for union of churches in certain small localities. Overture No. 6 answered in the negative.

Osborne Presbytery met at Smith Center, Kan. Rev. L. E. Humphrey was elected moderator. Reports showed the salary of every minister paid in full. It was decided to have conferences on evangelistic work and Christian education at the fall meeting.

Urges Card Index in Schools

The card index system was urged for use in Sunday schools by Rev. E. M. Martin of Grand Ridge before Ottawa Presbytery at Aurora, Ill. Rev. J. H. Boose of Pontiac was moderator. Efficiency in church work was the general subject of a number of papers. The women's missionary societies also held a meeting.

Iowa City Presbytery at Tipton, Iowa, elected Rev. M. E. Lumbar of Wilton Junction moderator. The popular evening meeting was addressed by W. M. Evans, D. D., of Coe College and H. W. Reherd, D. D., of Waterloo. Presbytery decided to withdraw from the synodical board of home missions next October and to take care of its own home mission work before contributing to work outside its own bounds. The Women's Presbyterial Missionary Society met at the same time. Iowa City stood first in percentage of giving. Washington stood first in percentage of gain in membership and Williamsburg second. Mrs. W. A. Graff, Muscatine, was elected president of foreign mission branch, and Mrs. J. O. Morris of Davenport of home mission.

Sacramento Presbytery, meeting at Roseville, Cal., elected Rev. J. Fraser Evans of Fair Oaks moderator. W. S. Holt, D. D., of Portland, superintendent of home missions, addressed the second evening's popular meeting on home missions. Rev. William Nat Friend, chairman of synod's committee on social service and pastor of Howard church, San Francisco, gave the closing popular address on "The Story of Social Service."

Will Help Logansport Church

Logansport Presbytery met in Michigan City, Ind., and elected J. Mills Gelston, D. D., moderator. Licentiate J. W. Hamblin was ordained and John B. Donaldson was taken under care of presbytery. Logansport West Side church was destroyed by the recent flood and Rev. S. A. Stewart of Rochester will endeavor to raise $2,000 to help this church. The home mission committee reported the best year in its history.

Freeport Presbytery elected C. J. Wilson moderator. Strong resolutions of approval were adopted on the action of President Wilson and cabinet in abolishing wines from public dinners. Licentiate Milton Strahler was examined and ordained. He expects to go to India. Inspirational addresses were made at joint meetings with the Woman's Presbyterial Society by Rev. W. S. Marquis of Rock Island, Rev. John M. Gaston of the Freedmen's Board, Rev. C. L. Jefferson of Chicago and Mrs. R. M. Ross of China.

Disapproves of Dr. Weaver's Attack

Request that General Assembly appoint a committee to report before the coming session is over concerning the Home Board and the charges against it has been adopted by Cheyenne Presbytery. The resolution "expresses its disapproval of the attack by Dr. J. L. Weaver" and asserts that Dr. Weaver does not represent Cheyenne Presbytery, and any statement to the contrary is erroneous.

Mahoning Presbytery met in Canton, Ohio. Rev. Fred R. Dent was elected moderator. Presbytery reconsidered its action of last fall on overture on reduced representation in General Assembly and changed its answer to negative. A conference was held on the church and social problems.

Westminster Presbytery at Wrightsville, Pa., unanimously adopted an overture to the coming General Assembly requesting the withdrawal of field secretaries and all other official representatives of the Home Board from the field and henceforth permit the presbyteries and synods to exercise their rightful prerogative of exclusive jurisdiction and control over all work within their respective bounds.

Reserve Presbytery met in Kadoka, S. D. H. P. Carson, D. D., was chosen moderator. Of the five overtures on federated churches presbytery answered the first in the affirmative and others in negative, as well as the one on reduced representation in General Assembly. New churches were reported at Trail City, seventeen members, and Pleasant Valley, thirty-six members. Rev. D. S. Brown was appointed Sunday school missionary.

Fort Dodge Presbytery at Jefferson, Iowa, chose Rev. F. A. Smiley moderator. Overtures 1-5 were reconsidered and negatived. Home missions were reported in good shape, but running on a very narrow margin financially. President James P. Linn of Buena Vista College reported plans for a forward movement. Rev. Edwin Charles Haskell was honorably retired on his own request after fifty-three years in the active ministry.

Chester Presbytery referred the expediency of dissolving Glen Riddle church to a committee. A gain of 900 members, an average of fifteen to each church, during the year was reported. In answer to an inquiry as to why the presbytery should be assessed for entertainment of commissioners at the General Assembly, when free entertainment was promised by Atlanta, the stated clerk replied "because the funds were needed to defray the increased mileage expense." Presbytery adopted a resolution asking General Assembly to order the Home Board to annul departments and district divisions created by that body and allow synods and presbyteries to conduct all their own affairs.

Ministerial Obituary

Rev. J. A. McKee

A former missionary to Siam, Rev. J. A. McKee, died at the Thornton Home, Newburg, Ind., March 31. He was born in 1871, and after graduating from Princeton Seminary preached two years at Waveland, Ind. After a few years in Siam he preached at East Jordan and Redford, Mich., and for the last six years had been with the American Bible Society.

Rev. John W. Marcosson

Rev. John W. Marcosson died at LaGrange recently. He was retired and had been a member of Chicago Presbytery for nearly twenty-years. His work of late years was mainly evangelistic.

Rev. Robert J. Dick

Rev. Robert J. Dick, former pastor of South Amboy (N. J.) church and at one time home missionary in Oklahoma, died recently at Elizabeth, N. J. He was a graduate of Princeton Seminary.

6% SECURITY, RATE AND SERVICE 6%

Is what we offer YOU in our FIRST LIEN REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES. They are placed only on income bearing property on a basis of 40 per cent actual value.

INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date by NEW YORK check.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES attest the soundness of these mortgages by purchasing in increasing volume.

Write for list, information and references to

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE CO.
R. B. BISHOP, Vice-Pres.
FORT WORTH TEXAS

These Will Fit YOUR Pocket Book

I can offer you a very profitable and safe investment to fit your particular circumstances, whether you have large or small funds, or only desire to lay by from month to month small sums as savings. These investments are backed by the IDAHO TITLE & TRUST COMPANY, and the NATIONAL TRUST & SAVINGS COMPANY. Look over the following and tell me about which one you would like to have full information. No. 1. First Farm Mortgages, $1,000 to $15,000; 6% interest payable annually; also First City Mortgages, $300 to $5,000; will net you 7% per annum. No. 2. Guarantee Capital fund certificates, $100 to $5,000, 8% annual interest and as much more as the earnings of the company will justify. No. 3. Guarantee Investment Certificates, $3.00 per month or any multiple thereof for 24 months, or as long as you like. You can draw out your money and 8% per annum interest compounded semi-annually any time after 24 months. Write for full information.

CHARLES B. COXE
BOISE President IDAHO

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

Oklahoma
Farm
Mortgages

Let your money make 6 per cent—NET

The three or four per cent the savings bank pays does not fairly represent your money's earning ability. It is simply the small end of the profits. The bank keeps the big share as their fee for re-investment—re-investing your money in mortgages—something you refuse to do for yourself. By investing direct you can at least double the profits of your savings as they now accrue to you. Oklahoma first mortgages—amply secured by two to four times the amount of the loan—make this possible—the same kind banks and insurance companies buy.

Why Insurance Companies Buy Oklahoma Mortgages

Experience showed them that in order to meet competition they must secure as high a rate per dollar as sound business judgment allowed. Investigation proved that Oklahoma offered the best field for investments of this kind. Approximately $415,000,000.00 is now invested by the insurance companies in farm mortgages—and a good share of this in Oklahoma mortgages.

Surely you can't do better than follow the example of these trained buyers of conservative investments So decide now to give your money a chance to make good for you.

Write now for interesting booklets describing our comprehensive investment service and mortgage list No. 717

Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Company
143 West Main, Oklahoma City, U. S. A.

COLONIAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK
La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO
Resources over $8,000,000.00
Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.
3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

$25,000,000 Loaned; not one dollar lost for an investor. J. L. Pettyjohn & Co., of Olathe, Kans., will invest your funds in absolutely safe First Farm Mortgages to net you excellent interest return. Write them for particulars and references.

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%
Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.
The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

6 and 7 % Sure
When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."
Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS
The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth. - - Texas.

5½% and 6% Interest
The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.
G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

REAL ESTATE LOANS
6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%
During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.
BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet R UNIONVILLE, MO.

Mortgage Money Wanted
Can furnish Farm loans on Eastern Washington wheat lands to net the investor Seven per cent per annum.
Thirty years experience. No client ever lost one dollar.
Reference: First National Bank, Litchfield, Ill. Farmers Savings Bank. Walla Walla, Wash.
Write for particulars.
P. O. Box 493
B. F. CULP, Walla Walla, Washington

6½% Net First Mortgages
on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.
GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

Financial Situation

Gasoline Price Still High—Stopping Volume of New Money Looked Upon as Factor in Reducing Prices.

The continued high price of gasoline as well as crude oil is affecting other persons than the million owners of automobiles in the country. Gas companies which have depended on crude oil from which to obtain part of their illuminating gas are being forced to return to coal instead of oil, and the lessened supply of crude oil, it is feared, will soon force other readjustments in the commercial world. The price of oil is but one of the examples of the rise of prices, although the relation of supply and demand as well as the depreciation of the value of money has joined hands in this case, as with meat, to boost the price higher than it would have gone through the influence of one of these elements alone.

Professor Irving Fisher of Yale is only one of the economists of the country who have pointed the way to what is being acknowledged as the rational solution of the cause of high prices. It has been repeatedly proved that an increase in the amount of money in the country and a stimulation of the rapidity with which money circulates tends to inflate prices. During the last two generations prices were never so high as they are now. The lowest point they reached during the same period was in 1896. The people in that year decided that gold should be the single standard of value, but immediately the production of gold in the world took a big leap and in ten years had doubled. Last year the Rand mines in South Africa alone produced more gold than all the mines of the world had in 1896. Nor is there any evidence that the supply of gold will do other than increase with the invention of still other improved machinery for refining. This increase in gold, together with the increase of the fluidity of money through the use of bank checks, is assigned by many thinkers as the basic cause of high prices. At the present time anyone can take the requisite amount of gold to a mint and have it made into a dollar. The amount of gold required is the same as twenty years ago, but the amount measured by the goods which this dollar now will buy has been estimated worth only as much as 58 cents was in 1896.

In order to check the disastrous effects of a variable standard of value Professor Fisher—and many thinkers agree with him—suggests that the government demand of those who ask to have gold minted a tax above the twenty-three grains now required. This tax is to be variable in relation to the prices of 200 or more commodities. In this way the level of prices would automatically preserve the volume of money in the country. To be successful, such a seigniorage would have to be imposed by most of the nations of the world and negotiations are now in process of development to accomplish this.

Brief Bits of Business News

—Seats on the New York Stock Exchange have dropped to $51,000. Last November a seat was sold for $63,000.

—The antitrust suit directed against the so-called coffee trust has been abandoned by the attorney general on assurances from the Brazilian government that the large amount of coffee held in New York by the valorization committee has been sold to bona fide customers.

—James H. Hill on a recent visit to New York said that banks of the Northwest are loaning considerable money to farmers this spring to encourage the raising of live stock. Farmers are learning that it is easier and just as profitable to devote an acre to hogs as it is to wheat. The falling off in production of all sorts of live stock makes certain large profits to those who devote their time to it.

6% We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request 7%
JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency
Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the Illinois Trust & Savings Bank
Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidation of Other Banks
Capital and Surplus
$15,000,000.00
LA SALLE ST. & JACKSON BLVD.
ILLINOIS TRUST SAFETY DEPOSIT COMPANY
Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS
6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. SEND FOR BOOKLET. 6%
PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%
Write for particulars regarding our investment service
Highest references.
R. C. KITTEL & CO., 108 So. La Salle St. Chicago.

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS
Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.
BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

$33,000,000 INVESTED IN ALBERTA MORTGAGES
by insurance, trust and loan companies. The Associated Mortgage Investors, Inc., has applied the FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE of its Officers to making Alberta loans, which yield 6% NET and have many advantages, including GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED TITLES. Inquiries are welcomed and imply no obligation.
ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

Farm Mortgages 6%
Our Investments
Appeal to Conservative Investors
Send for pamphlet "C" and list of offerings. 30 yrs. experience Highest refs
E. J Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N.D.

Church Leaders to Visit Coast

Important Gatherings Occupy the Attention of Church Men—Legislature Helps Righteousness in San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO—Bay region Presbyterians have enjoyed recently the visits of three church leaders—President Shailer Mathews of the Federal Council, Dr. William Hiram Foulkes of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation and Moderator Mark A. Matthews of General Assembly.

Three important gatherings have also just been concluded—presbytery's spring meeting, the Occidental Board's fortieth annual meeting and the Pacific coast immigration congress.

At Sacramento the legislature has passed the red light injunction and abatement bill and the governor has signed it. Bills that will bar whisky from the exposition grounds and prohibit saloons and bars within a mile and a half of university and college grounds are on the way to enactment.

It is practically decided not to request General Assembly to come to San Francisco during the exposition. Already too many great events are scheduled for that period. A year later seems better for both city and Assembly.

Presbytery meeting at Richmond (district) church, Rev. C. S. Tanner pastor, chose President Warren H. Landon, D. D., of the seminary moderator, with Rev. Alexander Eakin of St. John's church vice-moderator. Shingoro Sato of the seminary graduating class was licensed and ordained. Rev. H. C. Nation of Parkside church, dismissed to Sacramento Presbytery, will be succeeded by Rev. R. N. Powers of Nebraska. The first six overtures of General Assembly and the overture limiting the terms of board officers were defeated. Nos. 7 and 8 were indorsed. Olivet session's care of the Russian work within its bounds and its rejuvenation of Memorial church under the efficient leadership of Rev. W. E. Parker, Jr., were commended. With the renewal of interest in Memorial church Rev. Arthur Fruhling, its former pastor, has returned from Menlo Park church to its pastorate. Student G. A. Gammon goes to St. James for six months. The three Ocean Shore churches will be manned by students during summer vacation of seminary, which begins April 24.

The Welsh church since its recent dedication is looking for a pastor.

Eight churches of presbytery report net gains this year.

Rochester Churches to Build

Calvary Congregation Has Outgrown Building—Lot Bought by Westminster—Mission for Negroes to Be Dedicated.

ROCHESTER—The congregation of Calvary church is making plans to build. The Sunday school has outgrown the chapel and the audiences have outgrown the church. A committee has been appointed to look into plans for building. The pastor is Rev. Angus J. McMillan.

Westminster church has announced a congregational meeting, when it is expected a pastor will be called. A. J. Hutton, D. D., has been supplying the church successfully, but he now insists that a successor be called. A lot has been bought in an excellent location and the church will proceed soon to the erection of a new building.

A new building for the mission for colored people under auspices of Trinity church will soon be dedicated at Scottsville. Rev. William A. Byrd, pastor of Trinity church, is in charge.

Bride church, Dr. W. R. Taylor pastor, has just closed a series of study classes held on Wednesday evenings during the winter. They included classes in historical geography of Bible lands, teachers' training class, Bible study class, mission study class, social service class and the Alpha Kappa Delta fraternity. All met together for supper at 6:30 and then had the studies from 7 to 7:45, dismissing in time for the general church prayer meeting. There have been over 100 enrolled. The attendance has been remarkably regular and the work profitable and greatly enjoyed. This church also has pastor's classes to prepare young people for union with the church.

Brighton church is progressing with its new building, which is to be one of the best in the city. It has the money in hand and expects to dedicate without debt. Rev. Frank M. Weston is pastor.

Immanuel church, Rev. E. B. McGhee pastor, is about to sell its old church building and erect a new edifice nearer the center of the congregation.

Good Things in This Issue

This number of The Continent might be named the "Regenerator of the Discouraged." If anyone in temporary depression over local disappointment should imagine the church itself is not progressing, let him look specially at the items here listed. These are but samples of the news of the advancing kingdom, and the same sort of constructive information may be found in every issue of the paper.

1. No beer is sold at troop camps in Canada, page 561.
2. A New York rabbi moves for better Sabbath observance, page 561.
3. Chinese government asks for prayers of Christians on April 27, page 558.
4. Mission workers in China agree not to enter new territory without consent of other denominations, page 570.
5. Forces for the righteousness of women are active, article by William T. Ellis, page 563.
6. A daily newspaper helps a city to increase its Sunday school attendance, page 575.
7. Associate pastor of church in New York state will go to China as missionary (and will marry the head of student self-government at Vassar), page 576.
8. California adopts laws to suppress houses of ill fame, page 582.
9. Two churches in Rochester, N. Y., are outgrown, page 582.
10. Italian pastor in Chicago ministers to growing church and earns his keep at other work, page 579.

Articles by Dr. Cleland B. McAfee of McCormick Seminary and by Dr. Samuel S. Palmer of Columbus, Ohio, who has been mentioned for moderator, are also strong features no one will wish to miss. And note what Professor Schaff says about the intermediate catechism.

Commissioners to the General Assembly

Grafton—Minister, George W. Pollock; elder, Fred W. Vance.

Grande Ronde—Minister, A. R. Carrick; elder, G. F. Smith.

Gunnison—Minister, A. C. E. Bridges; elder, J. H. Rankin.

Helena—Minister, W. N. Sloan; elder, Alexander Smith, Sr.

Houston—Minister, R. F. Olmstead; elder, R. L. Erwin.

Huron—Minister, Clarence G. Miller; elder, David J. Brown.

Iowa—Ministers, A. Cardle, E W. F. Holler; elders, W. T. Hall, E. P. Lynn.

Kalispell—Minister, Lemuel J. Hawkins; elder, H. A. Maltby.

Kearney—Minister, L. C. McEwen; elder, Robert Walker.

Oakes—Minister, J. C. Engel; elder, William Cuthill.

Paris—Minister, F. E. Leech; elder, W. B. Vaughn.

Parkersburg—Minister, S. E. Foote; elder, I. F. Stewart.

Pembina—Minister, F. B. Stevenson; elder, John Montgomery.

Petoskey—Minister, J. G. Young; elder, H. S. Babcock.

Phœnix—Minister, Henry M. Campbell; elder, J. S. Bayless.

Princeton—Minister, James F. Claycomb; elder, Frank Leeper.

Red River—Minister, E. L. Latchaw; elder, C. D. McKay.

Reserve—Minister, Henry Cullen; elder, Lester A. Haynes.

Riverside—Minister, Alvah G. Fessenden; elder, James Stewart.

Rochester—Ministers, Theodore M. Carlisle, John B. White, Marshall Harrington; elders, W. Grant Ensign, Edward H. White, Leslie L. Webster.

Saginaw—Minister, Charles E. Marvin; elder, James Nisbet.

Salt Lake—Minister, C. K. Davis; elder, W. T. Colton.

San Joaquin—Ministers, George B. Greig, Thomas Boyd, J. Wilson Lundy; elders, T. H. Minor, George E. Steele, A. L. Munger.

Santa Barbara—Minister, I. E. Leonard; elder, A. E. Conrad.

Sedalia—Minister, S. J. Walkup; elder, John Montgomery.

Sheridan—Minister, J. A. Slack; elder, J. L. Werts.

Sioux Falls—Minister, D. R. Burr; elder, E. B. Lumbard.

Solomon—Minister, B. E. Jacobs; elder, W. B. Harper.

Southern Utah—Minister, Theodore M. Keusseff; elder, E. E. Adams.

Southern Virginia—Minister, L. L. Downing; elder, Charles S. Miller.

Springfield—Ministers, W. H. Penhallegon, S. P. Taylor; elders, R. E. Bone, A. R. Taylor.

Syracuse—Ministers, Frederick J. Sanber, George W. Wellburn; elders, Edwin D. Balsey, John R. McWhinney.

Transylvania—Minister, C. Connor Brown; elder, N. L. Curry.

Union—Minister, R. O. Franklin; elder, R. M. Warren.

The Right song book is the Pastor's Best Helper.

Songs arouse enthusiasm; they stir people to action. Use

Great Revival Hymns

in your church. This splendid collection of hymns has proved so popular that we have sold nearly 500,000 copies in less than TWO years.

Returnable Copy sent on request.

Ask for complete catalogue and how to obtain our new music at half price.

THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
10-14 W. Washington St., CHICAGO

FELLOWSHIP INSPIRATION COOPERATION

By Men and for Men a Great

Brotherhood Conference and Supper

ATLANTA

Kimball Hotel, Tuesday Evening, May 20, 1913

5:30—ROUND TABLE CONFERENCE in dining room of hotel, on "The Best Methods of Men's Work in the Local Church."

6:30—BROTHERHOOD SUPPER to be marked by rich fellowship by the men of the different Assemblies.

Price of Supper is $1.00, which admits to Conference. Reservations should be made AT ONCE, as capacity of hotel is limited to 400 Requests for tickets, accompanied by check, draft, or money-order, should be sent to Mr. Walter Getty, General Secretary, Presbyterian Brotherhood of America, 509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Utica—Ministers, Ralph W. Brokaw, W. E. Kimball; elders, H. H. Miller, E. J. Batholomew.

Waterloo—Minister, D. W. Fahs; elder, W. L. Richardson.

Wenatchee—Minister, Thomas H. Atkinson; elder, E. M. Bogart.

West Jersey—Ministers, R. Hilliard Gage, Addison B. Collins, Eugene H. Mateer; elders, John Mayhew, F. H. Upham, Peter H. Miller.

Westminster—Ministers, Kent M. Bull, A. Lewis Hyde; elders, John K. Roseboro, John S. Snyder.

White River—Minister, R. V. McPherson; elder, J. S. Childress.

Whitewater—Minister, Thomas Worsley Maguire; elder, M. E. Leffingwell.

Willamette—Ministers, J. R. N. Bell, L. S. Moschel; elders, John H. Albert, C. H. Sedgwick.

Winnebago—Ministers, H. C. Postlethwaite, H. W. Knox; elders, C. W. Lomas, O. H. Ecke.

Winona—Minister, John C. Bantly; elder, Fred Holway.

Wooster—Ministers, Thomas B. Lieth, John G. Bloch; elders, Charles Miller, William Shaw.

Yellowstone—Minister, J. Forsythe Smith; elder, A. D. Morrill.

Zanesville—Minister, W. E. Wright; elder, E. L. Jones.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

St. Louis—St. Louis Washington and Compton Avenue, April 28, 8 p. m.

Moderators Elected

Madison—H. L. Moore.
Morris and Orange—Joseph G. Symmes.

Ordinations

Carlisle—John M. Worden.
Des Moines—Andrew D. Rundell.
Zanesville—C. A. Beacham.

Resignations

Colorado—Westminster: J. M. Travis.
Illinois—Herrin: G. A. Swanson; Carthage: J. Frank Young.
Idaho—Heyburn: Dwight Dunham; Auger Falls: W. S. Morrow.
Iowa—Greene: W. E. Fisher.
Kansas—Spring Hill: W. H. Course.
Minnesota—Redwood Falls: J. J. Ehrstein.
Nebraska—Wilson Memorial: D. C. Williamson; Omaha Westminster: Thomas H. McConnell.
New Jersey—East Trenton: John J. Steiner; Marksboro: A. F. Lott.
New York—East Meredith: E. N. Kline; Johnstown: Charles McKenzie.
North Dakota—Surrey: S. D. McCracken.
Wisconsin—Barneveld: Oliver Stephenson.

Calls

California—Oakland Emmanuel: A. G. Mills, accepts.
Illinois—Rushville: James Hardin Smith, Bushnell, accepts; Bardolph: Newton Cavens, accepts; Mendota: James A. G. Waits, McCormick Seminary.
Iowa—Randolph: H. N. Poston, accepts; Guthrie Center: J. C. Orth, accepts; Davenport Mount Ida: J. Gilmore Smith, accepts; La Grange: James B. Chase, accepts.
Kansas—Wichita Lincoln Street: R. E. Sherman, accepts; Carey: H. J. Withington, Pleasanton, accepts.
Maryland—Cumberland: W. Bryson Smith, St. Louis, accepts.
Michigan—Concord: Frank E. Armstrong.
Minnesota—St. James: Alexander Marlowe, accepts; Cottonwood: W. Gushee, accepts; Wilmont: M. C. Aleridge, accepts; Fulda: R. A. McNall, Vail, Iowa, accepts.
New Jersey—Hamburg: R. H. Hughes, accepts.
Ohio—Dresden: S. V. Berger, accepts.
Pennsylvania—Ashley: T. M. K. Polk, Olyphant.
South Dakota—Parker: George C. Sprague.
Texas—Dallas Exposition Park: George S. Fulcher, accepts; Farmersville: T. A. Lampton, accepts; Rockwell: J. H. Bone, accepts; Dawson: J. M. Wilshire, accepts; Port Arthur: T. A. Davis, Plano, accepts.
Wisconsin—Muscoda and Pleasant Hill: Oliver Stephenson; Beloit West Side: E. A. Finn, accepts.

Supplies Arranged

Illinois—Danville Olivet: Thomas Houston, Chicago.
New Jersey—Amwell First: William Hollingshed.
Ohio—New Lexington and Unity: C. H. Rank.

Vacant Pulpits

Idaho—Heyburn.
Illinois—Herrin: Harry Sherertz clerk.
New Jersey—German Valley: C. B. Hendershot clerk; Whippung: W. M. Shippany clerk; Pleasant Grove: A. Fleming clerk; Schooleys Mountain: I. N. Smith clerk; New Vernon: D. W. Tunis clerk.

Change of Address

Anderson, Louis M.—Merrill to Medford, Ore.
Brown, N. S.—Albany to Averill Park, N. Y.

Accessions

Illinois—Chicago Maywood, 13, April 6, E. Beckwith; Chicago Christ, 32, April 6, T. W Stewart; Austin, 39, April 6, R. H. Beattie.
Iowa—Oskaloosa, 9, April 6, Alexander McFerran; Springville, 8, April 13, R. A. Brough; Des Moines Westminster, 30, April 6, John Bamford; Mount Vernon, 46, April 6, C. M. Robb.
Kansas—Horton, 23, April 6; Dodge City, 10, April, John C. Berger; Bucklin, 9, March 23, E. I. Gilmore.
Michigan—Saginaw, 71, March 23, J. Ambrose Dunkel.
Missouri—Kansas City Westport Avenue, 71, March 30.
Nebraska—Omaha Castellar Street, 9, April 13, C. C. Meek.
New Jersey—Kearney Knox, 38, April 13, R. T. Graham; Perth Amboy First, 16, April 13, J. H. Northrup.
New York—Brooklyn Bay Ridge, 13, April 6, C. T. Edwards; New York City West Twenty-Third Street, 29, H. G. Mendenhall; Nichols, 35, March 23, James A. Anderson; Rochester Central, 14, April 6.
Oklahoma—Stillwater First, 26, April 6, L. C. Ilsley; Guthrie First, 6, March 30, G. O. Nichols.
Pennsylvania—Scranton Second, 47, April 13; Doylestown, 16, April 13, W. E. Steekes; Marietta, 6, March 23, E. F. Reimer; Grove City First, 50, April 6, Herbert Hezlep; Pittsfield, 19, March 2, H. K. Miller; Lansdowne, 25, April 6, William Boyd; Philadelphia churches: Tioga, 63, April 6, Charles E. Dunn; Westminster, 21, March 30, J. M. Rutherford; Susquehanna Avenue, 16, April 6, R. T. Jones; Olivet-Covenant, 21, April 6, M. J. Hyndman; Bethel, 11, April 6, D. S. Clark; Bethlehem, 23, April 6, J. A. Davies; West Hope, 53, April 6, Charles E. Bronson; Tabernacle, 30, April 13, W. H. Oxtoby; Wakefield, 28, April 13, H. B. McCrone; Pittsburg churches: First, 57, April 6; Brighton Road, 35; Knoxville, 14; Lemington Avenue, 41; Wilkinsburg Calvary, 57.
Tennessee—Chattanooga Second, 22, April 6, E. A. Elmore.
Wisconsin—Waukesha, 46, April 13, C. E. Bovard; Superior Hammond Avenue, 23, April 6, L. K. Grimes; Ashland First, 22, April 6, C. L. Koons; LaCrosse First, 36, March 23, D. S. Jones.

Marriages

A charge of one cent per word is made for marriage notices. Payment must accompany copy.

MILLER-MCCOMB—Married April 9, by Rev. P. H. K. McComb, assisted by the pastor of the bride, M. L. Haines, D.D., of First church, Indianapolis, Harry McClure Miller and Miss Lois Kemper McComb, youngest daughter of the officiating clergyman.

Obituary

Death notices will be inserted at the rate of one cent a word. PAYMENT MUST BE SENT WITH THE NOTICE. Those who ask their pastor to write such notices should be careful to hand him the money to forward with the copy.

SUFFERN—Mrs. Samuel Suffern after a lingering illness of several months passed away Tuesday, March 18, at her home at 837 Oakley Blvd., Chicago. Mrs. Suffern was born in Surrey, England, June 23, 1836. In 1855 she came to America with her parents, the family settling in Illinois. After her marriage in 1858 they lived on a farm near Coal City, Ill. She with her family founded the nucleus of the New Hope Presbyterian church of Coal City. She removed to Chicago after the death of her husband in 1893. There she united with the Campbell Park Presbyterian church.

Mrs. Suffern was a woman of rare sweetness and beauty of character, but with her gentleness there was strength. She was a woman of deep piety, and of earnest religious activity, devoted to the interest of her church, and faithful as a member. Living and loving still, her sweet influence is living stronger than ever in the lives of those who knew her. She is survived by an aged brother, Arthur Smeed, a son and two daughters. The funeral service was conducted by Rev. A. J. Van Page at her late residence in Chicago, also at the Presbyterian church in Wilmington. Interment in Oak cemetery, Wilmington.

Get this
one (4)
idea

Authoritativeness is the first quality of great literature. To be an original source of information and expert opinion is the privilege of but few publications.

Our readers know THE CONTINENT to be such. That is why its articles are so widely quoted.

And that is why, in the literal sense of the word, it is the leading religious weekly.

The Continent

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES.
MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

WOOSTER SUMMER SCHOOL, WOOSTER, OHIO, INvites all readers of The Continent to send for its catalog. Opens June 23, closes August 15. Every day filled with things that are worth while. J. H. Dickason, Prin.

ATLANTA GENERAL ASSEMBLIES MAY 15-23. Three great assemblies in one city. Separate business sessions, joint popular meetings, commissioners entertained in Atlanta homes. A Unique Assembly of Assemblies. Your address and 25c sent to Rev. Jere A. Moore, 153 Spring street, Atlanta, Ga., will bring you eleven copies of an Atlanta daily paper covering the meetings of the Assemblies.

WANTED—TWO IOWA PRESBYTERIAN PASTORS, each having preaching points a number of miles apart, need autos to properly serve their fields. Serviceable used cars at low price desired. Write Rev. O. W. Behrens, Anamosa, Ia.

ACCIDENTALLY DISCOVERED ROOT WILL BRING happiness to slaves of tobacco habit and indigestion. Gladly send particulars. E. M. Stokes, Mohawk, Florida.

FOR CHURCH WORKERS—LADIES' AID AND MISsionary Societies are raising money without donations selling Valentine's Absorbent Dusters and Dust Mops. The only fifty-cent mop. Special offer by letter. Agents and societies should write. Valentine Duster Company, Urbana, Ohio.

PASTORS AND PARENTS WRITE TO US ABOUT young men who have come to Chicago to enter business or school life. We endeavor by personal invitation and influence to bring them into church relationship. Details gladly furnished. Rev. Francis M. Fox, Presbyterian Brotherhood, 509 South Wabash avenue, Chicago.

REAL ESTATE

THE GREAT TRUCK REGION OF AMERICA IS THE Southeastern states. Vegetables yield two to four crops annually. Lands sell at $15 an acre up. Profits of $50 to $200 an acre made each year. Send for more particulars and literature. M. V. Richards, Land & Industrial Agent, Southern Railway Room 22, Washington, D. C.

WANTED—INVESTORS WHO DESIRE TO PLACE their money where it will be absolutely safe, and at the same time bring good returns. The following letter is from one of our clients in Milwaukee: "Yours of the 1st with enclosures as stated arrived today, for which please accept my thanks. Your methods of doing business conform to what I presume every good business man should aspire to, viz., promptness. In other words, doing as promised in obligation." We shall be pleased to give you full information in regard to our First Farm Mortgage Securities. Write today. E. J. Lander & Company, Grand Forks, N. D.

SUMMER PULPIT SUPPLY

PRESBYTERIAN PREACHER AND PASTOR OF EXperience would accept "supply work" for the summer, anywhere in the West, Northwest or Pacific West. Willing to do full pastoral work. Could begin at once. Address Preacher, care of Continent.

TOURS

EUROPE MEDITERRANEAN ROUTE $370
Sails July 1 from New York. Party limited.
University Man, Conductor.
The Shelton Tours, 222 Old South Bldg., Boston, Mass

BROWN'S Bronchial TROCHES
Save the Voice
Save the lungs. Relieve hoarseness and coughing spells. 25c, 50c, $1.00. Sample Free.
JOHN I. BROWN & SON Boston, Mass.

An Imperative Call to Meet an Emergency and Enlarge the Work of the American Tract Society

781, 853, 461 Copies of the Gospel Message:

This Society was organized in 1825 for the circulation of religious literature calculated to receive the approbation of all evangelical Christians. Its publications are for the winning of souls, the teaching of sound morality, and the establishing and growth in grace of believers. The gospel message has been printed in 175 languages, dialects and characters. The grand total of its publications in all languages reaches 781,853,461 copies. Of these 97,036,787 have been in foreign languages.

Directly Into the Nation's Homes:

Statistics reveal that the majority of our nearly 100,000,000 population do not attend religious services. The colporter visits the people in their homes and places of employment, leaves Christian literature with them, speaks of their need of a Saviour and, whenever opportunity affords, offers prayer. The number of volumes distributed by colporters reaches 17,080,163; the number of family visits 17,616,521. Tens of thousands have been won to Christ who otherwise never would have received the Gospel Message.

Meeting the Immigrants:

The American Tract Society was among the first to seek out and care for the immigrants. The Society's colporters meet them at the ports of entry, give them literature in their own language and dialect, visit them in their homes and point them to Christ as their Saviour, and also teach them the principles of good citizenship. The influence of this work can never be measured.

Four Billion Pages of Gratuitous Distribution:

By gratuitous distribution billions of pages of books and tracts have been placed in the hands of the spiritually destitute of all classes and in all parts of the world, and many thousands of volumes have been given to Sunday Schools, Mission Schools and struggling Churches. The grand total of the Society's gratuitous distribution amounts to $2,566,487, the equivalent of 4,000,000,000 pages of tracts.

Evangelizing the World:

In Latin America the supreme need is Christian literature. The American Tract Society's various publications in Spanish, Italian and Portuguese are indispensable. Missionaries in Cuba, Porto Rico and the Philippines affirm that they could not carry forward their work without the Society's publications in the Spanish language. In China a republic has been established, and the people have an open and receptive mind. The present missionary force is unable to touch more than the edge of this vast population of 400,000,000. A sufficient supply of Christian literature alone can solve the problem. There is a wide open door throughout the Orient. The faith of Moslem is hastening across Africa. Christian literature is the antidote.

Why Five Hundred Thousand Dollars Is Required:

At the organization of the American Tract Society in 1825 $26,000 was contributed to purchase ground and erect a building for the Society's use. The land having become valuable, the executive committee in 1894 decided to erect a large office building, placing thereon a mortgage of $1,250,000. It was believed that there would be a considerable income from the building for the Society's work in addition to paying the mortgage interest, taxes and running expenses. This expectation has not been realized. Fifty Thousand Dollars has been paid upon the mortgage, leaving a balance of $1,200,000 unpaid. Although the building is now returning a small but constantly increasing net income, the mortgagee demands a substantial reduction of the principal.

Curtailment of Work a Calamity:

In order to save the Tract Society's equity in this valuable property it is necessary to raise $500,000 to be devoted to the reduction of the mortgage. By so doing an endowment will be practically assured, and through the saving of interest on the mortgage $25,000 will be added to the annual income available for missionary work. It is so expected that the income from the building will further reduce the mortgage debt.

The situation frankly and tersely stated is that the American Tract Society has reached a crisis, and faces the serious crippling of all its departments of Christian and missionary work.

The curtailing of the Society's work would not only be deeply felt and regretted in all the mission fields but would be a real calamity to the cause of Christ. In His Name, we appeal to you for donations and annuity gifts. Correspondence as to the latter is invited. All funds should be forwarded to Louis Tag, Assistant Treasurer, 150 Nassau Street, New York City.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President
JUDSON SWIFT, General Secretary

Louisville & Nashville R. R.

The Most Attractive Way

TO

ATLANTA, GA.

For the General Assembly Presbyterian Churches May 15, 1913

Round Trip from

CHICAGO, $25.80

May 11, 12, 13, 14, 18 and 19

St. Louis, $21.40, Cincinnati, $15.00, Evansville, $14.40

Tickets on sale May 12, 13, 14, 15, 19 and 20, good returning until June 10, but with privilege of extension to June 30 by depositing ticket and upon payment of $1.00. Stopover permitted at Nashville, Chattanooga, Glasgow Junction (for Mammoth Cave) and Knoxville to visit Freedman College.

For full particulars regarding

Special and Regular Train Service

Call on or address

P. W. MORROW, N. W. P. A., 332 Marquette Bldg., Chicago
F. D. BUSH, D. P. A., Andrews Bldg., Cincinnati
R. C. WALLIS, D. P. A., 312 North 8th Street, St. Louis

Sparks Marion E Jan17
1205 Springfield av

An American Flag

FREE to

CONTINENT READERS

YOU WILL want a flag for Memorial Day and Fourth of July, and all other patriotic occasions. In no more favorable manner can your love of country be expressed than by unfurling our silent but impressive emblem of patriotism, "OLD GLORY," from your home, church, club or business house.

Show Your Colors

In sympathy with the effort for quiet and profitable patriotism The Continent has arranged a plan with the American Flag Company whereby a 4 by 6 fast color American flag may be sent Continent readers without cost. All that is necessary is for any present subscriber either to pay for the paper for a new subscriber for one year at the regular price of $2.50, or secure from some friend who is not a subscriber $2.50 for a full year's subscription. The flag will be sent postpaid at once to either the old subscriber or the new subscriber.

If for any reason you do not care to pay for a new subscription yourself, and are unable to secure one from among your Presbyterian associates, we will mail the flag to you postpaid upon receipt of $1. Send us your order at once.

Address THE CONTINENT

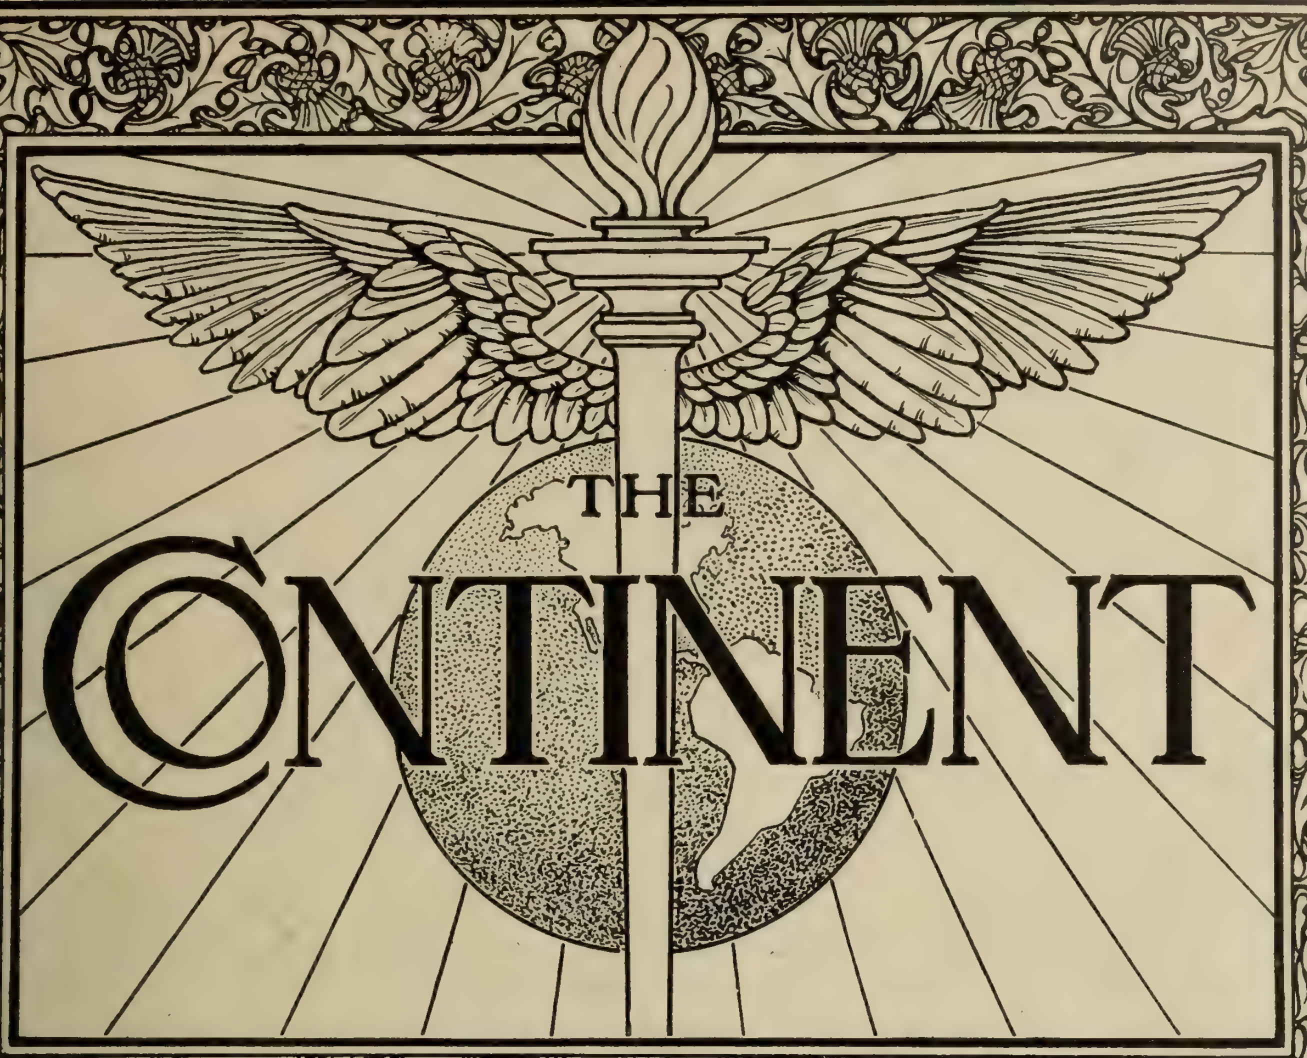
156 5th Ave., New York 509 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago



THE CONTINENT

MAY 1, 1913

The Nation Must Bar Polygamy

EDITORIAL

Girl and Mother Comrades

MRS. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS

Editor Who Directs the Navy

WILLIAM T. ELLIS

What Is the Matter with Utah? R. M. Stevenson
Next Week: Where Yale Boys Are Working for Christ

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy.
Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Tennessee

Ward Seminary For Girls and Young Women 42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports, For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres.. Nashville, Tenn

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY
Four Years' College Course.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN OXFORD, OHIO FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

GLENDALE COLLEGE
GLENDALE, OHIO
Founded 1853 Suburban to Cincinnati

Few residence schools for young women are as ideally situated for health, beauty and advantages. Courses of study prepare for all colleges, and give two years' collegiate work splendidly adapted for high school graduates. Strong Music Department, Art, Expression, etc.

MISS R. J. DEVORE, President.

THE OXFORD COLLEGE for WOMEN—FOUNDED 1830

One hour from Cincinnati. Ambitious students, brilliant faculty. Standard four year course, B. A. Degree. Rate only $355.00. Art, Music, Expression, Normal Domestic Science, Business. Write for "Seven Points."

JANE SHERZER, Ph.D. (Berlin), Pres., Box 2, Oxford, Ohio.

The University of Wooster
Synodical College of Ohio
CO-EDUCATIONAL.
The Department of Biblical Instruction is known as the
FLORENCE H. SEVERANCE
Bible and Missionary Training School

YOUNG MEN are trained to become directors of Religious Education. Sabbath School Workers, Assistants to Pastors, Y. M. C. A. Secretaries. Prospective Medical Missionaries may receive their religious training at Wooster before entering a Medical School.

YOUNG WOMEN are trained to become Foreign Missionaries, Home Missionaries, City Missionaries, Pastors' Assistants, Church Visitors, Sabbath School Workers, Y. W. C. A. Secretaries.

Students may take this work in connection with the COLLEGE COURSE or may take the THREE YEARS TRAINING COURSE. For full information address

REV. CHALMERS MARTIN, D.D. Wooster, Ohio
Ask for Catalogue A.

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE
OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.
W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalog of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is one of the largest institutions of learning in the United States.

Thorough Instruction at Lowest Expense.

Catalog mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President.
O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.

FURNITURE of REFINED, authentic design, and of substantial wearing quality in materials, construction and finish, no longer necessarily implies large cost.

In no displays in the world is this fact more evident than in the displays of this store.

While we show extensive lines of the finest furniture that money can buy, it is our main purpose to maintain complete assortments of furniture of moderate price. We have thousands of choice offerings under this classification.

Our immense stocks include, in addition to our complete lines of Tobey Handmade Furniture, displays carefully chosen from the furniture of over two hundred of the world's best makers. Many of the largest and most important lines are exclusive; are sold in Chicago only at this store—a fact which makes it unwise to purchase in this city without first knowing what we have to offer.

We give our customers unqualified assurance that the values here are the best that can be obtained. Careful investigation in all of the principal markets has proved that our prices are the lowest known in the furniture trade.

The Tobey Furniture Company

Wabash Avenue and Washington Street, CHICAGO
New York Store at 669 Fifth Ave., New York City

EDUCATIONAL EDUCATIONAL

Connecticut

HARTFORD W. Douglas Mackenzie President

Theological Seminary
Scholarly and practical training for the ministry. Faculty of thirteen resident professors besides special lecturers. Notable library of 95,000 volumes. Liberal scholarships to students of high rank and graduate fellowships. Open to college graduates of all Christian denominations. Address
Dean M. W. JACOBUS.

School of Religious Pedagogy
Degree Course for graduates of colleges and theological seminaries. Diploma Course prepares lay workers for salaried positions in all kinds of Christian service, church, Sunday-school, mission and settlement work. Correspondence Courses for teacher training. Demand for trained workers greater than supply.
Address Dean E. H. KNIGHT.

The Kennedy School of Missions
A Graduate School for Special Preparation. Interdenominational. For candidates, appointees and missionaries. Large faculty and library. Courses in phonetics, certain vernaculars, history and religions of mission fields, sociology, Bible, business methods, etc. Address The Secretary, E. W. CAPEN.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE
CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas

Vocational-Cultural for young women

Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD A Cultural and Practical School
FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of The Continent is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to The Continent. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing The Interior (Established 1870) and The Westminster (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE McCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Publishers
Everett Sisson, Managing Director

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subscription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber· otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1913

THE CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT....... 589
EDITORIAL—
The Encouragement of Being at It..... 593
Better than We Could Ask or Think... 593
Protest Itself Vindicates Young Men... 593
Humility Is Not an Impossible Virtue... 594
Memento of Dr. Holmes Made Ready.. 594
Graded-Lesson Principle Now Safe.... 594
THE WORLD.......................... 590
RELIGIOUS WORLD...................... 592
AT THE TABLE OF THE LORD..J. H. Jowett 595
UTAH TRYING TO IGNORE ITS HANDICAP ....Robert M. Stevenson 596
THE EDITOR WHO COMMANDS THE BATTLESHIPS (with Illustrations)..W. T. Ellis 597
COMRADES—THE GIRL AND HER MOTHER ....Mrs. Newell Dwight Hillis 598
THE HOME COUNCIL—Van Winkles of Today..............May Brown Loomis 600
YOUNG AMERICA—The Tree Toad That Went to School.....Frances M. Fox 601
My Vacation Outing at Rock Beach (Illustrated)........Allen B. Draper 601
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 602
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE........E. A. Wicher 603
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE......W. T. Ellis 603
NEW BOOKS—
A Summary of Spring Fiction........ 604
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter XXVI. ....Richard S. Holmes 609
AN OHIO PREACHER IN THE FLOOD ....John Wirt Dunning 610
MISSIONARY WORK (with Illustration).... 611
THE OPEN HEARTH...................... 612
WAYS OF WORKING...................... 613
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS FIELD—Beginning 614
FINANCIAL SITUATION.................. 621
CALENDAR AND RECORD.................. 623

Around the Shop

We believe in hobbies, and also in hobbles. It's a pretty good thing to have a special enthusiasm about some one thing, but also worth while to have a check handy that can be applied at the proper time.

The other day we heard of a man in France who starved to death because he had determined to trace his genealogy back to Adam and became so interested that he forgot to eat. He had also forgot to earn any money with which to buy food, so his other absent-mindedness would not have mattered much. He had got back to the time of Henry I., but was engaged in trying to trace down from Methuselah to Julius Cæsar when he demonstrated one cannot live on the records of his ancestors.

The Around-the-Shop Man has a wholesome respect for the lessons of the past, and he has no disdain for his ancestors. They did the best they could. But our responsibilities are for our day, and we cannot hide from them in mental cloisters. That's the spirit of The Continent, as so well expressed by Rev. A. E. Schaffer of Sioux City:

"You certainly mix up religion with living the way you teach it, and all I say thereto is 'Amen!'"

(The amen followed a remittance.)

—

We do like the volunteered praise of folks who know how hard it is to make a really good paper. Here's a comment from a well-known writer for magazines and periodicals:

"The plan you have of calling attention to things on various pages of The Continent is admirable. I find a great deal in among the back pages, in the church and general news, which keeps getting better and better. You certainly have good newsgatherers as to what is being done the land over, and these hints are very valuable to church and social workers. I do not find such a collection in any other religious periodical that I know of."

—

Thank you, ma'am! The whole staff takes its hat off to you.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY
BELLS

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating: valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company
218 S WABASH AV. CHICAGO. NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

The International
The most practical Communion Service made. Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg, Columbus, O.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

PIPE AND REED ORGANS AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros."
on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

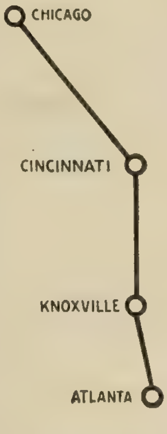
Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

CHURCH PEWS AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

To Atlanta
FOR THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY



A sunshine trip—ideal at this time of year. See the Southland in bloom; blue-carpeted Kentucky; the wonderful Cumberland mountains. Atlanta—the thriving and beautiful southern metropolis.

$25.80
Round Trip from Chicago
May
11, 12, 13, 14, 18 & 19

Proportionately low fares from other points on
PENNSYLVANIA LINES

Tickets good for stopover at Knoxville—going, returning, or both—for a period not more than five days.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY SPECIAL TRAIN
From Chicago Through to Atlanta

Leaves Chicago 9:50 p. m. Tuesday, May 13. Get particulars from nearest agent of Pennsylvania Lines, or address

C. L. KIMBALL
Assistant General Passenger Agent,
Chicago.

What Is the Truth About Jesus Christ?

By

Friedrich Loofs, Ph.D., Th.D.

Professor of Church History in the University of Halle, Wittenberg, Germany

No recent book in print is better calculated to give the skeptic pause, to abash the theological philistine, to reassure the devout. After Harnack, the writer is the greatest living German authority on the history of Christian doctrine, and this volume forms a continuous and ordered presentation of the single theme expressed of the controversy concerning what has been called "the central problem of Christian faith": he examines himself the evidence bearing on the historicity of Jesus with minute care and with a masterly ability—manifestly an inborn ability for sifting, weighing and finally, for synthesis.

$1.25 net; by mail $1.35

Max Eastman's The Enjoyment of Poetry

Aims to Increase Pleasure
Are You Poetic or Practical?

A delightful inquiry into the nature of poetry, which will intensify the pleasure of those who love it, and may well open the eyes and ears of those insensible to it.

But its prime value lies in the entertainment it gives; for though its intent is serious indeed, the wit, humor and lightness of the writing make it the reverse of abstruse. It should be read for its own sake.

$1.25 net; by mail $1.34

Maurice Hewlett's

New Book of Fiction

Lore of Proserpine

Carries You Into the Dividing Twilight Between the Practical World and Fairyland

"I hope," says Mr. Hewlett, "nobody will ask me whether the things in this book are true, for it will then be my humiliating duty to reply that I don't know. They seem to be so to me writing them; they seemed to be so when they occurred, and one of them occurred only two or three years ago."

What matter:—here is a book like no other; and the enchanted reader will not till long after ask the question Mr. Hewlett dreads.

$1.25 net; postage extra

The Life and Letters of John Paul Jones

Contains Important Discoveries Relating to Jones's Service in the Russian Navy, the Identity of "Delia," etc. Made by the Author

Anna de Koven

This biography has resulted from years of research, in which the writer has accumulated considerable significant new material; and this has made possible a far more complete and understandable presentation of Paul Jones's personality and career; one that makes clear many hitherto clouded phases of his life and explains formerly unaccountable actions. The upshot is a full-length portrait of one of the most picturesque, most brilliant and most original figures in American history.

In 2 vols.; $5.00 net; postage extra

The Life and Letters of General George G. Meade

Vivid with Letters from Mexican and Civil War Battle-Fields

Graphic Biography of a Great Soldier. Edited by

George G. Meade

On June 29, 1863, General Meade wrote to his wife from Middleburg, Md.: "We are marching as fast as we can to relieve Harrisburg, but have to keep a sharp lookout that the rebels don't turn around us and get at Washington and Baltimore in our rear. They have a cavalry force in our rear, destroying railroads, etc., with the view of getting me to turn back; but I shall not do it. I am going straight at them, and will settle this thing one way or the other."

Whether or not in "this thing" he included the whole war, the blow he struck in the battle described in the pages to follow was mortal to the Confederacy. This largely autobiographical work uncovers the mind of the victor of Gettysburg.

2 vols. With portrait. $7.00 net

Plays by Bjornstjerne Bjornson

Translated by Edwin Björkman

The New System, The Gauntlet, Beyond Our Power

These plays by the famous Norwegian suit the temper of the time; "The Gauntlet" particularly. It is a sharp challenge of the double moral standard of the sexes; will startle a reader into vivid realization, like the blow of a glove upon his cheek. But all three, though restrained and in form almost classic, radiate the spirit of the day.

$1.50 net; by mail $1.65

Charles Scribner's Sons Fifth Avenue, New York

What Shall I Preach About?

Every minister is confronted with this problem week after week. Get a copy of

The New Freedom

Fifth Great Printing

By WOODROW WILSON

and you will find subjects for a hundred discourses in the President's vigorous handling of the great problems of today. Mr. Wilson's mind in keenly alive to the moral and ethical aspects of the topics he discusses. It is an inspiration! Men and women everywhere are getting from it fresh outlooks on our national life.

AT EVERY BOOKSHOP NET $1.00

Letters to Unknown Friends

By LYMAN ABBOTT

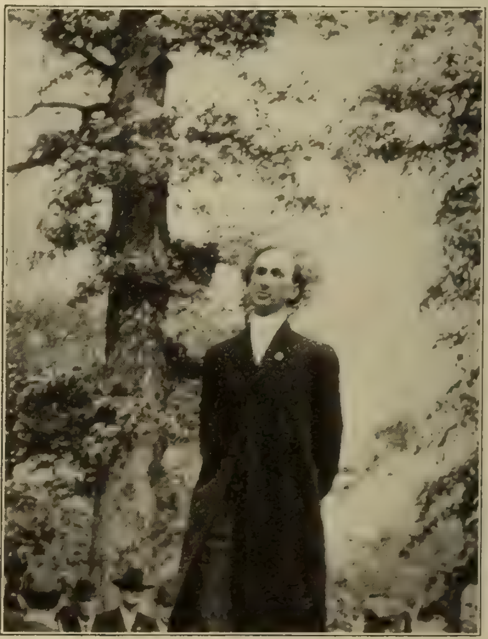
A book of friendly counsel, helpful, hopeful and sane. They are answers to the puzzles that every man and woman tries to solve.

NET 60 CENTS

Published by DOUBLEDAY, PAGE & COMPANY, Garden City, N. Y.

Rev. Mark A. Matthews, D.D.
Moderator of the General Assembly

will use the route of "General Assembly Special" from Chicago to Atlanta, via Cincinnati and Chattanooga, en route from Seattle.



Tickets permit stopover at Chattanooga on both going and return trip.

For complete itinerary of the "General Assembly Special," via the Big Four Route, Queen and Crescent Route and Southern Railway, leaving Chicago 11:00 p. m. May 13, write or call on

C. C. CLARK	A. J. LYTLE	STANTON CURTIS
G. A. Big Four Route	N. P. A. Queen & Crescent	N. W. P. A. Southern Ry.
228 S. Clark St.	56 W. Adams St.	56 W. Adams St.

CHICAGO, ILL.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, No. 18 MAY 1, 1913 WHOLE No. 2240

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Managing Editor—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago
William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. Everett Sisson, Managing Director

Eighteenth Constitutional Amendment

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES SHOULD BE AMENDED TO PROHIBIT POLYGAMY.

Many Americans have felt this for a long time, but until very recently any voice lifted for the proposal has been hushed on the instant by one supposedly conclusive discouragement:

"You can't amend the constitution. No amendment since reconstruction times following the civil war has been able to get through the necessary number of state legislatures. It is useless to try."

But now this paralyzing answer has received its own quietus. Two amendments have obtained the necessary number of state approvals—one authorizing an income tax; another providing for popular election of senators.

Thus the path to constitutional changes has become again an open road.

Opportunities to alter the fundamental law of the republic seem to come and go by periods. This is such a period.

For all therefore who desire to see the crime of polygamy brought under the jurisdiction of the federal government, the time to act for that purpose is just now—today.

* * *

Popular indifference on this subject is due to two factors:

The average American thinks he knows that the Mormons—who, of course, are first thought of when polygamy is mentioned—have given up plural marriage. He sees no danger that anybody else will propagate the idea. Therefore he considers an amendment on the subject a useless bother.

The same average American, counting polygamy a dead issue, concludes that this agitation continues only because of religious prejudice against the Mormons. And naturally he is not interested in backing up sectarian ill will with a constitutional amendment.

To make any headway, therefore, these two misapprehensions must be overcome. Take the latter first.

* * *

In the most emphatic terms it must be made plain that a movement for an anti-polygamy amendment is not a religious assault on Mormonism.

Arguments for such an amendment must rest solely on ideals of general social welfare, and not in any sense on antipathy to Mormonism as a religion.

Is polygamy unthinkable as the basis of family life in a sound civilization? Is not the marriage of one husband to one wife the only conceivable status that will secure America domestic purity?

These are the questions on which the demand would turn for including monogamy among the principles of American constitutional law.

And the certainty that the overwhelming mass of Americans from every creed and nationality are ready to answer such questions in the affirmative is sufficient to relieve all appearance of religious bigotry, wherever the real grounds for action are rightly exhibited.

To be sure, it is always possible for a fantastic religious creed to spread its sanction over anti-social and even criminal behavior. But that fact cannot hinder governments from proceeding against such behavior in defense of social integrity. Legal stamping out of crime cannot be made into religious persecution by a claim of religious motive for the crime.

This is the case with polygamy. If the decision of the people is that polygamy destroys the domestic order necessary for stable civilization, the enforcement of that decision cannot be hindered by anybody's professing polygamy as religion.

* * *

But disposing of the idea that an anti-polygamy amendment would be a piece of religious bigotry is less than half of what needs to be done to awaken popular zeal for it.

The bigger hindrance is the feeling that it is not necessary.

Mormon leaders declare that no more plural marriages are being solemnized in their church, and say polygamy will die out with the passing of a generation now advanced in years. And the public says: "Let them alone; those few old people are hurting nothing."

Unhappily, men who know the Mormons better are not so sure of their telling the truth about no more plural marriages. But dismiss that for the present. Give them the benefit of their denial.

Here are some further considerations of more import—facts that even Mormons themselves will not offer to deny:

No representative Mormon (of the Utah branch) ever repudiated the principle of polygamy—ever announced the opinion that polygamy is wrong morally or undesirable socially.

On the contrary, all active Mormons—in this larger and best known branch of the church—profess the expectation that the world will come some day to the practice of polygamy as the accepted form of domestic life.

This is the reason why the revelation commanding the church to practice polygamy stands unchanged in its "Book of Doctrines and Covenants."

This is the reason why the latest 1912 edition of the official Mormon theology, "Compendium of the Doctrines of the Gospel," still prints unabridged the chapter commending "plurality of wives," from which this is one characteristic quotation:

> "If plural marriage be unlawful, then is the whole plan of salvation through the house of Israel a failure and the entire fabric of Christianity without foundation."

The United States confronts a powerful organization—the most perfectly compacted close corporation in this country—which proposes to supplant monogamy with polygamy throughout the country so soon as it may be able.

* * *

There is the issue. Does it stir anybody's blood to protest?

The reason for adding an anti-polygamy amendment to the constitution is to prove to these propagandists of plural marriage that there is no place in the United States for their idea to grow.

Today in Utah it is impossible to punish an offender for polygamous living. As fast as Mormon ascendency is established in surrounding states, their state laws on that subject will become inoperative. Under state jurisdiction the practice may spread unchecked.

But with the federal constitution pronouncing polygamy a crime, federal courts, free of local sway, will impose conclusive penalties.

With such an advantage against it, polygamy can be stamped out—even in Utah.

Only so can this foul flower of lust be nipped in the bud.

Who speaks for an anti-polygamy amendment?

If you want it at all, speak soon and loud.

The World

Mr. Bryan Trying to Calm California Storm

It is the irony of political fate that the first serious international problem confronting the Democratic administration should involve the question of states' rights, and that a Democratic President and a former Democratic candidate for the presidency should have to oppose a state in an unwise, if not illegal, exercise of its sovereignty. Yet the California-Japanese situation, outlined last week, assumed exactly that phase. After President Wilson and Governor Hiram Johnson had exchanged several telegrams, and the Japanese ambassador at Washington had presented the views of his government against the proposed anti-alien land law, the President dispatched Secretary of State Bryan to California in person to pour oil on the troubled waters.

A message from the governor and a resolution of the state legislature had given assurance that the presence of the head of the state department—a violation of traditions and precedents—would be "entirely agreeable" at Sacramento. But the legislature in the same breath "respectfully maintained" its right to legislate on the subject of land ownership. In addition to shutting the Japanese farmers out of farm ownership half a dozen other restrictive and exclusive measures are reported to have been mooted in California recently, but without taking form in bills.

Indications are that Mr. Bryan's presence, together with the President's urging that there should be no violation of treaty obligations nor imperiling of national friendships, will result in checking the untimely outbreak of anti-Japanese spirit in the state. Internal pressure of a strong kind was exerted to check the legislators by the directors of the Panama-Pacific exposition, who were disturbed by talk in Tokyo and elsewhere of boycotting the 1915 fair. Some San Francisco and Los Angeles newspapers declare that the number of Japanese agriculturists in the state is not large enough to be menacing. Eastern people who come into contact with but few of the Japanese, and under quite different conditions, are usually unable to understand the feeling on the Pacific coast against the race.

American missionaries to the number of seventy met in Tokyo last Thursday and adopted a resolution deploring discriminatory legislation, and asking all missionary bodies in the United States to oppose "action which is contrary to friendship."

No Wine at Mr. Bryan's Diplomatic Dinners

William Jennings Bryan's decision to serve no wine at official dinners given by him has attracted more attention in Washington than his reconciliation with Speaker Champ Clark or some of the momentous work he is doing in the state department. The newspaper correspondents seem to have been surprised at Mr. Bryan's course, but there would have been greater cause for surprise if Mr. Bryan had done violence to his well known temperance principles. Before accepting the portfolio of the secretary of state he discussed this point with President Wilson.

Because of the numerous comments caused by the fact that grape juice and mineral water took the place of spirituous liquors at the dinner given last week to Mr. Bryce, the retiring British ambassador, Secretary Bryan made a public statement. He said he did not intend to magnify the importance of the nonuse of wine, and he frankly told the diplomats that his failure to conform to the capital's custom was due to the fact that he and Mrs. Bryan and their parents before them were teetotalers and that liquor had never been served at their table—and presumably never would be.

Tariff Bill Moves as President Wishes

Debate on the Underwood tariff bill and its income tax supplement is now at high tide in the house of representatives, with every prospect of passage by the lower house before the end of another month. The President's influence, combined with Democratic solidarity, has thus far proved irresistible. Chairman Underwood of Alabama and Representative Gardner of Maine opened the discussion a week ago for the Democrats and Republicans respectively. Mr. Murdock of Kansas, the Progressive member of the ways and means committee, presented to the house a minority report advocating a tariff commission with power to elicit information, also urging reasonable reduction of any duty obviously excessive and opposing radical reductions in the absence of adequate data. Mr. Hinebaugh of Illinois, another Progressive, argued for scientific and nonpartisan tariff-making, further asserting that the tariff question, as a bone of party contention, was outworn. Mr. Palmer, who represents a Pennsylvania steel manufacturing district, declared that downward revision of the steel schedule would not affect the price of steel rails because a worldwide argeement exists among steel manufacturers.

Somber predictions as to the effect of tariff cuts were made by prominent Chicago business men in conferences with Representative Madden. Spokesmen for specialized industries are making vigorous though admittedly futile objections to the lowering of their section of the tariff wall. For example, the town of Gloversville, New York, closed all its factories and places of business for half a day recently to take part in a general demonstration against the proposed reduction in the rate on gloves. Out of 4,000 items in the bill, President Wilson is said by Mr. Underwood to have asked only for free wool now and free sugar three years hence. The financial future of the western wool growers and the Louisiana suger planters is not regarded as important as the general interests of the country at large.

The distinctive feature of events in Washington is the manner in which the President is actively taking command of the legislative situation.

Great American Battleship Cruise Planned

Secretary Daniels of the navy department is planning to send the Atlantic fleet on a three months' cruise of the Mediterranean next winter, sailing January 1. The tentative program made public a few days ago calls for a fleet of at least twenty-one battleships, including the new dreadnoughts, and in point of total tonnage and armament the fleet will be much greater than that which went around the world in the famous practice cruise of 1907. The object of the contemplated tour is said to be the stimulation of enlistment and the education of officers and men. Besides varied sea maneuvers it is expected that stops will be made at many important ports and the men in the fleet will be given shore leave. So long as Uncle Sam has to maintain a navy, Mr. Daniels believes the general public should know its good points.

Philadelphia Mayor at Wisconsin University

Not often do men of mature years, in positions of public authority, admit even to themselves that they have need to learn, yet such is the effect of the action of Mayor Rudolph Blankenburg of Philadelphia and certain members of his cabinet. The mayor, who is a veteran reformer, has announced that he will go this month to the University of Wisconsin to attend a brief course of lectures on various phases of municipal affairs and administration. Two dozen lectures will be crowded into a three-day period. The entire party is expected to number over a hundred, and will include business men and members of the City Club of Philadelphia.

The fact that Philadelphia is willing to go to Wisconsin in search of knowledge has impressed persons living outside that city and state as little short of remarkable, but Madison professes to be in no wise astonished nor even unduly elated.

The Open Caucus and More Democracy

"The science of administration" is no less a science in public office than it is in private life, and requires expert skill and knowledge. But the broad problems of government are, in a democracy, matters of general, not special, concern. Such being the case, a fundamental requirement of democracy is that the business of government be open to public scrutiny if America is to remain a government of, by and for the people. A step in this direction was taken by the Progressive party at the opening of Congress, when its caucus was opened to the public, women for the first time being present on such an occasion.

Following this example a large number of Democratic members of the lower house tried to throw open the Democratic caucus. The move, which was specially urged by Representatives Henry of Texas and Carlin of Virginia, is understood to have had the approval of President Wilson. It was opposed by the Democratic leader, Mr. Underwood, and others, and was tabled after an exciting debate, 167 to 84.

The policy of an open caucus was indorsed by the Republican members of the house a few days ago after a vigorous debate. Representative Madden of Illinois offered a resolution declaring that to all future conferences of the house by Republicans the press and public should be admitted, an amendment providing that by a majority vote the conferences could go into executive session.

Representative Morgan has a bill in Congress to abolish secret caucuses, and also to make it unlawful to bind a legislator to vote against his best judgment. A law or rule of this kind would put an end to the dominance of the time-honored secret party caucus, an institution which has often shielded the weak or vicious and smothered the strong and independent. Greater publicity means greater democracy.

Enforcing Prohibition in Maine; National Gains

In the state of Maine the legislature has taken hold of the prohibition law—which has sometimes been regarded as little more than a time-honored reminiscence—and has gone to work in earnest to make it a means for moral reformation instead of a dead letter or an instrument of petty graft and political corruption. Several sheriffs have been impeached for malfeasance in office because of failure to enforce the prohibitory law, and these officials have been removed from office in Cumberland, Penobscot and Segadahoc counties, another sheriff has resigned under fire and the prosecuting attorney of Androscoggin county is awaiting trial. Once more it will be demonstrated that prohibition does prohibit when backed up by honest determination.

A wet and dry map of the several states of the union, prepared by the Anti-Saloon League since the recent spring elections, indicates a considerable gain for the temperance cause. A population of over 46,000,000 is now living under no license, and of the 2,856 counties in the United States over 1,700 have abolished saloons. More than 500 cities having a population of 5,000 or more have abolished saloons, and nine states have statewide prohibition. The lower house of the Michigan legislature last week adopted a resolution requesting Congress to submit to the people of the United States an amendment prohibiting the sale of liquor anywhere in the country. The Anti-Saloon League has announced that it will work for the same object.

New Crisis in the Balkans; Austria Moves

Scutari fell before Montenegro's eleventh hour assault last week, King Nicholas declined the order of the powers to evacuate the city he had captured and Austria thereupon embarked a large force to dispossess him. The defeated commander of the Turkish forces in Scutari, Essad Pasha, proclaimed himself king of Albania, with Nicholas's encouragement, it is surmised, and last Monday, instead of the expected peace, a new Balkan crisis impended. The expectation that Montenegro would be compelled to abandon the siege of Scutari because of active pressure from the powers, withdrawal of Servian support and bad blood between the Balkan allies proved contrary to the fact. Goaded to desperation, King Nicholas ordered his army to storm the town. The fighting was as fierce and bloody as in ancient times, but it won for the little kingdom the Turk's last stronghold on his western frontier. The victory came late—almost as late, comparatively, as Andrew Jackson's winning battle of New Orleans—and its effect was highly embarrassing to the European concert, which has been conducting a solemn blockade of the coast of Albania.

Austria thereupon again announced that Scutari was not for the Montenegrins, but must be a part of the new Albania; and if the powers would not make King Nicholas give up his belated bit of spoil then she, Austria, would.

Five-Power Loan to China Causes Friction

China is again troubled by foreign money. Shortly before daylight Sunday morning the final agreement for a loan of $125,000,000 from the five-power group of bankers—it was six before the United States withdrew—was signed in Peking. A delegation from the senate and house of representatives waited upon the signatories and informed them that a majority of the parliament considered the loan illegal. The situation has further increased the tension between Yuan Shih Kai and his supporters and their opponents, loosely represented by the northern and southern provinces.

The permanent parliament has been slow to organize, but on Friday the senate elected as its presiding officer Chang Chi, the leader of the Kuo Ming Tang, or democratic revolutionary party. Chin Tin, a Yale graduate, was chosen vice-president of the senate. The lower house was not able to organize promptly. It is supposed to be controlled by the opposite or progressive party. The latter organization represents a new and clever move by Yuan Shih Kai, the provisional president of the republic. According to the special correspondent of The Chicago Daily News in Peking, President Yuan has lately succeeded in merging three factions opposed to the Kuo Ming Tang on a platform advocating a strong central government—and probably Yuan's continuation in power.

At present conditions in China are not dissimilar from those prevailing in America after the close of the revolutionary war and before the adoption of the constitution, at the time described by John Fiske in his "Critical Period of American History," when the individual independence of each of the thirteen colonies made the union without cohesion or strength. The Chinese progressive party proposes to abolish the office of provincial governor, delegating each governor's power to a taotai or district intendant appointed by the central government. Thus the power of the provinces would be curtailed and the prestige of Peking vastly enhanced.

Support for President Yuan has come from the Chinese Students' Alliance of America. Last week the students, who number 500 in various American universities, sent a cablegram from New York to the Chinese parliament urging Yuan's reelection to secure national recognition and the welfare of the country. In the days of the dynasty, not so long ago, the student alliance memorialized the throne, but received in response a curt reply: "Attend to your studies."

Who It Is Who Really Makes War Scares

How war scares are deliberately manufactured and kept alive in Europe is being revealed in Berlin. The German reichstag has been told about the dark schemes of international knavery and greedy cunning—schemes of the big gunmakers and of the sellers of war materials—to make money out of their people's patriotic impulses, after these impulses had been shrewdly fanned into flame by false stories of foreign dangers and threatened invasion. The names of the great Krupps, the largest manufacturers of armament in the world, and of other firms of only slightly less prominence, have been mentioned in the charges made by Dr. Karl Liebknecht, the Socialist parliamentary leader.

Dr. Liebknecht says a combination of gunmakers was at the bottom of the bad feeling between France and Germany and that a section of the French press was improperly influenced to print untrue information that would excite Germany, German newspapers in turn being induced to conduct campaigns of hatred against France and England. The favored Krupps, he said, employed secret agents to corrupt war office officials in order to obtain inside information. A letter was published from Herr von Gontard, a life member of the Prussian house of lords, to an unnamed person in Paris, which substantiates the Liebknecht charges. The same accuser pointed out that German firms were selling arms to Russia, and another concern with French capital was selling armor plate to Germany. Two arms and ammunition factories in Germany, one in Austria and another in Belgium, all largely backed by French money, had an agreement to eliminate competition and guarantee mutual profits. All were busy creating an artificial war spirit.

The disagreeable disclosures will lessen the prestige of the military parties and increase the vote of the Socialists. Friends of peace are hopeful that the effect will be lastingly beneficial.

World Conference to Suppress Opium Sale

Two years ago there was an international conference in China for the purpose of devising plans to restrict or suppress the sale and production of opium by worldwide agreement. Last year it met at The Hague, where it will meet again next June, with the expectation of concluding its work. It will mark the culmination of a movement in which the United States took the initiative. President Wilson sent a message to Congress last week, transmitting a report by Secretary Bryan, both asking for an appropriation of $20,000 to enable the United States to participate in this final conference.

"It is a source of gratification to me personally," said the President, "and it always will be, I am confident, a subject of gratification to the nation that this government, realizing the extent of the opium and allied evils, should have initiated a worldwide movement toward abolition."

Victory with the Belgian Strikers

Belgian strikers returned to work last week, for the most part satisfied with a compromise which amounts to victory. The government receded from its first position and agreed to a revision of the constitution and laws with reference to suffrage, and the objectionable plural voting system will probably be done away with. Thus peacefully ends the largest and apparently the most successful political strike in the world's history.

* *

—The senate of Wisconsin has passed a measure to prohibit "treating" in saloons. The lower house is not friendly to the bill, but if it could be passed and enforced it would cut the consumption of liquor very substantially—perhaps 50 per cent.

Religious World

Smith and Robins Successful in Australia

Fred B. Smith and Raymond Robins, traveling on their around-the-world tour in the interest of the Men and Religion Movement, have spent the month of April in Australia. The March issues of the Australian religious press showed enthusiastic preparations for their coming, and cables from Mr. Smith evidence the greatest possible satisfaction in the reception given them. The response at Melbourne encouraged Mr. Smith particularly. Four hundred men attended the institutes daily, and six successive popular meetings numbered a total attendance of 21,000 men. As Mr. Smith puts it succinctly, "The message and method are gripping Australia tremendously."

The last stop of Messrs. Smith and Robins prior to arriving in Australia was at Manila, the capital of the Philippines. There they made a profound impression upon all classes, but particularly upon the American official circle, both civil and military. The Manila Times, the pioneer English daily of the Philippines, gave up editorial space to the Men and Religion leaders during their stay in Manila, and each day a strong religious article appeared at the head of the editorial columns, prepared alternately by Mr. Smith and Mr. Robins. Public meetings in Manila included forty different sessions where the total attendance was over 13,000. There were 500 decisions for the Christian life.

✣ ✣

Canadian Church Gains Less than Formerly

According to a recently issued bulletin of the 1911 census of Canada, Presbyterianism has more than held its own during the last decade. The percentages of the leading churches are as follows: Roman Catholics total 39.31 per cent of the population, Presbyterians 15.48, Methodists 14.98, Anglicans 14.47, Baptists 5.31. The large preponderance of Roman Catholics is due to the fact that over 30 per cent of the total population is located in the province of Quebec and is almost solidly French and Roman Catholic.

The gain during the decade was Roman Catholic 27.06 per cent, Presbyterian 32.39, Methodist 17.78, Anglican 53.05 and Baptist 20.33. The large gain of the Anglicans is due chiefly to the tide of immigration from England. Presbyterians have, probably, gained in a similar way by immigration from Scotland. But the growth of the church has not kept pace with the increase of population, and the percentage of increase in the membership of the church is slightly less than for the preceding decade

✣ ✣

"Right of Entry" in New Zealand

New Zealand Congregationalists have set their faces against the adoption of a bill, pending in that dominion, which would provide that during certain hours the children of the public schools may be separated into denominational classes and instructed in religion by pastors of the respective churches to which their parents belong. But this opposition is noted with avowed amazement by the Congregationalists, Baptists and other evangelical Christians of Australia, particularly of New South Wales. In New South Wales this very system has been in successful operation for so many years that it is regarded a fixed principle of school administration, and Protestant pastors regard it as affording them a most valuable advantage, perfectly fair to all forms of Christian faith. The Pitt Street church in Sydney, which is regarded as the mother church of Australian Congregationalism, has recently employed an educational director, whose chief duty is to instruct Congregational children in the public schools at the hours designated for the exercise of this "right of entry," which is the popular name for the policy indicated.

Men and Religion Echoes in Manila

THE MEN AND RELIGION MOVEMENT has come—and gone? No. We repeat it—no. Its message, its inspiration, its appeal to our lives, will live on through many a splendid day. It brought us vision. It left us work. May we never lose the one nor neglect the other. We bless God deeply for the privilege of these last few days in the Philippines.

Three months ago Mr. Holmes, the advance secretary of the world tour, visited Manila and told us of its plan. We formed an executive committee, with C. A. Gunn, treasurer of the Presbyterian mission, as chairman. However, Mr. Gunn being detained in Cebu, the vice-chairman, a young Episcopalian business man, R. E. Clark, was made chairman and threw himself into the work. C. H. Fraser was made executive secretary, W. A. Tener, general secretary of the Young Men's Christian Association, became chairman of the Fred B. Smith program and meetings, and the undersigned of those of Raymond Robins.

Although a large number of government officials and clerks were absent from Manila at the summer capital in Baguio, there were nevertheless 234 men who sat down with the Smith-Robins party upon the roof garden of the Manila hotel for the opening dinner and they were representative of all the city's life. Later on through the courtesy of the railroad company a special night train was furnished the party free of expense, and made possible the spending of a day in Baguio.

A luncheon attended by upward of 200 government officials and clerks gave Messrs. Smith and Robins an opportunity to deliver a first message in Baguio, and at an afternoon meeting 500 people gathered to hear them again in one of the most remarkable natural amphitheaters in the world at the United States military reservation, Camp John Hay. Out beneath God's open skies, with the splendor of the sunset falling upon the mountains and crimsoning the clouds in a glory one cannot describe, these gentlemen spoke their message simply and with power. Major General J. Franklin Bell, who commands the Philippine division, first graciously introduced them and then, dropping his voice to a whisper, spoke two or three sentences that were distinctly heard an incredible distance away. As he said, God had made this wonderful amphitheater. He and others had simply discovered it and, having built terraces and rock-hewn seats within, were grateful it could first be used and thus dedicated by those who brought a message from God to men. It is doubtful whether a more wonderful amphitheater anywhere exists. It is inspiration in and of itself.

Mr. Smith and Mr. Robins and the quartet were kept busy from early morning to the late evening hours through all of the days of their stay here. Sunday morning they spoke in the churches, Sunday evening at the Grand opera house, where 2,500 men sought admittance. During other days they addressed school assemblies, pastors and missionaries and business men, and each afternoon held institutes which were well attended. The evenings were used for platform addresses. A delightful feature both of the institutes and evening meetings was the mingling of Filipinos and Americans. The former were practically all students of the university and other institutions of learning. In all forty meetings were addressed, with a total attendance of 8,766, and therefore an average of 344. One familiar with this city would realize that such figures speak great volumes and testify that no men were ever more appreciated here than Mr. Smith and Mr. Robins.

Probably the Men and Religion speakers have nowhere had in their audiences so large a proportion of men who were nonchurchgoing, many indeed being professedly out of sympathy with the church and its work and free so to express themselves. Yet there was not the slightest hesitation anywhere on the part of Mr. Smith or Mr. Robins in the laying of emphasis upon the church and its functions. Nor did they make any apology for saying that no permanent altruistic effort could be expected apart from the deep religious motive.

We have a strange situation out here. Men are not so much irreligious as unchurchly. They, many of them, have fine moral purpose and in the high adventure of the American people in these islands are doing splendid work. It is really missionary in conception and achievement. Yet they have forgotten how much God has to do in the making of a man's heart good and the keeping of his life kindly. They have met the East with its strange new world of thoughts and the shock to faith has been too great. They do not so understand it. They think only they have broken with bigotry and narrowness and are living a bigger, broader life in a new day and age. So many of them wish to do good, and are doing it, and in large measure. They may tell you herein lies all religion. They will succeed today. Tomorrow, too, we shall find them at their task, though in waning power. But on the day that follows they will fail, for passion must die at last when no longer the love fires are rekindled from above. God give them to know this; and praise be for a Smith and a Robins to help onward to such truth.

Manila, March 18. GEORGE WILLIAM WRIGHT.

Editorial

The Encouragement of Being at It

PESSIMISTS are usually out of the game. People at work are the ones who are sure something will come of it. Foreign missionaries are the ones who believe in foreign peoples. Workers among immigrants find it hard to be patient with men who sneer at the "wops" and "dagos," and others. Arm-chair critics can dismiss foreign missions with two sentences and a sniff—may even dispense with the sentences, though the sniff is necessary. People who are at it are sure it can be done, and sure also that it is being done.

Here is a young man spending his whole time in Christian work in colleges. He sees student life from the inside. He has been in several state universities. In one of them there was a meeting of 3,000 students, and 300 started out to follow Christ. In another were held four meetings, averaging a thousand each. This young man writes, "There is no question in my mind of a decided improvement in the moral and religious life of American students." Improvement? What does he mean? Does he not know that students are losing their faith and their morals and their characters? Does he not realize that faculties are in league with the forces of evil? Or is it possible that our friends who have been saying so have the disadvantage of not knowing anything about it? Is it possible that they are thinking of a few instances, and have missed the real current? At any rate, this man who is at the task seems much encouraged about it.

Of course, one must take into account the story of Phillips Brooks, who would not agree that church attendance was falling off because everywhere he went he found such large congregations. This man whom we have quoted is the kind of man to whom students would make response. That in itself is a suggestive fact, however. Perhaps the weakness of the religious situation in our schools is that we have not frankly handled it. Probably if we had paid no more heed to the biological elements in our educational institutions than we have to the religious, we would be the laughing-stock of Europe. We get in our colleges just about what we go after, and when the educational leaders are ready to give heed to the religious phases of universities and colleges they will find the students ready. If they take the matter lightly, the students will do so.

There are a great many good men who cannot teach chemistry with any inspiration. A chemical department of a college under the guidance of one of those men is lost before it begins. The religious department, its Bible study, its Christian training, is lost also if it falls into the hands of a man with no inspiration, and without the power of leadership. There is nothing occult or mysterious about it. We can have a keen, strong religious life in our colleges and universities just as soon as we want it. More and more we are wanting it, and wherever we want it intelligently we are finding men like this one to whom the students respond.

Meanwhile it is people who are at anything big who are sure of it and rejoice in it.

"Better than We Could Ask or Think"

God not only "moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform" but he moves so silently and comes out, so to speak, at such unexpected places that he staggers even his own men who think they are men of big faith. Who, for instance, was a large enough Christian, in the way of expecting great things from God, to be able to suppress a gasp of amazement when the Chinese government sent forth its official request that the Christian churches of that nation should pray last Sunday for its guidance in righteousness? Missionary enthusiasts have dreamed of all kinds of things coming to pass in China, but was anybody clairvoyant enough to foresee just this?

Yet so far as anything the government could do, just this is the very finest thing that could happen for the honor and advancement of Christian faith in China. Any outright adoption of Christianity as the official religion of the new republic—which many amateur prophets have speculated on—would involve many perils. But this sort of recognition for the religion of Jesus is all to the benefit of both church and nation. It gives "face" to Christianity in a way particularly impressive to the Chinese mind, but in no wise tends to offer Chinamen a selfish object for becoming Christians. The whole native church is placed under an immeasurably stimulating responsibility, yet without any treacherous incentive to pride and boasting. The enheartenment to everybody concerned for the name of Christ must be immense, but happily comes in such form as to be more sobering than exhilarating.

Moreover, the appeal from the nation to the church reaches the church at the vital spot of its spiritual life. Under such stress of national expectation the Chinese church will simply be compelled to learn to pray. And that will be worth more to it than limitless endowments of wealth and learning. Chinese Christians of future generations will have cause to bless this pagan request which forced the infant church of the twentieth century to explore to the depths its resources of prayer. And, by way of passing observation, one cannot fail to admire the fidelity of missionary service which has spread abroad in China the public impression that Christianity is first of all a praying religion with a prayer power potent to get results—potent enough to bring down from heaven the wisdom necessary for the unsurpassed task of building a powerful and virtuous free state on the immemorial foundations of autocracy in China.

There is, of course, no news about it yet from China, but how the Christians of that land must have prayed last Sabbath! They were put on their patriotic mettle to pray; not to pray under such circumstances would have been as bad as a sentry's going to sleep on watch. And The Continent would like to believe that no American Christian failed to join his prayers on that day in this great concert. Certainly if anything could ever create a round-the-world brotherhood of petition this astonishing appeal should do so. And it is petition that should not stop with the passing of the day appointed. What China asked for a day, it ought now to have daily from the whole Christian world at least until its political crisis is completely past.

Protest Itself Vindicates Young Men

Surely the last cloud wisps of fear that New York Presbytery is admitting to the Presbyterian ministry men of lax Christian faith will be cleared away from any candid mind after reading Dr. Fox's protest against the latest licensure of Union Seminary students. The protest along with the presbytery's answer is printed in another column for verification of this remark. The weakness of the objections on which the famous objector now falls back is apparent. Beating the air is not an occupation at which a man can long continue to exhibit mighty muscularity.

Neither the protest nor the reply reveals a tithe of the reasons why out of more than eighty members voting in presbytery all but ten favored licensing these four young men from Union Seminary. Nothing at all is indicated by these documents of the compelling power in the statements which these young men read to express their purpose in seeking the ministry. Vibrant spiritual feeling rang clear and true through every line of those papers. They committed their young authors absolutely to the full evangelical conception of the mission of the Son of God in the world. They pronounced unqualified faith in the Bible as divine revelation of the way of eternal life. An overwhelming conviction that Christ and Christ alone is able to save sinning men from guilt and fear, said all the candidates, compelled them to turn from all else and give their lives to preaching him. Tertius van Dyke in particular voiced this sense of the sole sufficiency of Christ so feelingly that time-tried ministers listening to him were moved to tears. Questioned if in the presence of the crucified One they were ready to say with Thomas, "My Lord and my God!" each of the young men responded unhesitatingly in the affirmative.

Of all this, however, Dr. Fox takes no account in his protest, as he took none in the presbytery. From large and free confessions of their own vital spiritual trust, he dragged these students away into paths set with pitfalls of catch questions. His own account of results shows what he asked them about—the plans given for the tabernacle on Mount Sinai, the resurrection of Lazarus and the virgin birth of the Lord. What did he find? That they denied these things? That they called them impossible in the light of modern science?

By no means. Only that they recognized these matters as questions under discussion by reverent Christian scholars and were ready to believe concerning them whatever such rational study might in the end seem to indicate as the more probable solutions. But they were urgent to add, the solutions could not either way change their personal religious faith. Whether the virgin birth and the raising of Lazarus are considered to be literal history or Christian community tradition, these young men avowed that they should still hold to the truths which these Scriptures are inspired to teach—that Jesus of Nazareth was the only begotten Son of God, God incarnate among men, and for dying humanity he is eternally the resurrection and the life.

Yet comes Dr. Fox in protest saying in effect that if these young men retain any openness of mind on any of these chosen tests of his they cannot possibly believe in any part of the Bible's revelation —that they lie when they profess to accept "the fundamental facts of the gospel and the authority of the Holy Scriptures." On an issue like that it is not much use to offer argument. Men will go to one side of it or the other according to the kind of hearts they carry in their bosoms. Only, as the answer of the presbytery suggests, it is fair to remember that Dr. Fox has talked this same way in the past about the honesty of other candidates who are now steadfast, trusted ministers of the church, preaching good tidings of salvation in the name of Christ—and winning men to him, too. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Humility Is Not an Impossible Virtue

In discussing the vice of self-seeking relative to the Assembly moderatorship and other positions of distinction in the church the most astounding development is the frank skepticism which even in the pages of the religious press makes doubt whether the Presbyterian Church has yet produced a man strong enough to be moderator and yet humble enough never to have coveted the place. The thought of conferring the moderatorship on someone who has not aspired to it is treated as absurd; according to this ecclesiastical cynicism there is no such man, or if there is, he must be a noncompetent. Assuredly the church was never confronted with a worse heresy charge than this—the charge that nobody honestly holds by the scriptural injunction, "Yea, all of you gird yourselves with humility to serve one another."

But like most heresy charges, this one is not true. There are men, and plenty of them, in the Presbyterian ministry who are actually so immersed in the task the Lord has given them to do that it never enters their hearts to desire earthly honors—and lots of these are big enough for Assembly moderator. Beautiful examples of the sort have held the place with highest credit again and again in years past. And commissioners to the three Assemblies at Atlanta, if not ready to be numbered with cynics who repudiate humility as a Christian grace, should take care to adorn those bodies with a trio of presiding officers in whose presence allusion to the lowliness of Christ cannot be interpreted to be a sly thrust of irony.

Memento of Dr. Holmes Made Ready for Friends

To readers of The Continent, and to those who before the birth of The Continent read The Westminster, no memory could be tenderer than the memory of that cheery companion of us all, Dr. Richard S. Holmes. Any memento that recalls how pure he was, how true, how brave, how serene and how buoyant, must be peculiarly precious to have and keep. And that makes it a joy to hear that the good doctor's daughter has edited a little volume of his writings, prose and verse, which, gathered from the transient pages of his editorial work, will thus take a form wherein the multitude who loved him may cherish for long years to come his inspiriting counsel and cheer. Yes, and we trust that other multitudes may thus learn to know his message who missed it in his lifetime. At all events, The Continent fellowship will all be grateful to Miss Holmes for her labor of love, and to the Presbyterian Board of Publication, too, for aiding to put the little volume within their reach. The title chosen, "Broader Vision," is happy; it has its own unique expressiveness to those who had sensed the master aspiration of this friend who now dwells altogether in the light.

Graded-Lesson Principle Now Beyond Question

What sort of graded lessons the church shall provide for its Sunday schools is a fair and an important question for serious present consideration. It is very certain that the last word of wisdom has not yet been spoken on the form which graded Bible lessons should take. But really the time is quite past for that other question which some people seem to imagine to be still pending—the question whether the Sunday schools of the church shall have graded lessons at all. Enough experience has accumulated on that point to justify calling it settled. Graded lessons are, out of all comparison, unmistakably better than the old-fashioned uniform lessons in schools that meet where they can be divided into departments.

Of course there are schools in which such division is impossible for one reason and another, and of them there will be enough to demand for a long time to come continuance of the uniform lessons series. But that is no reason why better situated schools should be denied what they need and can use in graded material. Indeed, the church could not deny that material if it tried, for if it failed to put forth graded lessons its progressive Sunday schools would simply turn to undenominational publishing houses for their supplies.

So let us all understand just where the room for discussion is in this matter. The debatable question is on the application of the graded principle—not on the principle itself.

The Mere Suggestion Slights American Honor

Senator Chamberlain of Oregon has introduced into the senate at Washington a resolution for abrogating the two treaties with Great Britain on which the British government relies to claim equal privileges for its vessels in transit through the Panama canal. The Continent hopes that patriotism will not blind any conscientious eyes to the blackness of the shadow which such a proposal throws on the honor of the United States. Senator Chamberlain by his action intimates that it would be possible for the American people, having made a contract which appears to work to their disadvantage, to tear up the contract and throw it away. If Senator Chamberlain were himself capable of any such behavior in his private affairs he would not be a senator nor be occupying any other position which brought him into association with gentlemen. Is it really conceivable that he supposes the nation can do with honor what would visit ostracism on an individual? The Hay-Pauncefote treaty with England was made by the United States for a valuable consideration —to wit, England's quitclaim deed of a vested half interest in the canal. If America were to repudiate that treaty England would have every right to reclaim the consideration given for it.

—This young New England Synod is surely a healthy and lusty ecclesiastical infant. It already announces its intention to take care of all its own home mission obligations. The proposal was at first that it should finance everything except work among immigrants, but on further consideration the synod decided that it would count in immigrants, too, and be responsible for the whole task. This is splendid moving up to shoulder a bigger load. Through all the long years while New England was a part of New York Synod the self-support scheme of the latter never got big enough to cover that territory; the New England states were always dependent direct on the Home Mission Board. Their declaration of financial independence now, under the new synod, alone justifies the organization of that separate body. Moreover, it takes away the last possible criticism to which the synod could be exposed from outsiders, because it makes sure that there will be no Presbyterian aggression in New England inimical to other denominations.

—It is to be trusted that Count Okuma, the famous "elder statesman" of Japan, did not say, at the luncheon where he entertained John R. Mott and other eminent Christians, what cable dispatches reported—that Christianity is the only thing left to avert impending war between Japan and the United States. One cannot think that a man as sound and sturdy as Okuma would mention war between these two countries in any terms which contemplated it as possible. But we trust the cable did have this reason for sending the story—that Okuma did say that Christianity should be a sufficient safeguard to prevent America and Japan from fighting each other in any circumstances whatever. That certainly is true, and American Christians ought to stand up and see to it that Okuma's faith in that direction is supported even to the extent of suppressing not only war provocation but also war talk.

—The U. S. A. Assembly at Atlanta will have in its lay membership at least two gentlemen practiced in legislative and parliamentary affairs through long experience in Congress—former Congressman Charles F. Scott of Iola, Kansas, and William S. Bennet of New York City. Mr. Bennet has been a commissioner to two previous Assemblies. In Congress his specialty was the question of immigration, while the line of Mr. Scott's greatest activity is indicated by the fact that he was chairman of the house committee on agriculture.

—The Sunday school problem felt by the church at home extends even to the mission fields. The Presbyterian Church in India, making out its report for the year 1912, finds an increase of 2 per cent in the communicants from the year previous, but in the total of Sunday school scholars a loss of 1 per cent. The gifts of the Indian Christians for their own church expenses declined 13 per cent in the year, but their gifts to their own missionary society for the evangelization of their own country improved 32 per cent.

—It is pleasant to congratulate Dr. H. C. Jennings of Cincinnati on his election to be the publishing agent of the Methodist Episcopal Church. Heretofore this has been a fourfold office in Methodist economy, but now four men are to be consolidated into one, and Dr. Jennings, who was one-fourth of the four, is found big enough to be all of the one.

DR. JOWETT'S MESSAGE

At the Table of the Lord

IT IS POSSIBLE for religious exercises to make us less religious. A means of grace can be a drug instead of a meal. We may become spiritually faint at the very waters of refreshment. We may be starved at the table of the Lord. We may be the guests of the Saviour and yet all the time be receding from his fellowship. The apostle Paul is continually repeating his warning and urging his fellow believers to remember that men may "come together for the worse rather than the better."

And the warning is especially grave concerning the perils that surround the Lord's table. He describes the condition of many regular attendants of the sacred ordinance, and they appear before us as invalids who have lost their exuberant health. "Many are weak and sickly among you, and not a few sleep." It may be well to examine these people, and to consider the causes of their spiritual invalidity, if perchance we may see that similar perils lie in our path today.

Weak Souls Lacking Patience, Strength, Fervor, Zest

Some of these guests of the Lord have become weak. Let us turn to the physical analogy, and note how we refer to people who are described by the general term of weakness. We say they are "easily exhausted," "no good at hills," "cannot stand the cold," "cannot lift anything," "cannot go farther than one street," "are tired out by the slightest effort." All of which may be reduced to three primary statements: Weak people cannot stand the long road; they cannot stand the hard task; they cannot stand the unfriendly weather.

And so it is in the realm of the soul. The friends of the apostle Paul had been to the Lord's table. Their souls were afflicted with similar weaknesses to those I have just named. They were not able to stand the burden of the long road. They knew nothing about "the patience of unanswered prayer." They could not endure the tedious waiting, the delayed blessing, the harvest that seemed as though it would never come. Secondly, they were unable to stand the hard task. They fainted in the presence of difficulty. They had no firm grip upon the immediate duty. They had no splendid "lift" in the presence of the despondent and the depressed. And, thirdly, they were unable to stand the unfriendly weather. Disappointments chilled their spirits, adversity quenched their fires, they could not bear up against the wind of hostility. A cold snap of opposition affected them as a chill blast affects the midges on a summer's night. They were spiritually "weak," and yet they had been to the table of the Lord.

Others among them were "sickly." If we turn to physical analogies we know that one leading characteristic of the sickly is the loss of appetite—a recoil from healthy and common food. And so it was in this early church. They had lost their eager taste for the things of God. They had no relish for his word. They had no delight in meditation upon their Lord. They had lost their hunger and thirst for righteousness and they found no pleasure in the pleasures of their God. And yet these, too, had been regularly to the table as the guests of their Lord.

Dull Souls Lacking the Sense of God's Presence

And others again are described by the apostle as being "asleep." Now, in sleep the senses are inactive. The outside world ceases to exist. I was once going up Loch Lomond on the little lake steamer on a superlatively glorious day. Ben Lomond was outlined against a perfectly blue sky. The whole panorama was exquisite. A fellow passenger at my side slept through the whole journey! The heavens were declaring the glory of God and the firmament was showing his handiwork, but my neighbor was asleep! The other day I was present at a performance of the "Elijah," and all through the more powerful and lovelier portions of the oratorio a neighbor of mine was fast asleep! The senses were not active, and the great worlds were just as though they were dead.

And so it is in the moral and spiritual world when the senses are dormant and we receive no impressions from the Divine. Our sight is inactive and we do not see the opportunity presented by the open door. Our hearing is inactive and we do not hear the Divine call urging us to appointed tasks. Our sense of touch is inactive and we do not sympathetically feel the presence of human need that crouches at our gate. And souls like these had been regularly to the table of the Lord, and had sat as guests in the presence of their Redeemer! They had been to the place where health is given, where the soul is restored, and they had come away worse than they went.

Now what were the causes that had created these strange conditions? It is needful for us to know because it is possible that in our own time we may go to the table of grace and bounty and we may find our souls afflicted with weakness and our spiritual discernments dulled into sleep. What does the apostle mention as the primary cause of their condition?

Selfish Souls Lacking Fellowship of Sympathy

First of all, he mentions selfishness. "Everyone taketh before others his own supper." I know that this refers to the love feast which probably preceded the actual communion with the Lord, but it suggests the spirit in which they approached the table, the attire which they were wearing when they came as guests in the presence of the King. Each man was selfishly intent upon his own blessing and he forgot the presence of his brother.

And surely this is the peril of many of us in the church of today. We go to the table where are spread the very symbols of vicarious sacrifice, and we can be so intent upon the personal blessing that we overlook the presence of all our fellow guests. Even at the table of sacrifice it may be all "I," "I," "I" or "me," "me," "me," and there is no fellowship in our quest. We behave just as we should if no other soul were at the table, and as if we were the only invited child of the feast.

Now selfishness is always the parent of weakness, and most assuredly dulls our spiritual perceptions into a deep sleep. We must avoid the selfish quest when we meet the Lord. We must send our thought around the table, gather up the interests of our fellow guests and draw these fellow pilgrims into the circle of our intercessions. We must remember the old folk and the young folk, the broken-hearted, those who are the children of sorrow and acquainted with grief, the worldling sick at heart, those who are making new confessions, those who are repairing broken vows and the stranger within our gates. Perhaps we, too, are weak and sickly and asleep because we have ignored our fellow pilgrims, and "everyone taketh before other his own supper." "He that seeketh his life shall lose it." It is the soul that is engaged in seeking bread for other people whom the Lord himself will feed.

Superficial Souls Lacking Knowledge of Self

But the apostle gives a second reason for the moral and spiritual invalidism of many of these early pilgrims. We may surely infer it from the counsel that is given. "Let a man examine himself and so let him eat." There was not only the danger of selfishness but the peril of superficiality. Many people went to the table of the Lord with little or no thought concerning the gravity of their visit. They gave no time to preparation, and so, being unprepared, they were unreceptive, and at the close of the feast they went away weak and faint.

Now we are called upon by the apostle to give serious thought to ourselves before we take our place at the King's table. That is surely the counsel of reasonableness. If we are going to the table of an earthly king, or to be the guest of any distinguished person, we surely pay our hosts the courtesy of a fitting preparation. There will be a certain amount of self-examination. We shall pay some attention to our attire. We shall give studious regard to the social courtesies and to everything that is expected of the king's guests.

And yet when we go to the table of the King of kings we refuse the preparation which we consider fitting and necessary when we appear before the king who is our kinsman in the weakness of flesh and blood. We give no preparation to our attire. I do not know what the fitting attire may be for the individual soul; it may be sackcloth and ashes, it may be the garment of praise, it may be the robe of righteousness which we have received in earlier seasons as the gift of the Lord's grace. All I am wondering about is what the great King thinks about us when he sees us come to his table. "Let a man examine himself."

If we approach the table in the spirit of an unselfish quest and in a lowliness which has been begotten by examining ourselves in the light of the holy Lord, we need not be afraid to accept the invitation of the Lord to be guests at his table There will be most blessed results in such communion. Every guest will leave the table with his own share in the imparted life and grace of God. The life that filled the mind of Christ will fill our minds and control our judgments. The life that filled his conscience will fill our consciences and impart to us his sense of truth. And the life that filled his will will fill our wills, and give us his resolution and endurance.

J. H. JOWETT.

Utah Trying to Ignore Its Handicap

BY ROBERT M. STEVENSON

I HAVE LIVED in a number of states, among them California, and I do not hesitate to say that I prefer Utah to any other state in the union, so far as climate and material advantages are concerned. The seasons are distinct, without extreme heat or severe cold. Twenty-two million acres of most fertile soil are under cultivation. The small grains are grown in abundance, and it is the peculiar home of alfalfa. Finer vegetables are raised nowhere and fruits of almost every variety and of finest quality are grown in greatest profusion. I know of no country for which God has done more unless it be "the better country, even an heavenly."

And yet the number of people coming here to live is so small as to cause an outcry of protest among Utah residents. The immigration into Utah is contrasted with the large number coming into surrounding states, and Utah is falling behind. There is a reason for this, and yet the one who states it will be branded as a "knocker." However, as I have already been branded as a "reverend liar at large," I get used to knocks and may be able to stand some more.

Mormon Blight Stops Good Immigration to Utah

The reason will appear most vividly from the recital of concrete cases. A friend "back East" came to me and asked if I knew of a favorable locality for the establishment of a bank. I told him of one where the people were calling for such an institution and gave him evidence that, so far as money making was concerned, it was an exceptionally favorable opening. But I said to him, "It is fair to you to say that the community is largely Mormon." He immediately replied, "That settles it, for my wife would not be willing to bring our children into a Mormon community," and he established his bank in another state.

Prevailing Utah sentiment is such that I shall doubtless be censured severely, now that I have told on myself, for intimating that there was any danger to his children. The business man would say to me that I should have encouraged the establishment of the bank without qualification.

Take another case. A gentleman and his wife came to the state to look at land which they had seen advertised. They found it excellent and believed it to be a good investment, but the wife made an inquiry which called the sale off. She asked the wife of our missionary, "Would you bring little girls into this community to live?" The answer of the missionary was conscientiously made with a view, as she conceived it, to the welfare of the little girls and not with a view to the advantage of the real estate man. She replied that she would not. There was question afterwards why the sale did not go through and the reason and the name of the good woman were made known. As a result she and her husband were roundly berated in the newspapers.

But it would do no good to bring in people here by deception, for they soon find out for themselves. A pastor told me, not long ago, that two of the most helpful families in his church left the state because they did not wish to bring up their children among Mormon children. I know of another community where two families left for the same reason and greatly weakened the church by their going. I could recite still further cases, but these are sufficient.

Non-Mormons Wish Mormonism Let Alone

A prominent business man, not a Mormon but a graduate of a New England college, said to me recently, "If men will go into the Mormon towns and attend to business, letting religion alone, they can make money." From an extended conversation with this gentleman I came to the conclusion that the logical outcome of his advice would be to withdraw every evangelical home missionary in the state. And he seemed to think that in this way we would see the disintegration of Mormonism more quickly than under the present plan.

It is fair to say that many Christian people are on common ground with this gentleman in feeling that the best way to get rid of Mormonism is to let it alone. Fifty years ago Justin McCarthy, the English writer and traveler, thought just this after a visit here. "It seemed to me," he said, "that anything like a crusade against Mormonism might only tend to a fanatical reaction in its favor." He further said, "I had an opportunity of seeing a form of life which even then counted for nothing so far as the United States were concerned and which has now practically passed out of American civilization." Indeed, he went so far as to say, "Mormonism as a system is dead and buried." But it is still alive. Nothing would please the Mormon leaders more than to just let them alone.

While we have been hearing for a half century that the Mormon Church was just going to fall to pieces, like a rope of sand, it has filled up Utah and flowed over into Idaho, Wyoming, Colorado and into all the surrounding states. The Mormon Church is constantly lengthening its cords and strengthening its stakes by a colonizing system which we have no way of meeting. Stealthily, cunningly, this superb organization is planting its converts from over the sea and from this side the sea in carrying out its confident plan of controlling the United States. Their old men rejoice in calling attention to the ever wider scope of country which they control and cite it as a fulfillment of the predictions of their prophets.

Voices of Protest in Salt Lake City Muffled

In Salt Lake City the Mormons, of course, are perfectly free to proclaim the superiority of their religion over all others and to pull the wool over the eyes of tourists by the thousand. But it is not in good form for a minister or anyone else to mention Mormonism. Should a pastor think it incumbent upon him to inform his people concerning the dangers of Mormonism his ears would tingle with protests before he reached the church door. The majority of the people here, even church people, have no understanding of the danger which lurks in Mormon doctrine; but the worst of it is they wish it so. A gentleman who was a professor in one of our state institutions, the son of a Presbyterian elder in the East, told me that he knew nothing of Mormon doctrine, and made it emphatic that he did not wish to know. Yet, though he was willing to run the risk of bringing up his sons here, he acknowledged that if he had daughters he would not be willing to take the risk.

The sentiment of average business men may be expressed about like this: We will take the risk with our boys and girls, but we will not risk our business by taking any stand against Mormonism.

The result of this compromise is manifest in fifteen young people, non-Mormon, out of one high school in this city, actually uniting with the Mormon Church. I have been saying for years that converts to Mormonism were secured only from among unlettered people, but I can say so no longer.

Another feature of the situation is very important. Until recently we have been able to express dissatisfaction with Mormonism through the columns of The Salt Lake Tribune, but now they are closed to any such expression. On the other hand, we see eulogies of polygamists who have departed this life, and the fact that they have lived in violation of the law has no mention. I do not know that The Tribune is so much to blame for this, for when it had spent many thousands of dollars in gathering evidence of more than 200 plural marriages the work and the money were all for nothing. The government had no interest in it. President Taft sent, while here, to Senator Kearns and asked if proof could be produced of a plural marriage and was assured that proof could be produced for many, but that was the last of it.

I am coming to think that possibly it would be wiser to give less attention to the effort to reach the Mormon in Utah and to make a greater effort to prevent the spread of Mormonism over the land generally. It always has been a work of the greatest difficulty to reach the Mormon, because he is filled with self-righteousness. He flatters himself that he belongs to the "Church of the Lamb," while you belong to the "Church of the Devil." He knows, while you only believe. I have been told by one very prominent in Christian work here that the same person cannot be a party to a campaign to prevent the spread of Mormonism and at the same time work among Mormons with the expectation of reaching them. If I must take my choice, I think it will be to prevent the spread of Mormonism over the land.

Breakfasting in Reverse

"Less said the better" usually applies to experiences of seasickness. To be polite under such circumstances is not easy, but the Frenchman of this anecdote did not lose command of himself.

A Parisian had not found "life on the ocean wave" all he could wish. He was sinking, pale and haggard, into his deck chair, when his neighbor cheerily asked:

"Have you breakfasted, monsieur?"

"No, m'sieu," answered the Frenchman wanly, "on the contrary!"

The Editor Who Commands the Battleships

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS, Editor Afield of The Continent

Josephus Daniels

A BIBLE CLASS teacher, and a proponent of peace, now commands the American navy. Josephus Daniels is one of the men who is a Christian and a patriot before he is a politician; or rather, he is a politician because he is a Christian and a patriot. He has come to power in the nation because he proved his power in a state. Not because he is secretary of the navy and (in point of service) a veteran member of the Democratic national committee but because he is a personality, a type of the Christian man who has made good and become a power among his fellows, I want to introduce him to Continent readers.

The idea of introducing Josephus Daniels to anybody would strike a North Carolinian as rather amusing. Why, of course, everybody knows Josephus Daniels, just naturally. One may forget who is governor of North Carolina, but Josephus Daniels is bigger than any governor. They come and go, but he continues to be the most potent figure in the state, as for many years past. The last word of authority in the Tar Heel state is with the editor of The Raleigh News and Observer. Nobody in the land of the long-leaf pine is quite certain what he should think upon any issue until he has read what Daniels has said about it.

Mrs. Josephus Daniels and Four Sons

In all this broad land one will look in vain for anything analogous to the sway of the editor of The News and Observer in the public affairs of his state. I went with Mr. Daniels once to a night session of the legislature. He is as familiar a figure about the capitol as any of the lawmakers. Of course he knew everybody from the messenger boys up. Members thronged to him to counsel concerning pending legislation. They wanted to know what he thought about it. When a certain bill was left pending over night an editorial in the next morning's paper settled it.

The North Carolina state legislature is an illustration of democracy. It is the people's body. There are no frills to it, and not overmuch state. Nobody whispers that there is any graft. The members are poorly paid, but they are interested in public service. Everybody is a politician in North Carolina. These men are the purest Anglo-Saxons in America, the state having the smallest percentage of foreign population. They take to questions of government as their long-ago ancestors took to sword and bow. Democracy is a passion with them. They are old-fashioned in many of their ways and ideas; a visit to Raleigh is like entering the pages of early American history. And these magnificent sons of Anak give one a feeling of optimism as he faces America's future.

In no other state could a Josephus Daniels be possible. His leadership is by virtue of character and ideas, but it seems like leadership in a family. I heard a member of the legislature tell how the editor of The News and Observer had "torn him out" because he had favored the liquor men in the great temperance fight. (Needless to say, Mr. Daniels has been the David in this long and successful war against the Philistines.) The excoriation was complete, and it served its purpose. The legislator changed his mind, his methods and his company. He made manful apology, and then the editor poured oil into the wounds he had so lately made. "But," said the legislator ruefully, "the article he wrote commending me was not half so good as the one that did me up." Any journalist could have told him that it is far easier, and more interesting, to write in criticism than in praise.

May Disagree with Him, but All Respect Him

Not everybody in North Carolina agrees with Josephus Daniels, but everybody respects him. An editor in another town one day told me, as an exquisite joke, of a dunce who had once attributed dishonorable motives to Daniels. This seemed to my informant highly humorous; for, according to his way of thinking, all the world is as certain of the integrity of Josephus Daniels as of the procession of the seasons. This by no means implies that Editor Daniels lives in an atmosphere of adulation. Not so that you would notice it! They are strong men down his way, and they give hard knocks with hearty good will. He himself has been under arrest (in a hotel room, with a United States marshal in charge) for criticising a federal judge's decision; and he refused either to retract or pay a fine, and the upper court sustained him. When the qualities of an editor, a North Carolinian and a Methodist steward are combined under one suit of clothes, that person is likely to be hard to move! Besides, the journalist in the prisoner was not blind to the news value of dating his editorials "From Cell 365."

These North Carolinians are fighters, and proud of it. More than once Josephus Daniels has called my attention to the soldiers' monument in front of the classic state capitol, with its unparalleled inscription, "First at Bethel—farthest at Gettysburg—last at Appomattox." The first soldier killed in the civil war on the Confederate side was a North Carolina boy, and a superb statue of him stands on the capitol grounds not far from the monument of Mrs. Daniels's brother, Ensign Worth Bagley, who was the first American to fall in the Spanish-American war. The four sons of Josephus Daniels have a fine heritage, and I did not wonder that the second son first introduced himself to me with, "I am Worth Bagley," forgetting to add his family name.

A man's family life is scarcely fair subject for "copy," else I should write of Mrs. Daniels, an ideal mother and helpmeet and hostess, whose hospitality has been enjoyed by a procession of people; and who, in earlier days, used to help her husband get out his paper. One cannot refrain from remarking that the whole nation gains when the new leaders of Washington's social life are first of all exponents of the American Christian home.

A Friendly Man and a Good Neighbor

Josephus Daniels himself, however, is the subject of this article. He is worth writing about. A man rather below the average size, sturdily built, with deeply lined, weather-beaten face, like that of a Maine skipper, he would attract attention anywhere. Especially on Broadway, for he does not dress as Mrs. Grundy prescribes. In summer he wears white crash clothes. In winter his round, soft black hat disdains all changes in styles. Usually he wears a black string tie in a low collar. These are but the frame of the picture. The face, with deep-set, dark eyes, and surmounted by black hair, is that of a personality. Until it breaks up into a hundred winsome wrinkles, his countenance seems stern. But even the children of Raleigh know better. They called him by name as we walked the streets. The familiar, genial greeting of men and women also marked him as a friendly man, a good neighbor. One pictures the dismay of the gentlemen with the gold lace in the navy department at Washington as "the folks" from North Carolina "stop by" to see "our Mr. Daniels," the man whose word now moves the sailors and the battleships. If the present administration is asked to point to any one man who more than another visualizes American democracy, it may indicate either the secretary of the navy or the secretary of state.

Photographs copyright by Tyree, Raleigh

His Career in the Midst of His Own People

The biography of Josephus Daniels is a repetition of the ever-thrilling American story. He was born, fifty years ago, to all the opportunities of a poor boy. He was educated through his early teens, but never got to college, although he is now a director of the University of North Carolina. Even in boyhood he showed a taste for printer's ink. After the usual experiences of a youngster in amateur journalism, he became editor of the local paper in Wilson, N. C., when he was but 18 years old. Except for a short period—less than two years—in government service in Washington, Mr. Daniels's life has been spent in journalism in his native state. He is one of the wise ones who has found his career in the midst of his own people. He studied law, and was admitted to the bar, but he has never practiced. While he has done a great deal of political speaking, it is as an editor that he wields his power.

The commingling of constant personal association with the people and the duties of the editorial sanctum, after the Daniels fashion, is unusual. Nobody ever accused this editor of being out of touch with life. He knows folks even better than he knows his exchanges. His militant democracy and old-fashioned idealism are born of a familiarity with the men, women and children of his state. He does not lecture his readers from tripod heights; he stands with them, as well as stands by them. Probably he knows by name citizens of every town in North Carolina. Because the people's side is commonly the right side, and because righteousness and democracy are inextricably interwoven, Editor Daniels has been in season and out of season the friend and champion of the commonalty. This, I take it, explains how his paper in Raleigh, The Chronicle, like Moses' rod, ultimately absorbed its greater rival, The News and Observer, taking the name of the latter. The Daniels paper is now one of the most potent dailies south of Mason and Dixon's line. In either its weekly or daily edition it is read all over the state and adjoining country. There is a Sunday edition, but none on Monday.

The principles of democracy which the editor teaches in his columns are practiced in the office. The force is like one big family. The reporters go into the proprietor's sanctum as freely as do his own sons. Mr. Daniels once asked me to dictate to his stenographer a summary of an address I had made to Raleigh students, and I repeated a bit of poetry. "That's right," he jested, "put plenty of poetry into it, for this young man is in love and engaged to be married, and he will like to write that." The trivial incident shed a flood of light upon the friendly, informal relations existing between employer and employee.

The newspapers usually cite first, as the most notable fact about Mr. Daniels, that he does not drink, smoke nor swear. They think that remarkable in a Democratic politician! They seem not to have discovered that he teaches a Bible class and is a pillar in the Methodist Church; and that his political earnestness, his devotion to democracy, and his editorial efficiency, all root back in his religious convictions.

In the past two national campaigns Mr. Daniels has had charge of all the publicity work of the national committee. Now he has come to a national post, where his Christian idealism may be brought directly to bear upon the whole nation.

Comrades—the Girl and Her Mother

BY MRS. NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS

In this the second of Mrs. Hillis's articles, the author deals with the old-new theme of the ideal relationship which can and may exist between a girl and her mother—the girl being the modern creature growing into young womanhood under the perplexing conditions of this our own era. Says Mrs. Hillis: "No method has been discovered in all the process of science which does so much for the daughter as intimacy and cooperation with her mother."

THE CHANGE in the conditions and attitude of women today, the result of their higher education and the general movement toward their independence, does not confine itself to the mature woman. The American girl has always been considered a privileged creature, and the new state of things has by no means modified this opinion. She has not lost in beauty, but she has gained in health and vigor, which have enhanced her good looks. She has, perhaps, not lost in sweetness, but her sweetness has changed its type. One seldom sees a "clinging vine." The chrysanthemum and hollyhock styles are more predominant. She has certainly lost nothing in capability. Her better education has given variety and scope to that capability. She can do infinitely more kinds of things, and do very many of them better than before. Nevertheless, there are some things which she has not yet lost but which she stands in danger of letting slip from her because of her very exuberance of health, spirit and opportunity.

There is no lovelier relation in life than a real comradeship between a girl and her mother. In earlier days this meant the mother's leadership. The daughter was a kind of aid-de-camp—efficient, capable, but acting under orders. Today the modern girl is her own stage manager and her mother has fallen back into the position of chaperon. It does not indicate weakness on the part of the girl—possibly it does on the part of the mother. It is sometimes said that an unselfish mother makes a selfish daughter, and vice versa. If that is true, how can it be arranged? Shall we have alternate generations of self-denying mothers and selfish daughters, and the reverse, or is there a compromise? Most things are settled by a yielding on each side, if they are settled permanently and rightly.

Mother Has "Claims to Consideration"

And, really, the mother has some claims to consideration. Nature has so organized the family that the child must have the care and guidance of the mother for those years when the child is weak and the mother is strong. Nature has also provided that, as the mother's strength begins to wane, at the time when she grows tired of the burden of responsibility and detail, the daughter shall be full of enthusiasm and strength. She has come to her power, but that power has not been used and needs the guidance of experience. This is where the mother's wisdom fills out the lack on the daughter's part. Nature intended the one to be a complement of the other. The two belong together. A generation ago girls married when they were so young that the mother did not long have the assistance of each daughter, but there were usually several daughters, so that one took the place of another. Now daughters are fewer and life is more complicated. Outside demands and claims are indefinitely multiplied. So the mother stands alone and tries to substitute for the old companionship her club and her "board" and her "settlement." The daughter, too, is absorbed, through her early years, in study, and at the time her mother was settled and babies were filling her arms and heart the girl of today is graduating and making her debut. Then comes her career. She must have as long a list of philanthropic duties as her mother in addition to her social affairs, and the hours and days are crowded full, and the time for her mating comes and she goes off in a blaze of glory.

In the meanwhile, what about the hungry mother heart and the weary mother arms? When does the mother get her return for the care and love and anxiety she has been expending upon her daughter through all these years?

True Spring of Life Is in the Heart

There is a something which the girl owes to her mother, and which she gains, not loses, in giving. Strong bodies are good things, live intellects are admirable, but the true spring of life is in the human heart. The difference in age makes a beautiful fitting together of enthusiasm and experience, of freshness and that weariness which has grown tired of taking the initiative and carrying burdens, but which has not so exhausted its vitality that it cannot renew itself and take fresh enjoyment in the romance which is enacted before its eyes and confided to its sympathy. Girls cannot realize that their parts have been played before; that the old story is forever being enacted with new setting, but, after all, it is the same drama of human life. It comes as a surprise that her quiet, sedate mother has done these same things, has had these same heart flutters, and is not yet through with the great romance of her own life, and perhaps finds nothing so interesting as living once more these sweet experiences.

This is one way Nature takes to safeguard inexperience and, perhaps, reward the mothers. No method has been discovered in all the progress of science which does so much for the right development of the daughter as intimacy and cooperation with her mother.

As a people we have gone mad over specialization. We have not yet come to the time when one set of people shall be trained to eat, and another set to sleep, but we are trying hard to advance in that direction. In our very efforts to become correct and accurate we are becoming narrow and shallow. There is a sort of slogan, "Be broad in your culture," which throws dust in the eyes until it defeats its own object. That is not desirable broadness which spreads itself all over the universe until the layer is so thin it will not bear usage. We need to change our cry to "Depth rather than breadth," or at least, to preserve a proper relation in the two dimensions. There is no need among us today so great as a quiet spirit, and this cannot be maintained by rushing about and trying to do many things. More than any nation, we measure results by activity or by tangible effects, but the greatest things in life are neither material nor tangible. You cannot grasp sunshine, and you cannot take hold of and measure out air, any more than you can weigh and measure the influence of the quiet, brooding spirit which makes and is a home.

Duties Shared by Mother and Daughter

The quiet going about and fulfilling the daily duties which belong to the keeping of a restful home, shared in common by mother and daughter, are the very best preparation for life that a girl can have. Home is a miniature world, and its exigencies and demands are a training school for a larger sphere. Unfortunately the many years in school, and the school days which are wholly filled with duties not domestic, unfit the girl for an easy settling into the home sphere. There is nearly always a period of great restlessness if not of rebellion in the first years after a girl has come out of school. The new movement in cities which has resulted in putting courses in domestic science into the public schools may be a help in restoring an interest in domestic work, but even if it does, there will still be a period when the regular hours and routine of school life and prolonged absence from home unfit a girl temporarily for the normal life of a woman. Just how this is to be met is a problem. The education and training are too valuable to be omitted, but the cost is serious. It is a problem to be worked out by mother and daughter, and the results will be more satisfactory to each if they are worked out together.

Things Most Talked Of Not the More Important

One of the mistakes which are made frequently by women, young and old alike, is to think that the thing outside of the house, the affair which is talked of by a larger number of people, is the more important. Thoreau says in "Autumn": "Many people have a foolish way of talking about small things, and apologize for themselves or another as having attended to such, having neglected their ordinary business, and amused or instructed themselves by attending to small things, when if the truth were known, their ordinary business was the small thing, and almost their whole lives were misspent." This is especially true of the modern young woman. The detail of housekeeping seems too trivial to be worth while, and yet there has never been a time when such perfection of detail was exacted from the housekeeper, and when there was such opportunity for the display of art and skill or economic gifts. We have been told over and over, by sage and poet, that we cannot measure little and larger in human life, but still we go on measuring the value of our work or the attractiveness of life by the things we have, or the things we do.

There is no larger thing than the keeping of a peaceful, restful, helpful home. There is no more beautiful friendship than a comradeship between mother and daughter. And the mother should be the one who shall direct the channel in which that companionship expends itself. She has learned by that most thorough of all teachers, experience, and by the ripeness which age itself brings. Moreover, the girl's life is before her. Later on she can pick and choose. Now she must follow and learn. And when the years have slipped by and her own locks are touched with silver, she will realize something of what she has meant to her mother and in part what her mother has meant to her.

Bulgarian Presbyterian Tells of War

Paul Theodoroff, a young Bulgarian, was educated for the ministry in America, but returned to his home country about fifteen years ago and has been doing independent Christian work there, retaining his membership in Chicago Presbytery. He writes from Pleven that Bulgaria's poor people are paying heavily for the triumphs of her armies. With James Crossfield, an English Quaker, he has been visiting villages and distributing relief.

"Wherever we went," he writes, "we found great privation and suffering. In some cases we found that the father had been killed and the mother was left with several children and no means of support. We found some people living in houses almost under the ground. They had two divisions, in one of which lived the people and in the other a cow or a buffalo. We saw many women and children barefooted, underfed, with sunken eyes and scanty clothing. In one house we saw a lump of clay which the family use as a soap to wash their clothes. Many are without light and fuel most of the time and quite often go hungry to bed. Our government is helping some, but not enough to supply even the real need. There are many women who are willing to work and earn something, but nobody offers them work. Almost all the shops and stores are closed and business is entirely paralyzed.

"Poor old Macedonia is free now. The Turks in their retreat or flight burned many villages and killed hundreds of people irrespective of age. In the pockets of many dead Turks our soldiers found women's ears and fingers cut off with the rings on. As a nation we are paying an awful price for the freedom of Macedonia. Till the armistice we had about 75,000 killed and wounded. That number will perhaps be doubled before the war is over. In the hospitals of this city there were more than 2,000 sick soldiers. About a month ago 2,100 Turkish war prisoners were brought here. They are well cared for by the government.

"There is a great deal of suffering among the poor, and they are many. Just now as I am writing two women are weeping in our house. They beg for wood and flour. Yesterday five or six were at our house. I am sorry I can't do much for them."

Lost His Legs and His Opium

The way of the opium smuggler is proving hard, says a Kashing correspondent of The North China Herald. A few days ago an opium smoker, finding it difficult to get the drug and even more difficult to smoke it on the sly, after conference with friends decided to try his hand in Shanghai and see if he could not succeed in bringing out enough to last him and his friends for a time.

With no great difficulty he purchased about $100 worth of the crude drug. This he concealed about his person and started for the railway station in a rickshaw. It seems that the rickshaw man, perhaps in league with others, had spotted his man and by threats relieved him of $20 before he boarded the train. This so upset his equilibrium that he was pretty badly scared all the way to Kashing. Before getting into the station he decided it would be better to risk a jump from the train rather than be detected and arrested at the station. He accordingly jumped before the train had reached the platform and fell under the wheels. He was discovered by railway employees and brought to the Presbyterian hospital, where the surgeon had to take off both legs.

The same men who found him are supposed to have found the opium too. At any rate the poor fellow is minus both opium and legs. Before he leaves the hospital he will have broken off the opium habit, which will in some measure compensate him for his escapade and possibly save his head.

The Chinese government is weak and the country is divided on many questions, but the way in which the different sections are standing together and supporting the government in its fixed determination to get rid of opium augurs well for the future.

Liquor and Negro Crime

A southern journalist, writing in The Boston Transcript concerning the advance of the negro and the reduction of crime, says: "There is an intimate connection between prohibition and lynching in the South. It would, perhaps, be extravagant to say that prohibition was offered explicitly as a deterrent to lynching, for thousands of men who became ardent prohibitionists were never aware of the underlying reason for their demand. Those few who did comprehend the true purpose of the movement were not so much concerned over lynching as they were over the prevention of the initial crime that usually brings about the second one, both wrongs in most instances being attributable finally to strong drink. So true is it that prohibition was, and is, the inevitable consequence of negro crime that a person knowing nothing of the territorial status of prohibition now would be able to select, almost unerringly, the districts in which prohibition now exists."

In a southern city a colored man, Sam Jones by name, was on trial for felony. The judge asked Sam if he desired the appointment of a lawyer to defend him.

"No, sah," said Sam. "I'se gwine to throw myself on the ignorance of the cote."

THE HOME COUNCIL

Van Winkles of Today

By May Brown Loomis

The Van Winkle family by no means became extinct with the passing of "Rip." His descendants are today retarding progress and blocking the march of civilization with their sleepy acceptance of things as they are, and their lethargic indifference to things as they ought to be

IF RIP VAN WINKLE had the numerous progeny with which tradition credits him, it is not difficult to account for the number of sleepy people—who drowse their way through life in this, his native land. His children probably married other children of Sleepy Hollow and handed down from generation to generation of their descendants Rip's appreciation of a restful atmosphere. For though physically active as a nation, is not a mental sleepiness amounting to positive torpor, expressed in an obstinate determination not to think, one of our besetting sins?

"Wide awake" and "up to date" may rightly describe the progressive few, but somnolence and stagnation properly qualify the mental state of a large majority, whom, taken collectively, one thinks of as members of the Van Winkle family. For example, the rich man of a modern Sleepy Hollow expressed an attitude of mind shared by Van Winkles there and everywhere when he refused to give money for the building of a new schoolhouse to replace an ancient structure so ill-ventilated and poorly equipped that it was positively scandalous, because the old one had been "good enough for him when he was a boy!" Was he not to all intents and purposes asleep? Asleep to his opportunities for social service, to all the progress in educational lines made during the present generation, by which his own children and those of poorer neighbors had the right to profit? Yet his conduct met with quite general approval; only the few questioned its wisdom. What always had been "good enough" was good enough for them also!

Sleepy Parents Alienate Children

When this man's young son ran away from home to seek his fortune and a pretty daughter fled to the distant city, where she willingly took service as pastry cook in order to "keep awake and live," as she expressed it, this poor sleepy parent did not understand the reason. Neither did the majority of his neighbors. They yawned in unison, "Well, I swan, who would have thought it!" and let the matter drop. In twenty years they may rouse themselves, discovering, as did the founder of the Van Winkle family, that the children have grown away from them and are gone past recall. But one doubts even this late awakening, for their somnolence is profound.

Think of the men and women who declare that "woman's sphere is the home" (meaning thereby merely four walls and a roof rather than the home spirit which should penetrate everywhere, lightening all labor); are they not also asleep to modern conditions, industrial and social? If factories, huge bakeshops and palatial department stores have in the process of evolution supplanted home weaving, baking, brewing, dressmaking, tailoring, are not women crowded, driven, forced into different vocations, or at least called upon to carry on the same occupations under widely different conditions? Of course! Everybody outside the Van Winkle family sees this.

It proves the contention that these Vans have been and are almost as numberless as the sands of the sea, when people keep right on talking about the "good old days" as though we ever could go back to them, "good" as they were in their time. When the car of progress goes bumping and scraping up a hill of difficulty, leading to some much needed reform, it is because the recumbent forms of countless Van Winkles are slumbering right in the middle of the road.

Perhaps a great leader of the people appears before us to advocate new methods of advancement which would forward the true equality of humanity as a whole. The Vans immediately have the nightmare, groaning in their waking dreams, "A demagogue! Put him down and out!" A genuine Van Winkle is always suspicious of innovations. The stock family argument in favor of any line of conduct—social, political, religious—is, "I always have thought 'thus and so,' therefore I always will."

This strong spirit of conservatism often shows itself in trivial and amusing ways picturesquely illustrative of the Vans' trend of thought and action in graver matters. For years a prominent Van Winkle in the country invariably breakfasted at a quarter past 6, because a defunct member of her family, in the preceding generation, had been obliged to break his morning fast betimes in order to catch an early train to his office in the city.

Van Winkles Slaves to Custom

One Van's elder sister having died, the entire tea service was still memorially placed where it always had been when the elder sister poured tea and coffee for the family. The two surviving members continued to sit in their accustomed seats, which (happening to be at the farthest possible point from either cream or sugar) necessitated their pitching across the table whenever they wanted one or both, since no waitress was employed. Asked if the cream and sugar could not be put within more convenient range, the particular Van referred to replied with an air of pained perplexity, "Why, that is where they have always been."

It is not contended that such extreme examples of Van Winkleism on a material plane are illustrative of the conduct of every Van, because upon that plane many members of the family are sufficiently adaptable. The case cited, however, is far from being an isolated instance, and seems worth recording, since it is positively symbolic of the somnolent attitude of mind unrelentingly maintained by all the Vans. To them changes in the management of social affairs appear "frivolous"; industrially, ever "for the worse"; politically, innovations are characterized as "dangerous"; while in the realm of religion and theology, change, growth, expansion are branded as "heretical, devastating, deadly."

To think that there are numberless Vans who believe that our Father often in Bible times guided his saints and prophets through the medium of dreams, visions and kindred spiritual manifestations, but who would brand a modern saint or sinner as "a hideous mystic," should he or she venture to assert that life problems are still solved and souls saved through special personal guidance in private prayer! "Except ye be as little children" has no direct modern application for a Van Winkle. We must not allow ourselves to be led trustingly along in new paths, under any inspiration whatsoever. We must lie down and snore peacefully, each in his particular theological rut, until the last trump shall have been heard through all our dreams of used-to-be and we at last fall awake to the actual, the eternal, the new within the old.

How many are there among our acquaintances who really think broadly? How many of us could enumerate among personal friends more than a score of such bright spirits? Why is there so much spiritual stagnation and corruption social, political, religious, if we are not spiritually sleeping, however active upon a material plane?

Every Van of us needs a good shaking awake. We must be about our Father's business. No dulled vision ever accomplished anything for his kingdom, neither did any lethargic servitor ever know the full joy of the "good and faithful servant."

Martins Encouraged to Return

Early in April a purple martin flew into Illinois from the Isle of Pines and brought its flight to an end on the top of one of Joseph H. Dodson's bird houses in Evanston, according to The Chicago Tribune.

"Hoppie has come back!" exclaimed Mrs. Dodson.

"Looks more like Joey," hazarded Mr. Dodson, "from the white spot on the tip of the right wing. No," he added, "it's No. 4626. He is always first to arrive from the Southland. But the rest of the 200 will be in before long. They never have disappointed me in six years. I expect them to return to me for five summers more, unless they get killed on their long journeys."

For six summers 200 martins have returned to the Dodsons, who mark their birds with aluminum bands. In this way they are able to tell how many martins make their migrations in safety each year.

Mr. Dodson, who is a director of the Illinois Audubon Society, has interested many persons in luring martins back to their old haunts. He built a martin house that would hold 150. There were twenty-six rooms and corridors. Usually when a sparrow sees a martin enter a house he waits at the entrance for his prey to emerge. The new martin house permitted the prey to escape. When a martin learns he can return to a place in safety he brings a colony with him.

A sparrow trap is another one of Mr. Dodson's protections to martins. A trap will capture seventy-five sparrows an hour. It is made of three-quarter inch mesh wire, with two funnels. One funnel is bottomless and rests on the ground. The second, supplied with a bottom, is the trap. Grain is scattered on the ground and the sparrows are enticed into the funnel. In their fright the sparrows fly into the second funnel, which holds them prisoners until they are released to make "sparrow pie." The government sends out recipes for "sparrow pie" to encourage persons to exterminate the enemies of martins.

According to the report of the committee on wild life protection of the national conservation congress $420,100,000 in food values is lost to the United States because certain birds which prey upon damaging insects are destroyed each year.

The martins are destroyers of insect life. One purple martin is said to destroy 1,000 mosquitoes a day. A colony of martins can keep large orchards for miles around free from insects. Not many years ago there were few martins. They had been driven out entirely by the sparrows. Bird lovers look forward eagerly to their return in the spring, and cherish and protect them in every way they can, to encourage their coming back.

Wanted—New Brand of Hen

Abbie, the littlest girl of the family, was seated at the breakfast table one morning. As usual, eggs were served.

Either she was not hungry, says The Youth's Companion, or she had grown tired of the bill of fare, for very earnestly and soberly she remarked:

"I do wish hens would lay something besides eggs."

How About That "Fourth" Story?

May 15, you will remember, is the time limit on your 350-word story about how you spent a sane Fourth of July. Will those of you who have not already written kindly give the right hand of helpfulness to the editor by getting your stories in as soon as possible? By so doing you will minimize what bids fair to be an eleventh-hour rush.

YOUNG AMERICA

The Tree Toad That Went to School

BY FRANCES MARGARET FOX

HE WAS a tree toad, and a tree toad is, properly speaking, a frog. He was like the frogs because he had teeth in his upper jaw, and toads are toothless.

This little tree frog went to school by mistake. It happened to be a country school, so the children only laughed when he tumbled from the open window under the very noses of the third grade arithmetic class. They knew a tree frog when they saw him as well as they knew that two times two is four. Besides, this tree frog was an old friend who lived in the oak tree so close to the schoolhouse that Adam Bolton could touch the trunk of the tree by reaching his arm through the window. Adam Bolton was the biggest boy in school.

"Please, Miss West," said Jimmie Cooper, after waving his hand for permission to speak, "please, shall I take him back to the oak tree?"

Quick as a wink, when Jimmie stooped to pick it up, that tree toad leaped from his hand and hid beneath the recitation seat.

"The class will please come to order," said the teacher. She couldn't blame the children for laughing aloud at Jimmie Cooper's surprise.

"How much do you know about tree toads?" asked Miss West as Jimmie Cooper finally captured their visitor. "Bring him here, Jimmie, and let us see what he has to say for himself."

"His feet and hands are sticky," commented Jimmie Cooper, and again the class laughed.

Up went Bessie Brown's hand. "His toes are made that way on purpose," said she, "so he won't fall off branches of trees or wherever he happens to alight after he has made a flying leap. My father says he is a regular acrobat!"

"What more can anyone in school tell us about this little tree frog?" asked Miss West, as she examined the wee creature clinging with sticky toes to Jimmie Cooper's fingers. "He is about two inches long, his eyes are big, his head is short and broad, his body is plump. His feet and hands are webbed. He wears a star-shaped patch on his wrinkled back and a light spot under his eye. This much we may easily see. But what more do we know, children? Adam, you may tell us about the tree toad."

"He sleeps all winter in a hollow tree," said Adam, rising to his feet. "He will go to bed in September and he won't get up until late in the spring. Tree toads go to the pond to lay their eggs. I know something about tree toads, because we have a book at home that tells about them and I have hunted them up in the pond. It isn't easy to find their eggs. They are not laid in strings, like toads' eggs, but you find them in bunches sticking on the stems of water grass. They hatch in three days. Tree toads are tadpoles at first, with tails and no legs. You might think they were little fishes. They live in the water about seven weeks before they turn into toads, with arms and legs and no tail."

"What do you know, Ellen?" asked Miss West, as a little girl in the back seat near the stove began waving her arm in the air almost before Adam sat down.

"I—I know they change color!" she exclaimed. "They are green at first and then they change to gray, or gray and green. If they are on an old fence they will turn into the color of that fence; but if they are on a brownish-black tree trunk they turn into that color. My father says that is what is called protective coloring, so the tree toad can safely play "hide" in plain sight. I think that is wonderful! If our tree toad hadn't been teetering around on the window sill until he fell off, I don't believe we could have seen him even there."

The little toad straightway winked and blinked, as much as to say, "Yes, true, true!"

"Jimmie, you would better carry our little friend back to his home," suggested Miss West. "He must be getting hungry."

When Jimmie, grinning from ear to ear, had carried the tree toad back to his own doorstep in the hollow tree Miss West allowed Jimmie Allen to tell what he knew of their visitor's food.

"He—he eats spiders and beetles," declared Jimmie Allen.

"And caterpillars and tree crickets and ants and plant lice," ventured a little girl. "And flies," she added.

"I know something!" offered Jimmie Cooper. "He goes hunting at night—my mother says that is when he does the most good. And she says, too, that the reason tree toads sing so loud before it rains is because they like damp weather. And we ought to take care of tree toads because they do so much good in the garden."

"All in favor of being kind to tree toads please stand!" suggested Miss West.

Instantly every child in that country schoolroom stood; but it made no difference in the behavior of the lumpy little toad in the hollow tree, because he never visited school again, not even by accident.

Just Where the Cake Was

When Tommy's mother went to get the cake for tea she found that a wedge-shaped chunk had been cut out.

"Thomas," she said severely, "someone has taken a big piece of ginger cake out of the pantry."

Tommy blushed guiltily.

"Oh, Thomas," she exclaimed, "I didn't think it was in you!"

"'Tisn't all," protested Tommy; "part of it's in Elsie."

Do You Know Better?

New York's public schools have about as many queer errors in their examination papers as other schools. The principal of one of the schools is having fun with his class over the three following mistakes they made in a recent examination:

"Grace Darling was a light housekeeper."
"There are five continents—a, e, I, o and u."
"A centipede is a French measure of length."

My Vacation Outing at Rock Beach

A Fine Place on a Hot Day

AS SUMMER approaches, boys and girls, and many grown-ups, look forward to vacation time. In hot weather everyone anticipates an opportunity to rest and cool himself.

I have thought many times about other people and their summer outings, wondering if they were having as fine a time as I.

Last year, strange to say, I began my vacation in the hospital. I was taken there June 12 for an operation, just before the last week in school, and, of course, missed my examinations. However, by the 25th I had recovered enough to return to my home and was able to be about the house.

I enjoyed a glorious Fourth, and on July 5 our family, all but my older sister, moved to Rock Beach, Lake Ontario. She had previously gone to camp in the Berkshire hills.

Lake Ontario is about seven miles from our home in Rochester, and Rock Beach is a small place on the lake. It includes a number of beautiful summer homes.

We boarded for about six weeks at a cottage which was surrounded by beautiful, well kept grounds, and had nearly 600 feet frontage on the lake.

The sandy beach in front of the cottage afforded a fine bathing place, which we greatly enjoyed on the hot days; in fact, we felt as though we had missed part of the day's program if we did not have a plunge. Most anyone likes to be by the water, whether it be a large body or a small stream.

This opportunity would seem like a dream to the people who suffer with the heat in the large crowded cities every year, and who are striving to keep alive with what means they have. Many boys have to start to work just as soon as school closes for the summer.

One sitting on the veranda of the cottage at which we stayed would have the impression of being on a steamer; up so high, overlooking the long, picturesque terraces.

Looking to the left, through the willows and oaks, a sunken garden was visible. The rippling waters of a small brook spread, encircled this garden, and came together in a pleasing way to pass under a bridge into the lake.

At the right of the cottage, hiding the trunks of the trees in the lowland beyond, was a broad level lawn where many others and I played games of croquet or baseball to pass away the time.

I have a 2-year-old brother who is more or less venturesome, very mischievous and usually jumps at his first conclusion. While we were at the lake he had the misfortune to get wet twice unexpectedly. One time he had his bathing suit on and fell off the pier into the water, which was over his head, and my younger sister, who was near by, saw him. She rushed to him and pulled him out, breathless but unhurt. The second time he had all of his clothes on and fell a distance of six feet into about a foot of water. He was standing up against the small harbor wall, crying at the top of his voice, when I reached him and brought him up to the house. Although he was dripping wet, I was surprised that he was not injured by his fall.

It is rather dangerous to go into deep water, but I liked to swim out to the sandbars, which were formed by the action of the waves. The water between them ranged anywhere from five to eight feet deep, and on the third bar the water was barely above my knees. This was surprising.

I enjoyed rowing around in the rowboat, but never had a chance to ride in the canoe that belonged to the cottage. The people in the second cottage from us had a launch which I had the privilege of riding in several times.

Here's Where We Boarded

There was a girl in the family about my age with whom I had many a good time.

After having such a joyful vacation and playing nearly all of the time, I found it very hard to settle down to hard study in school.

Allan Beebe Draper (age 15).
Rochester, N. Y.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

May 11, 1913—Joseph Made Ruler of Egypt

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 41:1-45. Golden Text, I. Peter 5:5: God . . . giveth grace to the humble.

Joseph was a dreamer, but his own dreams were the last to come true. He believed in them, however, because he believed that they came from God. The fact that their fulfillment seemed impossible weakened in no respect his grasp upon the future. No one ever had more reason to doubt the probability of his own dreams than he. For years the memory of his brothers' sheaves bowing to his must have haunted him like a shadow, but its realization seemed far away. His brothers were becoming more and more powerful back in the land of Canaan, while he was a captive, by turns a slave and a prisoner. But in spite of this his conviction remained unshaken that God still held an interest in him.

Secret of Joseph's Success His Unwavering Faith in God

The secret of Joseph's success was not so much his ability to interpret dreams as it was his ability to believe God, and to believe him in the face of every disheartening circumstance. A single moment of distrust at a critical moment might have wrought his ruin. He might have said to his fellow prisoners: "Your dreams are interesting, but dismiss them. They are only a night fantasy that means nothing. I, too, had a dream once and for a time was foolish enough to accept it as an assurance of success, but it has proved just the contrary." True as that statement would have been, such an attitude would have closed the future against him. Unbelief is the death of hope. Joseph believed that God had been the inspiration of his dream. He believed in the dream because he believed in God.

Sometimes we become discouraged. God's promises seem to us as mere dreams. Faith dies, and with it all incentive to prayer or work. The most pitiful object on earth is a discouraged man—one whose early dreams have been shattered and to whom God means nothing. But Joseph hoped on. There was no dungeon so dark as to obliterate the light of faith.

After Joseph had been in prison two more years Pharaoh had two dreams that disturbed him. He called for the magicians, but they failed to interpret them. These magicians belonged to the Egyptian priesthood and were regarded with great reverence by the people. That they should have failed in their dream interpretations was not strange. Those dreams were in a sense a revelation. They were God inspired and as such could be read only in the light of faith. What God writes, whether upon the wall or in a book, only the Daniel spirit can understand. This is a requisite still.

Jew Superior to Egyptian in Possessing Knowledge of One God

The magicians doubtless knew more than did Joseph. Egypt had a literature and theology far in advance of the other nations of earth. Her systems of immortality and of judgment contained many a primitive truth, but a Jewish prisoner knew what no Egyptian had ever learned—the one God. That one fact gave Israel her prominence among the nations of the world. The Jew was vastly inferior to the Egyptian save in this.

But Pharaoh, in spite of his wise men, remained troubled, until by a strange coincidence his chief butler was reminded that two years before Joseph had interpreted two dreams, one for him and the other for the chief baker. "I do remember my fault this day," was his salutation to the king. His fault could not have been ingratitude, for that under the circumstances would have been impossible. It was the offense committed against the king. Pharaoh was a wise man. He wanted a solution of his perplexity regardless of the source from which it might come. Necessity knows no rank, and a great king sits at the feet of a Hebrew slave.

Joseph's preparation to come before Pharaoh was an expression of his usual good judgment. He shaved himself. Shaving was an Egyptian custom, but an abomination to the Jew. Small things are often most honored in being set aside, for life is largely a matter of concessions. The reception on the part of Pharaoh was natural. He had heard it said of Joseph that he could understand a dream to interpret it. But Joseph disclaimed the power as being his own. He had, he said, no power apart from God.

Through this power the dream was easily interpreted. Pharaoh was convinced, because the interpretation seemed rational. Revelation always appeals to our reason when we recognize, as did Joseph, that it comes from God.

Practice of Economy During Prosperity May Mean Safety During Famine

Joseph's interpretations involved one of the commonest lessons of life. There is a period of plenty in most lives, and also one of famine. The economy during the one is the salvation of the other. Poverty is too often the result of negligence. The famine was not provided against when the kine were feeding in the meadow. Considering always the possibility of ill health or reverses, everyone at the beginning of his independent life should make it a rule to live within his income. It may require many a sacrifice, but in youth the yoke is easily borne. A little storehouse in the form of life insurance or savings fund will become rich treasure when the kine begin to eat each other. It is not a question of salary so much as it is of wisdom. Salaries, large and small, are of equal size when both are gone. Many preach a gospel of improvidence on the expectation that God will provide, but Joseph gave no such counsel. Plenty and want are likely to follow each other in close procession, and Egypt is the world.

Joseph's dreams at last found their fulfillment. The sun, moon and stars grouped themselves about him, and the sheaves of the field bowed low in his presence. God saw that he was worthy. It was an illustration of cause and effect.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—God can use even the superstition of a ruler for the good of his people. Prudence is an essential of piety. Salvation is not to be expected as a matter of haphazard, but of intelligent foresight. Happy is the man who is chosen of God to carry out redemptive purposes.

Nothing shows the dependence of man upon a power outside himself as does a famine. And where failure succeeds failure, as even now occasionally happens in India or parts of China, density of population increases the distress.

In the first part of this chapter we have the story of Pharaoh's dream. In a slightly changed form the dream was repeated (v. 5), so that it made a deep impression upon his mind (v. 8). Egypt was a land of fortune tellers, and the interpretation of dreams was considered an important branch of business. This custom of the people was used of God for the welfare of the land, and especially for the salvation of Jacob's race (ch. 42:1-2). The extreme anxiety of the ruler reminded his chief butler how he had himself been helped by the interpretation of a dream (vs. 12-13). Thus in the providence of God the seeming neglect (ch. 40:23) brought Joseph into close touch with a language and people of the land and at the same time brought him to the notice of its ruler (v. 14).

The interpretation of the dream seems to us so natural that it appears strange it should not have occurred to others. But so do all events when they become history. The most improbable prophecy we regard as perfectly natural when fulfilled. Undoubtedly the events yet to transpire, by which the triumphs of the gospel shall fill the earth, will seem just as natural after they have become history.

"A Prudent Man Foreseeth the Evil and Hideth Himself"

Verses 25-26—Every fortune has its flow and its ebb. Every man has his hour of opportunity. Every bankrupt can remember good years when he might have acquired a competence for life. And this not by prophetic vision but by ordinary prudence. The vast growth of our savings banks shows that men are at last coming to lay this truth to heart. Despite the rise in cost of living, the savings banks continue to receive a vast portion of the national wealth, because a people naturally provident has at last learned that "good years" are the years in which to gather into storehouses against the evil days which may come.

Verses 27-30—When we look back over the century just past we find in our own country an alternation of "fat" and "lean" years. In 1836, as one writer has put it, "every man in America bought everything offered to him and could sell anything he wished to dispose of." But in 1837 "nobody could sell a thing or collect a dollar." Twenty years later the experience was repeated. In 1873 and 1893 the states had similar panics, and we missed a repetition in 1907 by a hair's breadth. Even in a land where an absolute failure of the crops has never been known financial ruin has followed financial prosperity, as it did in Pharaoh's dream.

Spiritual Life as Well as Physical Has Its "Lean Years"

But the lesson we wish to press home in the Sunday school is that similar ebbs and flows are known in the spiritual life. Every man in Christian lands has his "good years" in which he may become "rich toward God" (Luke 12:21). Many a man in his old age looks back with mournful eyes upon his spiritual past and says to himself, "I had my opportunity to lay up treasures where they would have been available today. But I did not do it and my 'lean years' give me no opportunity even to relieve my soul's gnawing hunger now. I had once a father's godly counsel, a mother's prayers, a pastor's entreaty, but they have all gone, and I am left in my old age spiritually bankrupt, penniless and famished for the bread of life." The Sunday school years are the "good years," and happy he who uses the opportunity of youth to provide spiritual wealth for his age to enjoy.

Verses 33-36—The famine was still seven years away, but provision to meet it began immediately, and saving activities were organized under wise counsel. A careless, indifferent or pleasure-loving ruler would have said, "Seven years? Six years from now we will think about it." That is the way young people often reply to those who urge immediate acceptance of the Lord. "What, prepare for the next world now when this world is so bright and its pleasures so abundant? I have health, I have youth, I have friends, I have a happy home. This is no time in which to think of what may come in old age." But on the contrary this is just the time. The cares of life do not distract the mind, the weakening of the physical powers has not begun to cause mental depression. The day Pharaoh realized that a famine was coming, however far removed, that day he began preparations to meet it.

These preparations were elaborate, carefully thought out and persistently executed. They were put under the supervision of the man who had the gift of vision (v. 40). Pharaoh did not accept advice from a man of God and turn over the execution of it to a "grafter" of the court, a man of the world. He put the defense of his country into the hands of the man who had foretold its peril.

Happy He Whom God Chooses to Be His Agent

Verse 40—Joseph had good stuff in him, but better than this, he had the grace of God in his soul. Jacob, although not actually impoverished by the famine, had suffered the pinch of adversity, and except for the provision which Egypt had stored against the day of want, he was likely to lose all (ch. 42:2). It was one of the youngest of his sons, supposed to have perished, who was chosen of God to bring salvation. So in a later time the son of a slave led Israel out of the land which had become a land of bondage (Ex. 2:5-10). So from time to time God has revealed his sovereign choice, bringing down the mighty and lifting up the humble. The greatest of our Presidents after Washington was born in a log cabin and reared in the most humble circumstances. No one of us knows but that in the providence of God he may, like Esther, come into power for the redemption of multitudes from threatened ill.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning May 4, 1913

HOME MISSION TOPIC—Spanish Americans—Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexican borders.

Cuba is the largest and most populous of the West India islands. It lies directly in front of the Gulf of Mexico and divides the entrance into two parts. The island in 730 miles long and 160 miles wide at its greatest measurement. Monte Torquino (8,320 feet) in the province of Santiago is its highest point. There are many ravines filled with torrential streams and beautiful cascades in the rainy season, which are dry during the summer. The soil is rich and fertile. Columbus was so impressed by the beauty of the country and the excellence of its climate that he could scarcely find words effusive enough for its description.

—

According to the census of 1907 Cuba has a population of 2,048,980. The city of Havana alone contains 297,159 souls. The increase has been very rapid during the past ten years.

—

Cuba's early history was wholly Spanish. In the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries it was the base of activity of English and French pirates. The government of Spain held it again from 1764 to 1899, with many vicissitudes of rule, with rebellions, massacres in civil war and occasional interventions on the part of the United States. American military rule lasted from Jan. 1, 1899, to May 20, 1902, when the first Cuban congress assumed control. Since that time there has been a native government, which is even yet none too stable. Cuban politicians find it hard to be defeated at the polls without resorting to bayonets.

—

The religion of the people is generally Roman Catholic, but here, as elsewhere in Spanish America, the church has ministered to priestcraft and superstition rather than to moral and spiritual life. The Sabbath is much the worst of all days of the week. Gambling, cock-fighting and sensuality have every license. And in the character of the people are deeply ingrained the vices of dishonesty, falsehood, instability and insincerity. The Roman Church stands convicted of the guilt of utter indifference to the higher needs of the people. She has lifted no voice of protest against the violation of the laws of God. Where the male population is no longer controlled by the church it is in antagonism to the church, and in consequence, to all churches and all religion. The illiteracy of the people, not more than 20 per cent of whom can read at all, interposes a great barrier to the regeneration of the nation.

—

Because of the close connection of Cuba, Porto Rico and the United States the missionary work in these two fields has been taken over by the Home Mission Board. In Cuba J. Milton Greene, D. D., has been the efficient superintendent of the work. The whole mission contains fifteen ministers, of whom two are Americans, two Englishmen, six Cubans and five Spaniards, four of the last named being ex-priests. There are six additional helpers, three of whom are Cubans and three Spaniards. Most of the chapels are rented rooms. The physical equipment is entirely inadequate, especially when one remembers the magnificence of the Roman churches to which the people are accustomed.

—

The numerical results of our more than ten years' work in Cuba are briefly summarized as follows: Seventeen organized churches with nineteen outstations, cared for by fourteen ministers, of whom only three are English-speaking, and having a total membership of 1,247 (report of the board, 1912).

—

Porto Rico (Rich Harbor) is the most easterly island of the Greater Antilles and belongs to the United States, to which it was ceded by the treaty of Paris of 1898. It is considered to have great strategical importance. It is about 100 miles from east to west and forty miles from north to south. The backbone of the island is a range of mountains varying from 2,000 to 3,750 feet in height. The climate is salubrious. The majority of the people are occupied in agriculture.

The census of 1910 returned the population of Porto Rico as 1,118,012. The moral condition may be estimated from the fact that in 1899 only 16.6 per cent of the population were married people. The Roman Catholic is the predominant church, and the bishopric of Porto Rico, which was established in 1512, is one of the oldest in the western hemisphere.

—

Spain's misrule and the church's indifference to all the needs of the higher life of the people have been responsible for the existence of the gravest conditions that both our government and our church have to face today. A great majority of the population have been suffering from tropical anæmia, and a large proportion from tuberculosis. The Presbyterian mission hospital in Porto Rico has been bringing new life and hope to thousands who were otherwise without hope. Determined effort is being made to stamp out entirely the dread diseases. Education is still the greatest need of the island. The attendance in the public schools has risen from 22,065 on Jan. 1, 1898, to not less than 100,000 at the present time. But there are still possibly 300,000 children without school facilities.

The Protestant churches have made a careful distribution of the field among the several denominations engaged. All lines of work are followed—medical, educational and evangelistic. One important feature of our policy there has been the planting of chapels in the outlying districts, which have been hitherto unreached by any religious organization. The Roman cathedrals and churches have been placed chiefly in the large centers of population.

—

During the past year our Home Board has established a new department of Spanish work in the United States. This work specifically covers the states of California, Arizona, New Mexico, Texas and Colorado. It is under the superintendency of Robert McLean, D. D., who has had a long experience of service among Spanish people in Porto Rico and elsewhere. The people of eastern America do not generally realize how many Spanish-speaking people there are in this country. We have probably a million Spanish-speaking people within our borders, and the number is rapidly increasing. There are almost 300,000 Mexicans in Texas alone.

—

There is now projected a Spanish department in connection with the San Francisco Theological Seminary. It will be a glad day for our church when the young Spanish missionaries go forth from our halls in the reverse direction from the Franciscan fathers, planting a new line of Spanish missions from San Francisco southward and eastward into Mexico and kindling for their own countrymen lights of truth and love and leading.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

May 11, 1913

THE WAR FOR MANSOUL

TOPIC—"Love not the world." I. John 2:15-25.

Jaded faces are common on the city's streets. World-weary eyes look out on us from countenances that are cold and hard. They betray blase and sated spirits, which have drunk deep of the cup of pleasure and have not found it good at the last. If the school of observation were as effective as the school of experience, youth could learn a great lesson merely by watching the passing show of life. Clearly, the persons who have devoted themselves most assiduously to the pursuit of worldly gratifications do not show the traces of satisfaction in their faces or manners. Omitting consideration of the extreme cases of the tragic figures of the roues, broken in body and mind and spirit, and considering only the more common cases of the multitude of men and women whose pursuit of material pleasures has been entirely respectable, and free from gross sin, we find that the manifest evidence, after full and ripe experience of worldliness, is that it does not satisfy. Love of the world does not create fullness and richness and content of life. Judged even by its own standards, materialism does not pay. Worldliness fails to satisfy. On that point the evidence is clear.

—

Because man is more than a mere physical body, any sort of pleasure which does not take the spirit into account fails of pleasure's full purpose.

—

They who live for the minute are preparing poorly for eternity.

—

One of the dramatic pictures of human life to which experience gives assent represents two natures struggling for supremacy in every breast. This is the eternal war for the possession of the citadel of Mansoul. Everybody has a baser self which would dominate if it could. This lower nature would gratify every one of its desires without restraint. It would do as it pleased. Ease, luxury, pride, appetite, all would be given free rein. But there is another self in every one of us; a more or less robust spiritual-mindedness, which cries the slogan, "I keep my body under." This higher nature sets its affections upon things above. It has the wisdom to perceive that to be carnally minded is death. The unrestrained gratification of the natural impulses means, by every law, deterioration of character. The strong, the symmetrical and the ever-growing lives are those which yield obedience to this higher self. Only man's better nature can make a better man. In the fullest possible meaning of the words, "To be spiritually minded is life."

—

One sound indictment of mere worldly pleasures is that they do not last. A man's pleasure in a spree is all gone the next morning; but a man's pleasure in his family, or in a book, or in a friendship, or in a noble service, is abiding. The delight of surpassing a neighbor in dress or in house or in entertainment—at best a dubious joy—lives but an hour. The charge which the Book of highest philosophy makes against merely material pleasures is that they do not last. They pass away in the using, leaving oftentimes a scar in their wake. But whatsoever is spiritual abides forever.

—

The "great white way" of Broadway is one type of pleasure. It consists in seeing and in being seen. Glare and glitter, "smartness" rather than wisdom; conformity to modes rather than knowledge of the long stretches of time and appreciation of eternity—these are the standards of the "great white way," which is by no means the way of the white life.

—

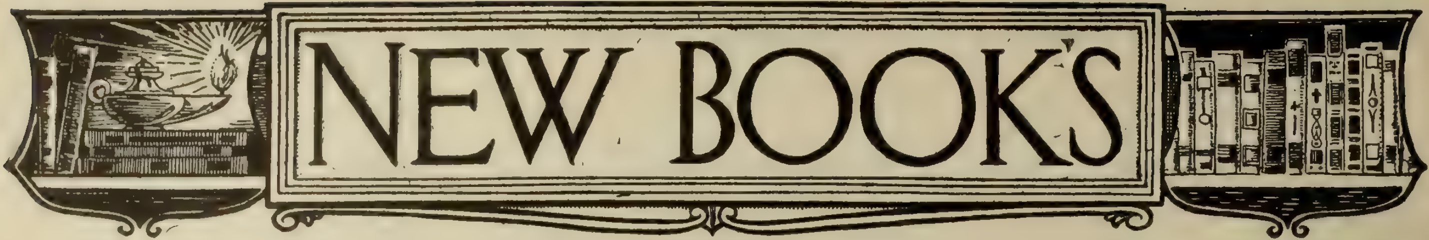
Simeon Stylites, on top of his sixty-foot pillar, from which he did not descend for thirty years, is one type of unworldliness which we have outgrown. This idea of asceticism as characteristic of Christianity is no longer entertained by any except the most ignorant. Unworldliness is not monasticism. We take as our example today not the recluses and hermits of the early Christian centuries or of the middle ages but the well rounded, normal life of Jesus, who spent all his days close to people. The secret of not loving the world is in loving Christ. He is our Model as well as our Teacher.

—

"Closest to men, thou pitying Son of man,
And thrilled from crown to foot with fellowship,
Yet most apart and strange, lonely as God—
Dwell in my heart, remote and intimate One!
Brother of all the world, I come to thee!"
—Frederic Lawrence Knowles.

—

This world is good. God made it, and for man's use. He meant that his children should take delight in the sphere in which he has placed them. Nobody can enjoy the world so truly as those who know it as God's world, and love the Maker. There is a sense in which love of the world is ennobling and beautiful. All who so love the world love God more. When he is put first, all other relationships fall naturally into their rightful place.



NEW BOOKS

A Summary of Spring Fiction

Novels That Are Being Talked About

Jean-Christophe: Journey's End — Love and Friendship; The Burning Bush; The New Dawn, by Romain Rolland; translated from the French by Gilbert Canaan. In a world that is sometimes dull or stupid it has been one of the joyous adventures of the last three years to pursue the "Jean-Christophe" trilogy, the last volume of which has just been published. It is difficult for the reviewer, who had an enormous interest in the first two volumes, to restrain an unbounded enthusiasm for this last one, which, as is fitting, stands out the biggest of the three. As many readers know, the novel is the life-story of a German musician, following in some respects the general outlines of Wagner's career. It is impossible to go into its narrative or to more than hint at the elaborate repast it offers the philosopher, the musician, the humanitarian or the critic. M. Rolland has been universally credited with having produced a masterpiece; also, the critical charge brought most generally against him is that of formlessness. But while we agree in the first judgment we are inclined to resent the second. To dwell upon the fact that the bulk of "Jean-Christophe" imposes a violation of fictional tradition is not important—comparatively. The thing of enormous importance is this—M. Rolland is a great specialist in psychology; may he not even be outstripping Meredith in his own field? [Henry Holt and Company, New York. $1.50 net.

Comrade Yetta, by Albert Edwards. The man who wrote a striking novel last fall called "A Man's World" now offers a new one which might fittingly be entitled "A Woman's World." It is really a cross section of present-day life reviewed from the varying standpoints of several women, and two or three men; but its outstanding character, Yetta Rayefsky, is a little Russian Jewess who is brought to America in her early childhood. Upon her father's death Yetta serves a term of labor in the sweatshops, is rescued from the plottings of a white slave cadet, enlists in a woman's trade union league, becomes a prominent figure in the labor strikes, and is invited to join the staff of one of the big daily papers. The whole thing is intensely interesting and is written with an extraordinary facility. The story of Yetta's advancement may seem a little too miraculous to be convincing—though we have been told that it is based upon facts; but, however that may be, Mr. Edwards convinces one beyond any doubt that he has seen life at close quarters, and he is making beautiful use of his knowledge in books that must be classified as vital and moving. It is important to know Albert Edwards. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.35 net.

The Heart of the Hills, by John Fox, Jr., is a story of youth—of its indomitable pluck and patience throughout a long, hard fight for supremacy in the heart of the Kentucky mountains. The climax in the political storm which culminates in the Goebel murder is only of feeble interest, and the one weak spot in an otherwise strong and delightful book. As his readers already know, Mr. Fox writes most vividly and convincingly of the mountain folk and their country. Perhaps the author's highest mission as a writer of vigorous fiction is to demonstrate the fact, long insisted upon by those who work for the betterment of the mountaineer, that the seed of the blue grass, given its chance, is capable of bringing better returns to the world than merely an ancient inherited savagery. [Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $1.35 net.

The Road of Living Men, by Will Levington Comfort. A friend once wrote Mr. Comfort: "Do us just a story—a story so sheer and calling that one by one we shall steal away from the world's company, as if we heard our lover's whistle out among the trees. . . . Just the writing and the art of it, so that we may sink forty fathoms down." And Mr. Comfort has answered that request in terms of blazing beauty; his story is as fresh as if the art of romantic writing began only today; and yet it is compounded of the subtleties that belong to ancient arts. Besides, the individuality of the man is a thing to marvel at. He uses English in a quite new way; his words seem to overreach the usual limitations of language. That is, they are so selected and arranged as to appear new things. The scene is laid first in China, then in Long island and later in South America. [J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. $1.25 net.

Widecombe Fair, by Eden Phillpotts. With this volume ends Mr. Phillpotts's "modest comedy of Dartmoor" which he began more than twenty years ago. Pitched in a lighter key than most of the other stories in the series, this one may attract those readers who have been repelled by what they are pleased to call Mr. Phillpotts's "gloom." It is insulting to pay this author perfunctory tributes—his work is too magnificent; and this "comedie humaine" is one of the biggest achievements in contemporary literature. [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.35 net.

The Invaders, by Frances Newton Symmes Allen, is the kind of book that falls at once into the category of "Read without delay; you can't help loving it." The "invaders" are the Irish and Poles who hold the mortgages on the old estates of a once wealthy New England village; and their final acceptance, socially, by the aristocrats of the town is the gist of the story. There is as much charm in the portrayal of the poetic foreigners as though their creator were a poet instead of a novelist. She may be both. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1.30.

The Burden of Woman, Elementary Jane and Jezebel, by Richard Pryce. Each of Mr. Pryce's books is about a woman—the first a noble character who has been betrayed by her lover, the second a plucky, steadfast girl who carries her high principles into her stage life and the third a strikingly original young person who restores to her family its untarnished reputation. This English novelist is full of delights and surprises. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. Each $1.35 net.

One Woman's Life, by Robert Herrick. As usual, Mr. Herrick is concerned with tracing the life of a woman whose social ambitions cost her husband his freedom, his personal achievement and almost his personality. In this case he is fair both to his woman and his man, instead of sacrificing the truth of either to prove his point. There is good work in this novel; it is far superior to Mr. Herrick's last one, "The Healer." [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.35 net.

The Amateur Gentleman, by Jeffery Farnol. England in the early nineteenth century is the scene of the new romance by the author of the popular "Broad Highway." The hero is a farmer's son who learns to be a "gentleman"; the heroine is a lady of rank and charm; and their love story is full of difficulties and glories far beyond normal romantic demands. [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.40 net.

Stella Maris, by William J. Locke. The usual adjectives will not do justice to Mr. Locke's new book, which has a world of loveliness in it. For years little Stella Maris (Star of the Sea) is an invalid, and then, with her recovery, is loved by two great and good men. [John Lane Company, New York. $1.35 net.

The Parasite, by Helen Reiminsnyder Martin. This book will hold the reader's attention because the subject and the author's treatment of it are unusual. Quiet, unobtrusive Joan Laird, hanging on desperately to her place in the social scale, just to please her mother—her only hope of escape being a wealthy marriage—attracts the attention of Judge Randall through her devotion to his son. The judge is wealthy, famous and much sought after, though divorced from his wife, and he determines to offer Joan the nominal position of wife in return for her devotion. Joan accepts, and the quiet dignity with which she fills her position, the poise and self-reliance which have become part of her since she is no longer a tolerated dependent, win the admiration and love of the judge, and the story proceeds to a happy ending. [J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. $1.35 net.

The Judgment House, by Gilbert Parker. It is interesting to read an author's statements about his own work. In a preface somewhere Sir Gilbert writes: "This at least can be said of all my books, that not a page of them has ever been written to order, and there is not a story published in all the pages bearing my name which does not represent two or three other stories rejected by myself." His new novel is of the modern problematic type, dealing with a vain, flowerlike Englishwoman and the three or four men she draws within her coils. The scene shifts between London and South Africa, and the reading is engrossing though not always pleasant. [Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $1.35 net.

The Combined Maze, by May Sinclair. Ranny Ransome, stern in his resolve never to become "weedy" or "flabby" (after the manner of his forbears), develops into a beautiful physical specimen through years of systematic training and decent living. The powers of the universe seem within his grasp, when suddenly he falls in love with the wrong woman and marries her. He recognizes the right woman too late, and both he and she fight their battle of denial with a fortitude that seems almost destructive. Miss Sinclair appears rather exaggerative at times, instead of showing the steady hand that controls most of her other work. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.35 net.

New Leaf Mills, by William Dean Howells. Another of Mr. Howells's interesting stories. It is dated sixty years ago in the Middle West, where Mr. Howells himself grew up, and is the story of a "new church" man, who rejected the usual notion of hell and the personal devil, and so was somewhat out of favor with his neighborhood. He and his brothers decided to establish a communistic colony, according to the principles of Robert Owen. Mr. Howells tells how the whole came to grief. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.50 net.

The Happy Warrior, by A. S. M. Hutchinson, is an English novel of great charm that has run into several editions since its publication. It exhibits the art of romantic fiction at its best, and is marked by a distinctive craftsmanship. [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

Short Stories

The Nest, by Anne Douglas Sedgwick. The author of "Tante" offers several stories here, including the very first one she ever wrote, as well as some of her latest. Each of them is built around a little group of cultivated people and is shot through and through with the subtleties inherent in their—shall we say it?—hothouse existences. They are amazingly clever stories; they belong to the world of Mrs. Wharton, though they reflect an art quite their own. [Century Company, New York. $1.25.

Seven Scots Stories, by Jane H. Findlater. Miss Findlater's short story art is well known to magazine readers, and this collection of Scotch tales is representative of her best work. There is a delicious one called "The Bairn-Keeper"—a wistful story of a child who assumes all the responsibilities of motherhood and then rebelliously resumes her childhood. [E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. $1.35.

The Night-Born, by Jack London. A collection of ten short stories in the characteristic London style. There is a great deal of blood in them, and yet there are some excellent strokes of character painting. It is all very realistic and we have no doubt that the stories will be widely read. Most of them have been published heretofore in the magazines. [Century Company, New York. $1.25 net.

Poor Dear Margaret Kirby, by Kathleen Norris. A collection of eighteen short stories by the author of "Mother" and "The Rich Mrs. Burgoyne." Every story is sweet spirited and worthy of the succession into which it has come. It is one of the best books of the season and deserves the welcome it is sure to receive. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.

'Twixt Land and Sea, by Joseph Conrad. The three stories in this volume are all of the tropics and are all done with a big sense of power. Mr. Conrad's talent is very definitely identified with the elements—particularly the large landscapes of sea and sky; and his human figures share the bigness of his landscapes. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.25.

Roast Beef Medium, by Edna Ferber, relates the business adventures of that wholly original character, Mrs. Emma McChesney. Her son Jack learns to make a man of himself by sharing some of her difficult experiences "on the road"—and there are other interesting developments. [Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. $1.20 net.

The Adventures of Miss Gregory, by Perceval Gibbon. Miss Gregory is the kind of woman one rejoices to know. She is 50; she is fearless, frank, funny and fascinating; and she has the most absorbing adventures. Mr. Gibbon deserves a hearty thank offering for having created her. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $1.35.

The Checker Board, by Sybil Grant. The author is the earl of Rosebery's daughter, and her skill with the short story form, added to her wide choice of subject, shows her to be a woman of wisdom both in literature and in life. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.20 net.

In Lighter Vein

Stephen March's Way, by Harry Herbert Knibbs. This story of love and adventure and woodcraft is laid in the northern forests and moves with a steady, virile swing that grips the reader's interest. A fine old logging boss makes a justifiable assault upon a sneak who is illicitly furnishing whisky to the logging crew; and then begins the excitement. [Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

The Impossible Boy, by Nina Wilcox Putnam. As a boy Pedro is impossible—because he happens to be a girl. Disguised, this unconventional young woman goes to the city to become an artist; and then love appears to interfere with her plans. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.35 net.

Tackling Matrimony, by George Lee Burton. A wealthy girl marries the poor man she loves and proves that marriage can be happy without any luxuries save those of love and understanding. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1 net.

The Case of Jennie Brice, by Mary Roberts Rinehart, tells of some mysterious happenings during a great flood. Not so pleasant as some of Mrs. Rinehart's former stories. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1 net.

The Mystery of Barranca, by Herman Whitaker. Love and fighting in Mexico, the hero an American engineer, the heroine a hot-blooded southerner. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.25 net.

Sally Castleton, Southerner, by Crittenden Marriott. A romance of the civil war, with a hero and heroine on opposite sides of the struggle. [J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. $1.25 net.

Seven Keys to Baldpate, by Earl Derr Biggers, relates the love and mystery adventures that befall a novelist who goes to a small town in search of solitude. He seeks out a summer hotel which he believes is closed to the public—and finds its inmates all under the same delusion. The situation furnishes him with plenty of "material." [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.30 net.

Pollyanna, by Eleanor H. Porter. Pollyanna is a little girl who finds some reason to be glad for everything that happens to her—even when it comes to automobile accidents. Her story follows more or less the familiar lines of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and is full of quaint helpfulness. [L. C. Page and Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

The Sojourner, by Robert Dull Elder. Jack Holliday, Princeton athlete and charming fellow, leaves college under a misunderstanding brought about by his chum's dishonesty in an examination. In the far West he comes into his own and wins the girl he has always loved. A clean, refreshing story. [Harper and Brothers, New York. $1.30 net.

War; or, What Happens When One Loves One's Enemy, by John Luther Long. A decidedly unusual and delightful story, told by the father of two boys who love the same woman. There is more love than war in it, though the background is our great battle of the sixties. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.30 net.

The Sixty-First Second, by Owen Johnson. One of the most original and skillful of mystery stories. It is concerned with a woman's loss of a valuable ruby; its characters are all of the ultra society type. [Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. $1.35 net.

The Man Who Would Not Be King, by Sidney Dark. The hero insists upon being a dreamer instead of a man of affairs, and justifies himself in a fashion that reduces the reader to hearty chuckles. [John Lane Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Lovers of Skye, by Frank Waller Allen. Skye is a little village in which there are no lovers until a girl called "Skylark" and a youth of the great outdoors set the fashion. Charmingly written. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1 net.

The Lee Shore, by Rose Macaulay, is the novel which won the $5,000 prize offered last year by Hodder and Stoughton. Its English hero is an aristocrat who prefers to be a vagabond, and invites his soul in the enchanting coast towns of Italy. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.25 net.

Bobbie, General Manager, by Olive Higgins Prouty. The splendid story of a girl who mothers a whole family. It has freshness, humor and a great deal of natural charm. [Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. $1.25 net.

Miss Mystery, by Etta Anthony Baker. The plot centers about a girl's loss of memory and her consequent efforts to discover her identity. A good romance, interestingly written. [Little, Brown and Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

The Motto of Mrs. McLane: The Story of an American Farm, by Shirley Carson. Mrs. McLane's philosophy is cheerfulness, and her rewards are rich beyond measure. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1 net.

Snapshots of Fiction for Various Tastes

The Penalty, by Gouverneur Morris. The usually charming Mr. Morris is disappointing in this new story. It concerns a repulsive legless man and a girl sculptor who provokes him into loving her; and it is all quite unnecessarily offensive. [Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. $1.35 net.

Wild Justice, by Frances Clare. Of the extremely modern and risque type in treatment, this novel in its teaching upholds the ancient law that happiness is bought by renunciation. [Duffield and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Eternal Maiden, by T. Everett Hare. Based upon an Eskimo legend, this beautiful, passionate, tragic love story is one that will appeal to the discriminating reader. [Mitchell Kennerley, New York. $1.20 net.

The Story of Stephen Compton, by J. E. Patterson, is a realistic novel treating of present-day industrialism and social unrest. The early scenes are laid in the cotton manufacturing district of Lancashire, where Stephen Compton is born and struggles to make a position for himself in the world. Starting at the bottom of the social ladder, he raises himself to the prime ministership. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Burning Question, by Grace Denio Litchfield. Deserted by his wife, who is reported to have killed herself, Warren Dean marries a second time—whereupon the first wife, unaware, reappears. The struggle is a bitter one for all three of them, until "sudden the worst turns the best to the brave." A thoroughly good story. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $1.25 net.

Uncharted Seas, by Robert Adger Bowen. An interesting though rather unconvincing story of a prima donna and her illegitimate daughter. It is not at all of the objectionable type; its men and women are high-minded, cultivated people, and its faults lie rather in a certain naive exaggeration of drawing. [Small, Maynard and Company, Boston. $1.35 net.

The Career of Doctor Weaver, by Mrs. Henry Backus, is a compelling story which takes the reader behind the scenes in the medical profession. Dr. Weaver, a famous specialist, has his professional temptations, but he also has a steadfast young brother who helps him to play the straight game. [L. C. Page and Company, Boston. $1.25 net.

The Quest of Glory, by Marjorie Bowen. Miss Bowen is writing some of the best historical novels that are being published. This one, laid in the France of Louis XV., has Voltaire, Marmontel, the Duc de Richelieu and the king among its characters. [E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. $1.35 net.

The Daughter of Brahma, by I. A. R. Wylie, presents a dramatic picture of life in India and emphasizes the futility of attempting to bridge the deep gulf between the East and West. Well written and contains some clearly drawn character work. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.30 net.

Unexpected Affinities: A Serio-Comedy, by Susan Taber. The love affair of a girl and man who seem wholly unsuited to each other, and the domestic complications of their friends, furnish the theme of a rather trivial novel of New York society. [Duffield and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Frontiers of the Heart, by Victor Margueritte. The scene is the Franco-Prussian war, the two leading characters a French woman and a German doctor, the theme their struggle between love and patriotism. [Frederick A. Stokes Company, New York. $1.25.

The Land of Content, by Edith Barnard Delano. Rosamond Randall, an immensely wealthy, petted, courted and yet dissatisfied young woman, is gradually initiated into the lesson that service is the secret of contentment. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.30.

Lanchester of Brazenose, by Ronald McDonald. Betrayed by his wife, Raymond Lanchester takes her sin upon his own shoulders and has a bitter time of it until he is rewarded by the love of a good woman. [John Lane Company, New York. $1.30 net.

Topham's Folly, by George Stevenson. Through the eyes of Mary Ann, a servant of the Tophams, we are given an interesting picture of that peculiar family. The book is quaintly out of the ordinary. [John Lane Company, New York. $1.30 net.

The Stain, by Forrest Halsey, presents the unusual plot of a girl thief being sentenced by a judge who is her father. The story is melodramatic, though not badly done. [F. G. Browne and Company, Chicago. $1.25 net.

The Silent Battle, by George Gibbs. The title has reference to a man's fight against an inherited love of drink. He comes out victor in more ways than one. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.30 net.

Through a typographical error the title of the new novel by Mr. and Mrs. Williamson, "The Heather Moon," was incorrectly printed as "The Heather Moose" in the issue of April 24.

A SCHOOL FOR MANY

How Highland Park College Seeks to Serve a Great Body of Young Americans

BY OLIVER R.

THESE LINES will be read by many men whose success the world acknowledges, but whose beginnings were very remote from the high places. Their start toward the goal was really made when first they determined that the best and the most that was in them should some way be realized. Though the immediate possibilities open to them may have been humble, they sought advancement by learning to do most efficiently the duties that fell to them. Farmers, mechanics, clerks, even unskilled laborers or toilers at chance occupations they may have been, but hard work, good sense, persistence and maintenance of true manhood carried them forward in spite of limitations and difficulties. All through America's history such men have risen to leadership, while others possessing ample privileges and bearing parchments from high institutions of learning have failed.

It Is the "Average" Folk Who Determine America's Destiny

A lesson the world is always learning and always apparently striving to forget is that while the exceptional few may lead, they cannot lead the nation beyond the moral, intellectual and practical capabilities of the great average. We speak of education—and perhaps more especially of religious education—as though the world were to be made up of bankers and millionaires, lawyers and physicians, teachers and ministers. Seemingly we declare that if the minority specially prepared for these walks in life can be taken care of the majority of the younger generation need give us no special concern. It is time that the church particularly should take cognizance of its duty toward the great majority who must perhaps be content with less than an exalted position in life. Some who have natural genius will make their way to distinction, but the larger number take no less honorable place with the sturdy millions who constitute the bulwark of the nation—those whose skilled hands fashion the contrivances which enter into manufactures, who cultivate the soil and "keep" the books, and sell the goods, and man the establishments, small or large, which are a part of industrial and commercial life. They cast the votes which elect Presidents and governors; they influence by power of numbers and force of sentiment the moral and social conditions of their communities. Individually helpless against great economic or political evils, in the bulk they are all powerful. America's destinies are determined by clean-handed, clear-headed, pure-hearted "average" folk, and it behooves the church to show a more serious recognition of this fact than it has shown in the past.

Just now there is an awakening to the need of vocational training. Technical and trade schools for the multitude will multiply. The church is bound to realize that if religion properly has a place in the life of a college of liberal arts, so it should not be absent from a school whose students seek "practical" education for immediate application in life. Here it is our privilege to speak of an institution where public-spirited Presbyterians may, if they will, cooperate in a way that will count for the uplift of standards in which the church is specially interested.

A Work in Advance of Recent Tendencies

Nearly thirty years ago some far-seeing Iowa men, believing that thousands of young people were entering life with their capacities not fully developed, established a school at Des Moines which they called Highland Park College. Here young men or young women unable to proceed through high school, or not fully equipped for the work of life by training received in public schools, were to receive instruction suited as nearly as possible to their needs, with the times for study meeting their convenience and the cost at a minimum. The work thus established had its "ups and downs," but under the energetic and sagacious management of Dr. O. H. Longwell, it persisted and in the main prospered.

Des Moines is not only the capital of the great thriving state of Iowa but a growing manufacturing city, with railroad facilities that make it readily accessible from all directions. The Highland Park College "idea" met local favor and soon in a larger way proved itself. More than 30,000 young men and women have passed into and out of the school during the years of its existence. The mayor of Des Moines is a former student, and many other men prominent in the life of the city received part of their training here. Some of them, as trustees, are now giving their thought and energies to its management. Already the school has reached out into many other sections of the United States and even to lands afar. Just the night before the writer's visit there had been a reception from which the trustees, after greeting 600 students, had gone hand-weary and amazed. Grouped under banners naming their origin, these students were shown to represent thirty-five states and eleven foreign countries. As we viewed these 600 vigorous

LATHE
ELECTRICAL DEPT.
AUTOMOBILE SHOP
MANUAL TRAINING DEPT.

FOLK OF MANY NEEDS

The Story of an Institution That Touches a Remarkably Varied Constituency

WILLIAMSON

young people in chapel next day we did not wonder that even the resident trustees had realized with a sense of astonishment the power residing in such a body—a power not likely to be exerted in any degree for evil, but which properly directed may count wonderfully for good in the future of our nation. It is because the officials and faculty of the school, and the immediate friends of the institution, believe that it must in the future give wider development to this power that this article is prepared. Highland Park has its local value and a lasting mortgage claim upon local support, but its responsibilities and its claims upon Christian interest are not to be held within city or state bounds.

A Multiple Service Which Is Meeting Manifold Needs

The school's great claim upon this wider interest lies in the fact that its comprehensive service is of a nature that is thus far not duplicated elsewhere. Colleges of all sorts, professional schools and schools of business, engineering and technology are numerous indeed, many of them doing in specialized lines work similar to that carried on at Highland Park. But nowhere are all these departments of usefulness grouped together in just the same way. What has been done, what is being done, and what may be done, these make a story certainly enlightening and practically interesting to all who are concerned with the future of the young men and young women of America.

Immense Possibilities for the Years to Come

Doubtless it is not worth while to trace through all the years the history of Highland Park College. There have been vicissitudes—thrice since the school came under Presbyterian control fire has destroyed essential equipment; and where economy is carefully studied as it is there the ship of learning sometimes voyages through shoal water. But in the attractive suburb of Highland Park one finds today an equipment, a faculty and a student body which suggest immense possibilities in the years to come. The campus occupies a commanding site. At the center stands the main college building, containing offices, recitation rooms, dining room, library, laboratories and the chapel seating some 1,200. In Science hall are located some of the studios of the college of music and oratory, the gymnasium, the college of pharmacy, the finely equipped business department and smaller assembly rooms for student organizations. Humboldt hall now provides dormitories for the woman students, with several laboratories in the basement, and a number of residence cottages owned by the school adjoin the main campus. Adjacent also is the large athletic field, where the various outdoor sports receive a vigorous exemplification. The engineering shops and power plant are extensive, yet the pressure of students must soon force enlargement.

It is the theory of Highland Park College that it shall adapt itself—not, indeed, to the student's whims or laziness of habit but to his natural capacities and the conditions of life which determine how much time and money he may devote to preparation. If he has an aptitude for machine work, or for engineering, or for business, but can afford only a three months' stay, the purpose is to give him in that time just as much help as can be planned and made available. If he can pursue a full college course, the school will give him its best; if a combination of cultural and vocational training is needed, he can get that. Furthermore, by an "extension" arrangement, he can take some of his courses by mail and complete them in residence, or reverse the method. The financial arrangements are also adapted to the limitations of self-respecting students.

Important Departments That Touch Many of Life's Occupations

This wide diversity of work makes anything like detailed description impossible here; the various catalogues of the school constitute a small library in themselves. But we must note briefly the character of the departments. A school that doubtless has counted as much as any of its associates in influence upon Iowa itself is the normal college. Here a good professional training is provided for teachers in public and private schools, including five different courses. Hundreds of teachers have been trained here, the summer terms being especially popular. The academy provides for students coming without adequate preparation for college, and also offers special courses for those who cannot go farther. The college of liberal arts embraces classical and scientific courses with approximately the standard requirements for admission and graduation.

Nowhere has demand more fully justified the existence of a department than in the case of the engineering school. Many of its graduates have risen to high position, and there are evidences that all of them stand well in the work they have undertaken. Its work is directed not only to professional but to trades employment. In these days of specialization few apprentices have opportunities to get anything like a broad conception of the trades associated with manufactures and mechanical operations. The skill of the master craftsman is no longer passed on by him to youthful followers; the personal interest and association which in times gone by developed enthusiasm and initiative are lacking in shop and factory. Highland Park, with its equipment and expert faculty, gives the young man something vastly better than the sort of "one-motion, one-piece" apprenticeship of modern industry. More than that, the student group is bound together by a common desire to "learn how" to do the thing in the best way and with the least waste of time, while the personal interest of the faculty and the cultural influences of the school help to develop what is tritely called the "well-rounded man."

A DOMESTIC SCIENCE CLASS

A SEWING CLASS

View of Electrical Laboratory

College Boys Who Repair Automobiles

Let us indicate the scope of this department by simply mentioning the courses that are provided—not "paper courses" only, but made actual to all the students who can now be accommodated. Civil engineering, with four-year and two-year courses, covering the full scope of the profession; surveying, sanitary engineering, electrical engneering, telephone engineering, electrical engineering, telephone engineering, ceramic engineering (clay, cement, etc.), steam engineering, traction engineering, gas and oil engineering, automobile engineering (constructive and operative), machinist work, blacksmithing, carpentry, manual training and mechanical draftsmanship. Into most of these departments there enter further subdivisions—electrical engineering, for example, includes telegraphy—and there is everywhere excellent provision for practical demonstration. Students have made and put into successful operation not a little of the machinery and power apparatus of the school. An interesting sight is the group of boys who journey about the demonstration field on the big traction engines which they are constantly taking apart and putting together. Scores of Des Moines automobiles are kept in repair by Highland Park boys. Not all of these students will become professional engineers or mechanics; frequently the knowledge and practice gained here is to contribute to greater efficiency in other occupations. To the visitor the equipment would appear to be of excellent character, many of the instruments and machines being the best tested products of America's leading makers. More of them, with more working space, is the need if additional students are to be cared for.

The long-established pharmacy school, over which presided the late Professor Macy—known nationally as a chemist—has been a most successful branch of the college work. Its elaborate provision for instruction and practice, with its able faculty, suggests thorough work. The same may be said of the really extraordinary college of business, which has been exceptionally successful in spite of the existence of a great many competitors. In addition to the usual courses, there are a civil service school and a college of telegraphy which boasts of a miniature railway used in conjunction with train dispatching. The school of music and oratory, besides its quarters at the campus, maintains a large downtown school that is prominent among Des Moines' institutions.

A Demand That Has Insured Permanence for the Institution

Highland Park College would not have persisted through the years in the absence of a very distinct demand for the service it is attempting to render. Stories of sacrifice and persistence in the face of obstacles in order to secure the advantages of the school could be multiplied. The great colleges and universities deal mostly with rather exceptional classes. Highland Park serves the thousands who have no particular advantages in life and who must depend upon their own labor and ingenuity in making the best of their natural gifts. This is a tremendously important fact for the friends of Christian education to ponder. Nor is the work of the college all in the way of preparation for the first steps in life. Sometimes the young man or young woman who has attempted to earn a living finds that his or her equipment is deficient, and comes to Highland Park to make it good. Not long ago a young man who had applied for entrance asked regarding the possibility of renting a cottage, and it was found that he and his wife had husbanded their resources so that he might reside near the school long enough to better qualify himself for his work in life. Many of the young men who come to the school earn part or all of their expenses by tending furnaces, clerking in stores at odd hours or assisting in the dining room. The average cost for the school year is about $200, which means that in every particular the student is given the benefit of wholesale purchases and of economical administration.

Students at Highland Park come very largely from country homes and small towns, though the larger cities also contribute. As previously noted, a large number of nationalities are represented, and probably every religious denomination, including Jews and Catholics, would find adherents in the classes. The Christian work of the school is necessarily not sectarian, but the opportunity here presented is not neglected. Chapel is compulsory twice a week, the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. organizations are active; there are frequent special meetings of a religious character and the local churches draw a considerable number of the students to their Bible classes. While the religious work of the institution must always be operated under certain reasonable limitations, there is offered here a splendid field for the demonstration that Christianity is necessarily a part of life for those who may always labor with their hands as well as for those who go into professional causes. Religion should have its vital part in this as in any other preparation for mature responsibilities. It is true that a large number of the Highland Park students do enter professions; and many of those who prepare here for manual work, or comparatively modest occupations in connection with business, afterward develop into leadership. But the church must not neglect the importance of presenting the religious aspect of life to those who are not to be prominent as well as to those who are expected to be leaders.

This institution is seeking to serve the 90 to 95 per cent of the youth of today who do not go beyond the seventh or eighth grade in public school. It is this percentage that creates the problem element in the present-day industrial and social world. Highland Park, with its consideration for their peculiar needs, offers them an opportunity not available in the departments of our state institutions, as the latter require high school credits for admission.

Face to Face with a Future of Large Possibilities

As we have previously indicated, within recent times it has become apparent that a somewhat larger development is possible for Highland Park College. A year or so ago, with the approval of the Iowa Synod and Des Moines Presbytery, a number of Presbyterians interested themselves in a plan to take the school from private control and place it in the hands of a board of trustees. Acting under this sanction, they accepted a transfer of the property, conservatively valued at $350,000, in consideration of a bonded obligation of only $175,000. Dr. Longwell, for many years the successful head of the institution, is at present broken in health and Dr. George P. Magill, pastor of Central church in Des Moines, was induced to become acting president, and with the cooperation of the board of trustees—including representative men of Des Moines and vicinity—he is working energetically to place the school in a position to make fine progress in the immediate future. The present enrollment of 700 in the main college, 200 in the downtown music school and 600 in the extension department is the largest thus far recorded, and there is every reason to believe that with the improvements a comparatively small amount of money can make possible at an early date the attendance will be constantly increased. The most pressing need of the moment is the completion of the new dormitory for young women which has been partly constructed and which will greatly facilitate the work of the school when occupied. It is a well planned, fireproof structure. The present gymnasium is not equal to the needs of 500 or 600 boys, and there are other additions to the equipment which would help greatly to carry out the purpose of the school to give to the students more than 100 cents in return for every dollar they are able to contribute toward the expense of their education.

Highland Park has a just claim for consideration—not in rivalry with any other schools in or out of Iowa, but on the basis of its distinctive possibilities for usefulness. If the church, through its thoughtful givers, shall respond to the opportunity and the responsibility here indicated, there is little doubt that it will have reason to be proud of having again shown its wisdom in adapting itself to the genuine needs of the people for Christian preparation for life.

One of the most interesting features for the visitor at Highland Park is the traction demonstrating field. This picture shows some of the classes engaged in practice work.

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

CHAPTER XXVI.

"GONE—BUT NOT FOREVER"

PRESTONBURY knew the story of the wreck and rescue before noon next day. The Evening Journal paid a glowing tribute to Professor Horton. Boating parties stopped at Jake's the second afternoon to offer congratulations, but the hero was not there. To all Jake told the same story.

"It vas dis vay; Brofessor Horton pulled der fraulein from der vasser. Den he row avay down der lake. He sendt vordt to der old man, den he row pack. Ven der fater come, Mr. Horton, he go avay. No, I not expect he vill come pack. He take his poat und all his dings. He go; das ist alles."

Conjecture was wide and puzzled as to why Horton had vanished. It had suddenly dawned upon his friends, who had all this time supposed him at Glencoe and had wondered somewhat at not hearing from him, that he had spent the summer actually in hiding at Jake's. "What do you suppose he was doing up there, all alone?" one said to another, and Joe Jickers would reply, to veil what he thought he knew to be the true reason, "Giving himself new lessons in how to be different from anybody else. He probably got up that storm just to show what he could do."

But why he had disappeared just in the hour of such triumph not even Joe could explain, and Ansley and his stepson, who could have explained, kept their own counsel.

On the day when the seminary opened, however, Horton was in his place with his associates, and on the following Sunday he preached the first chapel sermon to an auditorium crowded with people from the town, who said as they left after the service, "He can preach almost as well as he can sing." Not even the presence of Eleanor Elmore, sitting at one side with her sister Caroline, could overturn his poise, though he flushed with pleasure at the sight of her.

To meet her socially, however, with matters at the point they stood between them he felt would be an impossibility for both. Honor would not allow him to ask from her an explanation of the "promise" to which he had heard her father make reference on the night of the storm, and he realized that she was not a woman either to break a promise or to volunteer an explanation, even to the man she loved, until it was asked for. With affairs at such a deadlock there was nothing to do but to perform steadily his seminary work until the achievement he had laid down for himself there should be accomplished, and to avoid every possible situation that would give Eleanor pain.

Accordingly, he resigned from the Shakespeare Club, and as the winter passed declined such invitations to social functions as he had accepted readily enough the year before. He had no heart even for the cozy fireside of Joe and Alice Jickers, who wondered disappointedly at his desertion of them. Joe, keen observer that he was, did not doubt that Mr. Elmore was in some way responsible for the transformation of his "new type" into a recluse, and he had more than a suspicion that Eleanor was in some way involved as he saw her lack of animation and her increasing quiet of manner. Gracious and lovely as ever, she seemed to have lost the bubbling spirits that had been one of her charms. He said nothing, however, even to his wife.

There were no more of the frequent chats in Ansley's office that Bradford had come to enjoy in the preceding winters. The senator was much in Albany, and only once when he was at home did Horton call upon him. That was on the day after Samuel Maxwell's funeral; the cashier had died suddenly from heart failure, and Ansley had been called home.

"You haven't been to see me once this winter, Bradford," Ansley hailed him as he appeared in the office.

"No, I've been very much occupied."

"Oh, nonsense! You are no busier than you were a year ago. You're taking that Branscombe incident too much to heart, my boy. That will all clear up. Take a new tack. You'll make port by and by, with Eleanor on board, too."

"Don't, Ansley, please. I did not come about such things. There's a grave in my heart and the flowers are not blooming on it yet. I want to bring Barney back to Prestonbury and put him in Maxwell's place. If it had not been for me he would succeed now to the post naturally. I want him to have it all the same."

"What a man you are, Brad! Always thinking about someone else and never about yourself. I can put Barney in there, and I will, too, just for you."

Bradford rose. "Good, Ansley. That's all I came for. Good-by."

When Barney O'Toole returned to Prestonbury people were greatly surprised—first, that the bank would have him; next, that he was called Barney O'Toole; and last, that he and Horton were the closest friends and companions. Yet the professor never stepped inside the bank, even to see Barney. He kept his bank account now at the Orsina National. He met Mr. Elmore occasionally on the street, but never gave him the slightest sign of recognition, and to avoid meeting him on Sundays he gave up the choir and was away somewhere preaching almost every week.

In May he paid a second thousand dollars upon the mortgage against his mother's house.

"Half gone now, Ansley," he said as he laid down his check. "Two halves will make a whole. And I'll pay the other half. You'll not lose anything by what you did for me."

"I should not regret it if I did. When I once make up my mind to do a thing I accept all it brings. It's all part of the day's work, Brad. Are you going to Glencoe this summer?"

"No. I will be in Berlin in two weeks. I sail now in two days."

On the anniversary of the storm upon Orsina lake Eleanor Elmore received a letter postmarked "Berlin." It was very brief, but it filled her heart with joy.

"Dear Eleanor: This is the anniversary.
Lovingly, BRADFORD."

That was all. He gave no foreign address, but found, as he hoped he might, when he had returned to his post in September a letter which read,

"Dear Bradford: I have not forgotten.
Lovingly, ELEANOR."

So passed another year and then another. Bradford Horton, the boy who stood before the clock tower with a half-dollar in his hand, had become a man, stern, strong, silent.

At the end of the second year he sat one morning in the office of Senator Jickers, waiting the lawyer's coming. When he arrived Bradford went directly to the matter he had in hand.

"I've come to pay up that mortgage, Ansley." He handed the lawyer his check for principal and interest. "Get the paper for me, will you?" he added.

Ansley produced the mortgage. Horton looked at it a moment, turning it over nervously, while his friend watched him in troubled silence.

"Send the satisfaction piece to my mother in Glencoe, will you, Ansley?" he said, breaking the pause at last.

"You prefer to have me send it?"

"If you will." He rose. "Good-by, Ansley. You've been a good friend to me. Good-by." And before the astonished lawyer could make reply he was gone.

"Caroline," Ansley Jickers said to his wife that night, "I don't know what to make of Bradford Horton. He has changed entirely. He acts like a living dead man. He's got some course mapped out, I don't know what, and I didn't dare ask him a question this morning, well as I've known him. It seems as if something must have happened to quench the fire of every sentiment in his soul."

"Don't you know what? You were at Jake's that night, and I should think you would."

"Oh, in a general way. But I never knew what led up to that situation, nor what happened after Charlie and I went downstairs."

"Well, Eleanor told me without my asking questions. Poor child, she had to tell somebody. It seems she and father had a quarrel in Shanghai, all because father became possessed of the idea that she was infatuated with Bradford and that he was in love with her. It was the excitement then that brought on that long illness of father's. I don't suppose she realized herself, then, that she cared anything about Bradford, but she didn't like injustice and she took his part, and the upshot of it was, she promised father, to quiet him, I suppose, that she'd never marry Bradford or anybody else against his will. You know how she regards a promise, and you know how proud he is, so there you have it."

"But your father had been well disposed enough, I thought, to Bradford all that first winter after they came home."

"I know. But Lennie says he came to their house just after the seminary closed that summer and was closeted with father for an hour, and that was just before he went away. Nobody heard any more of him till the night of the storm, you know. Now, my theory is that he asked permission that night to ask Lennie to marry him, and Father Elmore refused, and their next meeting was at Jake's, and you know what that was."

"You've got quite a head, Caroline! Did she happen to say what more happened that night that I didn't see?"

"Yes. Father ordered Bradford to clear out, to put it briefly, and Bradford faced it out and told him he'd never speak to him again. He hasn't—hasn't spoken or recognized father in any way. Father'll never come round, I'm afraid, and Eleanor feels she's tied by her promise, and she's afraid to mention the subject to him for fear of bringing on another stroke. She says Bradford will never lay himself open to another such scene. She doesn't blame him—I think she rather loves him better for his honorableness—but she's breaking her heart, and that nearly breaks mine." The tears were in her eyes as she finished.

Ansley had grown graver and graver. "I wonder what set Elmore so against the fellow, anyway," he reflected aloud. "He lived down the Drum episode long ago, and I never knew your father to be so prejudiced and narrow in anything before. Bradford's proved long ago what his character was, father or no father."

Caroline hesitated. "Eleanor swore me to secrecy on one point I haven't told you, Ansley. I'm afraid you'll let it get back to Father Elmore if I tell you, and that would grieve her so."

"Don't you know me yet, Mrs. Ansley Jickers? Don't you know I'm wise and wary and have a deep well to keep secrets in?"

"Well, then, drop this into it. Lennie says that just at the time of the Drum business her father had a spiteful, malicious letter from Bradford's adopted mother—the one in Glencoe he's done everything for since then—saying that he was a nameless child left on her doorstep and brought up by her husband, and that he'd always been wicked and ungrateful. Father was influenced by that, of course."

Ansley whistled long and expressively. "So that's the rest of the matter! Well, it's a pity Brad has taken himself off. I happen to know that he could set himself perfectly right on that score, if he only would. Even if he were here, though," he added, "he's so quixotic that I don't believe he'd do it, even if Mr. Elmore faced him with the letter itself."

"What do you know, Ansley?"

"Can't tell you, dear. Lawyer's confessional secrets, you know—can't tell you." And not another word could she persuade him to say on the subject. Into his mind, however, had flashed at once the recollection of the letter given him years before by Mrs. Horton. "I wonder," he thought, "if that wouldn't set everything right."

Yet he could not bring himself, in honor, to break the embargo laid upon the delivery of the inclosure to Mr. Elmore without the permission of the writer. Next day he wrote for that permission, but before an answer to his letter was received Bradford's purpose was too clear. He had placed his resignation as professor in the hands of the directors, had refused all requests to reconsider his decision and before the week was ended had left the city, leaving no word as to his destination.

He had, however, left one matter of personal interest in the hands of Barney O'Toole. Eleanor Elmore was taken by surprise when one day the cashier called upon her. "I have a letter for you, Miss Elmore," he began, "which Mr. Horton left with me, asking me to give it to you in person after he had been away a week. That is why I have ventured to call."

She took the letter and thanked him. "Will it embarrass you if I ask where Professor Horton has gone?" she asked hesitatingly.

"No, but I can't answer the question. I only wish I did know where he's gone. He's the best friend ever I had, Miss Elmore."

Eleanor made no comment on the little confidence; her interest in her own matters was too great.

"Do you think Mr. Sleighton knows?" she asked.

"He may, but I think not. He took all his money in gold; when I offered him a draft he said a draft would mean identification, which shows he doesn't mean to have anyone know where he is."

Barney did not prolong his call, but as he left his abstracted hostess she added to her good night, "Come again, Mr. O'Toole. You're Mr. Horton's friend, and I shall always be glad to see you."

Left alone, Eleanor took the precious letter away to her own room. Its pages were full of affection; in them he told the story of his long love for her, told how it began before the gate on Sunset hill, the day of his first sight of her. He told, too, why he felt that he must go away from her.

"Do not try to find where I have gone," he wrote. "God has called me to a work which I can do. I must do it." He left her as a parting gift his boathouse and the land it stood on, and the boat in which he had saved her life. "Its name," he added, "is that by which in my mind I have always called you." She smiled through the tears that had gathered, then went on to the ending of the letter. "We shall meet again, my dearest," it read. "I don't know how nor where, but God knows, and our betrothal in Jake's cottage God will sanction and smile on by and by."

Twilight faded into darkness as she sat still at the window. The full moon flooded with light the western hills toward which her room looked out and touched the fleecy clouds with silver.

"Gone," she said, over and over. "Gone! But not forever—oh, not forever! God, let it not be forever. He has loved me too long, too patiently, too truly. And, oh, Bradford, I love you so! I cannot tell you so, dear, but, oh, I do, I do indeed!"

She dropped her head upon her arms on the window sill; the light touched the gold lights in her bronze hair. "He says that we shall meet again," she sobbed. "But when? Oh, Bradford, when?"

Calmer after a little, she went to her writing desk and drew out three letters. One was the note of thanks for the carnations; two were identical, the annual reminders of the storm and their betrothal. With them she placed this last. "He loves me. I will wait until he comes," she said.

CHAPTER XXVII.

REVELATION AND REMORSE

THE ANSWER to Ansley Jickers's letter to Glencoe came in far different shape from what he had anticipated, and only after an interval of ten days. Previous to receiving it, he spent one evening with Mr. Elmore, with the deliberate intention of hearing from that gentleman's own lips the truth about his prejudice against Bradford. Whatever might develop after he should hear from Mrs. Horton, he did not wish it to become necessary to explain the information he had received from his wife, and she in turn from Eleanor, which would seem like a betrayal of confidence. So the lawyer proceeded to accomplish some of his clever detective work.

"They want me to run for governor this fall, Mr. Elmore," he began, as the two sat smoking on the Sunset hill porch.

"So I've heard Well, you ought to make it."

"You think so?"

"Most certainly. It would gratify me greatly. Does the prospect of a campaign worry you?"

"Not in the least. I'm not half as much worried over that as I am over this sudden resignation of Professor Horton."

Mr. Elmore's face hardened. "That is scarcely a thing to trouble about, or to wonder at. My wonder is that he did not resign three years ago."

"What was there to make him resign then?"

"Have you forgotten that night at the lake?"

"What, when he saved Eleanor's life and Charlie's? No, I haven't. I shouldn't think you ever would."

"Saved her life? Yes, and then because chance circumstances enabled him to save it he insulted her before my face. You're right about my not forgetting; it makes my blood boil now to think of it?"

"Easy, easy, Mr. Elmore," urged Ansley in his smoothest manner, as he saw the older man's rising wrath. "I remember what happened, but I didn't see any insult. Oh, yes, I saw him kiss her. I don't wonder; she looked as beautiful as Helen of Troy. I'd have done it myself. By the way, are you sure Eleanor took it as an insult?"

"Ansley, we'd better not discuss this or I shall be angry. His action was utterly inexcusable, after what had passed between him and me."

"Oh, ho! So you and he had talked about Eleanor before, had you?"

"We had. He had the impudence to ask if he might offer himself to her."

"You call it impudence, do you, for a man very handsome, very well bred, very gifted, very popular, to want to marry your daughter?"

"I call it impudence. That is just what it was."

"Well, all I can say is you astonish me. So you told him no?"

"I most certainly did."

"But why, Mr. Elmore? You must have had some reason."

"Reason? I should say I had reason. Come into the office. I will show you my reason."

(To be continued)

An Ohio Preacher in the Flood

The day before had been a beautiful Easter Sunday, with the largest Sunday school in the history of the church and the largest communion of the pastorate. The pastor's heart was happy. He was bound for a few days' local option campaigning among the old familiar scenes of Michigan.

Two days later came news that violent rains had fallen through all the Ohio and Scioto valleys. That meant flood in the home city of Portsmouth, located at the junction of these two streams. Dates were canceled and a hurried exit made.

At Toledo there were no trains south, but in company with two newspaper men anxious to get to Dayton passage was secured on a "scouting train" over the Hocking Valley railroad. Its journey ended twelve miles from Columbus. There a kind engineer took us to the edge of the flood, and a dray drove us across the only bridge into the city. Across it the yellow flood of the Olentangy was rushing three feet deep.

It seemed certain the Norfolk and Western would be running to Portsmouth. One of my trustees was the engineer who built it, and he had often said they were above all flood water. But men build houses of cards. Every bridge in that 110 miles of track was washed out, and there would be no travel for weeks.

A Twenty-Foot Torrent

After a day's wait an electric road opened traffic to Kingston, thirty miles south. Lurid reports declared Portsmouth wiped from the map. With a church and parish and home in the flood district, it was determined to make the attempt to get through. From Kingston there was a walk of seven miles through the devastated Scioto valley to Chillicothe. It was an awful scene of desolation. The skies had cleared and bright spring sunshine looked down upon a scene of wildest chaos. The river here had spread to six miles wide, but had now receded two miles. Homes lay in ruins. In piles of wreckage the mangled bodies of animals were lying. The refugees were camping in the hills. A torrent of water twenty feet high had surged through the valley and left no living or standing thing. The city of Chillicothe lay under water to the south, and no word had come from it for four days. It was necessary to make a detour over the hills for nine miles to get below it—a hard climb, for Ohio hills are steep. Once I met a man who begged with tears in his eyes for tobacco. He had been deprived for four days!

In one place, looking over a precipice, I saw a company of men standing on a ledge watching something a hundred feet out from the shore. Could I believe it? It was the body of a man lodged in a tree. The flood had caught him and he had climbed for safety. Only a hundred feet of flood separated him from safety, but no rescuers had been able to reach him, and after three days he died of exposure.

Farther on a work train was halted by a dismantled bridge. My story was told to the railroad boys. Hand it to them! They pulled me fifteen miles back to a little village where a rig could be secured. Would they take a present? Not they. "Always glad to help a brother in trouble." A horse was hired for a nine-mile trip to a city where an electric connection might be made. But the horse was slow. He had spent his days on a milk wagon and a mail route. The car would be missed! Then a most joyous sound smote the air. An automobile siren sounded far behind. It was the work of a minute to "swap horses," figuratively, in the middle of the stream. It was a hazardous adventure, but that automobile driver agreed to take me the remaining forty miles to Portsmouth at the modest rate of 40 cents a mile. He earned it, too. It was a wild night ride through mud over hills where they get double crops by plowing both sides. But the little car climbed them all, and at five minutes to 12 landed me on the pavements of the home city. The last eight blocks were made in a "john" boat.

Sixty Feet Above the Average

Already the entire business section of the city was under water, and it continued to rise till the following Sunday night, when it stopped just short of sixty-eight feet, sixty feet above the summer average. Water was twelve feet deep in First Presbyterian church, and our new gymnasium and all its apparatus was under water. But worst of all, two-thirds of the people of the parish were homeless and living in temporary quarters in the public buildings, or camping on the hills. Their homes were ruined, their business interests wiped out. Most of them belong to the middle class, for ours is a downtown church. The Sabbath before had touched the highest mark in our church history. Today the people are scattered all over the city and many have left town.

Next Sabbath was a beautiful day, but the only "divine services" at the church building were performed with mop and broom, for the flood leaves a deposit of sticky silt an inch deep over everything, and it must be removed as the water recedes. Furniture, rugs, floors and walls are completely covered by it. We threw out piles of expensive gymnasium apparatus that had become only junk.

Distress and Optimism Mingle

This evening I took a walk over the parish. It makes the heart sick to see loved ones standing amid the wreckage of their homes answering your query, "I have lost all." Here is a young workman who has others dependent on him. I issued him an order tonight for three cots from the relief committee. It is everything he has. Ten days ago he owned a substantial home. Here is a business man, who had a shop on the river street. A whole section of the bank has crumbled away just in front of his store and the building was slipping. Here is a family who face the future with $6 tonight. Scattered over the city are most of my flock in similar distress. But a strange, cheery optimism seems to mark them all. Hope, which has conquered kingdoms, and the Giver of Hope himself will see them through.

I remember a word the driver on my night trip spoke when we stopped at the foot of a hill in the mud to replace a broken spark plug: "I can't understand all this. There must be something behind it all." Yes, there is, brother, but spell that Something with a capital "S," please.

"Great God, our littleness takes heart to play
Beneath the greatness of thy state;
The only comfort of our littleness
Is that thou art great."

JOHN WIRT DUNNING.

Portsmouth, Ohio.

MISSIONARY WORK

Korean Churches Manifest Steadfastness

Missionaries in Korea insist that, contrary to widely circulated reports, there has been no diminution of the strength, attendance or interest in the native churches on account of the distress and intimidation that have attended the trial of so many eminent Korean Christians for alleged conspiracy against the government. The Bible conferences held during the past winter season, both those held for men and those held for women, have been attended about as usual, and the zeal and intensity of the students were as remarkable as ever before. At one of these conferences, as stated in the last bulletin of the Foreign Board, 140 men were present and all stayed for ten days for study. Most of them were too poor to go to the inn, though board and lodging costs but 10 cents a day. They arrived from the country districts walking, and carrying with them each a sack of rice, a bowl, a spoon and chopsticks. Quarters were provided by the missionaries in which they could sleep and cook the food they had brought with them. An even more successful institute was that held at Seoul, which had an attendance of 500 men from outside the city, besides 100 from the capital itself.

The studies included church government, the shorter catechism, biblical geography and four books each from the Old Testament and the New. Personal work was also discussed, and the students made reports on their own experiences in this particular.

In Central church at Pyeng Yang on Christmas evening 100 new converts stood up to signify their determination to follow Jesus Christ. One hundred more were added to this number during the following week, and besides all these, eighty others professed conversion at North church. The unbelieving inhabitants of Pyeng Yang expressed vast astonishment that the church should be growing at a time when joining it would seem to be inviting trouble. At Syen Chun, though it has been reported that church attendance had fallen from 1,500 to 300, The Korean Mission Field says that in point of fact there is not a falling off of more than 200 in average attendance, and this is explained by the feeling among the people that no home should at present be left entirely empty.

A Bright Side of Korea Persecutions

Writing of the retrial of the great conspiracy case in Seoul, Mrs. E. H. Miller declares her belief that this long continued prosecution of innocent men "will work out into the very best things for the church in the end": "There are many interesting stories connected with it. One of the pastors was in a cell with a heathen from the south of the country for some time. He preached to him and taught him so well that when the man was released and returned to his home, where there were as yet no Christians, now, after a few months, there are a church and seventeen Christians there, all the work of the man from the prison. Two men among the prisoners at this retrial testified to having been converted since the trial last June, and that they were going henceforth to be Christians. A great many of the men who were previously Christians had had their faith deepened and strengthened. The banished men are everywhere preaching and spreading the gospel. It is just like New Testament times."

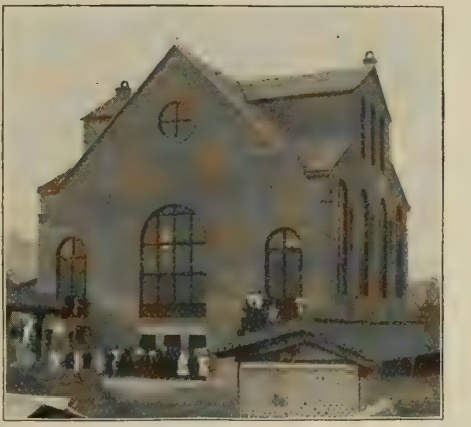
Porto Rico Responding to Education

At a recent meeting of the Women's Board of Home Missions, where the theme under consideration was Porto Rico, Mrs. D. E. Waid and Mrs. McCune Lindsay, recent visitors to the island, spoke with great optimism of the progress of the Porto Rican people. The Women's Board has three schools at Guines, Nueva Paz and Sancti Spiritus, and each of these has already vindicated its work by sending out well prepared students who have taken high standing at Northfield, Mount Hermon and other institutions in the United States.

The government is also doing very practical missionary work in educational lines. When the United States took over the administration of Porto Rico in 1899 there was only one public school building in the entire island. In 1911 there were 323 public schools instructing 145,000 pupils. Many of the rural schools have gardens attached, where the students are given primary instruction in scientific farming. All the schools have manual training, and many of them add a sort of extension work for adults. Five thousand women are being taught to sew by American public school teachers. The public school authorities in the island are looking forward to the establishment there of a great public university, which they hope will extend its educational influence throughout Latin America.

New Church for Seoul Christians

The dedication of the new Central church in Seoul, Korea, is said to have been the most brilliant missionary occasion yet seen in that city. The building is 60 by 70 feet. There are in the basement four schoolrooms, where school is kept weekdays as well as Sundays for a hundred boys and girls. There is also in this lower story a prayer meeting room that seats 300. The main room in the upper story, with galleries on three sides, accommodates 2,200 seated in Korean fashion on the floor. The spaces beneath the galleries and the galleries themselves can be partitioned off by paper doors, and so made into Sunday school class rooms.



New Central Church, Seoul, Korea

The actual count of attendance on dedication day was 2,108 people. Dr. Underwood for the Presbyterians, Dr. Hardy for the Southern Methodists and Mr. Cable for the Northern Methodists delivered each an address, but the rest of the service was conducted by the Koreans. Pastor Kil came down from Pyeng Yang especially to take part. Rev. Wy Yu Han, the native assistant to the foreign pastor, Rev. Charles Allen Clark, offered the dedicatory prayer. Telegrams and letters came from all over Korea from members who had moved away, or members temporarily absent who were unable to return. The Japanese ministers of the interior and education and the American consul general, Mr. Scidmore, were in attendance.

Prepare United Missionary Campaign

The united missionary campaign which has been laid out for March, 1914, under the joint auspices of all the evangelical home and foreign mission boards in the United States will be preceded by 1,250 two-day conferences conducted by special teams of speakers traveling over the country between Sept. 15 and Feb. 15. Twenty of these teams, each including four men, will be formed, and with this number of speakers in the field it is expected to reach every town of 5,000 population or more within the whole United States. Smaller towns will be reached through deputation work undertaken by volunteer speakers going out from these centers.

The second Sunday of February, 1914, is to be designated as Missionary Day, and arrangements are projected by which a universal exchange of pulpits will be had on that day. It is expected that every congregation in the United States will that Sunday hear missions preached by a pastor of some other denomination than its own. A free church distribution of missionary literature is also planned for the months preceding the nationwide canvass for missionary subscriptions.

Throughout the preparations, however, it will be emphasized that this unity campaign looks not only to securing larger missionary contributions but aims also at the development of prayer, Bible study and personal service. Moreover, it is intended to be not for a single year alone, but the precedent established in March of next year is expected to prevail year after year in each succeeding spring.

Missionary Brevities

—Rev. George F. Zoeckler, missionary at Hamadan, counts on Persian inquisitiveness as a distinct missionary asset. He has frequent Persian callers, and takes care that there are enough Bibles in easy reach around the room for any of them to lay hands on. He finds that any caller who comes in is sure to be leafing over a Bible within a few minutes and then the conversation naturally turns to Christianity. Recently four gentlemen of the nobility came in together. While Mr. Zoeckler engaged two in conversation the others began reading the Bible, and one of these suddenly looked up and said: "Listen to this and see how much better it is than the teaching of the Koran." Thereupon, beginning with the fifth chapter of Matthew, he read through the entire sermon on the mount, commenting especially on the superior teaching of Christ as to prayer, alms giving and fasting.

—Students of Union Theological Seminary lately held a meeting to bid farewell to members of the senior class who are soon to go to the foreign mission field. The following men have received their appointments: F. C. Wilcox to China and B. C. Case to Burma under the Baptist Board; Clarence Neff to Foochow, China, under the Congregational Board; W. H. Scott to Jubbulpore, India, under the Disciples' Board, and J. R. Lyons to the Shantung Presbyterian mission, China. Bayard Dodge will go to the Syrian Protestant College, Beirut, for Y. M. C. A. work and F. C. Laubach will apply to the Congregational Board for work, probably in the Philippines. Homer Brown has already sailed for West China to enter the Canadian Methodist mission.

—The summer school of missions at Boulder, Colo., July 5-12 promises to be exceptionally interesting. Eastern women planning to spend the summer in the Colorado Rockies are heartily invited to attend. Mrs. D. B. Wells will teach "The New America" and Mrs. Paul Raymond will present her own book, "The King's Business." The program includes normal classes, method conferences and addresses by missionaries. An attractive feature will be the dedication by the young women of their own new building. The young women will have their own study classes, conferences and recreations, consisting of tramps in the mountains, wild flower excursions, conference luncheons. "beef steak fry," etc.

Board Notes and Announcements

—Among the missionaries heard Friday morning in Room 48, Chicago, were some who had spoken in Sioux City. Mrs. Williams of South America called 1912 "the most successful year I have known of in Colombia." But though since Secretary Speer's visit the force has been doubled, she still pleaded for more missionaries, showing Bucaramanga as a "city of 35,000 where more than half the voters are 'liberal,' that is, disowned by the Catholic Church. The church has dismissed them and they the church." The invitation to speak "briefly" reminded Mrs. Ralph G. Mills of Korea of the request sent to a missionary by a young Oriental: "Will you please come over to my house some evening and teach me arithmetic, geography, history and the sciences?" Other welcome guests heard were Mrs. W. B. Allison of Guatemala, Mrs. W. P. Sidwell, Indiana's synodical president; Mrs. J. D. McDonald, Detroit's presbyterial president, and Miss Sarah Common, Michigan's synodical secretary. The cablegram in newspapers that China's rulers had asked the prayers of their Christian subjects made it an hour of thanksgiving. Echoes from the biennial meeting, too, were thankful. The next biennial meeting will be held in the House of Hope church, St. Paul.

The Open Hearth

New England Synod Self-Supporting

The Synod of New England is to be self-supporting from the start. The synod instructed the Executive Commission and the committees on home missions and publication and Sunday school work to formulate a policy for the synod covering all the activities that are involved in the scope of home mission work within its bounds. This plan provides for the autonomy of the synod and for its entire self-support in its work. Since Presbyterians of New England are giving to the boards interested in this policy far more than twice the amount now received in grants, it will not be difficult to maintain this policy and take up any new work that may seem to be fully justified. Synod voted to adopt the Nebraska plan, which involves autonomy in administration, while all remittances are made to the board's treasurer and all blanks are issued from the board's office. Thus the fullest sympathy and cooperation with the board will be maintained.

It is already becoming apparent that the administration of its own affairs is developing a Presbyterian consciousness resulting profitably in the quickening of the churches into greater zeal. The communicant membership of this synod outnumbers fifteen other synods of the church. There is a healthy growth and a hopeful outlook.

HOWARD AGNEW JOHNSTON.

A Standard for Unison Recitation

Is the graphophone used as fully as it should be to promote religion? It is used extensively to spread the knowledge of good music, but there is a field for it in prose as well as poetry. It is used to teach the correct pronunciation of words in foreign languages; why not for a similar purpose in one's native tongue?

One of the most discordant features of many church services in the utter failure of minister and people to say the Lord's prayer in unison. Congregations used to a slow speaker are "all broke up" when their pulpit is temporarily occupied by a quick speaker. Frequently we see ministers, otherwise careful, who are not precisely accurate in every word and syllable of the prayer. Some brilliant men never learn to recite with proper rhythm.

Now, a graphophone record of the Lord's prayer, spoken by a competent elocutionist, would be a perfect guide and monitor for preacher and people. A minister with a faulty habit could listen to it, by the half hour at a time, in the privacy of his own room; and thus in a short time he would become perfect.

A form of recital which should prove acceptable to a large number of people could be adopted by synods, and later by General Assembly, as standard; and thus we could have uniformity throughout the country—a small thing, indeed, and yet who knows what an enormous aggregate of confused and perplexing, not to say erratic or wicked, thoughts might thus be forever banished!

I am well aware that our Episcopalian friends have standards of all sorts, and in that church one may find innumerable examples of proper or improper enunciation in every exercise of this kind; but what little experience I have had in trying to recite in unison with the congregation in Episcopal churches has convinced me that the Episcopalians, as well as ourselves, need a lot of training! S. G.

A Response from Dr. Kinney

My attention has been called to an article by W. N. Sloan in The Continent of April 3 calling in question the correctness of some statements. Personally, I do not see how it is possible for anyone to misunderstand my statement, but Mr. Sloan's exaggerated interpretation of my words is worse than my exaggeration of the facts even as interpreted by him.

Please notice that while I quote the Cosmopolitan figures, I neither accept nor indorse them as accurate. I was laboring under the necessity of being brief. For example, the book has over 10,000 fewer words than my first manuscript. I quoted those figures to show what some people were thinking. I do say, however, that these figures are "perhaps not too large from the political point of view." What I meant to say then and in what follows was that, counting ex-Mormons (religiously ex-Mormons) and "Jack Mormons," the gentiles who for selfish reasons ally themselves with the Mormons, and the Mormons themselves, the Cosmopolitan figures were not larger than justified by the facts. This, however, is a matter of opinion, and I venture that my opportunities for knowing are as good throughout the West as Mr. Sloan's.

In spite of Mr. Sloan's assertions to the contrary, the Mormons have political influence in Montana. If not, why did neither of her senators vote against Smoot in the senate? If Mormonism has no political influence in the West, why was it that only two senators in the eighteen representing the states of or west of the Rocky mountains had the courage to vote against Smoot? One of those lost his seat at the next election purely through Mormon influence and money.

I have never claimed that the Mormon Church was rapidly growing anywhere from a strictly religious point of view. In fact, I distinctly disclaim that on the bottom of page 177 of the "Islam of America," and have been as severely criticised for that statement by some of my friends, who ought to know as well as I, as I have been for the other thing by Mr. Sloan. But I do assert that for many years under Republican administrations the Mormon hierarchy did rapidly increase its political power. See in The Review of Reviews for March, 1912, under the picture of Senator Smoot this statement, or its equivalent: "Senator Smoot, one of the twelve apostles of the Mormon Church, is the most active representative of the present administration on the floors of Congress." BRUCE KINNEY,

Author of "Mormonism, the Islam of America."

Work for Souls Vital

I have heard some queer things lately which I believe explain clearly why our denomination makes so little headway. I was told that a certain evangelist was invited to conduct evangelistic services in a town of about 9,000 and one question put to one pastor of a church of over 200 was this: How many can I count on to do personal work? The pastor answered he did not know of one. The evangelist, whose labors have been very successful in other places, had very few converts in this town, and this church got only a very few. What a sad commentary on the spiritual condition of any church!

A pipe organ, a learned preacher, wealth galore—a fine engine but no steam to move forward; just enough to keep wheels tight to enable it not to go backward this year. Wait and hear the report of that or any church the next year or two and you will see the record will show decline and decay. The only church fit to live and prosper is that one which is extremely interested in winning souls, where definite decision for Christ is prominent continually. H. W. EWART.

Learning Names of Books of the Bible

I wish to have a few words in the conversation at the Open Hearth about the Sunday school, the building up of which cannot receive too much attention and encouragement. There is, however, one phase of its work as a school which, though not at all neglected, should be made so prominent and permanent as to become such a fixed and settled habit that no teacher or superintendent could omit it, at any session, without qualms of conscience.

The phase I refer to is teaching the names of the books of the Bible. This the writer considers to be invaluable to the scholars who, in a few years, shall be heads of families and leaders in the church. I believe that every pupil should be as familiar with the names of these books as those men and women who are now in their fifties and sixties used to be with the multiplication table.

A few days ago I saw a mother who, when a girl, used to attend Sunday school and who, during our short talk, frankly expressed and deeply regretted her inability to teach her boy in the Bible. Are there not thousands of mothers and fathers, too, sailing in the same boat with this woman, who would not only teach the Bible in their homes but would take their Bibles with them to church if they only knew how to use them? When and where is this to be remedied? We answer, right now and in the Sunday school. There are only sixty-six books in the Bible and there are fifty-two Sundays in the year. The half hour or more allowed for teaching the lesson is sometimes shortened at both ends by announcements, etc., all good, no doubt, but not many of them, if any at all, of so lasting value to the pupil and the church of Christ as a few minutes engaged in the exercise of learning and reviewing the names of these books after a drill in the individual class. R. CORBETT.

"Billy" Sunday in the East

The evangelist, Rev. William A. (Billy) Sunday, closed a seven weeks' campaign at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., last month. This was his first appearance in a typically conservative eastern city.

In figures the results of the campaign are 16,600 signed cards, signifying that this number of people went forward at Mr. Sunday's invitation. Of these, probably a fourth are already members of churches, who for one reason or another felt a desire for reconsecration. Of the remainder at least 8,000 will join some church, almost at once. But the most important results cannot be set down in figures. Literally thousands of men have been brought to stop drinking and swearing. Hundreds of homes are made over again. The moral tone of the Wyoming valley is vastly higher than before, and a resulting campaign for civic righteousness is now inevitable.

All this is important, but the biggest thing about it is that it has been done in an old, conservative, wealthy city of the East. Everybody knew what Mr. Sunday had done in certain parts of the West. But many were skeptical as to his success in older communities. He has accomplished more than was dreamed possible by the promoters of the campaign. His own words, dictated for this article, indicate his feeling in the matter:

"The East seems to be ripe for evangelism beyond my fondest dream. There is a revolt from error to truth—from Unitarianism, Universalism, Christian Science and the so-called "new thought" back to the old-time religion, hung to the nails of the cross."

The impression made by his methods and message upon all classes of people was profound. His characteristic attack upon indifferent churches and ministers was perhaps a little less lurid than usual, but none the less sincere. His slang and platform demeanor did not in the least harm the movement. And his message was a faithful, earnest, truthful presentation of the real gospel. No eastern community need fear that Mr. Sunday will fail, if he can be persuaded to come to them.

Three things he did at Wilkes-Barre, and probably can do anywhere in the East:

1. He persuaded a large number of people, a majority of them men, to make a definite profession of religion, without any attempt at emotional or hysterical appeal. Few communities in the East have for generations seen anything like it.

2. He dynamited the crust of indifference which had been permitted to spread over the community. Nobody else had been able to do it. He did it. The result is a distinct stand for moral and civic betterment on the part of the men.

3. He brought the churches together. Never before had all the churches been together on any proposition. For seven weeks they have worked together, without friction or quarrel, and are glad about it. If nothing else had been done, this one thing was worth the cost.

What did it cost? The expenses of the campaign were $16,600, and that amount was all raised by collections in the tabernacle the first four weeks of the campaign. The offering for Mr. Sunday was taken the last day and proved to be the largest he had ever received—over $23,000. It was given absolutely without begging, and without any machinery being used to raise it. The money question bothers nobody in Wilkes-Barre in connection with this campaign.

Possibly the best evidence that the East is ready for the peculiar powers of Mr. Sunday is that Scranton, the neighboring city, arranged with him for a campaign on an even larger scale than this one, within a year, and that at least three other cities have opened negotiations looking toward the same thing.

S. L. HAYNES.

Ways of Working

Fifteen-Year-Old Girl Brings Seventy-Five to Sunday School

Ella Nesbitt, a pupil in Richardson Memorial Sunday school, Philadelphia, was recently given a gold watch for her genius in adding members to the Sunday school. During the last few months she has brought in seventy-five boys and girls, increasing the attendance 15 per cent. Miss Nesbitt modestly denies that she has done anything wonderful. "I simply heard the pastor talk about how nice it would be to have a larger Sunday school, so I thought I might as well try to get the children in," she said. "So I asked every boy and girl I saw in the street in the neighborhood if they didn't want to join. Lots of them did, and four of them came the first Sunday. After that they came ten and fifteen at a time."

—Rev. Park H. Miller, pastor of the Church of the Evangel, Philadelphia, in connection with a series of evangelistic meetings issued a neat folder, a little different from the usual announcement. Under the flap entitled "Lay Hold" and showing a hand grasping the round of a ladder were folded six pages of printed matter announcing the meetings and giving reasons which would appeal to logical men why they should attend the series.

—The local paper of Kadoka, S. D., prints each week the church notices and news items and furnishes free of charge enough copies on slips to serve as church bulletins the following Sunday.

Early Summer Course at Princeton

Women will be admitted to the sessions of the Princeton Summer School of Theology, which will be held from May 26 to June 6. There will be no tuition or other expense except for board. Ministers, missionaries and workers of all denominations are invited. Information will be furnished by Rev. Paul Martin, Princeton, secretary of the faculty. Morning and evening sessions will be held, with a notable list of instructors and lecturers. Periods will be devoted to biblical themes, doctrinal subjects and methods of church work.

Among the prominent ministers of the country who will speak on the subject they know best are Frederick Loetscher, D. D.; John Dixon, D. D., secretary of the Board of Home Missions; Maitland Alexander, D. D., Pittsburg; William Brenton Greene, D. D.; Rev. John McDowell, Newark, N. J.; Rev. R. P. D. Bennett, Germantown, Pa.; L. W. Mudge, D. D., Lancaster, Pa.; Henry Wallace, D. D., Des Moines, Iowa; John R. Davies, D. D., Philadelphia; A. W. Halsey, D. D., secretary of the Foreign Board; Rev. S. W. Beach, Princeton, N. J.; Marcus A. Brownson, D. D., Philadelphia; Rev. Henry W. Frost, Germantown, Pa.; Rev. Francis Palmer, Trenton, N. J.; Rev. David Tompkins, Princeton, N. J.; Rev. Minot C. Morgan, Summit, N. J.; Andrew Taylor, D. D., Trenton, N. J.; Rev. C. A. R. Janvier, Philadelphia; President Patton of the seminary, President Hibben and Professor Ormond of Princeton University, J. Henry Jowett, D. D., New York City; Malcolm McLeod, D. D., New York City, and Harris E. Kirk, D. D., Baltimore, Md.

Seven Graduate at San Francisco

The annual commencement of the San Francisco Theological Seminary took place at San Anselmo April 24. In the morning the semiannual meeting of the alumni was addressed by Rev. W. E. Parker, Jr., of Olivet church, San Francisco. After luncheon for the guests from afar in the big tent on the hill the commencement address was made by John H. Boyd, D. D., of Portland, Ore. The presentation of diplomas was made by Thomas Boyd, D. D., of Fresno, president of the board of directors. There were seven in the class.

The preliminary oral examinations of the students were conducted by synod's committee, including Rev. Lynn T. White, Rev. Henry K. Sanbourne, E. A. Sturge, M. D., and the board's committee, consisting of Rev. David H. McCullagh, H. N. Mount, D. D., and W. E. McVay.

Strong Class Leaves McCormick

Commencement exercises of McCormick Theological Seminary were concluded in the Church of the Covenant last Thursday evening, April 24, with an admirable address on "Character and the Ministry" by Samuel S. Palmer, D. D., of Broad Street church, Columbus, Ohio, and by the conferring of diplomas upon forty-seven graduates by President McClure of the seminary. All public utterances of the speakers, including directors, members of the faculty and the alumni, as well as obvious indications in the classroom examinations, bespeak, to the joy of the whole church amidst her modern problems, a supreme desire for practical interpretation of Christian doctrine and academic teachings in answer to the needs of the day. This is apparently the dominant note in McCormick Seminary today, while enthusiasm for scholarship never ran higher among professors and students, and the tests of the curriculum were never more severe.

Cleland B. McAfee, D. D.

During the eight years of Dr. McClure's presidency the scholastic and practical in the institution have developed side by side. Every member of the faculty has deep and keen interest in everything that concerns the work of the church. Such is notably the case in connection with Dr. Edgar P. Hill's work in the Church Extension Board of Chicago Presbytery and Dr. Andrew C. Zenos's work as president of Olivet Institute.

During the year 159 students have been enrolled, the largest number in ten years. The middle and senior classes had the largest enrollment.

Samuel J. Niccolls, D. D., LL. D., now in the forty-eighth year of his distinguished pastorate in St. Louis, completed his fortieth year as a member of the board of directors of the seminary. His conspicuous service was suitably recognized by the directors and alumni. Dr. Niccolls delivered a brief address to the graduating class. Neal A. McCaulay, D. D., of Lyons, Iowa, presided at the alumni banquet, where brief addresses were made by representatives of the various classes. Daniel E. Williamson, D. D., of Rockford, Ill., was elected president of the alumni association.

Inauguration of Dr. C. B. McAfee

The outstanding feature of the commencement exercises was the inauguration of Cleland B. McAfee, D. D., as professor in the Cyrus H. McCormick chair of didactic theology. The inauguration services took place at 3 o'clock in the chapel of the seminary, and were preceded by an impressive processional and program of services. Dr. Niccolls presided. Pres-

Making Good

The average man wants to "make good" and the minister is no exception to the rule. Most ministers do make good, the "small talk" of the world (and sometimes of the church) to the contrary notwithstanding.

The minister is not content with making good, however. He wants to make the best of his talents and opportunities. He longs to spend and be spent in the ministry of the gospel.

Can the minister either make good or make his best unless his non-productive old age is adequately provided for?

Is it fair to expect him to give the "dew of his youth" and the vigor of his manhood to the church, and then alone to bear the brunt of old age with its necessities and infirmities?

Will the church help its ministers to make good,—to make best?

If you are interested write,

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building Philadelphia, Pa.

ident McClure, Dr. W. M. Hindman, Dr. N. A. McCaulay, Dr. C. A. Lippincott and Dr. William Chalmers Covert had part in the services. The singing of the seminary choir was notable.

After the formal signing of the declaration and the prayer of inauguration Dr. McAfee delivered his inaugural address on "The Westminster Confession and the Present Work of the Church." It was a most impressive and significant message. It was a very frank and appreciatory statement of the great Confession, recognizing its easily explainable limitations of content and interpretation, in view of its age, but earnestly magnifying its basic qualities as a platform of modern service of the church in the midst of a needy world. The address met with enthusiastic approval from the alumni. Professor McAfee brings to the chair of systematic theology, made vacant by the death of Dr. Willis Green Craig two years since, an experience in practical pastoral work, and his address was fine evidence of how his teaching is to be colored by his experience with the gospel among the people. The charge to Dr. McAfee was delivered by Dr. Niccolls.

The board of directors took action in regard to the death of Rev. Daniel W. Fisher, who for thirty years was an active member of the board and for twenty years its vice-president. Honorable John H. Holliday of Indianapolis was elected to succeed Dr. Fisher as vice-president of the board.

Prizes Awarded for Scholarship

The following fellowships and prizes were bestowed:

Bernardine Orme Smith fellowship, general excellence, Ralph Cummins.

Nettie F. McCormick fellowship, Old Testament Hebrew, Spafford E. Kelsey.

T. B. Blackstone fellowship, New Testament Greek, Willard H. Robinson, Jr.

Old Testament essay, C. K. Orsborne.

Isabelle Blackstone, New Testament department, first, W. M. Orr; second, J. H. Varner.

Isabelle Blackstone, history department, first, D. Riemann; second, W. F. McDermott.

Henry P. Crowell, systematic theology, first, Harvey E. Holt; second, Ralph Cummins.

John V. Farwell, homiletics, first, G. A. Papermann; second, E. J. Carson.

Hugh McBirney, English Bible, first, Mr. Marbach; second, Leo C. Lake.

Following are the names of members of the graduating class: Charles K. Alexander, James Albert Ayres, David John Brigham, Harold Russell Browne, Carl Ferdinand Bruhn, Edward John Carson, Archie Condy, Robert T. Cordry, George Andrew Crawford, Ralph Cummins, Nelson William Dalenberg, Paul Clinton Elliott, Edward Albert Finn, John Roscoe Fitzgerald, Paul W. Gauss, George Edward Griffiths, Ezra Henry Guinther, Jesse Willis Hamblin, Earle Ivan Hamlin, Earl Douglas Hillis, William Blake Hindman, Harvey Ellis Holt, William Andrew Horne, Chester Martindale Irwin, Roland Lee Register Jones, Spafford Earl Kelsey, Howell Portman Lair, Acorsinio Vasquez Luzero, John Archibald McEwen, William John Malcolm, James Thompson Mordy, Charles Bailey Murphy, Gustav Adolph Papperman, George Merriman Payne, Clifford Harvey Perea, Walter Gregg Pitkin, Willard R. Robinson, Jr., William Thaddeus Salmon, George Henry Scherer, Thomas Gelston Shaw, Sojiro Shimizu, Milton Webster Strahler, John Youngson Thomson, James Garfield Waits, Robert A. White, William Mansfield White, Craig G. Whitsitt.

Gospel Mission Workers to Meet

The National Federation of Gospel Missions is to hold its sixth annual convention in New York City May 12 to 15. The sessions are to be held in Calvary Baptist church morning, afternoon and evening of each day. It is expected that 100 pulpits in the city will be occupied by the visitors May 11. On one of the convention days, not yet fixed, noon meetings will be held at points all the way from the Battery to Harlem, the speakers to be chiefly the visiting delegates. The program has not yet been completed, but will provide for the discussion of the many phases of mission work and the relations between the church and missions. It is understood that among the speakers will be many noted gospel missionaries and brilliant preachers of the city. The president of the federation is Sidney Whittemore of New York; treasurer, John H. Wyburn, New York, and secretary, Mrs. S. M. Wyburn, New York. Mr. Whittemore is convention chairman.

Protest and Reply in New York Presbytery

PROTEST

The undersigned respectfully protest against the action of the Presbytery of New York at its meeting April 14 in licensing Messrs. Murray, Holbrook, Bird and van Dyke for the following reasons—inter alia:

1. Their examinations in presbytery showed unmistakably that they did not accept the historical reliability of the Scriptures, either the Old or the New Testaments. They explicitly declared that they did not know whether or not they believed the story of the erection of the tabernacle in accordance with the pattern showed to Moses in the mount as related in the Pentateuch. This sufficiently shows their attitude toward the Old Testament. Still further they explicitly refused to affirm their faith either in the virgin birth of Christ as related in the gospel of Luke and Matthew, or in the raising of Lazarus from the dead as related in the gospel of John. This sufficiently shows their attitude to the New Testament.

2. Two of them, Murray and Bird, in response to questions declared that in spite of this they could honestly repeat the apostles' creed, including the article about the virgin birth. They explained that they meant by that article that they believed in the sinless humanity and the deity of Christ and not the historical fact itself, which they were not prepared to affirm. Your protestants, while wishing to do no injustice to the candidates, are constrained to ask if they could repeat the apostles' creed in such a sense, in what sense do they subscribe to the Confession of Faith?

3. The presbytery by its action deliberately refuses to pay any heed to the action of two General Assemblies—one in 1910 (see Minutes, pages 272-3) and again in 1911 (see Minutes, page 140)—both of which declared belief in these fundamental facts of the gospel and likewise in the final authority of the Holy Scriptures to be essential to an honest acceptance of the Confession of Faith.

JOHN FOX,
H. M. TYNDALL,
JOHN A. PARK.

REPLY

The Presbytery of New York in replying to the protest of Dr. Fox, Dr. H. M. Tyndall and Elder John A. Park to the licensure of Messrs. Murray, Holbrook, Bird and van Dyke calls attention to the fact that as no new matters are complained of but those which have been repeated year after year in similar protests signed by a constantly decreasing number of protestants, it would take no notice of this paper whatsoever, were it not for the injustice which its publication does both to the licentiates involved and to the presbytery in misrepresenting their position. The insinuation of insincerity in the acceptance of the Confession of Faith on the part of the candidates has been made again and again during recent years in connection with the licensure of men whose devoted labors in the churches have abundantly evidenced the genuineness of their characters and disproved such ungenerous suspicions.

The candidates, both in their written statements of personal belief and in response to questions before presbytery, declared their hearty and full acceptance of the evangelical faith, receiving the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as the rule of faith and practice, trusting Jesus Christ as God manifest in the flesh, and believing in a God who is able to work miracles. Further, they did not deny the historic fact of any event recorded in either Old or New Testament. In reply to certain questions concerning matters of literary and historical investigation, on which differences of opinion exist not only among scholars throughout practically all Protestant Christendom but also among respected teachers in the Presbyterian churches of Great Britain, Canada and the United States, they felt that they as yet lacked sufficient light to come to positive conclusions. In behalf of the Presbytery of New York.

HENRY SLOANE COFFIN,
JESSE F. FORBES.

It has been reported that Dr. Francis L. Patton, president of Princeton Seminary and former president of the university, will resign and retire from active work at the end of the present seminary year. Dr. Patton is more than seventy years old and has held his present position since 1902.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
A Pure, Grape Cream
Tartar Baking Powder

Royal Baking Powder improves the flavor and adds to the healthfulness of the food.

Brotherhood to Meet at Atlanta

Council Joins in a Recommendation to Make That Body Permanent Committee on Men's Work, Named by Assembly.

President Charles S. Holt of the national council gives notice that a convention of the Presbyterian Brotherhood of America will be held at the Kimball hotel, Atlanta, Ga., Tuesday, May 20, at 6:30 p. m. The basis of representation will be in accordance with the constitution, viz., one delegate for each affiliated organization and one delegate for each 100 active members or fraction thereof (not less than twenty-five) in excess of the first 100.

The purpose of this convention is to amend the constitution in accordance with the joint recommendations made by Assembly's committees on Christian life and work and the special advisory committee on the Brotherhood, which have been approved by the Brotherhood Council, subject to the action of the Assembly. The general effect of these recommendations, if adopted, will be to make the Brotherhood Council a permanent committee on all forms of men's work in the church, to consist of fifteen members (six ministers and nine laymen), who shall be elected by the Assembly instead of by the Brotherhood in convention, as at present. It is believed that the closer relation thus constituted between the Brotherhood and the Assembly will be of great advantage to all. The proceedings will doubtless be brief, occupying a few moments between the conference and supper. Further particulars regarding the convention or the conference and supper can be obtained from Rev. Walter Getty, genera secretary, 509 South Wabash avenue, Chicago

April 7 George Cleeland was elected superintendent of Philadelphia Fourth church Sunda school for the thirty-fourth consecutive year

Gail Borden
EAGLE
BRAND
CONDENSED
MILK
THE ORIGINAL
Has Nourished Three Generations of Babies and Started Them on the Road to a Healthy Maturity.
Send for Baby Book
BORDEN'S CONDENSED MILK CO., New York

What Presbyteries Are Doing

Seattle Presbytery met in University church. Rev. T. H. Lewis of Georgetown church was elected moderator. The executive commission made recommendations which were unanimously adopted—a benevolent schedule for the year of approximately $8,000, adoption of the budget system, increase in giving of 10 per cent over the past year, forwarding quarterly of the benevolences. A strong resolution was adopted without debate directed against the recent attacks upon the Home Board. This was to the effect that complaints should be made and desired changes wrought through the Executive Commission or on the floor of the Assembly itself, and not through the public prints to influence the public mind in advance of efforts to be made through proper channels. Presbytery also expressed its confidence in the board. W. O. Forbes, D. D., was heartily indorsed to continue in his dual work representing the Sunday school and home mission work of presbytery. Dr. Matthews made an address relative to the general conditions in the church as he has observed them during the past year. Four churches have gone on the honor roll of self-support—Georgetown, T. H. Lewis pastor; Vashon, A. N. Smith pastor; Green Lake, A. A. J. Hogg pastor; Bremerton, W. H. Koper pastor.

New Plan of Church Union

Transylvania Presbytery at Greensburg, Ky., adopted unanimously a resolution that charges of extravagance against the Home Board are without justification. A plan for union of the northern and southern churches of Harrodsburg, Ky., devised by those churches themselves, and adopted, was sanctioned by presbytery. The southern church will ask their presbytery to approve it. The plan is new in that, while it secures complete local union of the two congregations, it provides for joint control of the united church by the courts of the churches U. S. and U. S. A., for representation in the courts of both, for the equal division of benevolent contributions and that reports be made alike to both.

Utica Presbytery at Little Falls, N. Y., elected Rev. Arthur J. Wyman of Little Falls moderator. Presbytery declined to sanction the overture asking for the election of board secretaries by the Assembly and otherwise showed itself out of sympathy with current criticisms of some of the boards. Rev. Henry White of Clinton was chosen stated clerk in place of Rev. Oliver A. Kingsbury, who is closing a pastorate of twenty-two years with New Hartford church and has been made pastor emeritus. Presbytery urged all its churches to attempt to bring their gifts to the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation up to the amount of their respective apportionments for synodical missions as a minimum.

Steubenville Presbytery at Scio, Ohio, elected Rev. O. J. Gregg moderator. Nodie B. Wilson was examined and licensed to preach. Rev. Donald W. McLeod of East Liverpool, Ohio, First church gave a popular address on foreign missions. A special committee on Sabbath observance was appointed for the purpose of working with other presbyteries and churches for the repeal of the Ohio Sunday ball law.

No permanent debts on church property in Washington Presbytery can be contracted without permission of presbytery. Action was taken after announcement of the completion of a fund of $91,000 to pay debts on Washington churches. Presbytery will unite soon with Dr. William H. Edwards of Clifton, Va., in the celebration of his fiftieth anniversary as a pastor.

Saginaw Presbytery met in Washington Avenue church, Saginaw. Rev. Charles M. Boyce was elected moderator. Rev. E. H. Bradfield and President Thomas C. Blaisdell of Alma College addressed presbytery at an evening popular meeting. Reverends R. L. D. Preston, J. H. Fleming, Charles M. Boyce and William Sidebotham spoke.

Forty Wayne Presbytery at LaGrange church chose Rev. William E. Hunter moderator. The narrative showed the best year in every way that presbytery has probably ever known. Additions are larger; gifts greater. Winona Lake, through Rev. S. C. Dickey, asked for the organization of a Presbyterian church.

Indorses Home Board

Laramie Presbytery met at Rawlins, Wyo. Rev. John P. Davis was elected moderator.

UNDERFEED
FURNACE BOILER
Cuts Your Coal Bill ½ to ⅔

THE UNDERFEED way of coal burning insures a dollar's worth of heat for every dollar spent for coal. In all ordinary heaters ½ to ⅔ of every dollar thus spent goes up the chimney, absolutely wasted in smoke and gases. In the Underfeed, these valuable heat units must pass through the flames, are consumed and make more heat. Send for FREE booklet, which clearly proves how an Underfeed—Warm Air Furnace or Steam or Hot Water Boiler soon pays for itself and then keeps on saving for you for a lifetime.

THE PECK Williamson Underfeed FURNACES BOILERS

No matter how much or how little your coal bill was last winter, put in an Underfeed and cut your heat expense in two, or even three. The Underfeed is an every-winter paying investment, because it provides clean, even, health-promoting heat at less cost than any other heater ever built.

Here's How: Cheaper grades of hard or soft coal, slack, pea and buckwheat sizes, which would smother fire in other heaters, in the Underfeed yield more heat than expensive grades in other heaters.

This is Why: Coal is fed from below. Fire is always on top, in direct contact with all radiating surfaces. Combustion is perfect. Fire is never blanketed under fresh coal. The old topfeed way chills the heater and causes uneven temperature in the house. No smoke, no gases, no clinkers and few ashes, easily removed by shaking the grate bar. Because all smoke is consumed, there is no soot in an underfeed and the fire-glow is always upon clean surfaces. In other heaters, soot-coated surfaces retard heat.

Underfeed heaters require less attention — only twice a day in coldest weather.

Here Are Two Examples

MERTON R. WOOD, First State Bank, Kermit, N. Dak., writes: "I kept my seven-room house—most exposed location—at temperature of 70 all the time and my Underfeed furnace burned about half the coal in dollars and cents that my neighbors did."

CHARLES B. WING, Corning, N. Y., writes: "With my Underfeed Boiler we burned pea coal, saving $1 per ton and 20% in quantity. Your heating principle is perfection."

Write for FREE Book, fac-simile testimonials and how to obtain free heating plans and estimate of cost.

The Peck - Williamson Co.
316 West Fifth Street, Cincinnati, O.

Send me UNDERFEED Furnace Book..............
Boiler Book..............
[Indicate by X Book you desire]

Name..
Address..
Name of my dealer..

Three Great Meetings for Men

At ATLANTA

I. POPULAR BROTHERHOOD MEETING, Sunday evening, May 18th, 8 o'clock, Central Congregational Church. Well-known speakers from the three Assemblies will make this a genuine Brotherhood meeting.

II. BROTHERHOOD CONFERENCE, Tuesday evening, May 20th, 5:30 o'clock, at Kimball Hotel. Subject of Conference, "The Best Methods of Men's Work in the Local Church."

III. BROTHERHOOD SUPPER, for men of the three assemblies, at Kimball Hotel, at 6:30 o'clock, following Conference. A time of rich fellowship is expected.

Price of Supper is $1.00, which admits to Conference. Requests for tickets, accompanied by check, draft or money-order, should be sent to Rev. Walter Getty, General Secretary, Presbyterian Brotherhood of America, 509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

Pulpit Gowns
and Choir Vestments
Custom Tailoring
for Clergymen. Suits from $20.00
Pulpit Hangings
COX SONS & VINING
72-74 Madison Ave. New York

TYPEWRITER AGENTS WANTED
Samples at Wholesale
Get in Business for Yourself
Big commissions — monthly payments — trial shipments. Typewriters from $28.50 up that formerly sold for $100. Write today for Agency Offer. Mention The Continent.
Factory — Grand Rapids, Mich.
MICHIGAN TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

A resolution strongly indorsing the Board of Home Missions and declaring Dr. Weaver's criticisms untrue and misleading was unanimously adopted. Overtures 1-5 were answered affirmatively, but overture 6 was denied. Presbytery's statistics showed a gain in church membership of 8 per cent. Rev. W. A. Henricks resigned as stated clerk and Rev. H. W. Bainton, Sunday school missionary, was elected.

Columbia Presbytery met at Valatie, N. Y. Rev. I. N. Steelman was elected moderator. The first five overtures were negatived and Nos. 6, 7 and 8 affirmed. Churches of Livingstonville and West Durham were declared extinct. There is a good state of material prosperity among the churches, but only a fair condition of spiritual health. Benevolent work has been well maintained during the year. The woman's missionary societies held very satisfactory meetings in connection with presbytery.

St. Cloud Presbytery met at Long Prairie. Rev. E. J. Clark of Paynesville was elected moderator. O. H. Campbell, elder of Litchfield, was appointed chairman of the home mission committee for the eleventh consecutive year. Three ministers had served this committee as chairman and retired for various reasons inside of four years when Mr. Campbell was first appointed. Presbytery needs two married missionary pastors. Salary $900 and manse.

Judge Elected Moderator

Oklahoma Presbytery at Meeker church elected Judge G. C. Abernathy, an elder in the Shawnee church, moderator. Such subjects as "The Importance of Longer Pastorates," "How to Cultivate the Country Work," "How to Interest the Young People" and "The Right Kind of Evangelism" were given special consideration in an interesting session.

Mattoon Presbytery reversed its vote of last fall on the five overtures on federated churches and negatived them. Andrew J. Taylor was deposed from the ministry on charges of unbecoming conduct. Rev. S. W. Patterson was honorably retired. Good Prospect, Shepla and Union churches, antiunion Cumberland organizations, were dropped. Rev. Ross S. McCown was elected moderator.

Indianapolis Presbytery met in Southport church. Overtures Nos. 7 and 8 affirmed and the remainder negatived. The coming of the representatives of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation in the interest of the $10,000,000 campaign was encouraged and a time after the close of the fiscal year recommended.

Providence Presbytery met in First church, Worcester, Mass. First church, Providence, presented a call to Rev. Lester M. Conrow of New Bedford. This church, however, opposed the translation of their pastor so strenuously that when he left the decision to presbytery they voted to retain him in his present charge.

Well Supplied with Pastors

Geneva Presbytery at Seneca Castle, N. Y., elected Rev. T. M. Morrison moderator. The six overtures relating to church federation and reduced representation were answered in the negative; 7 and 8 in the affirmative. J. Wilford Jacks, D. D., was reelected stated clerk. Nearly all the churches are supplied with pastors and most of them have received good additions to their membership.

Kearney Presbytery at Fullerton, Neb., elected Rev. A. F. Ernst, Ph. D., moderator. Rev. R. L. Purdy, Gibbon, Neb., was elected stated clerk. The Board of Home Missions was given a hearty vote of confidence and approval. Archie Jay Kearns was taken under care of presbytery.

Long Island Presbytery at West Hampton church elected Rev. Thomas C. Ogburn moderator. Overtures except the last two were negatived. Important action was taken looking toward the establishing of the family altar in many homes.

Westminster Presbytery at Wrightsville, Pa., licensed Walter P. Boardman and John F. Hagen of Princeton Seminary, enrolled Holtwood Presbyterian church, recently organized, and answered overtures Nos. 1-6 in negative, Sedalia Presbytery met at Holden, Mo. Rev. R. C. Williamson was elected moderator. J. H. Speer, D. D., synodical superintendent, addressed the presbytery on home missions.

Columbus Presbytery answered overtures 1-6 in the negative, reversing the action previously taken on the first five of these.

From Various Fields

Pennsylvania

Will Install Dr. Snowden

In connection with the commencement exercises of Western Theological Seminary at Pittsburg Dr. James Henry Snowden will be inducted professor of systematic theology May 8. The commencement exercises will begin with the baccalaureate sermon in North church, Pittsburg, at 11 o'clock Sunday. Thursday will be the meeting of the board of directors and reunion of classes. The commencement exercises take place at 3 o'clock in North church. The day will close with the dinner of the alumni association in the gymnasium of the new dormitory at 6 o'clock.

Robert Garland, one of Pittsburg's councilmen, addressed the brotherhood of Knoxville church at its annual banquet April 15.

Ohio

Toledo Churches Progressing

Dr. John S. Edenburn, who has recently come to First Westminster church of this city, is attacking the downtown problem with hopeful enthusiasm. He has divided his parish into twenty districts, with a captain over each. The evening audience nearly equals in size the regular morning congregation.

The formal organization of Lodge Avenue church will start out with a membership of twenty. A Sunday school has been gathered in eight months with an enrollment of 120.

Rosewood Avenue church has approved plans for a $35,000 building. The present chapel is inadequate to the needs of the congregation. The budget for the past year shows $6,000 given by all departments of the church to the work.

East Side church is steadily meeting its building indebtedness. There now remains but something like $2,000 and the church will be free of debt. Rev. Walter F. Eagleson is pastor.

GEORGE MCKAY.

New Jersey

The congregation of Knox church, Kerny, has more than doubled since Rev. Robert T. Graham became pastor several months ago.

April 13 the congregation of First church, Williamsport, dedicated their new house of worship. The sermon was preached by Rev. C. E. Schaible, moderator of Synod of Kansas. An appeal to raise $3,000 indebtedness brought $4,400. The building will seat about 600 and the entire cost of the property with furnishings amounted to $17,000. Since Rev. H. G. McCool became pastor over two years ago not only has this new building been erected but the membership of the church has been more than doubled.

Oklahoma

Rev. A. E. Wardner, Jr., pastor of First church, Nowata, has been working largely with the boys of this city and has organized a band of the Knights of King Arthur and is scout master of a large boys' scout troop. It was recently decided to enlarge the church basement to make space for a gymnasium and reading room for the boys.

Illinois

A district conference of men will be held at Bloomington May 6. Among speakers will be Dr. A. R. Taylor, Rev. Walter Getty, Rev. L. W. Madden, Rev. Roger F. Cressy and Dr. W. M. Hayes.

California

The fortieth annual meeting of the Woman's Occidental Board of Foreign Missions held in San Francisco April 15-17 was attended by over 200 delegates from Utah, Arizona and California Synods. A unique feature of the meeting was the presentation of an historic sketch of

See America's ONLY
Geyserland
YELLOWSTONE
PARK and PACIFIC COAST TRIPS

Northern Pacific Ry.

Personally conducted excursions from Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis to and through Yellowstone Park, every week June 22nd to Sept. 7th.

The no-bother most-pleasure way of traveling.

Make reservations early. Low fares for Yellowstone and Pacific Coast trips. Through sleeping cars direct to Gardiner Gateway, the Northern Pacific entrance to Yellowstone Park, daily during season, June 15 to Sept. 15.

Write for details and enclose this coupon with three two cent stamps for de luxe Yellowstone view album, easily worth a dollar. Address A. M. CLELAND, G. P. A., ST. PAUL.

Name.........................

Address.........................

The Continent, May 1

The Southwestern Presbyterian
SANATORIUM
FOR TUBERCULOSIS

Under direction of the Synod of NEW MEXICO and approved by the PRESBYTERIAN GENERAL ASSEMBLY

FINEST CLIMATE. EXCELLENT BOARD. MODERN CONVENIENCES. AGREEABLE ASSOCIATIONS. BEST NURSING AND MEDICAL SUPERVISION. LOWEST POSSIBLE COSTS consistent with right care. For full information address the superintendent, Rev. H. A. Cooper, Albuquerque, New Mexico.

Endowments of beds and cottages will help us to care for more clergymen and others who may be saved by proper treatment.

The Only Self-Help College in Illinois
BLACKBURN COLLEGE HAS $23,000 TO EDUCATE YOUNG MEN FOR THE PRESBYTERIAN MINISTRY
WRITE President Hudson, Carlinville, Illinois

the board by Mrs. E. V. Robbins, from the beginning a faithful member of the board and now in her eighty-first year. The thank offering for the Sharrock hospital at Pyeng Yang amounted to $7,500. An extra thousand was also raised for furnishings. Among the many addresses made those by Rev. Graham Lee of Korea, Miss Donaldina Cameron, superintendent of the Occidental Home, and Rev. H. H. McQuilkin of San Jose were of great interest. The meeting closed with a supper at First church, where the president, Mrs. H. B. Pinney, outlined plans for the new year. The same officers were elected.

Michigan

The salary of the pastor at Brooklyn has been increased for the coming year.

Memorial church, Detroit, during the year has added largely to its membership, met its budget of $8,000 and closed the year free of debt. Rev. J. Marcus Skinner is pastor.

The annual meeting of Westminster church, Bay City, showed substantial growth in all departments. The adult Bible class recently gave their teacher and pastor, Rev. Charles E. Marvin, as an expression of appreciation, a handsome purse.

The United Congregational-Presbyterian church is proposed by a committee appointed by the two churches of Kalamazoo. It is probable that the Congregational edifice will be used and Presbyterian property sold, although Dr. Henry W. Gelston of the Presbyterian church will be pastor of the united church. The report will soon be up for adoption by the two congregations.

New York

The experiment is being tried of opening the Sunday school room of Dundee church on Saturdays for use of farmers who are in the city for that day.

Hogarth Memorial parish house was dedicated at Geneva recently by the pastor of North church, Rev. David H. Craver. Dr. George B. Stewart preached the sermon.

The installation of Rev. Walter B. Jorris as pastor of Grace church, Rochester, took place April 15. Mr. Jorris began his work at Grace church the first Sunday in March. All the services are largely attended. At the morning service and at the prayer meeting there is often standing room only. The trustees are planning for the erection of a manse. A five minute children's service every Sunday morning is bringing a large number of the children to that service.

School and College

The alumni of Auburn Seminary have prepared an interesting program in connection with the commencement May 6-8. One of the days will be devoted to a discussion of various phases of the boy problem by prominent boy workers. The annual sermon before the alumni association will be given by Rev. Robert Clement, '94, of Erie, Pa.

The commencement of Omaha Theological Seminary will be held Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 5-7. At the seminary dinner Tuesday evening Dr. M. A. Matthews, moderator, will be the speaker. The class will receive diplomas on Wednesday evening. The speakers will be Dr. H. W. Reherd, Waterloo, Iowa; Rev. Charles A. Arnold, Kansas City, and Elbert J. Nickerson.

Good Things in This Issue

Of all the many worth while things in this issue of The Continent there is one sentence on page 599 which may well be pondered upon and passed along. It occurs in Mrs. Hillis's splendid article, "Comrades—the Girl and Her Mother": "There is no larger thing than the keeping of a peaceful, restful, helpful home." This article will provoke many a young girl to earnest thought. Perhaps some friend of yours would be helped if you should mail her your copy of this issue.

In the next issue the children are to have a special treat in a story by Winthrop Packard, "Father Bird and the Chippies' Nest." It will be specially illustrated.

HEINZ
PEANUT BUTTER
57
HEINZ
SPAGHETTI
A L'ITALIENNE
57 VARIETIES
The Food that Builds Rugged Children

Thousands of youngsters ask for Heinz Peanut Butter every meal. Just because of its delicious flavor. Parents have a deeper reason for wanting them to have it. Children's food must go into growth, as well as satisfy appetite. They need protein. And is rich in this valuable element. Little folks revel in it while it builds them up. The choicest peanuts, picked over and over to exclude all but the perfect kernels—roasted till the delicate flavor is fully brought out—then salted and ground. Made into creamy butter. One of the best of the

Heinz Peanut Butter

57 Varieties

And grown folks rival children in demanding Heinz Peanut Butter. Many housewives use it for cooking and for the table. Fine for luncheon sandwiches. Get a jar today.

Others of the famous "57": Euchred Pickle, Chili Sauce, Vinegars, Tomato Ketchup, Baked Beans, India Relish, etc.

H. J. Heinz Co.

Over 50,000 Visitors Inspect the Heinz Model Kitchens Every Year

Have You Tried the New Heinz Spaghetti?

—Real Italian Style —with that delicate, finer flavor — the piquancy and richness of the dish as served in the most famous restaurants of Italy.

Better even than best home-made. Appetizing—digestible — nourishing. Prepared in a jiffy.

New Head for Lake Forest Academy

Professor John Wayne Richards, now instructor in physics and mathematics at Hotchkiss School, Lakeville, Conn., has been selected to succeed William Mather Lewis as headmaster of Lake Forest Academy. Mr. Richards is a native of Ohio and was a high school principal in that state for four years before entering Yale. From Yale he went in 1906 to Hotchkiss School, where he has been exceedingly popular with the boy students. His work at Lake Forest will begin in June.

Mr. Lewis, the retiring headmaster, will spend a year or more in Europe.

East Northfield
Massachusetts

THE NORTHFIELD

OPEN ALL THE YEAR

At the seat of the Northfield Conferences and Summer Schools. Desirable place for a spring or summer vacation. A comfortable Family Hotel with Sun Parlor. Sun parlor, steam heat, electric lights, private baths, livery and fireproof garage. Illustrated booklet free.

A. G. MOODY, Manager
H. S. STONE, Ass't. Man.

Program for Presbyterian Day

Large Dinner to Close Denominational Day at World in Chicago–Borden Will Leaves Fortune to Missions.

CHICAGO—Interest is being aroused in the program for Presbyterian Day at "The World in Chicago" May 12. The exposition opens Saturday afternoon and Secretary of State Bryan is scheduled for an address on Sunday afternoon at the Auditorium. The sale of tickets is progressing in all the churches of the city and the response to the request for display of pennants has been large. The program for May 12 as announced by Dr. W. H. Wray Boyle will open with a popular assembly in the Coliseum at 10:30 a. m., with Dr. George L. Robinson in the chair. Among the speakers will be Dr. W. E. Purvis, Home Board of the U. P. Church; Rev. F. E. Higgins, sky pilot of the lumber woods; Rev. J. C. Garrett, missionary to China, and Mrs. Diefenderfer, student of Mormonism. At the simultaneous meetings at 3:30 p. m. Presbyterian representatives will be in fifteen booths. Among those to speak are Rev. W. H. Reed, "Egypt"; Miss Alda Atchison, "Mohammedanism"; Dr. Gordon, "India"; Miss Wilson, "The Zenanas"; Dr. Young, "Alaska"; Hans Freece, "Mormonism"; Rev. J. C. Garrett, "China"; Rev. Frank E. Higgins, "The Lumber Woods"; Rev. Walter J. Clark, "India"; Carl J. Skellman, "Siam"; Rev. J. J. DeMott, "American Indians"; Mrs. T. F. Esselstyn, "Persia"; Miss W. J. Jackson, "Freedmen." A procession of stewards will take place at 4:30 p. m., when 500 Presbyterian stewards will appear under the leadership of Dr. John Timothy Stone. In the banquet hall of the Coliseum at 6:15 p. m., in charge of the Presbyterian brotherhood, will be the Presbyterian reunion dinner. Reception at 6 o'clock. Several stirring addresses by representative men; music by the Hampton Institute quartet; $1 a plate. Dr. William Chalmers Covert will be toastmaster. Reservations should be made through Dr. Fox, chairman dinner committee, 509 South Wabash avenue.

AID FOR INFIRM MISSIONARIES

Large bequests to misisons were made by Rev. W. W. Borden, the young Chicago millionaire who died recently in Cairo while preparing to be a missionary in China. To the China Inland mission he bequeathed $250,000, of which $100,000 is to be used for aged and infirm missionaries. Moody church and Moody Institute each get $100,000, as does the Bible Institute of New York. The will gives $50,000 each to Princeton Seminary, Foreign Boards U. P., Southern and Northern Churches. The Chicago Tract Society, American Bible Society, Africa Inland mission and Nile Mission press $25,000 each. The property of Yale Hope mission is given to the Presbyterian Church.

The Chicago Church Federal Council has asked all the Protestant ministers to observe Mothers' Day May 11 by speaking on the proposed legislation to safeguard marriage and limit divorce in the state.

The April number of the bulletin of the Presbyterian hospital contains the annual reports of the woman's auxiliary board. Mrs. D. W. Graham was elected president. Results from the plan of soliciting money by other ways than through public entertainments indicated that the plan should be continued. The social service committee reported that 1,097 calls had been made and 724 new cases handled. During the year thousands of glasses of jelly, preserves and other delicacies were sent to the hospital.

The fathers' and sons' dinner at Austin church last Friday was attended by 164 adherents of the church. A larger interest of the men in the boys of the congregation has been the outgrowth of the recent activity among the men of the church.

BIG WEEK FOR BOHEMIAN MISSIONS

The Presbyterian Bohemian settlement house on South Center avenue, in which the Church Extension Board and Women's Home Mission Society cooperate, has had a happy week in the dedication of its new home. The building is pronounced remarkably well planned for its purposes and an exceptional value for the money invested. It includes a large assembly hall, reception and class rooms, gymnasium, baths, laundry, cooking and sewing departments, kindergarten, living rooms for the residents and other facilities for this growing work. Only

THE WORLD IN CHICAGO
EVERY WEEK DAY—MAY 3 TO JUNE 7, INCLUSIVE

COLISEUM
GREAT MISSIONARY EXPOSITION
REPRODUCING LIFE AND SCENES IN EVERY LAND
Open 12 Noon to 10 p. m.
ADMISSION 25c CHILDREN 15c

AUDITORIUM
PAGEANT OF DARKNESS AND LIGHT
PORTRAYING FOUR TRIUMPHAL EVENTS IN THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS
2:30 and 8:15 p. m.
RESERVED SEATS—50c TO $1.50

Christian Ideals prevail at
FERRY HALL

Parents interested in selecting a boarding school where Christian ideals prevail should investigate Ferry Hall at Lake Forest, Illinois. In addition to a college preparatory course, which leading colleges of the country accept without examination, a two-year Junior College course for high school graduates is offered, for which credit is given by a number of universities. Thorough courses in Art, Music, Expression and Domestic Science are also maintained.
A Young Women's Christian Association and regular church attendance promote a Christian atmosphere. A glee club, language clubs, state clubs and a current events club form democratic social groups having useful aims. Out-of-door life contributes to good health. Swimming pool.
Write for further information to

MISS FRANCES L HUGHES
Box 123, Lake Forest, Illinois

M. P. MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS

Builder of the large electric organs in Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, Ohio (2 organs); Russell Sage Memorial Presbyterian Church, Far Rockaway, N.Y..and Bedford Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N.Y.; the three-manual organs in Westminster Presbyterian Church. Detroit, Mich., Presbyterian Church, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and instruments in almost 200 other Presbyterian Churches alone. Specifications and estimates on application. For catalogues and particulars,

Address, M. P. MÖLLER,
HAGERSTOWN, :: MARYLAND

CHAUTAUQUA
ORIENTAL TOURS

Egypt and Palestine May 10, $470. Leadership, Dr. Geo. L. Robinson of McCormick Seminary. Other tours to Central Europe, British Isles and Scandinavian countries.

The Chautauqua Tours (Inc.)
1521 Marquette Building :: Chicago, Ill.

Professors, Teachers and Others

Join Archaeological and Geological Exploration Expedition on Horseback under the distinguished Geologist, Professor James Perrin Smith of Stanford University, from the Cliff-Dwellings in S. W. Colorado by Great Natural Bridges in S. E. Utah, thence down Colorado River and through Grand Canyon, Arizona—the expedition covering the region of the World's Greatest Natural Wonders, July 9 to August 23. For particulars and Reservations address R. R. Smith, Cortez, Colorado.

The Best Way

The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.
INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

Dubuque College Band leading the way at a recent celebration

400,000 Young Men

In an average year nearly half a million young men enter the United States to find homes. They come for the larger opportunities which they have been told are here. Some interpret liberty as license. Few acquire connections with religious institutions. Each year we graduate men of many different races who become religious leaders and guides to their fellow countrymen here. As this is a work in which all Presbyterians are interested, we believe they all will feel responsibility for the success of our institution when they really know about what it is doing.

Dubuque Ready to help

Tell us that we may send you details of this interesting process of making Americans. Address Dubuqe German College and Seminary, C. M. Steffens, D.D., President, Dubuque, Ia.

WE SHIP ON APPROVAL
without a cent deposit, prepay the freight and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL.
IT ONLY COSTS one cent to learn our unheard of prices and marvelous offers on highest grade 1913 model bicycles.
FACTORY PRICES Do not buy a bicycle or a pair of tires from anyone at any price until you write for our large Art Catalog and learn our wonderful proposition on first sample bicycle going to your town.
RIDER AGENTS everywhere are making big money exhibiting and selling our bicycles. We Sell cheaper than any other factory.
TIRES, Coaster-Brake rear wheels, lamps, repairs and all sundries at half usual prices.
Do Not Wait; write today for our special offer.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. S-304 CHICAGO

SMITH GRANITE MONUMENTS
Every production Characteristically distinctive. Perfection in the Granite Cutter's art.
Write for booklets.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO. :: Westerly, R. I.

OPEN AIR Exhibition
STEREOPTICONS
A Great Soul-Winning Campaign for the Summer Months. Indoors or outdoors.
The Christian Lantern Slide & Lecture Bureau
30 W. LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

PRESBYTERIAN
TRAINING SCHOOL
of Chicago
for Christian Workers
Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

The Church has her Evangelists patrolling the highways, urging people to accept her Head as Saviour and Master. For the training of such men there are many schools—notable among them the Moody Bible Institute.

The Church has her Ordained Ministers standing at the door inviting people to come in and doing their utmost to take care of them after they are in. For the training of such men there are our splendid Theological Schools—notable among them McCormick Theological Seminary.

The Church needs a corps of assistant housekeepers, trained in ecclesiastical domestic science, who shall conserve the time and strength of the pastor, and, under his direction, guard the back door and apply scientific rules of church household economics.

The preparation of such a corps is one of the tasks for which the Presbyterian Training School was established. If you are interested in the process or the product write for information.

H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

Illinois

THE DIVINITY SCHOOL
OF
The UNIVERSITY of CHICAGO
Summer Quarter, 1913
First Term begins June 16 Second Term begins July 24

COURSES will be offered in the Old Testament by Professors Willett, Smith, Luckenbill, and J. F. McCurdy of the University of Toronto; New Testament by Professors Burton, Votaw, Goodspeed, and Case; Systematic Theology by Professors Mathews and Smith; Church History by Professor Moncrief; Practical Theology by Professors Soares, Hoben, and Green; Practical Sociology by Professor Henderson; Public Speaking by Professor Blanchard; Music by Mr. Stevens. Courses in other departments of the University are open to students in the Divinity School.

Address the Dean for further information

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE
RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

HARRY W. JONES
Minneapolis, Church Architect Minnesota.

a few thousand dollars is needed to complete the cost of the equipment. Doctors John Timothy Stone, John Balcom Shaw and Edgar P. Hill participated in the service on Sunday afternoon, the Bohemian dedication in the evening being in charge of Mr. Vanek. The successful outcome of this movement is in large measure due to Elder C. D. B. Howell of Evanston First church.

DR. SHAW NOT YET DECIDED

Immanuel church of Los Angeles has extended a unanimous call to Dr. John Balcom Shaw of Second church, but he has not yet made his decision. Dr. Shaw has been a great power in the maintenance of the important Second church in an increasingly difficult field, and he is being strongly urged to remain. Immanuel is a fine church in a marvelously growing city, however, and it asserts its claim upon Dr. Shaw with inducements that appeal strongly to a man of his energy. Certain printed reports calculated to show that the church is seriously divided are authoritatively denied.

Irving Park Reformed church of 376 members, together with Dr. F. P. Baker, pastor, was received into presbytery Monday. Most of the members of this congregation were Presbyterians, although allied to another denomination.

Additions to presbytery increased the possible number of commissioners to General Assembly and Dr. W. S. P. Bryan and John K. Scott, first alternates, were elected by presbytery.

Rev. S. B. Pinney was installed pastor of the newly created Pioneer church, Forest Park, April 27. This church is a branch from Oak Park church.

Hold Two Services for China

Special Presbyterian Gatherings in New York —Fail to Merge Two Congregations - Special Train to Atlanta.

NEW YORK—The appeal of China for prayer in behalf of the new republican government was answered by petitions offered in all the churches of Greater New York on Sunday, and also among Presbyterians by two special union services, one held in Brick church at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon, conducted by the pastor, Dr. Merrill, and another in First Chinese church, of which Rev. Huie Kin is pastor.

Fifth Avenue church gave a reception to Dr. John Henry Jowett, the pastor, and Mrs. Jowett the evening of April 27 in celebration of Dr. Jowett's second anniversary as pastor.

John A. Murray, Jr., and Chalmers Holbrook, two seniors in Union Theological Seminary, against whose licensure Dr. John Fox and a few others protested at last meeting of presbytery, were ordained evangelists the evening of April 23 in North church, of which Dr. John R. Mackay is pastor. There were about 500 present. Both young men have been lay assistants at the church for the last year. Mr. Murray was born and reared in this church.

J. Woodman Babbitt, a senior in Princeton, has been called to Calvary church, Newburg. He has been supplying here all winter. He will be ordained and installed the evening of May 14.

David R. Wylie, son of the pastor, was ordained a deacon in Scotch church April 27. He has taught a Sunday school class since he was 17 years old. He is a graduate of New York University and is a civil engineer.

TRAVEL TOGETHER TO ATLANTA

The General Assembly "special" from New York will leave the Pennsylvania station, 33d street, at 12:30 Tuesday, May 13, and is due to reach Atlanta at 12:45 Wednesday. Most of the commissioners, secretaries and wives are going on this train. The party will be honored with the presence of the vice-moderator and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. James Yereance.

Dr. David G. Wylie left April 27 for Dubuque, Iowa, to deliver the commencement address at Dubuque German College and Seminary.

Christ church, Rev. Theodore F. Savage pastor, gave a reception April 24 to the employees of the second division of the New York City post offices.

The Rescue Society, the midnight mission of Chinatown, celebrated its twentieth anniversary with a week of special services. Dr. William P. Merrill of Brick church spoke the evening of April 25.

The National Bible Institute under the lead-

Wisdom

Don't be in a hurry when you select your refrigerator. Danger lurks in the stagnant, soggy air and zinc linings of ice boxes built on incorrect principles. Find out about the always dry, sweet and clean designed to protect the health of the family. The McCray patented system of refrigeration constantly floods the provision chambers with a cold, dry current of lively air. Foods keep deliciously cool, fresh, sweet and untainted by odors. Easily cleaned linings of opal glass, enamel, porcelain or odorless white wood.

McCRAY Refrigerators

McCrays are quality refrigerators. Finest examples of cabinet work with perfectly fitting doors, selected woods, superior insulation and fine finish. Chosen by the U. S. Pure Food Laboratories and installed in the most luxurious institutions and private residences.

A wide range of stock sizes offers a choice to suit the smallest or largest family. Built-in-McCrays are designed as a part of the house and become a permanent feature for convenience and saving of steps. Outside icing door may be added to any McCray, thus keeping the iceman out of the house.

Write for our free book "How to Use a Refrigerator" and any of the following catalogs:

No. 90—Regular sizes for Residences.
No. 73—For Florists.
No. 49—For Hotels, Clubs, Institutions.
No. 69—For Grocers.
No. 60—For Meat Markets.
No. A. H.—Built-to-order for Residences.

McCRAY REFRIGERATOR CO.
583 Lake Street Kendallville, Ind.
Salesrooms in the following cities:

Chicago, 158 No. Wabash Ave. New York, 231 W. 42nd St. Philadelphia, 206 So. 11th St. Boston, 52 Commercial St. Cleveland, 1915 Euclid Ave. Detroit, 39 Michigan Ave. Milwaukee, Water and Sycamore Sts. Minneapolis, 103 No. 6th St. St. Louis, 404 No. Third St. New Orleans, 225 Baronne St. San Francisco, Geary and Stockton Sts. Washington, 611 F. St., N.W. Louisville, 643 So. 4th Ave, Pittsburgh, 114 Market St. Columbia, S. C., Main St. Atlanta, Ga., 82 Marietta St. Cincinnati, 303 E. 4th St. Indianapolis, 1116 Prospect St.

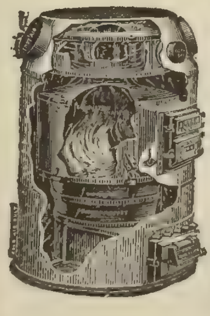
For branch salesrooms in other cities see your local phone directory.

BOVEE FURNACES

At Manufacturers' Prices



THE BOVEE FURNACE HAS DOUBLE THE HEATING CAPACITY OF OTHER FURNACES FOR AMOUNT OF FUEL CONSUMED. They are made very heavy, of the best of material.

Measure the fire pots and combustion chamber and then note the long travel of heat through the compound radiator before reaching the chimney. Compare these measurements with those of all other first-class furnaces, and you will see WHY the Bovee Furnaces require so little fuel and last longer.

Send plans for our special winter prices. We save you about one-half on the price of a first-class heating plant.

BOVEE FURNACE WORKS
315 8th St. :: Waterloo, Iowa

ership of President Don O. Shelton is pushing its canvass for a new and sufficiently equipped building for the institute's headquarters and McAuley Cremonne gospel hall. The site chosen is 205 West 41st street, in the heart of the district called the tenderloin. An option on this property has been secured for $70,000, and $30,000 more is required for the erection of a four-story structure, with the main hall on the ground floor and offices and classrooms for the Christian Workers' School above. Something like $20,000 has been subscribed.

Jay Knox, son of the late Professor George William Knox, who is in the graduating class at Union Seminary, will become assistant at a large church in Morristown, N. J.

The annual offering for the chapels and schools of Fifth Avenue church amounted to $14,000.

A proposition to merge Central church, of which Dr. Wilton Merle-Smith is pastor, and Madison Avenue Reformed church, now pastorless, did not work out. It was discovered that if either congregation left the denomination its property would revert to classis or presbytery.

Honor Leader for Sixth Time

Dr. Williamson Reelected Moderator at Cleveland — Indorse Work of Rev. H. E. Nicklen —Open Corner Stone Box.

CLEVELAND—J. D. Williamson, D. D., who has served five consecutive years as moderator of presbytery, was not present at the recent meeting in Old Stone church, having gone to Old Point Comfort for a much needed rest. His absence and written admonition relative to a successor did not cause presbytery to hesitate in the least over selecting him for a sixth year as moderator. Arthur C. Ludlow, D. D., and Rev. William P. Thomas, stated and permanent clerks, were reelected, having closed twelve years of official service. In electing commissioners to General Assembly presbytery took occasion to express special approval of the work which Rev. Henry E. Nicklen, pastor of Orwell church, has been doing for eight years in our rural churches by giving him the highest vote as ministerial commissioner. The lay delegation from presbytery will help to emphasize the Home Board's department of social service, for Elders George H. Diehl of Mayflower church is a molder by trade, John G. Carlisle of Bethany church an engineer and W. W. Worswick of North church a retired employee of the Pennsylvania railroad.

Case Avenue church property having been sold the box deposited in the corner stone when the latter was laid in 1880 was removed and opened in the presence of a committee of presbytery and former officials of the church. The box and its interesting contents will be deposited with Western Reserve Historical Society.

ARTHUR C. LUDLOW.

Plans to Enlarge Its Quarters

Second Church, Germantown, Intends to Spend $40,000 on Improvements — Dr. Colfelt Is Approaching Fortieth Anniversary.

PHILADELPHIA—At the annual meeting of Second church, Germantown, Rev. J. Harvey Lee pastor, the trustees were authorized to contract for a new organ and to make such additions to and alterations of the Sunday school building as will provide adequate facilities for the graded school, and for work among the youth, including rooms for the brotherhood and women's Bible classes, a session room, kitchen and basement, together with a new heating, ventilating and lighting system, and to expend on this work the sum of $40,000. The contributions of this church for missions and benevolences the past year were the largest in its history and amounted to $15,072. Robert Moffly has created a trust fund for the deacons' work of $500 in memory of his father, the late John W. Moffly, long an officer of the church.

West Green Street congregation gave cordial welcome to its pastor, Dr. L. M. Colfelt, on a recent Sunday upon his return from a brief vacation. During his absence Dr. Horace C. Stanton was the pulpit supply. It will soon be forty years since Dr. Colfelt came to this city as successor to Dr. Herrick Johnson in the "old" First church. Ten years later he was transferred to Oxford church as the successor to Dr. F. L. Robbins. After serving it for seven years he withdrew, but was recalled in 1898 and again served the church for eight years. He has been pastor of West Green Street church since 1908.

Disston Memorial church of Tacony recently increased the salary of its pastor, Dr. McBride, the third raise in five years. The congregation has decided to build a large modern Sunday school building.

The annual banquet of General Wagner's adult Bible class of Market Square church, Germantown, was attended by 1,015 persons. Addresses were delivered by the following former pastors: Dr. E. P. Cowan, secretary of the Board of Freedmen; Dr. J. E. Wright, chaplain of the Pennsylvania house of representatives; Rev. T. McBride Nichols, pastor of Collegiate Reformed church, New York, and the present pastor, Rev. H. M. Robinson.

A number of Presbyterians from this city, including Dr. George W. Bailey, William H. Scott, Dr. R. H. Nassau and Rev. A. L. Loder, attended the theological commencement of Lincoln University April 22. Fourteen young men were graduated. Dr. Herrick Johnson preached the annual sermon to the class on April 20.

The Christian Endeavor society of Temple church tendered its pastor, Dr. W. D. Roberts, a surprise reception on his ninth anniversary. Korean Day was celebrated by the church, a son of the pastor, Rev. Stacy Roberts, being a missionary in Korea. Rev. E. Wade Koons, missionary at Chai Ryung, Korea, addressed all services.

Judge R. N. Willson having insisted upon his resignation from the Board of Publication, it has been accepted to take effect at the close of the board's year.

Dr. William Hutton, pastor of Greenwich church, now in the hospital, was the recipient on his seventy-fifth birthday of many kind remembrances and expressions of good will.

Announcement of the call of Dr. W. H. Oxtoby, for ten years pastor of Tabernacle church, to a chair in San Francisco Theological Seminary has awakened much interest. He has said that he will probably accept.

W. P. WHITE.

Ministerial Obituary

Rev. Henry Ludlow Teller

Rev. Henry Ludlow Teller, an honorably retired minister of the Presbytery of Long Island, died at Bristol, R. I., April 18, aged 74. He was born in Yorktown, N. Y., graduated from Union College and Union Seminary. After Presbyterian pastorates in North Stamford, Conn; Plainfield, N. J., and Amsterdam, N. Y., he was rector of Episcopal churches in Morris and Syracuse, N. Y. Returning to the Presbyterian ministry in 1890, he was pastor at Ballston Spa, N. Y., for ten years. His last charge, which he relinquished in 1909, was at Remsenburg, L. I.

YOUR MONEY
SHOULD MAKE
SIX to EIGHT PER CENT

Write to me and I will explain about SAFE investments. No Risk.

References:
Farmers Savings Bank, Walla Walla, Wash.
Hillsboro National Bank, Hillsboro, Ill.
Address B. F. CULP, WALLA WALLA, WASH.

6½% Net First Mortgages
on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.
GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

6% 7%
We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request
JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

6% NET
GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due. Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.
BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

$33,000,000 INVESTED IN ALBERTA MORTGAGES
by insurance, trust and loan companies. The Associated Mortgage Investors, Inc., has applied the FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE of its Officers to making Alberta loans, which yield 6% NET and have many advantages, including GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED TITLES. Inquiries are welcomed and imply no obligation.
ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

Farm Mortgages 6%
Your money safe and your income sure. Send for descriptive pamphlet "C" and list of offerings. 30 yrs. experience. Highest references
E. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks, N. D.

High Grade Farm Loans
Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co., Oklahoma City Oklahoma

Make Your Home Cosy and Comfortable

The first essential is to heat it properly—getting the most heat from the fuel you burn and distributing this heat evenly to all parts of the house

XXth CENTURY FURNACES
More Heat and Less Coal

Give you a third more heat at a third less cost and there is no soot, no trouble and no repairs. The XXth CENTURY FURNACE has a patented air feed and side-burning fire pot which burns any kind of fuel, even cheap grades of soft coal and slack and gets the full heating power from it by means of perfect and complete combustion.

We Help You to Install Properly

A XXth CENTURY FURNACE will give you an efficient, economical heating system that will make your home a cozier and more comfortable place in which to live. Write us, giving a sketch or plan of your home, mentioning number and size of rooms to be heated and our Engineering Department will tell you the size and kind of furnace you need and where you can get it on our common sense guarantee. Our valuable booklet 42 on Home Heating will also be sent free. Write today.
The XXth Century Heating & Ventilating Co., Akron, O.

---

4 Per Cent

BONDS SECURING POSTAL SAVINGS FUNDS
BONDS YIELDING 4%-5% PAYABLE SEMI-YEARLY
BACKED BY CERTIFICATES FROM UNITED STATES TREASURY
CERTIFYING THEY PROTECT POSTAL SAVINGS BANK FUNDS
AVAIL YOURSELF OF THIS PROTECTION
SEND FOR OUR BOOKLET "BONDS OF OUR COUNTRY"
BONDS SENT TO ANY BANK OR EXPRESS
COMPANY SUBJECT TO EXAMINATION
BONDS BONDS
THE NEW FIRST NATIONAL BANK COLUMBUS, OHIO.

5 Per Cent

WHERE TO INVEST WITH SAFETY AND GOOD PROFIT

The famous Corn Belt of Eastern Kansas offers the best possible field for safe and profitable mortgage investments. This territory was settled 60 years ago and during that time has been thoroughly tested as a fine agricultural and stock raising country. We have been in this field for 40 years and during that time have never lost a dollar for an investor. Loans negotiated by us exceed $25,000,000. Your money when placed in our First Farm Mortgages will be absolutely safe and net you excellent interest return. Write us for particulars and references.

J. L. Pettyjohn & Company
Olathe, Kansas

6% SECURITY, RATE AND SERVICE 6%

Is what we offer YOU in our FIRST LIEN REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES. They are placed only on income bearing property on a basis of 40 per cent actual value.

INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date by NEW YORK check.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES attest the soundness of these mortgages by purchasing in increasing volume.

Write for list, information and references to

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE CO.
R. B. BISHOP, Vice-Pres.
FORT WORTH TEXAS

SAFETY AND 7%

IDAHO offers today a splendid field for safe and profitable investments. Carefully selected first mortgages on improved CITY AND FARM property are securities which will give you no worry, but will return regularly and promptly an excellent interest return, ranging from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, and occasionally even higher. The city of Boise has trebled its population in ten years, and the agricultural districts in which the IDAHO TITLE AND TRUST COMPANY and THE NATIONAL TRUST AND SAVINGS COMPANY operate are among the most productive in this prosperous state.

CHARLES B. COXE
President
BOISE :: IDAHO

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT

¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075

WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%

Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.

The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

6 and % Sure 7

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

Financial Situation

Why Farm Loan Interest Rates Vary Over the Country — Vice-President Marshall Arouses Opposition to Socialistic Suggestions.

Information of interest to every investor or prospective investor in farm mortgages is contained in a recent announcement from Washington that the average rate of interest which farmers of the United States paid last year on short loans was 7.75 per cent. This figure is obtained by averaging the replies to nearly 3,000 letters sent by the department of agriculture to bankers over the country. This rate is slightly less than in 1911. The rates in the various parts of the country as compiled by the government follow: In the North Atlantic states 5.96 per cent, South Atlantic 7.36 per cent, northern central states east of the Mississippi 6.38 per cent, northern central states west of the Mississippi 8.05 per cent, southern central states 9.51 per cent and far western states 8.55.

Study of these figures gives the investor an idea why he is offered more for his money in some parts of the country than in others. There always has been a variance in the rates of interest on farm loans offered investors in different parts of the country, although 6 per cent has been the average for many years. As a recent writer in The Financial World pointed out, the age of a farming community, the certainty of the crops as well as the general character of the farmers, enter into the differences in the rates of interest obtainable. In the North Atlantic states, where the table shows that farmers pay least, money is more plentiful than in the far West. Agriculture has been carried on for many years. Farmers know just about how much they can expect from their soil. They and their habits are fixed. Farther west there are varieties of conditions to be faced. Intelligence in seeding and caring for the soil may bring large crops, or shiftless methods and little rain may bring poor crops. Conditions are not so certain, and the rate of interest increases, the difference between the average rate and the rate offered being in the nature of insurance on the extra risk.

Each Loan Stands by Itself

Although these considerations govern in a general way, each farm loan is and must be considered by itself. The borrower and his general habits, his thrift and knowledge of farming as well as the nature of his soil and farm equipment are all taken into account. Thus it comes about that in the same locality some farmers are charged higher rates, or allowed less money on their farms, than are their neighbors who are better "risks," as the credit men say. The only way for the loaner of money to be sure that he is getting a fair rate of interest on his capital is to pick his investment banker with care and rely on his judgment. These men are usually so jealous of their reputation in choosing careful loans that they will pay losses from their own pockets rather than see their clients suffer.

Some financial papers are expatiating at length on the recent speech and interview of Vice-President Marshall, when he suggested that state legislatures might with propriety limit the amount of money which could legally be inherited to $100,000; sums in addition to this amount to revert to the state. Some of the papers are asserting that this is "rank socialism" and worse than the frenzied French proposed during the revolution. It is admitted that such restriction legally is possible, but the financial papers declaim against the state's taking private property. Mr. Marshall looks on $100,000 as enough for any man to inherit and his suggestion of what is possible may fall under the notice of millionaires who are contemplating perpetual accretions to the family estates.

Brief Bits of Business News

—General managers of railways of the country are considering a campaign against liquor selling near construction camps of the companies. Results in increased efficiency and lessened loss of life are very large.

—Congress is being asked to give business some time to readjust itself to the new schedules in case the tariff bill passes. Leather merchants with large stocks bought at high tariff prices fear their profits will pass if the tariff goes into effect before their goods are sold.

Stability, Courtesy and Efficiency

Have Been the Factors in the Growth of the

Illinois Trust & Savings Bank

Without the Assistance of Mergers or Consolidation of Other Banks

Capital and Surplus
$15,000,000.00

LA SALLE ST. & JACKSON BLVD.

ILLINOIS TRUST SAFETY DEPOSIT COMPANY

Safety Deposit Boxes for Rent

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS

6% We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge. SEND FOR BOOKLET. 6%

PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%

Write for particulars regarding our investment service. Highest references.

R. C. KITTEL & CO., CASSELTON NORTH DAKOTA

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth. - - Texas.

5½% and 6% Interest

The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.

G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

REAL ESTATE LOANS

6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%

During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.

BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet R UNIONVILLE, MO.

Commissioners to the General Assembly

Aberdeen—Minister, J. Scott Butt; elder, William Walklin.

Abilene—Minister, L. R. Gray; elder, A. B. Carothers.

Alaska—Minister, Livingston F. Jones; elder, E. Otis Smith.

Albany—Ministers, Alfonso R. Olney, Egbert C. Lawrence, Edward A. McMaster; elders, Henry D. Rodgers, Jesse S. L'Amereaux, William J. Davison.

Alton—Ministers, Walter H. Bradley, Guy E. Smock; elders, Archie Stewart, J. W. Challacombe.

Amarillo—Ministers, William Morgan Baker, James Lapsley McKee; elders, George F. J. Stephens, J. M. Black.

Ardmore—Minister, Duncan McRuer; elder, Frank Bowers.

Bell—Minister, R. L. Phelps; elder, T. M. Mosley.

Bellingham—Minister, Arthur B. VanZante, elder, John A. Hood.

Benicia—Ministers, R. C. Grace, Willis G. White; elders, William Hanan, O. H. Seaholm.

Birmingham—Ministers, T. R. McLin, J. F. Whittey; elders, W. L. Mason, M. C. Clark.

Blairsville—Ministers, Charles Schall, John Calvin Steele; elders, J. L. McKeever, W. G. Dugan.

Black Hills—Minister, John McLearie; elder, W. F. Haafke.

Bloomington—Ministers, William Torrance, J. D. Murphy; elders, T. C. McCoy, George W. Harwood.

Boise—Minister, Charles L. Chalfant; elder I. R. Beal.

Boston—Ministers, William M. Tufts, William Wallace Iliffe; elders, Samuel J. McNeilly, Forbes Craig.

Boulder—Minister, H. S. McCutcheon; elder, C. M. Leggett.

Brownwood—Minister, T. P. Grant; elder, J. R. Looney.

Butler—Ministers, George C. Miller, W. Lamont McMillan; elders, J. P. Boggs, A. D. Armstrong.

Butte—Minister, E. J. Groeneveld; elder, John Dowling.

Carthage—Minister, Elbert Hefner; elder, John T. Sturgis.

Cayuga—Ministers, R. Ivey, V. N. Yergin; elders, G. S. Aiken, L. S. Marvin.

Cedar Rapids—Ministers, S. R. Ferguson, S. Conybeare; elders, J. J. McConnell, William Lemmon.

Champlain—Minister, John H. Gardner; elder, Allen MacElwain.

Chattanooga—Minister, E. A. Elmore; elder, W. G. Oehmig.

Chemung—Minister, James A. Miller; elder, Fred M. Howell.

Cheyenne—Minister, L. Harold Forde; elder, H. B. Colburn.

Chippewa—Minister, Loren K. Grimes; elder, James G. Findlay.

Choctaw—Minister, Elam J. Johnson; elder, Huston D. Anderson.

Cimarron—Minister, W. M. Hutchison; elder, C. E. Sharp.

Cincinnati—Ministers, Albert E. Wirth, David A. Moore, Donald M. Grant, William McKibbin; elders, Gilbert H. Lounsbery, Howard C. Hollister, Charles F. Sharp, Cladon J. Hunter.

Cleveland—Ministers, Henry E. Nicklen, William P. Thomas, Robert R. Bigger; elders, George H. Diehl, John G. Carlisle, Louis H. Severance.

Columbia—Minister, Jacob Markarian; elder, James P. Post.

Columbus—Ministers, Samuel S. Palmer, Joseph T. Britan; elders, George F. Grand-Girard, L. S. Paxton.

Connecticut Valley—Minister, Howard Agnew Johnston; elder, John T. Manson.

Cookeville—Minister, Fount Smith; elder, J. F. Dyer.

Corning—Minister, R. B. West; elder, A. McClain.

Crawfordsville—Ministers, F. A. Johnson, H. N. Ronald; elders, Rufus Dooly, Martin Morrison.

Dakota (Indian)—Minister, George Flead; elder, H. T. Smith.

Dallas—Minister, Hal F. Smith; elder, T. F. Wilson.

Dayton—Ministers, Daniel L. Myers, Charles A. Campbell; elders, Melvin L. Milligan, Robert W. Himes.

Denver—Minister, C. K. Powell; elder, S. G. Pattison.

Detroit—Ministers, William H. Jamieson, Robert J. Young, T. Walker Malcolm; elders, Lucien A. Smith, Frank B. Anderson, Victor H. Lane.

Denver—Ministers, Crayton K. Powell, Fred W. Willman; elders, Salem G. Pattison, A. L. Maxwell.

Des Moines—Ministers, Samuel Addison Saxe, Alexander MacFerran; elders, Alexander Robb, H. F. Peitzman.

Dubuque—Minister, Theodore Morning; elder, F. H. Nagel.

Duluth—Minister, Frank E. Higgins; elder, Ernest E. Willims.

Ebenezer—Minister, Jesse R. Zeigler; elder, R. S. Hudson.

Elizabeth—Ministers, James G. Mason, William Hoppaugh; elders, Augustus S. Crane, B Carter Millikin.

El Paso—Minister, W. B. Bloys; elder, E. A. Shelton.

Emporia—Minister, William M. Covert; elder, P. M. Hoisington.

Erie—Ministers, Francis M. Hall, Thomas W. Pierson; elders, George S. Criswell, F. M. Dunkle.

Ewing—Minister, Charles McClure; elder, James Pyatt.

Florida—Minister, H. M. McCoombs; elder, S. M. Moore.

Freeport—Minister, M. L. Pearson; elder, Olney Witbeck.

French Broad—Ministers, Theodore T. Lawrence, Calvin A. Duncan; elders, N. B. Tweed, G. M. White.

Fort Wayne—Ministers, E. S. Scott, Thomas Younger; elders, S. M. Saylor, J. J. Gilette.

Galena—Minister, F. L. Wolters; elder, F. Sarow.

Genesee—Minister, Warren N. Nevius; elder, George E. Munt.

George—Minister, L. H. Hayenga; elder, Albert H. Meester.

Hobart—Minister, W. G. Peyton; elder, C. W. King.

Holston—Minister, Dayton A. Dobbs; elder, A. P. Mathes.

Indianapolis—Ministers, A. R. Miles, Claude R. Shaver; elders, S. C. Dodds, J. F. Wild.

Iowa City—Ministers, Mott R. Sawyers, W. A. Montgomery; elders, D. M. Evans, G. R. Brier.

Jersey City—Ministers, F. N. Kohler, J. Francis Morgan, C. E. Macartney, C. W. Laufer; elders, Edward F. Wilson, A. Giger, John F. Fitschen, W. T. Cooper.

Kansas City—Ministers, William H. Black, Harry C. Rogers; elders, Arthur L. Wolfe, W. H. English.

Kiamichi—Minister, Richard D. Colbert; elder, Willie Harris.

Kittanning—Minister, William J. Sproull; elder, Thomas M. Fleming.

Knox—Ministers, Quentin E. Primo, A. S. Clarke; elders, A. E. Hamilton, J. E. Scribben.

Lake Superior—Minister, Pliny B. Ferris; elder, Norman McAuley.

Laramie—Minister, David M. Davies; elder, C. P. Arnold.

Larned—Minister, Allen S. Davis; elder, X. L. Weisenberger.

Lehigh—Ministers, Harry W. Ewing, Henry Irwin Nicholas; elders, Joseph Matchette, William C. Taylor.

Le Vere—Minister, H. W. McNair; elder, David Hannum.

Lima—Minister, John T. Charlton; elder, John C. Morris.

Lincoln—Minister, C. B. Allen; elder, G. W. Smith.

Little Rock—Minister, H. W. Steen; elder, A. V. Ware.

Logan—Minister, R. W. Binkley; elder, A. F. Lewis.

Logansport—Ministers, J. B. Donaldson, C. J. Armentrout; elders, J. B. Vanatta, L. C. Whitcomb.

Long Island—Minister, Charles E. Craven; elder, Selah B. Strong.

Los Angeles—Ministers, H. H. Fisher, Allan Kennedy, H. C. Shoemaker, E. D. Chapin, J. A. Lenzinger, O. H. L. Mason, J. K. Mazawa; elders, H. N. Goff, G. L. McDaniels, W. C. Wickersham, John W. Baer, J. F. Crowe, E. B. Riggs, J. B. Woods.

Louisville—Minister, Aquilla Webb; elder, John T. Gathright.

McAlester—Minister, George T. Clark; elder, C. A. Lankford.

Mankato—Ministers, R. F. Chambers, J. C. Strand; elders, W. A. Mullin, W. W Davis.

Madison—Minister, J. W. Laughlin; elder, E. B. Skinner.

Mahoning—Minister, George Edward Jackson; elder, David T. Williams.

Mattoon—Ministers, Charles T. Phillips, William H. Mason; elders, J. H. Baird, J. H. Maxwell.

Maumee—Minister, W. A. Mast; elder, F. M. Dotson.

Milwaukee—Ministers, Samuel H. Murphy, Barton B. Bigler; elders, William M. Post, William H. Edwards.

Minot—Minister, P. W. Erickson; elder, A. N. Olson.

Monroe—Minister, C. E. Thomas; elder, H. M. Judge.

Muncie—Minister, Benjamin Markley; elder, Orville V. Mayne.

Nashville—Minister, George H. Mack; elder, C. W. Cowan.

Nebraska City—Ministers, Andrew J. Kiener, Leon D. Young; elders, William Jennings Bryan, George A. Harrington.

Newark—Ministers, Joseph Hunter, Julius H. Wolff, Davis W. Lusk, Orville Reed; elders, Charles C. Herrick, Henry Koehler, J. M. Cobb, George Weber.

Newburyport—Minister, James M. Craig; elder, George G. Miller.

Newton—Ministers, James Ferguson, James Moore; elders, Irving N. Roe, Daniel S. Spangen.

Niobrara—Minister, H. G. McClusky; elder, J. D. Haskell.

North River—Ministers, Junius J. Cowles, William Parker; elders, Moses G. Young, G. P. DuBois.

Northumberland — Ministers, Joseph L. Ewing; Henry C. Sperbeck; elders, William J. Wood, John G. Reading.

Ogden—Minister, J. E. Carver; elder, J. R. Cooper.

Oklahoma—Ministers, Phil C. Baird, J. A. B. Oglevee; elders, Z. N. Holler, G. C. Abernathy.

Olympia—Ministers, M. B. Loughlin, Murdoch McLeod; elders, J. B. Stentz, E. B. Creary.

Osborne—Minister, F. C. Everitt; elder, L. J. Allen.

Ottawa—Minister, J. M. Tidball; elder, Myron Gage.

Peoria—Minister, A. R. Mathes; elder, G. F. Carson.

Philadelphia—Ministers, C. A. R. Janvier, Park Hays Miller, William McFarland, John W. Lee, J. Beveridge Lee, Asa J. Ferry; elders, Archibald Campbell, A. G. Butler, Theodore J. Gramm, Edward M. Dering, Bernard Gilpin, Richard H. Wallace.

Portsmouth—Minister, C. S. Robertson; elder, Dr. Gaston.

Providence—Minister, Charles Allen Fisher; elder, James McDowell.

Redstone—Ministers, W. Scott Bowman, Edwin D. Bevier; elders, J. Ewing Hough, Charles A. Hartley.

Rogersville—Minister, J. M. Ewing; elder, Frank Caldwell.

Sacramento—Ministers, Hugh T. Dobbins, Fountain R. Farrand; elders, J. L. Patterson, L. T. Hatfield.

San Joaquin—Ministers, Thomas Boyd, J. Wilson Lundy, George B. Greig; elders, T. H. Minor, George E. Steele, A. L. Munger.

San Jose—Minister, J. W. Dinsmore; elder, J. K. Oliver.

Santa Fe—Minister, Joseph S. Russell; elder, R. P. Hopkins.

Seattle—Ministers, M. A. Matthews, T. Henry Lewis, W. H. Lee; elders, Eben S. Osborn, M. M. Null, W. A. Torney.

South Arizona—Minister, Curry H. Love; elder, L. J. Owen.

Southern Oregon—Minister, John E. Day; elder, James Martin.

Steuben—Minister, John Chester Ball; elder, Walter Carr.

St. Lawrence—Minister, Charles H. Brown; elder, Fred S. Walts.

Tulsa—Minister, Seth R. Gordon; elder, Fred Lynde.

Twin Falls—Minister, J. K. MacGillivray; elder, E. J. Anderson.

Waco—Ministers, J. M. Brooks, R. F. Wilkins; elders, C. L. Ramsey, J. M. Woodson.

Walla Walla—Ministers, J. K. Buchanan, D. H. Hare; elders, E. W. Elliott, C. A. Rands.

Washington—Ministers, Thomas W. Young, Clement L. McKee; elders, R. W. Parkinson, Robert S. Winters.

Waukon—Minister, E. J. Boell; elder, Simon Hagar.

Washington City—Ministers, Paul Robinson Hickok, Henry Rumer; elders, James T. Newton, Edward Tarring.

Wellsborough—Minister, P. H. Hershey; elder, Robert Logan.

Wheeling—Minister, William J. Holmes; elder, T. M. Cochran.

Wichita—Minister, R. B. Norton; elder, William H. Hare.

Calendar and Record

Presbytery Meetings

Genesee—Batavia, May 14, 2 p. m.

Moderators Elected

Elizabeth—J. B. Dare.
West Jersey—Eugene H. Mateer, Daretown.

Resignations

California—Oxnard: John A. Ainslie.
Iowa—West Branch: William A. Montgomery.
Massachusetts—South Framingham: J. Van Neice Bandy.
New Jersey—Springfield: William Hoppaugh; Cedarville: W. T. Pannell.
New York—Johnstown: Charles McKenzie.
Ohio—Hicksville: J. Norman King; Holgate: F. G. Schlotts; Toledo Third: J. F. Shepherd.
Oregon—Portland Hawthorne Park: E. N. Allen.
Pennsylvania—Wrightsville: C. F. Bazata.
Washington—Tacoma Calvary: C. K. Standt, accepts.

Calls

California—Carpinteria: Anderson Crain, accepts.
Idaho—Twin Falls First: J. F. Shepherd, Toledo, Ohio, accepts.
Iowa—Delmar Junction: Charles E. Lownie, West Union, accepts; Keota: E. V. Fisher, accepts.
Kentucky—Harlan First: Carl T. Michel, accepts.
New Jersey—Kingsland Westminster: Stillman R. Leis, Highwood, accepts.
New York—Afton: J. J. Francis, accepts; Newburg Calvary: J. W. Babbitt, Princeton Seminary, accepts.
Ohio—Parma: John T. Reagan, accepts.
Oklahoma—Lehigh First: C. E. Walker, accepts.
Oregon—Sumpter: C. E. Morrison, McCormick Seminary, accepts; Florence: John Drum, accepts.
Pennsylvania—Sugar Grove: D. H. Rabrobaugh, Ashtabula, Ohio, accepts; Chanceford: John F. Hagen, Princeton, accepts.
South Dakota—Flandreau Second: K. J. Cardy, accepts.
Washington—Seattle Rainier Beach: W. A. Henricks, accepts; Buckley: C. E. Conwell, accepts.

Installations

California—San Francisco North Side: O. E. Gardiner, April 13.
Indiana—Indianapolis Washington Street: E. H. Douglas, May 1.
Iowa—Davenport Mount Ida: J. Gilmore Smith, April 16.
Kentucky—Lancaster: J. Rockwell Smith, April 22.
Montana — Manhattan: C. F. Cheesman, April 28.
New Jersey—Kenmore: F. Hyatt Smith, April 24.
New York—Batavia: Stanley V. Mock, May 14.
Ohio—Columbus St. Clair Avenue: R. M. Gordon, April 29.

Vacant Pulpits

Illinois—Several churches: Rev. David Dempster, Carbondale, pastor at large.
Minnesota—Two pastorates: Rev. T. M. Findley, Glenwood, pastor-evangelist.

Change of Address

Johnston, J. E.—New Albion, Iowa, to Duncan, Ariz.
McComb, P. H. K.—Indianapolis, Ind., to 1121 State avenue, Kansas City, Kan.

Accessions

California—Los Angeles West Adams, 94, April 20, W. H. Fishburn; Fillmore, 14, April 13, S. F. Shiffler.
Idaho—Boise Bethany, 7, April 20, M. E. Lindsay.
Illinois—Dixon First, 9, April 20, R. M. Crissman.
Indiana—Alexandria, 11, April 6, W. F. McKinney.
Iowa—Bedford, 21, April 13, John A. Currie.
Michigan—Lansing First, 33, April 6, H. C. Wilson.
Minnesota—Rushmore, 17, James Wray.
Nebraska—St. Paul, 18, P. A. Davies.
New York—Williamson, 34, W. A. Hallock; Lewiston, 11, March 23, G. C. Noetling; Rochester Grace, 32, April 6, W. B. Jorris; Amagansett, 25, H. H. Leavitt, Jr.; Hornell Westminster, 85, April 13, Lyman C. Petitt; Middletown, 21, April 20, R. O. Kirkwood.
New Jersey—Blairstown, 12, J. N. Armstrong; Englewood West Side, 21, April 13, James G. Bailey.
Ohio—Middle Point, 37, April 20, D. Evans Jones; Marietta First, 39, March 2, A. Y. Wilcox.
Pennsylvania—Philadelphia churches, April 13: Walnut Street, 22, J. A. McCallum; John Chambers Memorial, 103, S. C. Long; Wissahickon, 11, Elliott Field; Doylestown, 16, April 13, W. E. Steckel.
South Dakota—Midland, 5, H. P. Carson; Wessington, 1, J. L. Howe; Faith, 7, J. S. Surbeck.
Texas—Austin First, 21, April 6, A. F. Bishop; Denison First, 32, April 6, A. W. Ringland.
West Virginia—Grafton, 8, April 13, J. A. McClelland.

Obituary

Death notices will be inserted at the rate of one cent a word. PAYMENT MUST BE SENT WITH THE NOTICE. Those who ask their pastor to write such notices should be careful to hand him the money to forward with the copy.

TUTHILL—Mrs. Anna Haines Hall Tuthill, on March 11, 1913, was called by the angel of death. She died at the home of her daughter in Chicago, after a prolonged illness. She was the widow of the late Rev. George M. Tuthill of Kalamazoo, Mich., who died in 1883, after being for many years agent in Michigan and Wisconsin for the American Tract Society. Mrs. Tuthill was born in New York in 1825, of a family eminent in the social and religious circles of that period. William Hall, her father, was one of the prominent West India shipping merchants of that city, as early as 1805. He was one of the founders and officers in the Cedar Street Presbyterian church, now the Fifth Avenue church (Dr. Jowett); also one of the elders of the Carmine Street church, now of 42nd Street, New York.

Mrs. Tuthill's mother, a woman of high intellectual ability and active missionary spirit, was of the Haines families of Elizabeth, N. J., New York, Cincinnati and St. Louis, Mo. She was a cousin of Mrs. T. C. Doremus of missionary zenana memory, and her brothers were the late Rev. William Hall of New York, and the late Rev. John G. Hall of Cleveland. She was married in 1847, in the then Mercer Street church, of which she was long a member. Her husband's first pastorate was a Presbyterian church in St. Louis, Mo. From thence they moved to Michigan, where her husband was successively pastor, for several years each, of churches in Pontiac, St. John's and Kalamazoo; also for four years in Ashtabula, Ohio.

By heredity, religious, educational and social training, Mrs. Tuthill possessed high qualities of mind and heart that gave her great power for good in whatever circle her influence was cast. 'None knew her but to love her, none named her but to praise." After her husband's death, Mrs. Tuthill lived in her daughter's family, Mrs. James H. Moore, at Chicago; always actively engaged in religious and philanthropic work. She was long an earnest member of the Kenwood Evangelical church; also member of the executive board of the Y. W. C. A. and the Home for Young Women, and a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution. Her erect figure, ruddy, animated face, and sympathetic interest in all the humanities of life, showed her all these successive years to be a woman of most unusual physical, moral and intellectual power.

Two sons and two daughters survive her, also a sister and two brothers, F. H. Tuthill, William H. Tuthill; Mrs. Julia T. Moore and Mrs. Robert Babcock of Chicago; Mrs. Mary Bailey of Olala, Wash.; Edward T. Hall of Titusville, Pa., and Henry M. Hall of Pittsburg, Pa.

MCKEE—Rev. John Archibald McKee, for the past five years field secretary of the American Bible Society, died of Hodgkin's disease, March 31. He was a son of the manse, born at Waynesville, Ill., Oct. 12, 1871. He was graduated from Wabash College in 1894, and from Princeton Seminary in 1897.

While in the seminary he dedicated his life to foreign missions. After serving as stated supply at Waveland, Ind., he was appointed missionary to Siam by the Presbyterian Board. After only two years of service he was obliged to return to this country by the continued illness of his wife. He was pastor at East Jordan, Mich., for several years before taking up the work of the American Bible Society. He married Clarissa Safford Booth, Aug. 9, 1899, who with two children, Samuel Booth and Katharine Louise, survives him. An aged father, Rev. S. V. McKee of Peoria, Ill., three sisters and one brother also mourn his loss.

Funeral services were held at Newburg, Ind., and from Westminster church, South Bend. Interment was at South Bend. He died as he lived, courageous, consistent, "strong in the faith." The influence of his life, the Christlike spirit of his last days, his triumphant death, will be a benediction to many.

W. W. Kimball Company CHICAGO

Builders of PIPE ORGANS

Kimball Pipe Organs won highest award at the Alaska-Yukon Pacific Exposition 1909, as well as the same honor at the World's Columbian Exposition in 1893.

Get this one idea (5)

In a religious newspaper one expects to find religion. If it does not minister to the spiritual life of its readers it is merely a secular publication.

Our readers tell us that they find nourishment for their spiritual life in THE CONTINENT. This is the commendation which we most covet, and which, above all else, we seek to merit.

The Continent

Illustrated Sermons. They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES. MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to THE CONTINENT and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

ATLANTA GENERAL ASSEMBLIES MAY 15-23. Three great assemblies in one city. Separate business sessions, joint popular meetings, commissioners entertained in Atlanta homes. A Unique Assembly of Assemblies. Your address and 25c sent to Rev. Jere A. Moore, 153 Spring street, Atlanta, Ga., will bring you eleven copies of an Atlanta daily paper covering the meetings of the Assemblies.

WANTED—TWO IOWA PRESBYTERIAN PASTORS, each having preaching points a number of miles apart, need autos to properly serve their fields. Serviceable used cars at low price desired. Write Rev. O. W. Behrens, Anamosa, Ia.

FOR CHURCH WORKERS—LADIES' AID AND MISsionary Societies are raising money without donations selling Valentine's Absorbent Dusters and Dust Mops. The only fifty-cent mop. Special offer by letter. Agents and societies should write. Valentine Duster Company, Urbana, Ohio.

PASTORS AND PARENTS WRITE TO US ABOUT young men who have come to Chicago to enter business or school life. We endeavor by personal invitation and influence to bring them into church relationship. Details gladly furnished. Rev. Francis M. Fox, Presbyterian Brotherhood, 509 South Wabash avenue, Chicago.

WOOSTER SUMMER SCHOOL ENROLLED 1194 STUdents the past summer. 1913 promises to be better yet. Nothing too good for its patrons. Work for all, no matter who and no matter what. Expenses in the minimum, advantages in the superlative. Catalog. J. H. Dickason, Prin., Wooster, O.

A SATISFIED CINCINNATI, OHIO, INVESTOR SAYS in one of his recent letters to us: "I certainly am pleased with your prompt, businesslike manner of business, and I now regret very much that I did not turn over all my means to you instead of investing part of it in lands, for these are a nuisance and a constant worry. Some of these days I hope to be able to unload with a good profit and then I shall call on you for some more mortgages." Let us tell you about our splendid investment field. Mention The Continent in writing. E. J. Lander & Co., Grand Forks, N. D.

BOY WANTED — IN THE CONTINENT'S CHICAGO office; good opportunity for bright, industrious lad to get a start in business life with helpful associations. Address or call The Continent office, 509 South Wabash avenue, Chicago.

LANTERN SLIDE RENTAL. WE ARE FORGING TO the front. Our rapidly increasing list of satisfied customers say: "No service is better." Booklet. John Clark Hill edits lectures. Church Supply Co., East Madison avenue, Springfield, O.

HEALTH RESORTS

PENNOYER SANITARIUM (ESTABLISHED 1857), Chicago suburb, Northwestern Railway. Grounds (100 acres) fronting Lake Michigan. Modern, homelike. For rest, recreation, treatment. Booklet. Address Pennoyer Sanitarium, Kenosha, Wis.

TOURS

EUROPE MEDITERRANEAN ROUTE $370
Sails July 1 from New York. Party limited.
University Man, Conductor.
The Shelton Tours, 222 Old South Bldg., Boston, Mass

A Great Work in World-Wide Fields

Facing an Emergency

In eighty-eight years the American Tract Society has printed and circulated over 780,000,000 copies of publications presenting the Gospel message. In various forms its literature has been printed in 175 languages, dialects and characters — going with the colporter into homes not reached by other means, aiding the missionary at home and in foreign lands, and strengthening the faith of Christian believers. The great Church embracing all churches has always recognized its vast obligation to the support of this agency in its work.

A Glorious Past and a Great Future

What the Tract Society has been enabled to accomplish in these years through the support of Christian people is less important than what it can do and must do in the future toward the evangelization of the world. Its past work has been done quietly and constantly, but its possibilities for service, rather than becoming exhausted, are today vaster than ever before. It is a moment of imperative need.

Into the Nation's Homes

Its publications—books, periodicals, tracts, etc.—go into the homes of nonchurch-goers. They reach all classes. They are read where the voice of the preacher is never heard and the Bible is unknown. By this means tens of thousands have been converted who would not otherwise have been reached.

In the New China

This is the strategic time for Christianity in China. There has been an awakening that makes the people wonderfully receptive. The present missionary force can touch only the edge of a population of 400,000,000. Christian literature can be made an all-important factor in solving the problem.

Reaching the Immigrant

Many millions of immigrants are now in our land. Millions more are coming. The Society's colporters meet them at the port of entry with Christian literature in their own languages. It is taken to the immigrant in his new home. The Society's publications are invaluable to the church of the immigrant.

$500,000 Needed for Preservation and Advancement

The Society now faces a crisis. Its gifts have not been sufficient to carry on its work and reduce the mortgage on its building so that its rentals will clear the debt and provide an income. A large payment must be made on the principal. The above sum will make it possible to save $25,000 interest that can be used for missionary work and also provide for reduction of the mortgage debt by the use of rental income. For a cause as broad as the kingdom itself we do not hesitate to appeal most earnestly for immediate donations and annuity gifts. Will you not at once consider the importance of this work and, with others, act in the interest of its preservation and advancement? All funds should be forwarded to Louis Tag, Treasurer, 150 Nassau Street, New York City.

WILLIAM PHILLIPS HALL, President — JUDSON SWIFT, General Secretary

Registered Trade Mark — Established Half a Century

Sparks Marion E jan14
1295 Springfield av

May Sale At "The Linen Store"

The May Sale has become an important event at "The Linen Store."
The principal features for this year may be summarized as follows:

Table Linen—Substantial reductions in Table Cloths and Napkins to match, of all sizes and qualities, in a very wide range of designs.

Bed Linen—Reduced prices in Hemstitched Sheets and Pillow Cases, and special values in Towels.

Bed Coverings—Exceptionally good values in Blankets, Comfortables and Bed Spreads.

Lingerie—Chemises, Combinations, Drawers, Gowns, Skirts, Corset Covers, etc., in a large variety of styles and materials at reduced prices.

Children's and Infants' Wear—Reductions and special values in seasonable lines. Coats, Suits, Dresses and Rompers up to 12 year sizes.

Ladies' Neckwear—A fine assortment of seasonable goods at special prices.

Ladies' Outer Garments—Important reductions on Woolen Suits, Coats, Silk Dresses, etc., and special values in Linen Suits, Lingerie Dresses and Waists.

Ladies' Hosiery—A large and varied collection specially priced, together with marked reductions on many of the higher priced goods.

Corsets—Six good Felicita models to be closed out at greatly reduced prices.

Laces and Embroideries for the trimming of summer Dresses, Waists, Underwear, etc.—unusual values.

32 page booklet illustrating many of the lines and quoting prices and details, free on request.

James McCutcheon & Co., 5th Ave., 33d & 34th Sts., New York

The CONTINENT

MAY 8, 1913

When Yale Boys Started Something

W. O. SHEWMAKER

How Can a Man Move God?

E. A. WICHER

Seeing Other Men as They See Themselves

EDITORIAL

A Genuine Rattlesnake Story Told by the Minister's Wife

NEW YORK CHICAGO PHILADELPHIA

The Selection of a School

is a subject which requires the fullest consideration. The Continent's Educational Bureau has on file information regarding all the principal institutions of the country and will gladly cooperate with parents and students in making a choice. This service is entirely free to readers of The Continent. Begin your investigation in time to permit a thorough inquiry. Address

THE CONTINENT EDUCATIONAL BUREAU
509 Wabash Avenue - - - CHICAGO

Georgia

AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE

DECATUR (6 Miles From Atlanta) GEORGIA

Letters—Philosophy—Science—Home Economics

B. A. Graduates, from this college, are admitted, without examination, as candidates for the M. A. degree in the leading universities of the North and East

No Preparatory Department Dormitory Capacity Limited to 300

For Catalog and Bulletin of Views, address the President

F. H. GAINES, D. D. LL. D.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE

CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR

Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Ohio

The WESTERN COLLEGE for WOMEN OXFORD, OHIO FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges

A center of stimulating life for thoughtful students. Comprehensive curriculum; definite religious influence. 350 beautiful acres; campus, farm, garden. Music and Art Departments of special brilliance. Domestic Science. Outdoor Athletics; Gymnasium. Illustrated literature on request.

Mary A. Sawyer, A. M., Lit. D., Dean.

The University of Wooster

Synodical College of Ohio
CO-EDUCATIONAL
The Department of Biblical Instruction is known as the
FLORENCE H. SEVERANCE
Bible and Missionary Training School

YOUNG MEN are trained to become directors of Religious Education, Sabbath School Workers, Assistants to Pastors, Y. M. C. A. Secretaries. Prospective Medical Missionaries may receive their religious training at Wooster before entering a Medical School.

YOUNG WOMEN are trained to become Foreign Missionaries, Home Missionaries, City Missionaries, Pastors' Assistants, Church Visitors, Sabbath School Workers, Y. W. C. A. Secretaries.

Students may take this work in connection with the COLLEGE COURSE or may take the THREE YEARS TRAINING COURSE. For full information address

REV. CHALMERS MARTIN, D.D. Wooster, Ohio
Ask for Catalogue A.

Iowa

PARSONS COLLEGE

OFFERS

To youth of both sexes superior advantages in securing an education.

IDEAL LOCATION.
STRONG FACULTY.
MODERN EQUIPMENT.

38 years of service to the church and country.

W. E. PARSONS, President. Fairfield, Iowa

Highland Park College Machinist, Automobile Machinist, Traction Engine, Manual Training, Engineering, College Courses. Most complete school maching shops in the country. Equal to best Eastern schools. Send for catalog. Address Geo. P. Magill, D.D., Des Moines, Iowa.

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School

Send for catalog of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is one of the largest institutions of learning in the United States.

Thorough Instruction at Lowest Expense.

Catalog mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President.
O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.

Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas

Vocational-Cultural for young women

Wisconsin

Milwaukee-Downer College
Milwaukee-Downer Seminary

Milwaukee, Wisconsin

College Courses lead to Bachelors' Degrees.
Home Economics Training Course for Teachers.
Seminary admits to Eastern and Western Colleges.
Music Department directed by Emil Liebling.
Art, Elocution, Athletics. Location combines advantages of city and country. For information specify College or Seminary catalogue. Miss Ellen C. Sabin, President

RIPON COLLEGE

RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

Tennessee

Ward Seminary

For Girls and Young Women 42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports, For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres., Nashville, Tenn.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY

Thorough Work. Christian Ideals.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Pennsylvania

Main Hall

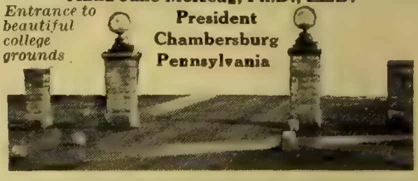
Wilson College

FOR WOMEN

Connected with the Presbyterian Church

Beautiful situation in the Cumberland Valley: extensive campus, water supply approved by the State Board of Health, careful provision for the health of students, a good social atmosphere, a strong faculty, high intellectual standards, solid and thorough work. Courses lead to the B.A. degree. A good department of music. Strong religious influence. Catalogue and views on request.

Anna Jane McKeag, Ph.D., LL.D.



Entrance to beautiful college grounds

President
Chambersburg
Pennsylvania

BEECHWOOD

A Cultural and Practical School

FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph. D., :: :: :: President

Illinois

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.

They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address

MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS

An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY

Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy.
Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

California

GIRLS' COLLEGIATE SCHOOL. "CASA DE ROSAS"
Twenty-second year begins September 25th. Accredited at leading colleges. Music, art, gymnasium, domestic science. Beautiful buildings, fine equipment. Limited number of resident pupils.
Miss Parsons and Miss Dennen, Principals,
Adams and Hoover Streets, Los Angeles, California.

Story of the Founder of American Presbyterianism, recalled just before the opening of the General Assemblies of three great Presbyterian Churches

Francis Makemie, the first upholder of Presbyterian doctrine in America, preached although he was arrested for it. William T. Ellis in next week's Continent will tell of this stalwart character. In the same issue will be pictures of Atlanta churches in which the various meetings of the three General Assemblies will be held. Every reader will be interested in this greatest gathering of Presbyterians ever held in this country. Nearly every church calling itself Presbyterian will be represented at this significant meeting. Full reports of actions taken will appear in The Continent in the issues of May 22 and 29. Watch for them.

In America's National Presbyterian Weekly

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of THE CONTINENT is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to THE CONTINENT. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing THE INTERIOR (Established 1870) and THE WESTMINSTER (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE MCCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Proprietors
OLIVER R. WILLIAMSON, Publisher

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeks the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subcription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1913

THE GRACE OF MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING... 629
EDITORIAL—
  Honest Questions.......... 632
  Good Lesson for Astonished Diplomats 632
  Why Not Street Preaching During the Assemblies? 632
  Inwardness of Presbyterial Rights Issue 632
  Superintendence Is No Overlordship.... 633
  The Second Phase of Flood Relief..... 633
  How Three and Four Harmonize at Atlanta 633
THE WORLD.......... 630
RELIGIOUS WORLD.......... 631
CAN WE MOVE GOD?...Edward A. Wicher 634
YALE BOYS "STARTED SOMETHING" (Illustrated)..........W. O. Shewmaker 635
PREACHER'S WIFE TELLS A SNAKE STORY ....Ruth Marian Frank 637
BLACK UNCLE'S SONG MADE PREACHER... 638
THE WOMAN WHO CAN....The Wayfarer 638
THE HOME COUNCIL—The Child Gentleman a Man Failure?..Edith B. Kirkwood 639
YOUNG AMERICA—Father Bird and the Chippies' Nest (Illustration) ....Winthrop Packard 640
NEW BOOKS.......... 641
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 642
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE........E. A. Wicher 643
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE......W. T. Ellis 643
MISSIONARY WORK (with Portrait)....... 644
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter XXVII. —Continued.........Richard S. Holmes 646
THE OPEN HEARTH.......... 647
WAYS OF WORKING.......... 648
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS FIELD—Beginning 649
FINANCIAL SITUATION.......... 657
COMMISSIONERS TO ASSEMBLY.......... 658
CALENDAR AND RECORD.......... 659

Around the Shop

Naturally, the Around-the-Shop Man finds himself frequently picturing in his mind the people who write to him. Of course it is not seldom a case of attempting to construct a whole man with "only a hair from his head" to begin with, and that's dangerous. Your scientist who builds prehistoric beings in that way is not handicapped by the likelihood that the being will show up some bright morning!

—

We take no chances on trying to describe this Kentucky banker, further than to remark that we should have a most profound admiration for the cleverness of the man who succeeded in selling him a gold brick:

"A. T. S. Man, Care The Continent—Dear Sir: You seem to thrive on appreciation, and grow fat on criticism, so label this dose and take it.

"I do not belong to the Presbyterian Church, nor accept its teachings.

"I subscribe to The Continent, but not to its opinions (on all subjects).

"Never met a person with whom I fully agreed on all subjects when I discovered his views.

"Never read a copy of The Continent but that I received information, inspiration and a taste for more. Same results when I come in contact with a thinker.

"Official board of our church appointed a prayer meeting committee (we have no pastor at present), and this committee asked for help, giving the writer a week to outline plans and suggestions for them.

"He gave his reply in one minute, 'Subscribe for The Continent.'

"Thank you for your time. J. S. C."

—

Don't you think that a lot of good folks who wonder why the machinery runs with a squeak would find The Continent illuminating? Turn on the light!

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

PIPE AND REED ORGANS AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks.
Ask for Catalog by number only
C105 Church F'rnit're | School Desks S105
L105 Lodge Furniture | Opera Chairs O105
B105 Bank Furniture | Office Desks D105
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros." on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

HARRY W. JONES
Church Architect :: MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA.

Church Organs
BUILT BY
Hutchings Organ Co., 18 Tremont Street BOSTON, MASS

CHURCH PEWS
AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

MENEELY & CO. WATERVLIET, (West Troy), N.Y.
The Old Reliable Meneely Foundry, Established nearly 100 years ago.
CHURCH, CHIME, SCHOOL & OTHER BELLS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

MENEELY BELL CO.
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

BOWLDEN BELLS FOR CHURCH AND SCHOOL
Sweet Tone Far Sounding Durable
Catalogue Free.
AMERICAN BELL & FOUNDRY CO., NORTHVILLE, MICH.

Church Chime Peal BELLS
Memorial Bells a Specialty.
McShane Bell Foundry Co., Baltimore, Md., U.S.A.

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

1500 MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS
Now in use. For Catalogues, Address
M. P. MÖLLER, HAGERSTOWN, MD.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

—MONEY—
Do you need it in your Church work? The International Banks will help you raise it. Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg., Columbus, O.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
"Noiseless" Cushioned Trays with a new Short Glass. Trays interlock. All glasses well spaced. Outfits sent on trial.
DIETZ COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
20 East Randolph St., Dept. J2, CHICAGO.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING
Write Today for Our "Catalog B"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating: valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2
American Seating Company
218 S. WABASH AV. CHICAGO
NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

We Will Pay You $120.00
to distribute religious literature in your community. Sixty days work. Experience not required. Man or woman. Opportunity for promotion. Spare time may be used. International Bible Press, 410 Winston Bldg., Philadelphia.

Rider Agents Wanted
in each town to ride and exhibit sample Ranger bicycles. Write for our latest special offer.
Finest Guaranteed 1913 Models $10 to $27
with Coaster-Brakes, Puncture-Proof tires.
1911 & 1912 Models all of best makes.... $7 to $12
100 Second-Hand Wheels
All makes and models, good as new.......... $3 to $8
Great FACTORY CLEARING SALE
We Ship on Approval without a cent deposit, pay the freight, and allow 10 DAY'S FREE TRIAL.
TIRES, coaster-brake rear wheels, lamps, sundries, parts and repairs at half usual prices. DO NOT BUY until you get our catalogues and offer. Write now.
MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. S-304 Chicago, Ill.

Get this one (6)
idea

Raising a family is the greatest work in the world.

It takes more wisdom to rear children successfully than to write poetry or preach sermons.

A real and ever-present problem for parents is how to keep religion in the very groundwork of their children's thought, tinging all their ideals and impressions.

Certainly the wise father and mother will make sure that their children grow up familiar with the best obtainable.

The Continent

SLIDE RENTING. STEREOPTICONS. NEW METHOD & SUBJECTS. CHURCHES REDUCED RATES. MOORE-HUBBELL & CO. 713 MASONIC TEMPLE.

WANTS AND HELPS

Rates for classified advertising, Three Cents a Word, including the address. If desired a "box" address may be used, responses being sent to The Continent and forwarded to advertiser.

CASH MUST ACCOMPANY ORDER

MISCELLANEOUS

WANTED—TWO IOWA PRESBYTERIAN PASTORS, each having preaching points a number of miles apart, need autos to properly serve their fields. Serviceable used cars at low price desired. Write Rev. O. W. Behrens, Anamosa, Ia.

FOR CHURCH WORKERS—LADIES' AID AND MISSIONARY Societies are raising money without donations selling Valentine's Absorbent Dusters and Dust Mops. The only fifty-cent mop. Special offer by letter. Agents and societies should write. Valentine Duster Company, Urbana, Ohio.

PASTORS AND PARENTS WRITE TO US ABOUT young men who have come to Chicago to enter business or school life. We endeavor by personal invitation and influence to bring them into church relationship. Details gladly furnished. Rev. Francis M. Fox, Presbyterian Brotherhood, 509 South Wabash avenue, Chicago.

LANTERN SLIDE RENTAL. WE ARE FORGING TO the front. Our rapidly increasing list of satisfied customers say: "No service is better." Booklet. John Clark Hill edits lectures. Church Supply Co., East Madison avenue, Springfield, O.

COLLEGE STUDENT, SENIOR AT WASHINGTON and Jefferson, desires to teach or tutor for the summer. Experienced. Excellent references. Walker R. Scott, 15 Sherman avenue, Washington, Pa.

WANTED—POSITION AS SOCIAL HELPER OR church work for summer in Chicago by competent, energetic woman. Recommendations given. Address "Q," care of Continent.

SATISFIED INVESTORS: "IT IS WITH MANY thanks I acknowledge the draft sent me for my loan. I am very well satisfied with all dealings I have had with you." This letter was recently sent us by one of our Detroit clients. Here is another written by a Union Grove, Wis., man: "Herewith please find draft in settlement of Romness loan. In all my business relations with a number of companies during the past thirty years, the Lander Company carry off the banner for promptness." We have many more letters like these. When your funds are invested in our First Farm Mortgages they will be fully protected and will net you excellent interest return. Let us tell you about our splendid investment field. Drop us a line today. Mention The Continent. E. J. Lander & Co., Grand Forks, N. Dakota.

YOUNG PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER, COLLEGE AND seminary graduate, married, three years' experience, desires to locate in Pennsylvania. References. Address "P," The Continent.

PUPIL NURSES WANTED FOR NEW HOSPITAL OF fifty beds, beautifully situated twenty-five miles from New York City. Applicants must have one year in high school or its equivalent and be not under twenty years of age. Apply to Superintendent of United Hospital, Port Chester, New York.

LINCOLN COLLEGE, LINCOLN, ILL., A PRESBYTERIAN Institution, needs a small automobile for the use of its field agent in canvassing for students. A second-hand machine would do. Anyone wishing to help Christian education in this way may address N, care The Continent.

WOOSTER SUMMER SCHOOL OFFERS UNUSUAL inducements for summer study to those who wish to make a wise use of their time. Beautiful surroundings, strong faculty, wide choice, low expenses. Bulletin. S. H. Dickason, Prin., Wooster, O.

ORGANS

FOR SALE—TEN STOP MASON & HAMLIN ORGAN, suitable for church or Bible school. Address O, care of Continent.

TOURS

EUROPE MEDITERRANEAN ROUTE $370

Sails July 1 from New York. Party limited.
University Man, Conductor.
The Shelton Tours, 222 Old South Bldg., Boston, Mass

Read the "WANT" Column every week The thing in which you are interested may be advertised in this issue.

"The White Men are Coming"

THE irresistible call of the glorious West is being answered from all over the world. Glacier National Park—America's newest and grandest scenic playground—awaits you!

Come! Come this Season! Your comfort has been amply provided for. A magnificent new hotel, one of the most novel and interesting institutions of its kind in the country, has just been completed. Every room is electrically lighted and heated. Every modern feature, including shower baths and plunge pool, has been installed. The cuisine is worthy of the finest Eastern establishments. The rates—American plan, $2.00 to $5.00 a day.

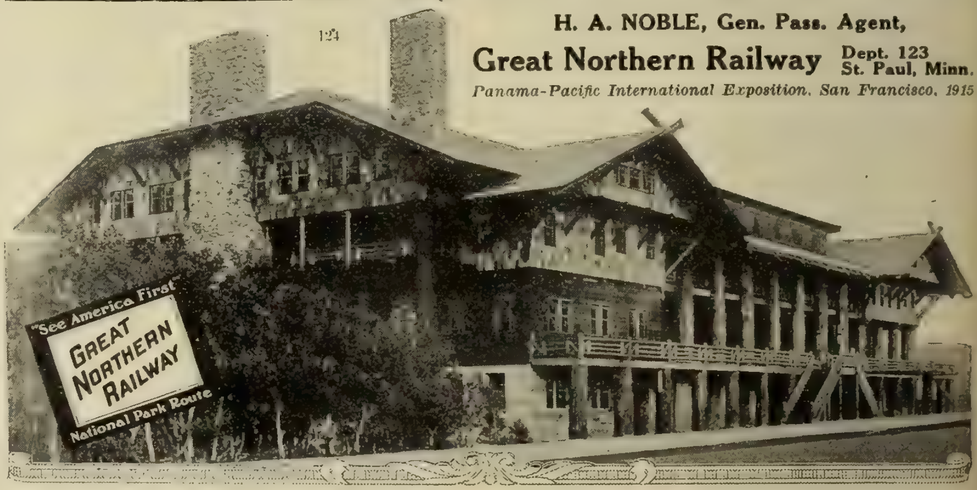
Tours Through Glacier Park

By Automobile, Horseback, Launch, Stage and Afoot—$1 to $5 Per Day

Whether you decide simply to stop over for a few days on your trip to or from the Pacific Coast or whether you plan to stay for several weeks, you will find that ideal arrangements have been made to enable you to transform every minute of your stay into a perfect memory. Tours by automobile, horseback, launch, stage and afoot in unlimited variety—$1 to $5 per day. Ideal accommodations are offered by the famous chain of Swiss Chalet Camps throughout the Park.

Aeroplane Map Free Write for unique Aeroplane Map in colors and complete descriptive booklets and travel literature free.

H. A. NOBLE, Gen. Pass. Agent,
Great Northern Railway Dept. 123 St. Paul, Minn.
Panama-Pacific International Exposition, San Francisco, 1915



Three Great Meetings for Men
At ATLANTA

I. POPULAR BROTHERHOOD MEETING, Sunday evening, May 18th, 8 o'clock, North Ave. Presbyterian Church. Well-known speakers from the three Assemblies will make this a genuine Brotherhood meeting.

II. BROTHERHOOD CONFERENCE, Tuesday evening, May 20th, 5:30 o'clock, at Kimball Hotel. Subject of Conference, "The Best Methods of Men's Work in the Local Church."

III. BROTHERHOOD SUPPER, for men of the three assemblies, at Kimball Hotel, at 6:30 o'clock, following Conference. A time of rich fellowship is expected.

Price of Supper is $1 00, which admits to Conference. Requests for tickets, accompanied by check, draft or money-order, should be sent to Rev. Walter Getty, General Secretary, Presbyterian Brotherhood of America, 509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, NO. 19 MAY 8, 1913 WHOLE NO. 2241

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. The McCormick Publishing Company, Proprietors

The Grace of Mutual Understanding

BLESSED IS THE MAN WHO, THOUGH HE AGREETH NOT WITH HIS BROTHER, YET UNDERSTANDETH HIM.

It is no doubt risky business to be manufacturing new beatitudes, but this one shapes itself out of sorrow for ill feelings so often springing up in the church when good men differ about theology.

It is not the variation of opinion which is sorrowful; all that is only a wholesome insurance against stagnation. Argument, even when false, serves truth by driving it deeper for confirmation.

But the grief of controversy among Christians appears when men who differ in doctrines begin to draw apart in brotherly love—when from respectful and fair reasonings they drift off into accusations of dishonesty and retorts of scorn.

Of two ideas in the atmosphere of Christian thought, both may water the church with a fruitful rain. But anger flashing between them is a destructive lightning.

✠

The recent epoch of debate on Bible criticism has illustrated painfully the havoc that can be wrought in the church not by rivalry of new opinion with old, but by bitterness and clamor awakened between defenders of the old and champions of the new.

Undoubtedly the modern movement of critical investigation into the Bible has been attended with many extravagances, but it is certainly possible to say today with all assurance that it has not done the Bible nor the church fundamental harm.

The power of the Bible over the world is today stronger and deeper-seated than it ever was. Christianity has not been in any wise undermined in its Scripture foundation. The basic word of revelation stands, if possible, even more safe and sound than a generation ago, because it has meantime withstood a colossal test.

If therefore the church has come through the era of biblical criticism in any degree a weaker church than before, the weakness results not from the criticism, but from the spirit of debating it.

The mischief has ensued when that which should have been a friendly and high-souled discussion has been permitted to degenerate into a battle of relentless tongue-lashing.

✠

From all this controversy the one serious detriment which the church is left with is the unkindly partisan feeling in many cases still persisting between those who took the liberal and those who took the conservative side of this needlessly embittered conflict.

Outright battle appears to be past—which is not to say that either party to the discussion has conquered the other, but that both parties have settled down to live on together in the same church with at least outward peace. Room for both conservative and liberal is at length conceded.

And this would all be the precise result to which debate should come out, when each side has been duly heard, if the wounds of the fight were now to be healed by the abundant medicine of mutual good will instead of being inflamed continually by fresh applications of mutual distrust.

A secret market for irritants is a much worse place for the church to dwell near to than an open arena of struggle. The temper that sullenly cherishes disbelief in the honor of a theological opponent is more dangerous to Christian well-being in ostensible peace than in avowed war.

And this is the peril of the moment along that cleft of thinking and sentiment which Bible criticism cuts through the church.

✠

The church will not turn backward to war again over these old differences. But that is not enough for real peace. It must go forward to good will, to honest Christian respect man for man, mutually accorded in recognition of the impartial grace of Christ which goes out to liberal and conservative alike.

And in the approach to that good will, both liberal and conservative must cast aside self-justifications. Neither dares charge the other with the sole fault of misunderstanding and contempt.

The man of the old thought has most ungraciously impugned the honesty of the man of the newer thinking. The man of the newer thinking has scorned the stupidity of the man of the old thought.

Therefore the Christian exercise of "putting yourself in the other fellow's place" is equally to be commended to both dispositions.

An hour of free, unprejudiced endeavor to appreciate the standpoint of conservatism on the part of the liberal, and of liberalism on the part of the conservative, would be worth, for perfecting the brotherhood of Christ Jesus among men, more than many a year's labor at elaboration and defense of private judgments on either side.

The gift to see ourselves as others see us is highly covetable, but for peace of the church of Christ, and indeed for all good will among men, it is in no wise so essential as the still rarer gift of seeing others as they see themselves.

✠

Were that excellent power well distributed through the church—the power of divining how one's neighbor meets and must deal with his own life problems—it would quickly abate angry accusations and spiteful slurs from all tempers in theology.

It is easy for believers grounded in the older teachings on Bible inspiration to fling broadcast their charge that men adopting another theory have renounced the authority of the Scripture and turned traitors to Christ.

But they could not speak with this unbrotherly violence if they had tried in imagination to traverse the paths by which these other men have come out to faith—realizing their intellectual bent, feeling the pressure of their environment and progressing by the same steps from one standing ground of Christian assurance to another.

Once comprehending all this, the conservative thinker would quickly drop his ill judgment of his liberal brother, and replace it with thanksgiving that the Lord is so fully able to bring faithful souls home to faith by roads so many and so diverse.

Likewise it is very easy for men whose theology has undergone large changes to sneer "Old fogy!" at those who have not changed and who greatly fear to change.

But if into the lives of these staid doctrinaires their liberal-minded neighbors could and would penetrate deep enough to know what comfort and peace of soul are founded on these long-fixed rocks of belief, derision would never again be launched against them nor impatience be suffered to affront their steadfastness.

Understanding—appreciation—love—peace—a beautiful way for the church to move—in very truth the way of the Lord.

What evil spirit in us makes the way of estrangement seem more tempting?

The World

California Passes Bill Aimed at Japan

Neither national nor international objections of the most serious character deterred the legislature of California last Saturday from passing the bill to prevent Japanese from owning land in the state. An important amendment would permit them to lease land for three years, with no bar to renewals. Governor Hiram Johnson is not expected to veto the measure, as it was supported at all stages by the Progressive majority at Sacramento, but after he affixes his signature it is planned to submit the proposed law to a referendum of the people under the initiative and referendum provision of the California constitution. This would hold the matter in abeyance at least until the next state election eighteen months away, and the interval might serve to put a different aspect on the situation.

The presence of Secretary of State Bryan delayed but did not defeat the legislative program. Whether the terms of America's treaty with Japan have been violated is a question, but there is no question that the Japanese leaders feel aggrieved. They consider this legislation and also the naturalization statutes as an implication of racial inferiority—a suggestion which Japanese pride cannot tolerate since the Russo-Japanese war. The general criticism of the bills as first presented had the effect of inducing the legislators to drop the words peculiarly offensive to Japan—"aliens ineligible to citizenship"—but the animating purpose of excluding the Japanese from land ownership is none the less effectively attained. And the end is accomplished in a way which many lawyers say does not contravene treaty obligations nor constitutional provisions; therefore the California position is considered legally impregnable.

The Extent of the "Japanese Peril"

The "Japanese peril" was like a cloud scarcely larger than a man's hand, whereas the protests against the legislation were a veritable stormcloud. Existence of a Japanese menace to the white man in agricultural industries has not as yet been conclusively proved by specific statements. Official figures show the Japanese population to be less than 6 per cent in any county, and as low as one half of 1 per cent in others. Out of the total farm acreage the Japanese own an insignificant fraction. However, opponents of the Japanese assert that where they get a foothold they displace Americans. The Sacramento Bee says that in the case of an orchard they drive out other labor because they will work for less money. It adds: "Then when there is no other labor they will refuse to work unless given a lease of the orchard, and later they may force a sale to them in the same way. This makes surrounding property undesirable." The strawberry district of Florin is cited as an example. In the Florin public schools there are reported to be forty-two Japanese children out of sixty-seven pupils.

Florin, instead of being an argument against Japanese agriculturists, is actually an object lesson in their favor, according to A. M. Brown, who describes himself as "for thirty-five years a resident, yet away long enough to see the light and breathe the cosmopolitan spirit." In a pamphlet he writes that the Japanese began to come into the Florin district about fourteen years ago, and by sheer pluck and wonderful industry they changed the whole face of the land from barren, unfertile fields to the fairest of vineyards and strawberry patches, facing obstacles the white man never would have surmounted. "They are crowding no one out by their industry," says Mr. Brown; "that very land would be lying bare and idle if they did not occupy it. The whites spurned it for thirty years and are no more ambitious today" because of the poor character of the soil. He has found the Japanese peaceable and law-abiding, a tremendous asset to the community and the state. "Were it not," he concludes, "for the racial bias that darkens and poisons the mind the Japanese would be thrice welcome."

According to John P. Irish, a writer in The Oakland (California) Tribune, the legislation has been promoted by falsehood and misrepresentation. In proof of this assertion he quotes a dispatch from a state senator to Congressman Raker to the effect that the Japanese own over 50,000 acres of land and lease 400,000, and that the ratio of increase is over 600 per cent. Mr. Irish thereupon refers to the current report of the state labor commissioner, himself anti-Japanese, who states that the Japanese own only 12,726 acres, an increase of about 15 per cent since 1909; and lease 17,596 acres, a decrease in leaseholds of 2,700 acres.

A startling speech of warlike nature attacking the Japanese and their "demands" was made in the house of representatives last week by Congressman Thomas U. Sisson of Mississippi. He asserted that the laws of Japan were similar to the California proposals, and rather than make any concessions he "would see us spend the last life and the last drop of blood and impoverish our country for a hundred generations." The New York Tribune says that in spite of Mr. Sisson's present belligerency he opposed the appropriation for two battleships in the last Congress. Senator Vardaman, also of Mississippi, gave expression to the same sort of views.

* *

Chinese Republic Recognized; Storm Threatens Yuan

The Chinese republic was formally recognized by the United States last Friday. Mr. Williams, who is in charge of the United States legation during the absence of Minister Calhoun, delivered the official document at Peking, as he had been instructed to do as soon as the parliament or permanent assembly had been properly organized in all its branches. These parliamentary preliminaries had been delayed in the lower house for several days, owing to party and partisan divisions which sprang up. Tang Hua Lung, a representative of Yuan Shih Kai's new progressive party, was elected speaker of the house. The Kuo Ming Tang, the radical Democratic party, controls the senate. Congratulatory messages were exchanged by President Wilson and President Yuan. America thus becomes the first great power to recognize the sovereignty of the Oriental republic, though Brazil and Mexico had previously taken the same action. Apparently the prospects for the new republic are most propitious if serious dissensions do not arise in the parliament and between the parliament and the provisional president, but the first of the week this contingency seemed imminent.

The most disturbing news which has come from China in a long time was contained in an Associated Press bulletin on Saturday to the effect that Sun Yat Sen, leader of the revolt that made China a republic, had cabled an appeal to the five powers—England, Germany, France, Russia and Japan—asking that the $125,000,000 loan be not granted. Dr. Sun asserted that President Yuan would use the money against the people of China, and he said Yuan feared to be overthrown because of the government's complicity in the murder of General Sung, former minister of education. General Sung was killed a few weeks ago, ostensibly through a case of mistaken identity, but the "mistake" is now alleged to have been the deliberate purpose of someone working in Yuan's interest. The assassin or assassins have not been arrested.

A few days before Dr. Sun's message the Chinese senate passed a resolution censuring the government and declaring the five-power loan null and void because of the failure to refer it to the assembly for approval. Several of the southern provinces also protested against the loan. The loan was authorized by the previous provisional assembly with the understanding that it would be consummated before the present parliament had come into being, but this was not done, nor was the money borrowed on the original terms.

* *

Balkan Situation Easier; Anarchy in Albania

The tension of the Balkan situation was partly relieved last week by Austria's delay in her threat to force Montenegro to give up Scutari and by Montenegro's decision voluntarily to evacuate that city. The evacuation of Scutari is reported to have been decided by King Nicholas and his generals against the wishes of the cabinet, and the cabinet has resigned in consequence. The pressure of the powers was too insistent and united to be longer resisted. With Austria placated, a serious obstacle to peace is removed, and peace delegates are expected to assemble soon.

Conditions in Albania have of late become alarming, and the projected new state is bordering on anarchy. Soldiers of Essad Pasha and Djavid Pasha are looting and slaying and practicing brigandage.

* *

Peace Congress and Arbitration Plans

An important gathering in the interests of international peace, the fourth American peace congress, was held in St. Louis last week. Among the subjects discussed were limitation of armaments, the Anglo-American peace centenary, Panama canal tolls and an international court. Resolutions adopted urged the repeal of the toll exemption clause in the Panama canal act, and also an appeal to the California legislature and to the national administration to secure a just and impartial settlement of the question of alien ownership of land. Other resolutions expressed appreciation of the work of President Taft in negotiating the general abritration treaties which the senate failed to ratify and urged the President to open diplomatic negotiations looking to a reduction of armaments. The announced policy of Secretary Bryan to negotiate treaties under strict arbitration was cordially approved.

The peace plan of Mr. Bryan which was indorsed by the peace ongress was a recent recommendation made by the secretary of tate for a series of worldwide treaties for the submission of all disputes of any kind between civilized nations to arbitration. In case of disputes Mr. Bryan proposes that a commission representing ach government, with a disinterested third party, shall investigate ll the facts in the case, and during this period neither government s in any way to increase its armament or to make any new trategic disposition of its forces or do anything to strengthen its military position. The commission is to have all necessary time up to a year to make its investigation and report. After the commission has made its report this embargo on military movements s to continue for thirty days more, the purpose of this additional imitation being to afford an opportunity for the people of both nations parties to the dispute, and also the rest of the world, to consider the report and ascertain the facts in the issues involved. It is believed by Mr. Bryan and others who have studied the idea that, while it would not make war impossible, it would in practice absolutely avert it. The proposals have been submitted to the senate committee on foreign relations.

✢ ✢

Successful Suffrage Demonstration in New York

New York City's interest in the equal suffrage cause was aroused ast week as never before. Friday night a great meeting and pageant was held at the Metropolitan opera house, with addresses by Theodore Roosevelt and Dr. Anna Howard Shaw. Several thousand dollars was given or pledged by the audience. On Saturday afternoon 10,000 paraders, mostly women, marched up 5th avenue in an exceptionally well organized and impressive procession. The number of marchers fell short by two-thirds of the forecast, but the spectators were numerous and appreciative, and the success of the demonstration was apparent.

A preliminary victory for suffrage was lately won in Pennsylvania, when the legislature passed a joint resolution for a constitutional amendment giving women the right to vote. It must be passed again in 1915 before it can go to the people for ratification.

In England the government has embarked on stronger measures of repression against the militant suffragists. Last week the London headquarters of the Women's Social and Political Union were raided by the police, the secretary and other officials arrested and a quantity of documents seized. Stenographers and clerks were ordered to leave and the premises closed. The office of the newspaper organ of the organization was also raided and the two women editors arrested. The paper was issued, however, in abbreviated form. The first page bore one word, "Raided." A serio-comic touch was added by The Standard newspaper, which solemnly disclosed a plot to convey the incorrigible Mrs. Pankhurst out of the country by aeroplane.

✢ ✢

Mr. Wilson Again Takes a Hand in Jersey Politics

President Wilson's disregard of precedents and his courage in following his own convictions regardless of dignified traditions is being generally remarked, the latest evidence of it appearing in his excursions to New Jersey to fight the bosses. Although he is President of the United States, Mr. Wilson believes he should use his intimate knowledge of the political conditions in his home state in behalf of its people, particularly where the issue is as plain and clear cut as it appears to be in the present instance. The President spoke last week at Newark and at Elizabeth with the expressed intention, he said, of trying to wrest New Jersey politics from what he termed a resumption of control by the old political machine. A law to reform the present jury system, which has been a cloak for monstrous fraud, is at stake.

"We want to redeem the jurisprudence of this state from the suspicion that men are not equally treated in the courts of law," said the President. "And is it not singular that we should always have to be fighting to get control of our own affairs? If you want to strike at the center and heart of corrupt politics, see to it that you put the control of grand juries into impartial and nonpolitical hands." Referring to the suggestion that it was not prudent for him to leave the center of affairs at Washington, Mr. Wilson said, "If you will tell me that there is something afoot to cheat the people in getting something for themselves I am your man, enlisted for the battle."

✢ ✢

—A jury in Chicago has brought in a verdict of murder against a chauffeur whose car had killed a pedestrian. The verdict carries a penalty of fourteen years' imprisonment. This is declared to be the first conviction of an automobilist for murder, though there have been convictions for manslaughter.

Religious World

Contention Among Episcopalians Grows Bitter

The painfully disturbed and abnormally sensitive situation which has developed in the Protestant Episcopal Church over the campaign of the high church party to change the denominational name to "American Catholic" could not be more vividly described than it is illustrated by an incident lately developed in Mount Vernon, a suburb of New York City. The town has two Episcopalian churches, both of them commonly rated low church. Of these one has recently called to be its rector Dr. Cyrus Townsend Brady, a novelist of some note, who has attained distinction also in church circles by securing in Episcopal General Convention six years ago the adoption of "Canon 19," which under certain conditions permits ministers of other denominations to preach from Episcopalian chancels. For being thus instrumental in establishing a so-called "open pulpit" Dr. Brady was violently assailed by high church Episcopalians from one end of the country to the other, yet stood his ground.

But on coming to Mount Vernon Dr. Brady began to burn candles called "eucharistic lights" on the side altar of his church, and himself appeared in the chancel wearing red vestments. For these things alone, despite all his record of liberality and the violent repudiation he had incurred from high churchmen, Dr. Brady was forthwith branded as a ritualist in a communication contributed to the local press by the rector of his neighboring parish in Mount Vernon, who thus openly invited Dr. Brady to abandon the Protestant Episcopal communion and attach himself to Romanism.

This sort of thing is being repeated in all parts of the denomination. Many Episcopalians, both lay and clerical, confess a fear that their communion cannot pass the discussion of this vexed subject of name in the next General Convention without an actual breach and schism between those who insist that their church is Protestant and those who insist that it is Catholic. If the Catholic party should prove strong enough to change the name, there seems no doubt that a very large contingent of Protestants would secede. If the Protestants hold the name as it is, the Catholics are rather more likely to stay in and continue the agitation, which is the prospect that really accounts for the Protestant section's insistence that the Catholics ought to go out and stay out.

✢ ✢

Awaiting Verdict in Last Korean Trial

Baron Yun and his five fellow prisoners, who alone were held guilty of conspiracy when 105 Koreans were tried before the Japanese court of appeals in Seoul, had their final trial on the last appeal before the supreme court the last week in April. The decision was reserved, and at last accounts had not yet been announced.

A letter just received from Dr. W. N. Blair, missionary in Pyeng Yang, gives a most touching and graphic description of the return to Pyeng Yang of that city's contingent from among the ninety-nine prisoners set free at the end of the former trial. By a most appropriate coincidence these released Christians got back to their native city on the afternoon before Easter. As can be readily imagined, the circumstances gave to Easter a significance brighter and more vivid than the Koreans had known before, for these their kinsmen and friends were received almost literally as those alive from the dead. As Mr. Blair says, the acquittal of so many seemed too good to be true. Though the church has been praying for this release, it was, like the church in Jerusalem when Peter came out of prison, scarcely able to realize the answer to its own petitions.

Of the scene around the railroad station when the train came in Mr. Blair writes: "Probably from 8,000 to 10,000 people assembled at the station to greet the Seoul train—the happiest crowd you ever saw. When our friends came forth every one must clasp their hands at least for a moment. Some were laughing, some were crying; but when aged mothers received their boys in their arms again the great crowd fell back and looked on with wet eyes. Mrs. Blair and I went to Elder Ne Chun Lup's house for only a few moments after supper. If you could have seen Ne Chun Lup as we saw him last night, surrounded by his family and friends in his own home once more, you would understand what was the joy that was in Bethany. Ne Chun Lup told me he had received great blessings in prison. He and the others put in most of the time studying the Bible together. They preached to very many in prison, and many were converted. The release of so many prisoners makes it terribly hard for the families of these who were left, and for the families of those who can never come back."

Editorial

Honest Questions

IN THE RELIGIOUS life there are just three types of questions. Some are idle, some are dishonest, some are honest. The real test is, whether we mean to shape our lives by the answer to the question when we get it; whether we are ready to obey the truth if we should find it.

There are many purely idle questions. The answer would make no sort of difference to us if we got it. We do not ask it because we really want to know, but because we are curious about some indifferent matter. It is of interest to know where Cain got his wife, and what was Paul's thorn in the flesh. The questions are worth asking as matters of interest, but so far as the Christian life is concerned they are, of course, idle questions. No matter how they are answered, duty is exactly the same. So with questions that are simply dishonest—where we pretend to be concerned and are not. We ask if the Bible is inspired, and we have already settled it that it is not so far as we are concerned. We do not mean to obey the answer if we get it. It is only a nominal question. We have not come with an honest and open mind to it.

But there are honest questions. There is simply no avoiding them in living our normal lives. There are things that it seems to us we must know—questions that are forced on us by our contact with others. Of course, questions which are idle to some become vital to others. Take the matter of miracles. There are some who are not at all troubled about them. There are others to whom they are vital. Or the matter of the Trinity, or the deity of our Lord. It is easy enough for some people to accept these great truths and raise no question about them. There are others who find themselves persistently faced by grave problems connected with them. Their questions are absolutely honest. They want to live by the truth which they discover. They mean to shape their lives by it when they find it. What is to be said about these questions?

For one thing it must be frankly recognized that there are some questions whose answer does not readily come to any of us. There is in the whole Christian life an element of faith. We simply do not know, for example, how to answer the question why God deals with us as he does, except in the broad assurance of fatherly love. We believe that his ways are all wise and kindly and best. But neither the wisdom, nor the kindness, nor the goodness appears to us. We must take them by faith. We can probably never come to an entirely satisfactory explanation of the fact of the Trinity, nor of the way by which Christ could be God and man. We are dealing with infinite matters, and cannot hope for a finite explanation.

It is well to realize this fact about some of these questions. They are perfectly legitimate, they do us no dishonor, and they are not offensive in God's sight. There continues to be, however, an element of blindness in our Christian life. It is in many ways the best part of that life because it gives us the joy of faith. It would be our ruin if no night came in the world. It would be our ruin if no night ever fell on the soul, through which it must needs walk by faith.

Another thing that needs to be said is that the facts which suggest the question must not be allowed to seem unsettled because the questions are not answered. We do not know the explanation of the facts, but we can hold by the facts without a tremor. How to explain the Trinity is one thing, but the Trinity is quite another. Jesus did not tell Nicodemus "how these things could be," but contented himself simply with reasserting them. We do not know yet the answer to Nicodemus's question, except in the form of an assertion. The explanation is not given, but the fact abides. Many a man has turned away from his Christian faith because he could not get the answer to a question about a fact, when the fact itself was there unquestioned.

The final thing that is important for an honest questioner is that he shall keep himself always honest. We must see to it that we are ready to live by the thing which we find is the answer to our question. We must be committed to obedience to the truth before we can hope to be shown the truth.

Good Lesson for Astonished Diplomats

For plain people living lives near to the reality of things, it grazes the unbelievable to see an international hubbub kicked up because a certain estimable lady and gentleman entertaining guests at dinner choose not to set wine on the table. In common-sense society it was long since fixed as an axiom of good breeding that guests should eat and drink what is set before them and go their ways with still tongues, recognizing the right of host and hostess to provide their own board as they will. But diplomacy appears so far removed from common sense and naturalness that this fundamental social law has not penetrated there. The comments of Mr. and Mrs. Bryan's ambassadorial guests reveal, as scarcely anything else in recent years, how artificial is the atmosphere in which the diplomatic world moves and has its being. The exercise of a bit of individual and domestic freedom as against prescribed conventionality is treated as a treacherous attempt to knock the old globe itself wabbly.

But however atrocious this supposed "faux pas" may appear to the distorted eyes of diplomacy, it will earn Mr. and Mrs. Bryan unstinted applause of their countrymen. This is just the sort of incident that most tickles American fancy—administering to staid aristocrats of Europe the healthy shock of disregarding their revered precedents. And Mr. Bryan surely did that thoroughly. Moreover, he did it manfully—without boorishness, yet without apology. His straightforward and upstanding manliness in the whole circumstance is itself a sufficient answer to cads beyond the ocean who assume that no abstainer from liquors can be anything but a doddering grandmother. This is the point of that very poor joke which a London paper got off about the capital of the United States having become "Wishy-Washington." President Wilson and Secretary Bryan—they are both of the same sort in this respect—can be trusted to confound that joker in due time. Anybody discovering anything "wishy-washy" about either of these administration leaders will be adjudged capable of discovering green cheese in the moon.

Why Not Street Preaching During Assemblies?

Dr. H. H. Bell, a leader in the United Presbyterian fellowship, writes in anticipation of the mighty rally of Presbyterian clans at Atlanta these serious words:

> "As groups of Assembly commissioners, great shall be our Assembly duties and responsibilities. They must receive Holy Spirit directed, prayerful, thoughtful attention. If we all go fully surrendered to the Holy Spirit, with the glory of Christ as our one and only aim, such attention our group duties will receive. But how pathetic it would be, and what a reflection on Christianity, if we should spend a whole week in Atlanta and not leave it lifted nearer to God and with hundreds, even thousands, of its unsaved secure in Jesus Christ as their personal Redeemer! Less than this will not honor him. Less than this, brother reader, will be to make a record you and I shall be ashamed to face when we stand in the presence of the opened books."

The Continent has long felt it a lamentable thing that Presbyterian General Assemblies come and go without leaving any traceable evangelistic mark on the cities which they visit. Is not the Atlanta convocation the time to change this? Why not evangelistic preaching on the streets every noon and evening during the Assembly sessions in that city?

Inwardness of the Presbyterial Rights Issue

Along with other unsuccessful endeavors to make the present assault on the Board of Home Missions look like a contention for big principles, there has been much said about defending the presbyteries against the Home Board's intrusion into their rights. But this sort of talk, when followed back through various echoes to the original voice, proves to be based on the complaint which Dr. Weaver carried up from Pueblo Presbytery to the Assembly in Louisville last May. Very persistently he tried to get both the home mission and polity committee of that body to take account of his charge that the board was transgressing the presbytery's constitutional prerogative. But this grave constitutional issue, boiled down, was found to amount to nothing more than the interesting but scarcely tragic fact that the home mission committee of Pueblo Presbytery wanted to spend money on a certain field, and the board, thinking the expenditure unwise, would not furnish the cash. And both committees in turn refused to get excited over this. Neither would dignify the matter by making a report on it to Assembly.

The liberty of presbytery was not invaded in this case. It had a perfect right to organize and aid Cortez church; nobody ever questioned that. But certainly on the other hand the Board of Home Missions, instructed to disburse according to its best wisdom the funds which Presbyterian givers commit to its care, has also a right to say whether it will or will not assist Pueblo Presbytery in establishing Cortez church—or any other presbytery in establishing any other church. If indeed Dr. Weaver thinks otherwise than this, we can quite understand why he regards the board's cost of administration too high. On his plan, which would make it the right of any presbytery to draw any money it pleased from the board treasury and spend the same as it chose, high-grade secretaries at headquarters would be entirely superfluous; a bright young bookkeeper facile in signing checks would be the entire executive force needed.

But potent as the hypnotizing word "economy" often proves, The Continent has no expectation of seeing Dr. Weaver's frugal plan adopted by the progressive Presbyterian Church. A strong centralized board commissioned to direct Presbyterian forces under a unified policy to a nationwide service is a factor of denominational life which has long since vindicated itself too thoroughly by its results to be now disturbed by objections either to its cost or its power. The church made it powerful because the efficiency of power was wanted. And with that efficiency obtained, the church cannot be beguiled by local dissents here and there from upholding the national officers to whom the efficiency is owing. The autonomy of the presbyteries will be respected—is being respected; in the overwhelming majority of instances the board does just what the presbyteries ask of it. But if occasionally the board chances to have a different opinion of its own, and so declines to cooperate in some certain presbyterial plan, that assuredly is no reason for shouting that the foundations are destroyed—and the righteous all engulfed in the list of flood victims.

Superintendence Is No Overlordship

"Under surveillance like a lot of scapegraces," is the resentful phrase in which one home missionary expresses his dissatisfaction with the oversight that home mission workers in general are conscious of since a wider superintendence has been adopted by the Presbyterian Home Board. But the man who speaks so bitterly of this development hardly invites sympathy. He seems to be a man who cannot understand—or does not want to. Superintendence in the Presbyterian democracy is not surveillance. It is help, encouragement, fellowship. The superintendent comes to the churches not an inspector sent to spy on underlings but a brother pastor appearing to lend a hand and offer counsel out of a longer experience and wider observation. In former years, before field men were employed in home mission operations, pastors on missionary posts bewailed their loneliness and longed for an occasional visitor. Nowadays, when such visitation is provided for, it would seem as if the boon of it must certainly appeal to hardworking men. Of course there is a stiff keying-up stress in the knowledge that a superintendent is likely to appear almost any day and ask about almost everything. But the conscientious pastor knows the value of being so keyed up, and appreciates it. The man who resents it and calls brotherly oversight by the hard name of "surveillance" must have some reason for loving isolation rather than companionship—which is almost as bad as loving darkness rather than light.

The Second Phase of Flood Relief

Appeals from the Presbyteries of Dayton and Logansport for aid to churches seriously damaged in the flood are indexes to a Presbyterian obligation that doubtless extends to several other presbyteries within the region where the great waters overflowed this spring. In the first beautiful outleap of brotherly sympathy toward the sufferers from flood there was no reason for thinking of any separate denominational responsibility; the human tie was the paramount relation, and Presbyterians did right in giving freely with all the rest of their fellow citizens to the general relief funds of the Red Cross. Sporadic attempts in other denominations to start church funds came to deserved failure. But that giving was for the assistance of households—the restoring of private homes. Now with that task nearly done, another problem succeeds it; the work of aid moves on from domestic to institutional necessities. And those necessities of organizations quite evidently must be supplied by separate action of the respective fellowships with which such organizations are identified.

The secret orders realize this. Lodges are sending money to lodges within the flood territories. The Young Men's Christian Associations are beginning to raise funds for restoring injured association buildings at Dayton and Hamilton. And surely churches will do as much for churches. Surely Presbyterians will be mindful of Presbyterian congregations. People who without outside aid would not have been able to restore their own homes will all the more require assistance to recoup the harm done to their houses of worship. If therefore Presbyterianism is a real fraternity—as real as the lodges—this is the occasion for it to prove itself. Do not dismiss the matter with the all too easy "There is so much else." There is much else, but not enough else to obscure this special duty of Christian brotherhood in an hour when human brotherhood has just been evidenced so abundantly.

How Three and Four Harmonize at Atlanta

In announcements of the Pan-Presbyterian convocation in Maytime at Atlanta, the figures three and four have been playing hide and seek until the average reader has perhaps been quite at a loss to tell whether the Atlanta occasion is to be triplex or quadruplex. But the puzzle comes to its solution when one learns that there will be three Presbyterian General Assemblies in session simultaneously at Atlanta, but four Presbyterian denominations officially represented there. General Assemblies will belong respectively to those churches once called Northern and Southern—but now, in these days of comity and accommodation, designated simply as "U. S. A." and "U. S."—and to the third denomination which bears the prophetic name of United Presbyterian.

The fourth factor in the case is the Associate Reformed Church—which is so Presbyterian that people commonly call it "A. R. P." This lesser sister in the family has no General Assembly but only a General Synod, and that meets not in the spring but in the customary synodical season of autumn. Nevertheless this synod accepted the Atlanta invitation as spontaneously as did any of the Assemblies and arranged to be represented in the great fraternal conclave by a commission which will include as many ministers of the church as can get to Atlanta at that time. This commission will not have any legislative business to attend to during the days, but it will take full part in the great union popular meetings of the evenings during Assembly time; and so will complete the quadrilateral of good fellowship which was in Mr. Jacobs's mind when he first proposed Atlanta's delightful Pan-Presbyterian plan.

—It's a great thing to work twenty-five years at one job, and then have assurance that one is regarded by his coworkers as more fit for the labor than ever before—not worn out, but going on from strength to strength. That experience can only come to a man who has kept steadily learning something each year of the twenty-five—which is the one infallible test of aliveness in any variety of the human species. Two widely known American church workers have in recent weeks passed their examinations successfully in that test—Secretary L. Wilbur Messer, head of the Young Men's Christian Association in Chicago, and Dr. W. R. Taylor, pastor of Brick Presbyterian church in Rochester. Both are quarter-century captains of still growing institutions because they have not themselves ceased to grow.

—An offensive document which is also in another way an encouragement is the circular advertising of a liquor house distributed at the doors in residence sections of Chicago. Time was when such advertising would not have been necessary. But now the offer of "a very handsomely decorated china plaque imported from Germany," given away free with every dollar of purchase, indicates that the liquor trade is not very good and must be tolled along. Still more significant is the line, "We deliver to your home in unlettered wagons." That is an interesting testimonial to public opinion. Evidently it is understood that a family which has liquor openly delivered at its doors is apt to lose standing.

—At least one protest will be found among the papers of the U. S. A. Assembly at Atlanta objecting to any interference with the graded lessons. Springfield Presbytery in a memorial stands up for the lessons just as they are. Of course the report of the committee which has been investigating these lessons for the last year will be considered in the most open temper at Atlanta, but if enemies of the system imagine that the graded series has no friends willing to break a lance in its favor the experience of Assembly discussion will undeceive them.

—Denver Presbytery formally resolves that it has no sympathy at all with "public attacks on the personnel, the policy and the administration of the Board of Home Missions," but reposes in the board and its administrative officers absolute confidence. This will be cheering proof to Dr. Thompson and his associates that Colorado is in no sense the enemy's country. And The Continent is comfortably sure by indications of present drift that there won't be any enemy's country anywhere by the time the board reports to Assembly.

—The death of Dr. E. Trumbull Lee, pastor of Wilkinsburg church, Pittsburg Presbytery, costs the church the leadership of a strong and loyal gospel preacher, who has fallen in his prime. Dr. Lee's prior pastorates in Philadelphia and Cincinnati had given him wide acquaintance and influence. Since 1907 he had been chairman of Assembly's permanent committee on temperance.

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

And all things, whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive—Matthew 21:22

WE DO MOVE GOD by our prayers. Our weakness lays hold upon his omnipotence; our need lays hold upon his fullness; and we move him. Our prayers effect action which, except for them, would not have occurred. But this is a truth not easily won, nor lightly held, in our experience. For God knows infinitely better than we do what he ought to do, and how can we think that he can in any way be influenced by us? Our thoughts are not as his thoughts, neither are our ways as his ways. How can we hope to make our thoughts his thoughts, or our ways his ways?

Can We Move God?

And many of us are so firmly fixed in the idea that God has determined his way of working so wisely and so completely that he cannot be affected by our desires, that we are prone to believe that it would be a positive intrusion on our part into the divine ordering of the universe for us to attempt to change or modify the course of any event, even in our own lives, by praying to him. Did he not make the law of the uniformity of nature? Does not this law control the whole range of our objective existence? Should we ask him to depart from it?

Difficulty in Seeming Impersonality of God

God is so great that he almost seems to be impersonal. He seems to be impersonal! The difficulty lies just here. Alas! we have too often placed him beyond the reach of all that is gently and sincerely personal. To deny that God can be moved by our prayers is to deny that he can be affected as other personalities are affected. To say that God cannot be moved by our prayers is to say that he is a great automaton, wound up from eternity and unto eternity, effecting only that for which he was originally constituted. To say that God cannot be moved by my prayers is to say that he cannot be so much affected by my cry as I am by that of my little son.

Just as this world is not the product of blind force, but was created by the loving will of God, so too it is not sustained and operated by an impassive engine, but by a sovereign God, who is also our heavenly Father. God can, and does, modify his purpose at every turn to meet the desires of all his suppliant children. Our God is the living God; and his first requirement in all those who approach him is that they should believe that he is and that he is the rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

Of course there are two questions involved, namely, God's ability to answer prayer and God's willingness. We have dealt with the first question. Evidently God would not be God if he could not answer prayer. But in reference to the second question, whether God wills to answer prayer, we may readily conceive of a world in which God, for wise reasons, had determined that his action should at no time be affected by the petitions of his creatures. He might have said: "Do not ask, and it shall be given you; do not seek, and ye shall find; do not knock, and it shall be opened unto you." God might have said so, but he did not. Human nature would have been a different thing, and the world would have been a different world if he had done so.

We Petition God Upon His Own Invitation

But, on the contrary, God willed that men should call upon him for those things of which they have need. He did say: "Everyone that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened." In the wisdom of God it was better for men that they should obtain their blessings from him by praying to him for them. And if he did not bestow them upon his children without their praying for them it was surely because he desired that they might enter into closer fellowship with him than would have been possible if they had never had to ask him for anything. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, If ye shall ask anything of the Father, he will give it you in my name. Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name; ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full" (John 16:24). Evidently Jesus himself attached the highest importance to this command when he gave it to his disciples; for he repeats it three times within the space of this one discourse. And it is in this discourse that he draws near to his followers in the most intimate, most yearning words that have ever been uttered in human speech. By ceasing to ask God for things we do not divest our communion with him of the last elements of selfishness. Nay, we lose our sense of dependence upon him. We gradually come to feel that the only prayer that makes things come to pass is the prayer of hard work. We cease to wrestle with the angel until the day dawns.

And the hardest work that man can do is to pray aright. It is prayer alone than can tax human endurance to the utmost. Prayer is work that will yield results far beyond all other endeavors of the human soul. It is work that will remove mountains and cast them into the sea. There is nothing except prayer that can bring down the might of eternal God to sustain and support his helpless children in their struggle with sin and pain. Were prayer simply the moving of our souls upward and outward, we would not move much; but in prayer we move God. All the great saints of the Bible have known the truth of these words. They have prayed because they have known that God would give them what they would ask. Their cry has been torn from the depths of their human spirit. Let us lay some of their testimony together and consider its significance.

All the Patriarchs Were Men of Prayer

Before we proceed far in the book of Genesis we come upon a remarkable statement: "Then began men to call upon the name of Jehovah" (Genesis 4:26). This sentence closes the patriarchal genealogy to Enosh, the son of Seth. It does not mean that men now for the first time began to hold communion with God, for from the beginning there was a sense of the presence of God, a knowledge of his mighty power and a desire to appease his wrath against sin; but it does mean that men now began to bring their petitions to God and to experience the consciousness of having obtained an answer to their prayers.

The great patriarchs, especially Abraham, were men of prayer. Abraham prayed for a son (Genesis 15:2), and God promised him a posterity more numerous than the stars; he prayed for Ishmael (Genesis 17:18), and God spared his life and made of him a nation; he prayed for Sodom (Genesis 18:23-32), and God at first granted his petition that if fifty righteous men should be found within the city, it would be spared, and afterwards reduced his condition by successive stages until he conceded that but ten righteous men should be requisite to the salvation of the city from destruction. Intercession is the salient characteristic of patriarchal prayer.

Jacob prayed to God for a favorable reception by Esau (Genesis 32:9-12), and the reconciliation with his brother was his answer. His wrestling with the angel (Genesis 32:24) is a nobler prayer and is characterized by Hosea (12:4) as an intercession for Israel. Moses prayed for the forgiveness of his people in the time of their rebellion (Exodus 32:11-13), as did also Joshua after the defeat at Ai (Joshua 7:6-9), and Gideon after the continued oppression of the Midianites (Judges 6:13). Samuel, upon the loss of the ark to Kirjath-jearim and the defeat of Israel by the Philistines, cried unto God for his people (I. Samuel 7:5-12). And Elijah, the great representative of prophetic intercession, expended his whole soul and mind and strength in calling upon God to vindicate his name in the eyes of the waiting congregation (I. Kings 18).

Ancient Heroes of Faith Prevailed Through Prayer

Time would fail us were we to attempt even to name all the ancient heroes of prayer, who through faith in God subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the power of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, from weakness were made strong, waxed mighty in war, turned to flight the armies of aliens. The testimony to the efficacy of prayer of the Old Testament and the New Testament is one and constant. But the earthly life of our blessed Master we never can pass by, and the secret of its compassion and its power lies in the constancy of its prayer. "Who in the days of his flesh, having offered up prayers and supplications with strong crying and tears unto him that was able to save him from death, and having been heard for his godly fear, though he was a Son, yet learned obedience by the things which he suffered; and having been made perfect, he became unto all them that obeyed him the author of eternal salvation" (Heb. 5:7-9). "He went out into a mountain to pray"—how often these words occur in the pages of the evangelists! The mountain and the midnight air, the calm of the blue sea of Galilee at his feet and the silence of the stars above and the great Father's brooding love over and in it all. Did he move the Father when he prayed?

(Continued on page 636)

YALE BOYS "STARTED SOMETHING"

A Work for the "Down-and-Outs" Within the Shadow of One of America's Great Universities

BY W. O. SHEWMAKER

Here is the simple story of a gospel mission hotel founded by Yale boys—one of them the lamented William Whiting Borden—that has reached college students as well as the ordinary class of human derelicts. It has proved the power and practicability of Christianity to regenerate individuals and communities. Mr. Borden, the young Chicago millionaire who after leaving college had definitely decided to become a missionary to the Chinese Mohammedans, was more largely interested in financing this mission than appears here. Since the article was written he has died in Cairo, whither he had gone in preparation for his work.

"HELLO, BILL!"

"Hello, Biff!"

The two men stood facing each other.

One was tall, straight, bald, smooth-shaven and middle-aged. The other was of stocky build, showing in pose and carriage the fresh mounting vigor of yet growing youth, his title to which was confirmed by the ruddy, unlined face, the clear, confident eyes and the soft sheen of the rich brown hair that made a thick covering for his shapely head.

It is the older man that is Bill—just Bill to everybody about the place. In the lines of his seamed face may be read at least the index of a story, the chapter headings of which might be somewhat as follows: "Fair Promise," "Sin," "Disappointment," "Ruin," "Despair," "Sorrow," "Rescue," "Hope," "Love" and "Peace." Back of the alert, shrewd gleam of his bright eyes glows steadily the quiet light of brotherly kindness.

The younger man, whose familiar name in the above dialogue might suggest the beginning of a vigorous scrap, is of such as win the heart at first sight, provoking the admiring envy of even the self-sufficiency of middle age. For he is of the very elite (and we use that word at its best) of a great university.

They were opposites—these two. Not only in appearance and age but in experience and —other things.

Bill had been a saloonkeeper. The other was of the flower of American academic life. But they were met here in evident comradeship. For they were on common ground. That is, they were in the hotel. Bill was there, of course. For he was its manager.

One night, years ago, in New Haven, Connecticut, overwhelmed with the realization of the fact that he had become the victim of the saloon which he owned and conducted, he had, without waiting to sober up, locked the door and, throwing the key in through the window, left the place and the city. After this there was the sadly familiar story—so often told, alas! so often lived—of wanderings to and fro, of reforms that failed, and fights that were lost, and falls ever harder and deeper, until at last he was on the bottom in New York City's underworld. Released one day—and not for the first time, either—from the alcholic ward, and regarded at the hospital as a "hopeless case," he found his way to that famous life-saving station on the verge of the vortex—the Water Street mission, the scene of the wonders wrought through McAuley and Hadley. What happened there turned the hopeless case of the physicians into a perfectly sober man and made the derelict saloonkeeper the valued assistant in the great rescue mission. Which also is a familiar story—and very blessedly so.

William F. Ellis

It was on a March day in the year 1907 that some Yale College boys, undergraduates, concluded to "start something." And they did. It turned out to be a hotel that they started. For cannot college boys do most anything? Especially if they are born, as at least one of them was, to both position and wealth. A hotel? Why not? They went down to New York and hired an ex-convict to come and run it for them. The writer does not remember to have seen any reference to this enterprise in the reports of those agents who were lately active in the investigation and exhibition of American university life. Surely they must have overlooked it. For it was certainly a warm trail. A hotel, financed by young Yale men, run by an ex-convict—what more promising for an investigation by inquiring sociologists?

Their ex-convict finally left them. (He did so, by the way, to become an official of the National Prison Reform Association.) They went again to New York and found Bill. They brought him back to the city which he had not seen since the night he had run away from his own saloon. And thus the Hotel Martin was the meeting place of him and that fine young student who is at least one of the successors of that original group which started the hotel. He was one of the proprietors, so to speak. For it is still financed and controlled by Yale men.

And the meeting of these two men is a symbol of what happens in that little old-fashioned business block at 55-59 Court street, New Haven. Here meet two streams of American life in such a way as it is probable they do not anywhere else at all. New Haven is no longer an innocent New England village. It is a full grown city, with a slum. Situated between Boston and New York, it is on the highway of the hobo, and through its slum region flows a ceaseless tide bearing great numbers of human derelicts, "down-and-outs," homeless and hopeless men. The Hotel Martin is for these.

Here are beds, baths and bread, and clothes if need be. There is work, too, and human sympathy. The plain, but not shabby, office is open for them always, with warmth and light and something to read. There is a way open to the odd job that will lead to work that is steady —as steady as the man. Neither is shiftlessness encouraged, nor worthlessness nursed. A man is given opportunity to pay at least in part for what he gets. And his self-respect is thereby started into new life. He is also tested as to his willingness to work, the Associated Charities of New Haven attending to this. And many have been the benefits conferred by this practical benevolence.

But this is not that of which either the boys or Bill are most proud, nor is it the most remarkable thing. If you come in the right way you will be shown a room where strange and splendid things are done—usually in the night time.

Mrs. William F. Ellis

This room opens on the street. In it are rows of plain chairs. In one corner is an organ—at one end a raised platform and a reading desk, like a chapel or a Sunday school room, for such it is. It is here that the tides really meet and—yes—mingle. The superintendent is Bill, whom you now had better know as William F. Ellis, and his wife (whose presence at his side, we more than suspect, reveals a romance of rescue work, in which she was active even before her marriage) together take care of the benevolences of the institution. But here in this chapel, where they all will keep you longest, is where not the Yale student's pocketbook but his personality is involved. He comes down here to talk to the crowd that has drifted in from the outgoing tide of the slum and to help whom he can to a knowledge of Jesus Christ the Saviour.

Or the student comes just to see "what's doing." And he sees. There has been such a thing as this in that little chapel—at one time, close together, bending low on their knees for the same purpose, the old and broken prodigal, who has wandered far, just coming to himself and wondering if there is a way to the Father's house, and the young one who has just started on the road to the far country and the swine pen. And there together their lives have been saved, one being brought all the way back, the other stopped as he was starting. And others still of Yale's goodly company, not at all prodigal in life but doubtful and not at all sure that men are ever "saved," have come, as true students should, to see what these things might be. And they have gone away convinced. It has been called a "clinic" and a "laboratory." In it the miracle of the new birth is wrought before the critical, it may be skeptical, eyes of the college man.

Professor Henry B. Wright gives this testimony: "It is my firm conviction that Yale Hope mission under the leadership of William F. Ellis has done more to convince all classes of men at Yale of the power and practicability of Christianity to regenerate individuals and communities than any other force in the university. Its influence for good among the students has been inestimable."

Yale Hope Mission Building

There is yet another stream of living influence which flows into Hotel Martin and out from it through Yale's Mission of Hope. Representing it was the man who made the hotel and the mission possible, that one of the original group who, especially, was known to have been born to wealth and position. Although devoted to carrying the gospel to inland China, while thus identified with the foreign work his interest in Yale's nearest home mission continued. And having but lately gone out from Yale, his name appeared there among the men connected with the mission not as W. W. Borden, but rather in the affectionate form of Bill, for which name, indeed, these boys seem to have a preference.

Thus in Hotel Martin student and tramp, culture and rudeness, sin and grace, and home and foreign missions mingle to form a stream that flows from a great American university and yet makes glad the city of our God.

Brief and Pointed

A month-old Jersey calf was nibbling at the grass in the yard, and the summer girl eyed it doubtfully. "Tell me," she said, turning impulsively to her hostess, "does it really pay to keep as small a cow as that?"

"What I admire about Briggs is the fact that he says what he thinks." "Which probably accounts for another one of Briggs's traits that I admire very much." "And what is that?" "His silence." —Birmingham Age-Herald.

Can We Move God?

(Continued from page 634)

And were the space permissible we could easily multiply testimonies from the great books of devotion of the Christian centuries; from the writings of Cyprian, Augustine and Chrysostom; of Thomas Aquinas and Thomas a Kempis; of Savonarola and St. Francis of Assisi; of Luther, Calvin and Knox; of John Bunyan and John Wesley. It is in the experience of the most representative Christians that Christianity can be most fairly estimated, and that the reality of divine grace can be most accurately tested. Let us give but one typical citation, taken from the opening of John Bunyan's "Discourse on Prayer":

"Prayer is an ordinance of God, and that to be used both in public and private; yea, such an ordinance as brings those that have the spirit of supplication into great familiarity with God; and is also so prevalent an action, that it getteth of God, both for the person that prayeth and for them that are prayed for, great things. It is the opener of the heart of God, and a means by which the soul, though empty, is filled. By prayer the Christian can open his heart to God as to a friend, and obtain fresh testimony of God's friendship to him."

And to the high testimony of the great teachers of the church we may add the memories of many humble saints whom we ourselves have known, whether among the lowly members of our congregations or in the intimate fellowship of our family circles. Some of us have the blessed memories of a father and a mother who had formed the habit of asking God for what they needed, and receiving it. These saints were far on their way into the innermost. They knew assuredly that God would give them their petition; and moreover they felt that they needed to know it. Indeed they were able to place all their prayers on the high level of the practice of St. John (I. John 5:13-15). They knew that God had heard their petition and this was equivalent to his granting it.

The greatest need of our Christian life today is more prayer. Whoever has power with God has power with man. As he emerges from the holy presence he is strong. Because he has seen God face to face he has no fear of the face of man. We need to know that we move God. For this consciousness will be our underlying sustenance in all the common tasks of life; and it will be the only ultimate dependence in the last extremities of the warfare of the soul. In the midst of our struggles with the evil that is in the world about us, in our conflict with the sinfulness of our hearts within, may there be vouchsafed to us the abiding consciousness of our Father in heaven, who giveth good gifts to all that ask him, and doeth unto all his children according to their faith.

"The Simple Gospel"

What the husband said was this: "My wife is all made over. She is a different woman entirely. For a long time she was clear down in the dumps. She had lost all her interest in the church and wanted to quit going. She was sour, cross and gloomy. But all of a sudden she has got over it completely and she is her old self, and better. She can't do enough for the church these days."

What the wife said was this: "When the minister a few Sundays ago got up in the pulpit and preached on our being like Christ it broke us all up. Some of us got together after the service and fairly cried about it. We didn't know that we were so starved spiritually. But we realized that what we had just been hearing was the thing we had been hungry for all along. I went home and thought about it all the afternoon. I thought about it after I went to bed. It was pretty hard for me to come around to it, but I finally just confessed to myself straight that I had not been doing anything like what I ought to do in a whole lot of ways. Then I got right up, though it was away along in the middle of the night, and went to my desk and wrote five letters to the women that had cried with me after service in the morning.

"I told them about a young girl I knew, a stenographer who had been making an awfully brave fight against sickness all year, and was hardly able to work yet. I asked them if they would not send me $10 apiece for a Christmas present for her. The money came back from every one of them just as soon as a letter could go and come, and with what my husband and I put in with it, it paid the doctor's bill that this brave little girl had been worrying about so long and left her a little over beside. The letter I got from her—sweet, trustful Christian that she is—was more than enough pay. But ever since then I have gone on trying to practice that sermon, and the days are happier and happier"

What the preacher said was—well, he didn't say anything. He just thought, when he heard this story. He does love books—has loved them all his life—and what he read in the books about theology and apologetics and comparative religion and philosophy tempted him, ever since he began to preach, for a place in his sermons. Moreover, having read the best English literature, he liked to get an echo of that into his preaching with big, round-sounding sentences. He has been human enough to enjoy the whispers he heard about his learning and brilliancy. But somehow, amidst it all, there crept through his mind many little doubts whether his learning was really meeting the needs of his people. That was the reason he decided on a different experiment. That was the reason he concluded to "get down to something simple." The "something simple" was the sermon about being like Christ, and the thoughts he thought when he heard this story were filled with a new awe at the power of the simplicity which is in Jesus Christ.

Preacher's Wife Tells a Snake Story

BY RUTH MARIAN FRANK

Several months ago The Continent printed a brief item showing the varied work of a pastor on the frontier. Among many other things recorded for the quarter was "Rattlesnakes killed, sixty." Here is the account of how the snakes were killed, written by the pastor's plucky wife.

IN THE NEW homestead country of South Dakota, on a stretch of almost level prairie, stands our humble shack, in no respect different from the others which dot the plains here and there at wide intervals, except that it shelters a minister's family and the minister when he is at home.

Neighbors are far enough away, but there are communities fifteen or twenty miles apart sufficiently large to make a congregation and give some support to religious services. The preacher who serves such a field must needs take to the saddle and literally ride the circuit. Such was my husband, ministering to some six points twice a month and riding on an average a hundred miles a week, winter and summer. At home for a day or two in the middle of the week, we were a happy family, but gone at every week-end, "claim" life with its loneliness would have been well nigh unbearable, except for the knowledge that he went about from place to place doing good.

Sunday afternoon was by far the most dreaded time, but now and again something happened enough out of the ordinary to break the monotony, if not to shock the nerves of a strong woman.

October ushered in some fine Indian summer weather, after a cold rainy spell of ten days. The first Sunday was as beautiful a day as one would wish to see. It was impossible to stay in the house when all nature was calling so loudly "Come out and enjoy me." Consequently, after teaching my little 4-year-old boy his Sunday school lesson and some songs, and reading until we were both tired, we started out for a walk. We had not gone more than an eighth of a mile from the house when "buz-z-z-z" broke the silence, and there at our feet, holding his own, was an old rattler. Oh, how our hearts did beat! We had nothing with which to kill him and would not have tried for the world if we had. My neighbor, an elderly woman, and I spent the best part of a Sunday afternoon just a year before trying to kill two old rattlesnakes with stones. For various reasons neither has had much desire to try for the honors since. So we stood at a respectful distance and watched his sinuous body slide into a hole, over which we immediately clapped a big rock, thinking to imprison his snakeship and kill him later when the preacher should arrive home.

By this time we were conscious of our collie's vicious barking a few rods away and I said, "Sears, I believe he is barking at a snake." So we went to investigate. Before we could see clearly we heard a terrific buzzing. Cautiously we approached, and, sure enough, there was what looked to be the biggest snake we had ever seen. He seemed to be very long and coiled in two or three places. We stood watching a minute and then glanced down at our feet. There, not three feet away, lay another big one stretched out straight and very quiet. My only comment was in an awed whisper, "Well, Sears, let's go home." We turned, walked a few feet, and there was another snake which the collie had angered. He, too, was rattling furiously. By this time we were pale to our toes, and came creeping and praying home. Once there, we practically locked ourselves in the shack until the circuit rider's return home on Monday night.

Of course we poured the horrible story into his ears before he could get into the house. The next day the bright sun warmed the earth sufficiently to put life into snakes, so we started out, the preacher with a long-handled spade and a 22-caliber rifle, Sears and I tagging along to point out the game.

We first went to the hole I had shut up with the rock. There, stretched out in the sun, was Mr. Methuselah. Evidently there was more than one opening to that hole. A shot or two from the rifle crippled him and a terrific whack broadside from the spade finished him. With a sharp knife the warrior removed the tail and pocketed the rattles. Raising our eyes we beheld another a little farther on. He was dispatched with equal ease, as was also the third, the rattles gradually swelling the pocket. Now for the fourth, biggest and loudest. "O-u-u-u! Look at this!" There at our feet—a spot the preacher had just stepped over—ran another but smaller snake than any we had seen. This led us to think that there might be more. It made us open our eyes wider and our hearts beat faster. For a moment we seemed riveted to the spot, then the brawny arm of our all-sufficient "daddy" prevailed. On the little army went for the battle with the "big" snake. The hole was easily found. Viewing it from a safe distance, the preacher said, "Yes, he's out! Looks like two! No, three, four! Well, eight!" And with that he began first to shoot and then to whack. Whack, whack, whack; each time the spade came down it hit a wriggling mass of snakes. What we thought to be such a big one on Sunday proved to be several. In two minutes the snake exterminator had killed seventeen.

Sears and I were standing at what we thought a safe distance, wishing we were home. Announcing our wish in tremulous voice, we started, choosing an old and well beaten trail for safety. "Oh, daddy, there's another!" "Where?" "There," pointing to a spot some hundred feet away. "Yes, I see him," and daddy began to whack only ten feet in front of me. We had each seen a different snake.

To make a long story short, our program for an hour was this: While my husband was dispatching one snake, I would locate another that needed his attention as soon as the trophies were secured. Before we had reached the house he had killed twenty-six. He then went back alone and killed four more, came home and had dinner, went back and killed twelve more, making forty-two that day.

On the next day, toward noon, when the sun was sufficiently warm, we started out again and killed eighteen, making in all sixty rattlesnakes in two days. With the exception of eight they were all large, ranging from six to fifteen rattles each. All were on the warpath and fought viciously to the bitter end.

During the summer twelve others had fallen victims to his spade, buggy whip and halter rope. These, with a record of fifty the preceding summer, made a total of 122 rattlers in two years of circuit riding; enough to relieve the profession of monotony at least and give a consciousness that some good had been done, sufficiently biblical though not of a decidedly spiritual nature.

Was He a Good Sunday School Teacher?

BY CHARLOTTE BIRD

IN A CERTAIN Sunday school a class of twenty-five high school boys was built up by a university student. The fine, clean teacher was just the sort of young man under whose influence a careful mother would like to see her boy. He was a Christian with vim and the best intentions. "He is a hustler," declared the pastor admiringly, and the superintendent indorsed this opinion. In fact, the appearance of this class in the main Sunday school room was the signal of suppressed applause, which the teacher clearly expected.

This young man realized that to keep this fine class together he must devise attractions, such as athletic games. These were soon worked up into an enthusiasm, and a fever heat attended match games with corresponding classes in other Sunday schools.

Now the Sunday school is in session just one precious hour in the whole week, and after the time for the other exercises has been deducted no more than half an hour for teaching the lesson proper remains. To the real teacher each minute has wings. But our student teacher and his "bunch of fellows" had to discuss plans for future games somewhere, so in regular parliamentary order they did it in the lesson hour. Fifteen or twenty minutes of the precious half hour went in this discussion. Then for ten minutes they talked of the lesson.

Some special meetings were in progress and the pastor was very anxious to reach this particular class. But neither they nor their teacher appeared till the pastor sent a special invitation. To the pastor's feeling appeal they remained cold. But as soon as the meeting closed they ran into a corner and were heard discussing their coming game. One or two boys finally did join the church, but they had other influences to lead them that way.

To hold a Sunday school class of high school boys together must religion be relegated to the second place?

BLACK UNCLE'S SONG MADE A PREACHER

ONE OF THE best known and most successful—incidentally, one of the best looking—of the city ministers of the Middle West could tell, if he would, an unusual and touching story of his own conversion and of how he came to enter the ministry.

While still in his twenties he became an actor and, by the way, a mighty good one, too. Many a time have some, doubtless, of those who read this applauded his interpretation of his part, his personal magnetism and his striking good looks. Were his "stage name" to be given here more than one (perhaps a staid matron who in her teens was a matinee idol worshiper) would exclaim: "Why, that's the one who played Little Billee in 'Trilby' so charmingly!" Correct! That is he—or was, if you please.

——

Some fifteen years or so ago it happened that his company was playing in the city of Louisville. Leaving the theater at a late hour he thought to take a turn around the streets. Passing through a little park he saw a bent old negro "uncle" sitting on a park bench, who, as he approached, began to sing softly to himself. And the song as he sang it was, "Jesus, Lovah uv mah soul."

Many a darky retains a good voice past his youth, but it was the tenderness and feeling of the old man's song, as well as the timbre of his aged voice, that held the solitary listener.

As the last verse was sung the young actor hurried up impulsively and pulling out a handsome bit of his last pay said: "Uncle, you're an old man, and it's late for you to be out like this. If you have no home, this will help you a bit. Take it and go and be comfortable for a few days, anyway."

The old negro pulled off a battered hat and said: "Dat's pow'ful kind uv you, boss. Ah's ol', an' Ah ain't got no home, an' ef hit's jes' de same to you Ah'll take jes' a bit uv dat money—'case somehow or udder de good Lawd he sen's me a bit ev'y day. But Ah don't need any mo', 'case he allus looks arter me, ev'y day. An' hit don't matter, boss, ef an' ol' man's ol', an' ain't got no home, jes' so's he kin sing dat 'ere song uv mine. Ah'd like to sing hit again to yo', jes' 'case you done gib me dis. Hit's a wunnerful song, boss. Hit's called, 'Jesus, Lovah uv mah soul!'" And he began to sing it softly again.

The actor heard it through. Then he shook hands with the old man, exceedingly to the singer's surprise, and said: "Good night, uncle. You've done a good night's work with that song—better than ever I've done with my life. Because you've started me doing something—for I'm going to learn to sing that song, too!"

——

To cut a long story short, it all started there. Today his adoring people, who know him for a saint for all that he is under forty still, sometimes wonder why a certain hymn seems to have a charm for him that no other words have in all the literature of sacred song. This story is the answer. P. B. J.

THE WAYFARER

The Women Who Can

AS ONE WHO prides himself upon being detached from all small considerations of local pride, the Wayfarer observes with mild amusement the endless controversy between Philadelphia and New York. He hears the Gothamite say with gusto, "I spent a month or two in Philadelphia yesterday"—a venerable dig at the Quaker city's slowness—while one of Penn's folk mildly remarks, still more subtly, "I see they've made a new free rendering of 'Facilis descensus averni'; namely, 'It's only two hours to New York.'"

The correct counter for this, in the mind of Broadway, is this well tested story: A Philadelphian was accustomed to go to a New York restaurant to indulge in his favorite dish of snails. One day the head waiter inquired, "Don't you have snails in Philadelphia, sir?" "Yes, but we cannot catch them."

There are compensations for life anywhere; and this simple-souled Wayfarer, who prefers country lanes to Broadway's lights, would report two incidents from a recent day in New York City.

* * * * *

A middle-aged, comfortable woman of the sort whom the English, who have not abused the good old word, call "homely" sat beside the Wayfarer in the train that was passing under the Hudson river. His attention was drawn from his newspaper to her by the question, "Can you tell me at what station I get out for Ellis island?" Remembering his own first experience in entering New York, decades before the added bewilderment of tunnels and subways, the Wayfarer volunteered to show his fellow passenger the way. Her mission could at once be surmised. The Scotch flavor to her speech, and her clear American self-confidence, told the story of a friend or relative from across the sea who had been detained at the island and awaited help. While journeying down Broadway ("And this is Broadway, is it? And that is Wall street? I've often read about it.") the tale unfolded of a husband's uncle, a retired sea captain, who had adventured to America, but had not with him the requisite funds to pass the gates. "I told him he ought not to come over here, where he knows scarcely a'body. He'd better have stopped at home. My husband could not get away from the mill, so I came over to see about it."

And "see about it" she did. Little help this energetic, capable, Americanized Scotswoman needed after she had been taken to the steamship office and an Ellis island pass secured for her. The Wayfarer was sent on his way with thoughts of the capability and wholesomeness of the average, everyday, homekeeping American woman.

That day in New York ended as it began for the Wayfarer, with an experience of American feminine efficiency. He was to take a night train for Boston, and as he stood at the ticket window he could not help hearing the story told to the agent by the person in front of him, a young woman upon whose quiet, distinctive dress and speech and manner "New England" was written large. With extraordinary self-possession and level-headedness, and never a flurry of excitement, inconsequence, or incoherence, her plight was related to the agent succinctly, not a word being wasted. "I missed the Fall River boat. My baggage is aboard it. Now, may I have this ticket exchanged for a railroad ticket by paying the additional fare? Otherwise I have not money enough left for the passage to Boston. And is it possible for me to go by train through Fall River, so as to get my baggage?"

* * * * *

Here again was the American woman, for the second time that day, showing the stuff that is in the type. The Wayfarer had noticed that the woman at the window had not the money for a berth—evidently she was planning to sit up for the night journey. So when both were through their business, and Miss New England had turned aside to place her tickets in her purse, the Wayfarer, trying to measure his words to meet the judgment of this self-possessed and alert young person, with her commendable Yankee notions of propriety, addressed her with, "Pardon me; I stood behind you at the window and saw that you have no sleeping car berth. I am sure that my wife, in like emergency, would be glad of assistance; may I not offer you the use of my purse?"

One instant's steady look from eyes that searched the stranger's character and purpose; and then a simple, unaffected, "If I may borrow just the Pullman fare. I have friends in the city, but I did not care to disturb them," offering her card as she spoke. This, naturally, the Wayfarer declined, and the glance he received showed that the compliment went home. Accepting the needed sum and his card from the stranger, and with a simple "Thank you," the undistressed damsel moved off, the entire conversation having occupied less than a minute.

* * * * *

Lost in admiration for the native cleverness and poise which had served Miss New England as perfectly as a long experience of the wide world and its ways, and which had said and done exactly the right thing at every stage of a rather embarrassing episode, the Wayfarer, who was to journey by a later train, went off to cogitate upon the variety of adventures which these new times create; and upon the adequacy of the American character to meet them all.

THE WAYFARER.

THE HOME COUNCIL

THE CHILD GENTLEMAN A MAN FAILURE?

BY EDITH BROWN KIRKWOOD

The modern Raleigh, instead of spreading his coat for his lady, must offer a sturdy manhood for her service. Mothers ambitious to rear flowers of chivalry risk spoiling the man. Your boy's morals properly looked after, his manners are pretty likely to take good care of themselves.

A MAN STAGGERED into a big city office. His face was purple, his eyes were wild, his legs unsteady, his hands trembled. He was not intoxicated. He was young—in the very prime of life—big of frame and one of whom great things might justly have been expected. He shambled to the desk of one of the young men who had made good in his profession. The man at the desk looked up at his visitor, shook his head sorrowfully, then reached for his purse and drew out some money. When the visitor had gone the one who had made good turned to his neighbor.

"Did you see that wreck of a man?" he said. "We were little kids together down state. He was the model boy of our small city. Every mother in town held him up as a shining example. Apparently he didn't know wrong when he met it face to face. Why, his mother wouldn't let him play with the rest of us boys half the time lest he should become contaminated. Today he's in the gutter. He comes to beg money from the rest of us, who were just boys, not premature cherubs. Explain it if you can! He had every chance in the world to grow up straight."

"Model Boy" Handicapped at Outset

Did he have every chance in the world? What do you think about it—you mothers who may be reading this bit of a true tale? And it is true, too—not just manufactured to form a text—for I was the desk neighbor to whom the remarks were directed. They made me, as the mother of a boy, stop and think. The boy had been "a gentleman." The man was a failure—a pitiful, pitiful failure, whose mother had lived for him and died because of him.

But did you read a little joke that appeared in print not long ago? If you did not and you are a mother you will smile the smile of perfect understanding when you read it now.

Two women, one middle-aged, one elderly, sat in a street car opposite a young mother laboring with a small boy. Son was not acting according to the etiquette books. He was doing several things which might well have been dispensed with or at least improved upon.

The middle-aged woman turned to the elderly woman at her side and said with some asperity: "If I were his mother I would make him behave. Wouldn't you?"

"I don't know," responded the elderly woman.

"You don't know? Perhaps you never had a child——"

"Oh, yes," interrupted the elderly woman with a puzzled shake of her head, "I have had thirteen."

There is little doubt that since the beginning of time every mother with her child's interests at heart has started out with the idea that her child must be the child. Before she proceeds very far she encounters problems hard to solve. Johnnie must be a gentleman. Susan must be a lady. But above all Johnnie must be a man and Susan must be a woman.

Boy First, Gentleman Afterwards

Now making Johnnie a gentleman and at the same time a man, and Susan a lady and also a woman, is not the simplest of a mother's tasks. It is very difficult to harness one's heart and one's sense up together and expect them always to do perfect team work. It is hardly within the human possibilities—it is rarely within the probabilities; but we make the task more difficult, we mothers, by forgetting that before Johnnie and Susan can be either gentleman or lady, man or woman, Johnnie must be a boy and Susan a girl. We want to do so well by the future that we look 'way over the head of the present. That is one reason why we create men failures out of gentlemen children.

We tie pink and blue ribbons onto "lady" and "gentleman." We trim them with lace, slip patent leather "pumps" on their wee feet and expect them to grow up and act with the same vigor as if they had been dressed in khaki and leather boots! Half the time we are sacrificing the child to our own pride. Oh, yes, we are—every mother of us. Our common sense may speak for khaki and leather boots and their attendant freedom, but we want to hear Mrs. Dawson exclaim: "What a perfect little gentleman! How have you done it? My boys were such noisy little roustabouts."

In this roundabout way we reach the point where we confuse our terms. All that is soft means being a gentleman and a lady; all that is rough means being a man and a woman. We deplore the lack of Raleighs, forgetting that if a Raleigh today stopped long enough to spread his mantle before his lady's feet he would, in all probability, get knocked so far by the passing automobiles that his lady would have forgotten him by the time he had returned!

Today's Call Is for Sturdy Manhood

The graces are necessary, but not the graces of the beribboned knight. They died with his shield and spear and the passing of his velvet cloak and plumes. The rush of today's events calls for men and women who have the graces of a keen, clear, quick mind and sturdy body, combined with the kindly strength which strikes the happy medium between the two extremes. This is for every modern mother to remember, and it is not easy.

Almost any healthy, well born boy reared in a normal, Christian home may be credited with having the instincts of a gentleman in the word's truest sense. These instincts will keep pace with the development of his manhood if his manhood is recognized. No boy worth the name is a "shining example" in manners. Look to his morals. The rest will take pretty reasonably good care of itself.

BITS BY THE WAY

DISEASE DANGERS IN SODA GLASSES

From more than one physician there comes, with the approach of thirst producing summer heat, a warning against unclean soda water glasses. It is declared that they are among the most prolific of disease carriers, and are even more virulent agents of contagion than the drinking cups in railway stations and trains.

Soda, unlike some other summer beverages, is taken slowly, thus giving ample opportunity for the transmission to the consumer of germs left on the glass by its previous user. For as a rule the soda glass is only rinsed, not thoroughly cleansed, after each customer. Furthermore, the rinsing water itself is not always clean, and in rush times quickly gathers an accumulation of infected leavings which cling in a double contamination to the glass.

To the soda glass might be traced many diseases of apparently mysterious origin. It is suggested as a remedy that paper cups be substituted for glasses.

VACATION FUND FOR WORKING GIRLS

In New York City has been started a movement for what the social workers who inaugurated it call a Vacation Savings Fund. As a result of this movement, it is said, 11,000 girls employed in shops, factories and stores in the metropolis will take this summer a two weeks' vacation on money they have saved in the fund during the year.

The promoters of the plan went about among the girls and urged them to save what they could spare daily, and to invest these small savings in stamps which the vacation fund sold. Five cents saved each day means nearly $20 accumulated by the end of a year. And $20 will give a girl two weeks in the country.

But the efforts of these benevolent women in the girl's behalf do not cease with the fund itself. The officers of the fund secure for her a release from her employer for the two weeks and then give her a list of places furnishing board reasonably from which she can choose.

This benevolence without hint of charity not only will make possible to girl workers the change and recreation which a year of toil makes so vitally necessary, but it also means giving the rested worker additional economic efficiency. And, better perhaps than either, it will bring brightness into lives which know little else than daily monotony and desolation.

"LITTLE GIANT" SAVED FROM DEATH

The centenary of the birth of Stephen A. Douglas April 23 brought to light a new page in the history of the "little giant." The story, written to the Chicago Historical Society and fully confirmed, relates that "the morning Douglas was born John Conant (who lived next door to the Douglas home in Brandon, Vt.) went to the Douglas house, and as he entered the room Douglas's father was sitting in an arm chair before an open fireplace with the infant in his arms. Just as Conant entered the father died suddenly of apoplexy, the infant rolled down into the fireplace and Conant snatched him from the fire."

———

—A woman has once more broken down precedent and slipped into a position heretofore monopolized by men—that of ship's surgeon. A Scottish steamship company had a steamer on the Clyde ready to sail for Australia with a large number of passengers, including immigrants, on board. All that kept it from leaving was lack of a surgeon. A qualified woman doctor, daughter of a marine engineer, heard of the difficulty and offered her services, was accepted and went out with the steamer, the first woman ship's surgeon on record.

S. C. R.

Forbidden by His Religion

A certain well known rabbi was riding home in the street car one night, enjoying his newspaper, when, happening to look up, he saw a lady standing in the aisle. He rose immediately and offered her his seat, but before she could take it a burly young fellow slid into it.

The rabbi looked meaningly at him, and after a moment or two of uncomfortable silence the young fellow blurted out:

"Well, what are you glarin' at me for? Want to eat me? Eh?"

"No," replied the rabbi calmly; "I am forbidden to eat you—I am a Jew."

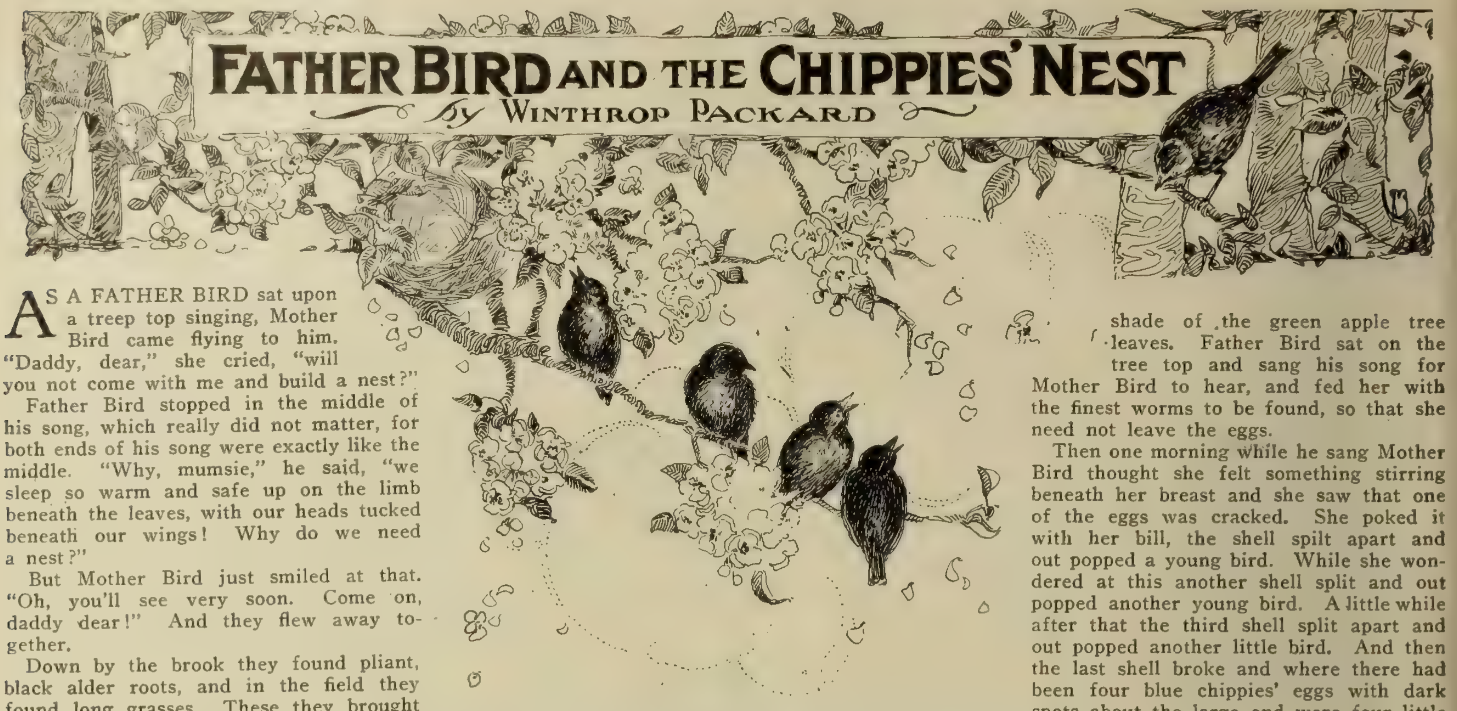
Verses Old and New

THE SECRET OF A HAPPY DAY

Just to leave in his dear hand
  Little things,
All we cannot understand,
  All that stings.
Just to let him take the care,
  Sorely pressing,
Finding all we let him bear
  Changed to blessing.
That is all, and yet the way
  Marked by him who loves thee best,
Secret of a happy day,
  Secret of his promised rest.

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

YOUNG AMERICA



FATHER BIRD AND THE CHIPPIES' NEST

By WINTHROP PACKARD

AS A FATHER BIRD sat upon a treep top singing, Mother Bird came flying to him. "Daddy, dear," she cried, "will you not come with me and build a nest?"

Father Bird stopped in the middle of his song, which really did not matter, for both ends of his song were exactly like the middle. "Why, mumsie," he said, "we sleep so warm and safe up on the limb beneath the leaves, with our heads tucked beneath our wings! Why do we need a nest?"

But Mother Bird just smiled at that. "Oh, you'll see very soon. Come on, daddy dear!" And they flew away together.

Down by the brook they found pliant, black alder roots, and in the field they found long grasses. These they brought to a level limb of the apple tree and Mother Bird wound them round and round till she had made a shallow cup of them, just big enough for herself to sit in, turning round and round and shaping the nest with her breast.

Then they flew to the pasture where the roan horse rubs against the fence and leaves long hairs from his mane and tail behind him. With these long hairs Mother Bird made a soft lining for the nest, laying them very smoothly and rounding the whole again with her breast.

"There," she said, "it is finished!"

Father Bird danced for joy on the limb above. "My!" he cried. "Didn't I make a fine nest? I think that is the best chippies' nest I ever saw. Didn't I make it quickly!"

Mother Bird laughed. "It is a lovely nest, daddy dear; now fly away and sing."

The next morning as Father Bird was singing on the tree top Mother Bird came flying to him in great haste. "Daddy dear," she said, "do come and see what has happened to our chippies' nest. Be quick!"

"What!" he cried. "Has anything dared touch that nest I made? And he bristled up his feathers as he flew and looked very, very fierce indeed.

But when he got near the nest he saw that nothing was harming it and that Mother Bird was quietly smiling. He stopped and looked about, but she said gently, in his ear, "Hop up with your eyes shut, daddy, and open them, pop! when you get to the nest."

So he did, and when he saw what was in the next he almost fell off the limb in his surprise. "Oo-ee, mumsie!" he cried. "Just look at that lovely blue egg! Why, why! A blue chippies' egg with brown spots around the big end!"

Mother Bird smiled again. "I knew the fairies were going to bring us something nice," she said. "I told you we should need that nest soon."

Father Bird put his wing right about her. "Mumsie, dear, I think you are the wisest little Mother Bird I ever saw."

The next morning he sat upon his tree top, singing, and again Mother Bird came to him in haste. "Daddy dear, hurry and see what is in our chippies' nest now."

"What!" said the Father Bird. "Has anything dared touch that egg?" And he flew toward the nest with all his might. But when he was near it he found only Mother Bird, quietly smiling.

"Daddy dear," she said gently in his ear, "hop up with your eyes shut, then open them, pop! when you get to the nest."

So he did, and again he almost fell off the limb in surprise, for there in the nest were two blue chippies' eggs.

"Why," he almost shouted, "there are two eggs in our chippies' nest! Aren't they fine! Aren't they beautiful! Just think of it; two chippies' eggs in our chippies' nest! Where do you suppose this one came from?"

Mother Bird smiled. "The fairies are good to us," she said, "and I told you we should need that nest soon. Now fly away and sing."

The next morning as he was singing on his tree top Mother Bird came flying up in great haste. But Father Bird flew to meet her, laughing and saying, "I know what you are going to say. The fairies have been good to us again and there is another egg!"

The Little Lost Word

I lost a very little word only the other day;
A very naughty little word I had not meant to say.
If only it were really lost, I should not mind a bit;
I think I should deserve a prize for really losing it.

For, if one could ever find that tiny little word
So that no more from my lips could it be ever heard,
I'm sure we all of us would say that it was something fine
With such completeness to have lost that naughty word of mine.

But then it wasn't really lost when from my lips it flew;
My little brother picked it up, and now he says it too.
Mamma said that the worst would be I could not get it back;
The worst of it, now seems to me, I'm always on its track.

If it were really only lost, oh, then I should be glad!
I let it fall so carelessly the day that I was bad.
Lose other things, you never seem to come upon their track;
But lose a naughty little word, it's always coming back.

—Author unknown.

And so there was, and the next morning there was another, which made four. Very beautiful they looked in the little round nest, and some of their beauty seemed to shine right through little Mother Bird and make a rosy light of warmth and joy about her as she cuddled them beneath her gray breast and spread her brown wings over them.

Nine days they thus made a shrine in the shade of the green apple tree leaves. Father Bird sat on the tree top and sang his song for Mother Bird to hear, and fed her with the finest worms to be found, so that she need not leave the eggs.

Then one morning while he sang Mother Bird thought she felt something stirring beneath her breast and she saw that one of the eggs was cracked. She poked it with her bill, the shell spilt apart and out popped a young bird. While she wondered at this another shell split and out popped another young bird. A little while after that the third shell split apart and out popped another little bird. And then the last shell broke and where there had been four blue chippies' eggs with dark spots about the large end were four little birds that looked very strange indeed in the pretty little nest. There was not a feather on one of them. Their necks were scrawny and long and their eyes were shut tight. All they could do was to open very large mouths and hold them up, empty. When Mother Bird saw the four she flew as fast as she could to Father Bird, singing on the tree top. "Daddy dear, come down and see what has happened to our chippies' eggs. Be quick!"

"What!" said Father Bird. "Has anything dared to meddle with those four chippies' eggs?" But when he got quite near the nest he saw nothing wrong. He stopped and looked about, and Mother Bird whispered gently in his ear, "Hop up with your eyes shut, daddy, and open them, pop! when you get to the nest."

So he did, and when he saw instead of the four blue eggs the four young birds, he really fell off the limb and had to fly back to it from the ground. "Why, Mamma Bird!" he said, "where did these come from!"

"Out of those four blue eggs, daddy," she replied. "Are they not beautiful?"

"Certainly!" he shouted, dancing up and down on the limb. "They are the very finest I ever saw. Who would have thought when I built that nest you and I would find four young birds in it?"

"Nobody, surely," said Mother Bird, smiling, "except the fairies."

At this all four of the big mouths were opened wide, as if the young birds were laughing. All day Father Bird and Mother Bird flew back and forth, to and from the tree where the fat green worms were filling those big mouths. But they could not keep them full. The next day it was the same, and the next. Then the young birds got their eyes open and could see themselves grow fat.

And so it went on for three weeks. Then, coming back with more worms one day, Father Bird found all four of the youngsters sitting in a row out on the limb. He danced with joy at this. "Mamma Bird," he said between the steps, "these youngsters have all their feathers. They are big enough to fly." Then he flew over to a near-by limb. "Come," he said, "let me see you do that."

The youngest of the four shook his head. "Oh," he said, "I don't think I dare try that!"

The next one in the row and the next both shook their heads. "No," they said, "we wouldn't dare try that!"

But the largest stood up and flapped his wings boldly. "I believe I can do it," he said, and with a big jump from the limb and great flapping of his wings he was on his way. He got almost across, and when he was about to fall Father Bird flew under him and boosted him up on the limb.

(Continued on page 648)

NEW BOOKS

Religion and Theology

The Ordinary Man and the Extraordinary Thing, by Harold Begbie. The Begbie books have had such a vogue among thoughtful religious people that this new one is likely to be warmly welcomed. It is different from the others in that it does not tell the story of men who have gone all the lengths of sin, but of men who have moved along common lines of life and yet have experienced conversion. It originated partly in a request from a university librarian for a book dealing with the conversion of ordinary people, respectable men and women, who do not indulge in drunkenness, or theft, or lying, or gross immorality. It ought to go far toward reassuring men that conversion need not be a cataclysmic fact. The illustrations are drawn from the work of the Y. M. C. A. and largely from London. The author is right in his observation that the work of the Y. M. C. A. has been carried much farther in America than in its mother country; but there is a revival of work in London since the erection of the new building and the coming of Mr. Virgo to its leadership. This is the strongest of Mr. Begbie's books thus far, coming nearest to common life and experience. [George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Theology of a Preacher, by Lynn Harold Hough. Neither in form nor expression does this work remind one of theology and its academic problems. Being impressed with the necessity of a revival of doctrinal preaching, the author seems to have asked himself what ruling ideas in the Christian system would make the best kind of topics in a systematic doctrinal series of sermons. Thus he comes to review the cardinal doctrines of the creed such as the personality of God, the Trinity, the person of Christ, sin, atonement, regeneration and sanctification. He does not often use any of these familiar words, but he aims to show how the content of thought designated by each becomes a basic part in some message that the minister may deliver from the pulpit. It is a book preeminently designed for ministers and students, and should prove very helpful. [Eaton and Mains, New York. $1 net.

What Does Christianity Mean? by W. H. P. Faunce, president of Brown University. The touchstone of this book is found in its first lecture upon "What Is Christianity?" Readers will recognize that this is the title of Harnack's great work, "Was Ist das Christenthum?" But President Faunce's reply, "Christianity is purpose," leaves something to be desired. Even the amplification of that definition, to the effect that "it is the revelation of the persistent loving purpose of the eternal God, and the implanting of that same purpose in the life of man" needs to be reenlarged on the succeeding page in order to bring in Jesus Christ as a part of his own Christianity. President Faunce is a bit proud perhaps of things "modern," but we cannot discover that upon the essentials he differs widely from the fathers of the American churches. [Fleming H. Revell Company, New York. $1.25.

On the Firing Line with the Sunday School Missionary, by John M. Somerndike. A book which every minister should possess, containing a brief survey of the wide fields reached by the Sunday School Board of the Presbyterian Church North. The more familiar one is with our West, Northwest and Southwest, the more he will value this well written, well illustrated book. [Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia. 50 cents.

Public Problems

The New Immigration, by Peter Roberts. Remarkable for its variety and volume of facts, distinguished by a breadth and sanity of outlook that are refreshing, and unique in its points of contact with the whole problem of immigration, this scholarly work must take prompt rank with the permanently valuable literature of the subject. The author's attempt is "to describe the quality, the industrial efficiency, the social life and the relation to the native born of the men of the new immigration." He states that however desirable it might be materially to check the present stream of immigration into this country from decadent European nations, nothing is likely to be done toward that end so long as our demand for workers remains active. He recognizes the economic stubbornness of the situation and declines to suggest any radical restrictive measures. As an important aid to the solving of the immigration problem he proposes that the civilized nations affected by it should "confer and agree upon regulations which are just to the weak as well as to the strong." Dr. Roberts's point of view is that of the world citizen; he is larger visioned, in relation to this problem, than a mere American. And this indicates the breadth and human warmth of his deep interest in it. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.60 net.

Child Labor in City Streets, by Edward N. Clopper. Street work in our cities has dwarfed and contaminated the moral and physical life of thousands of juveniles. Dr. Clopper, who is secretary of the national child labor committee for the Mississippi valley, presents an astonishing array of facts to prove this proposition. He thinks a determined stand should be taken to secure the rights of newsboys, bootblacks, peddlers, messengers and other workers in city streets. He does not subscribe to a feeble regulation of the crime—for crime it is—but stands for its prohibition. Every thoughtful reader of his book will agree that play and not work is the inalienable right of every child. But the lash of economic necessity is driving children from sunny playgrounds into all sorts of breadwinning activities, and the resultant question is: Shall their parents or other adults be allowed to prey upon them in this fashion or shall society abolish what it rightly may regard as a crime against itself? Dr. Clopper is instructive and hopeful, but he is not adequately comprehensive. He attempts, like many other doctors of our social ills, to remove a symptom; whereas the only hope of effective relief lies in constitutional treatment. [Macmillan Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Evolution of the Country Community, by Warren H. Wilson. More than any other book in its class, this work is fundamentally educational and inspirational. It is one of the pioneers in a field which hitherto has received precious little fructifying tillage by cultivators of the crop of rural humanity. First-hand information vitalizes its pages. Data have been collected in every important agricultural community of America. Dr. Wilson, whose sympathies and training give compelling competence to his judgments, has made a thorough study of rural life, and this repository of his findings is sure to be permanently useful to rural sociologists who shall attempt a broader and more detailed investigation of the serious problems which a neglected country civilization has developed. He regards the church as the most effective institution for building and organizing country life. Dr. Franklin H. Giddings of Columbia University contributes an introduction, in which he strongly commends this level-headed work of his former student. Dr. Wilson is superintendent of the department of church and country life of the Home Board of the Presbyterian Church. [Pilgrim Press, Boston. $1.25 net.

The Challenge of the Country, by George Walter Fiske, aims to forward the claim of rural districts to better and more statesmanlike attention from the church. Professor Fiske is a member of the faculty of Oberlin Theological Seminary, and he has a natural inspiration toward interest in the country problem from the example of the great French pastor of the Vosges mountains, for whom his institution was named. The book discusses first discouraging and then encouraging rural tendencies in America, and afterwards considers in succession what needs to be done for country communities, agriculturally, socially, educationally and religiously. [Association Press, New York City. 75 cents net.

Novels in Miniature

The Wrath of Man, by Silas K. Hocking, has all the elements of the novel of a decade ago—a heroine who is kidnaped, an unfeeling parent who becomes a model of virtue, a group of too villainous villains and a decided literary formlessness. [Frederick Warne and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Street of the Flute Player, by H. de Vere Stacpoole. A Greek romance laid in the year of the first production of Aristophanes's "The Frogs." Artistically done—proving anew Mr. Stacpoole's affinity for the ancient times of glory. [Duffield and Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Bishop's Purse, by Oliver Herford and Cleveland Moffett. The mere names of these two authors insure good fun and good mystery. The story concerns a woman thief who steals $25,000 from a bishop. [D. Appleton and Company, New York. $1.30 net.

The Woman in Black, by Edmund C. Bentley. The supposed murder of a millionaire leads an amateur detective into an elusive mystery and an unexpected love affair with the millionaire's wife. [Century Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Maxwell Mystery, by Carolyn Wells. A most inexplicable shooting takes place at a house party and several people are accused before the actual tragedy is skillfully pieced together. [J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. $1.25 net.

Andrew the Glad, by Maria Thompson Daviess. A "homy" book that both young and old will like. Its hero might be described as "perfect" and its heroine is more than adorable. [Bobbs-Merrill Company, Indianapolis. $1.30 net.

The Princess Athura, by Samuel W. Odell. The student of history will enjoy this Persian romance, laid in the glowing times of Darius the Great. [Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Gloved Hand, by Burton E. Stevenson. A capital tale, well conceived and well executed, by the author of "The Holladay Case." [Dodd, Mead and Company, New York. $1.30 net.

A Slice of Life, by Robert Halifax. "Low society" life in London is the background for a story that has sorrows and joys and humor in it. [E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. $1.35 net.

The Son of His Mother, by Clara Viebig. An interesting exposition of the dominance of heredity over environment. [John Lane Company, New York. $1.25 net.

The Port of Dreams, by Miriam Alexander. A stirring drama of love, fighting and intrigue in Jacobite times. [G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. $1.35 net.

Books Received

The Lure of the Sea, by J. E. Patterson. George H. Doran Company, New York. $1.25.

The Wind on the Heath, by May Byron. George H. Doran Company, New York. $1 net.

Whippen, by Frederick Orin Bartlett. Small, Maynard and Company, Boston. 50 cents net.

Manson's Vision, by Thomas Nield. Advance Publishing Company, Nashville, Tenn. $1.50.

Ultima Veritas, and Other Verses, by Washington Gladden. Pilgrim Press, Boston.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

May 18, 1913—Joseph Meets His Brethren

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 42. Golden Text, Galatians 6:7: Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

Few men fall at the bottom of the ladder, but every round upward is a fresh challenge to danger. Joseph was successful as master of Potiphar's house, and equally so as deputy warden of the government prison. But each new trial is an experiment, and the theater of Joseph's life, now transferred from a prison to a palace, brings its own test.

Twenty years had elapsed since Joseph had been sold as a slave to the Ishmaelites. He was now about 37 and was rapidly approaching the meridian of his mental strength. Age is largely relative. It is not how long one has lived but how much that counts. Wisdom comes through experience and Joseph had already seen more of life than most men.

Drought in Mountains of Abyssinia Smites Grain Fields of Palestine

The seven years of prosperity dreamed by Pharaoh had come and gone. The seven fat kine no longer fed in the meadow; the seven lean kine for two years had taken their places. There was famine in the land of Egypt and the storehouses of Joseph became the salvation of the people. The Nile, for ages immemorial a constant benediction to the Egyptians, withdrew its blessings, and the whole valley became a waste of drifting sand. The river itself was to the ancients a constant miracle. Its origin remained a mystery until within our own times. As the waters swelled and overflowed their banks the nation associated this phenomenon with the planets, and ascribed it to the world above. That great mountain seas, with their tropical rains, were the real cause of the overflow of the Nile was something of which they had never dreamed. The cause of the famine lay not in Egypt but in those far-off regions whose climatic conditions affected not only the land of Pharaoh but the nations round about as well.

But the race is one, and a drought in the mountains of Abyssinia smites the grain fields of Palestine. Israel felt it. He had experienced it before, and determined what to do. His ten sons stood about in hopeless dread. Their blank-faces betokened an irresolution that meant death. There must have been a command in the old man's voice as he asked: "Why do ye look one upon another?" He had heard that there was grain in Egypt, but knowledge without action is of no avail. That they should hesitate was not strange. That word "Egypt" revived a memory which they did not wish to recall. Twenty years before they had seen a beautiful boy turn his face toward that country and the scene had haunted them ever since.

Brothers of Joseph Start Reluctantly on Journey to Egypt

But necessity admits of no choice, and to Egypt the ten sons must go. The distance was about twelve days and the route no doubt the same over which Joseph had gone twenty years before. The journey was disciplinary. All journeys are. We are ever being prepared, unconsciously to ourselves, for what awaits us at the end. That the brothers should meet Joseph was not within the limits of expectation. Whatever else might come, no such shadow could fall across their path.

Their first sight of Egypt was probably at Pelusium, a city near the frontier. Here foreigners were detained before they were allowed to enter the interior. The capital at that time was Zoan, or Tanis, some forty miles distant. There they would be met by an official who would determine whether or not they were to be admitted into the presence of the governor. In those days an invasion from the north was no uncommon thing—a danger likely to have been heightened by Egypt's abundance in the midst of starvation. Strangers would naturally be looked upon with suspicion. Possibly they had come to note the strength of the city walls or to spy out the country's nakedness in its preparation for war.

Joseph alone held the keys to the storehouses. Those who would buy must come to him. In this respect he was the one mediator between the king and a dying world. But his brothers did not know him. Time is never inactive. The boy of 17 is now a man. Manhood implies self-control. Until one becomes master of self he is still a boy. Joseph was a man of impulse. Great-hearted men always are, but there are times when one must keep himself to himself. He spoke "roughly," probably because he had to in order to speak at all. The memory of his boyhood dreams flooded his soul, and once more he was a child. One of the hardest battles he ever fought was being waged within his heart. "Ye are spies." In vain they protest that they are the sons of one father. Two were absent. One is with their old father back in Canaan, while the other—they lower their voices and blush to speak it—"is not." If Benjamin were alive Joseph must see him. His own sight must verify his brothers' word. The experiences of the day drew heavily upon Joseph and he needed rest, and so did his brothers. Each went to where he belonged—Joseph to his palace, his brothers to the government prison.

Joseph and His Brethren at Extremes of God's Judgment Seat

In the prison it was that the spirit of penitence seems to have found them. That they were guilty concerning their brother was the first confession that remorse had been able to wring from their souls. It all came back like a demon from hell. The pale, agonized face of Joseph appealed to them through the shadows and again they heard his crying for a compassion which they had refused to give. Those three days in ward were essential to God's purpose. History is not a record but a demonstration of God's will. Our sins go before and await our coming. They meet us at the most unexpected places, where with lash and law they scourge us at will. The difference between Joseph and his brethren was simply the difference between right and wrong. They stood at extremes of God's judgment seat.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins

Analysis—Canaan and Egypt equally dependent on the favor of God. The rejected stone becomes the head of the corner. Ways seemingly harsh prove generous and kind.

To no proverbial saying does the observer of human life assent more readily than to the apothegm that "truth is stranger than fiction." In the story of Joseph the proverb finds striking illustration. More than one subject of humble birth and for years the sport of adverse circumstance has become the power behind the throne. But as a rule such children of fortune have shown themselves selfish, cruel and despotic. The charm of this narrative lies in the strength and purity of a character that prosperity could not spoil, nor adversity crush. In our own country, where no artificial barriers isolate class permanently from class, such reverses of social and political standing are perhaps the rule rather than the exception. The dweller in a land subject to frequent changes of temperature needs a well-seasoned physique and wise habits of life to prepare him for either heat or cold; so the soul, in such an environment as our present life affords, needs for its safety a spiritual vigor and religious vitality which alone can carry it safely through summer heat or winter cold.

All Lands Dependent on Living Water of Divine Grace

Verse 3—The character and extent of the famine necessitated that as many as possible should go on the errand for relief. The journey was not one to be easily and frequently repeated, because, as matters then were, it required ten or twelve days to reach Egypt from Canaan. The supply of grain, if obtained at all, must be of a quantity to last a goodly period, and this would demand carrying no small sum of money, which in turn would require a well defended caravan to protect it from robbers. Every man who could be spared must go, and the fewer mouths to feed at home the better.

Verse 4—But nothing could persuade Jacob to send Benjamin with the others. They were grown men, mature men, rough men accustomed to the rough habits and vigorous exercise of shepherds. As for the youngest of his sons, he must, for his own safety and his father's comfort, be left with Jacob. Benjamin was, so his father believed, the sole surviving child of the beloved Rachel, and the tragic disappearance of his brother Joseph had left in the father's heart a hurt that had never healed.

Verse 5—Egypt and Canaan, although widely different in their physical features, were equally smitten by the heat, equally in need of the blessed waters of refreshing and alike unable to feed the perishing people without water.

Stone Which Builders Reject Becomes Head of the Corner

Verse 6—The stone which the builders reject becomes the head of the corner (Matt. 21:42). The brothers who had sold Joseph had to come to Joseph to buy their own lives. The man who rejects Christ in his youth has to come to Christ in his age, or perish for lack of the bread of life which he, as the Father's almoner of grace, alone dispenses (John 3:35-36). Many a man who has bartered his Saviour for worldly preferment bows a suppliant before Jesus Christ when dying.

Verse 7—Not every applicant is received with favor, but only those who approach with due humility. Doubtless among the applicants with whom Joseph had to deal were some whose bearing was impudent and overbearing. Many of them knew his alien origin and plainly resented the necessity of dealing with him at all. A book has recently been published which contains the history of a very wealthy and philanthropic American, and it shows how such persons are constantly approached by the class who do not beg but demand relief. Joseph wished to see to which sort of applicants his brothers now belonged.

Verses 8-13—He did not mean to heap indignities upon his brethren, however much they deserved it. But he was sparring for time. He had not made up his mind yet how to deal with their application to best advantage all round. He wished time to think it over, and he seized upon any opportunity to gain delay. Besides, for all he knew they did represent a combination of Palestinian sheiks ready to take advantage of Egypt's barren fields to work her harm. But the brothers insisted that they represented not an anti-Egyptian confederacy but only one family, and that not hostile to the land of the Nile.

Joseph Treats His Brethren in Ways Which Seem Harsh but Prove Kind

Verse 14—In time of famine a nation is peculiarly subject to attack. Its resources are crippled and its army enfeebled. Egypt had a daily report of every person entering its bounds from the north and east, as recent archæological finds reveal. And the claim of these brothers that they came with no intent other than the relief of their own households was open to question at least.

Verse 15—Joseph took advantage of the circumstances, therefore, to demand that they produce this absent brother and let him be subjected to examination by the proper officers. Let it be seen whether he would tell the same story. Here the brother's love as well as the official's caution spoke. Amid all his cares his heart went out to that absent Benjamin whom he had loved as a child and had not ceased to mourn as a man.

Verse 16—The demand which Joseph made would cause nothing more serious than an inconvenient delay. Certainly scores, possibly hundreds, of hostages are held by various now existent governments for the fulfillment of international treaties. Indeed during our late civil war more than once the North and the South held certain prisoners under rigorous conditions to secure certain concessions within the lines they could not penetrate.

Verse 17—Yet the brief imprisonment of three days was followed by generous terms and still more generous presents (vs. 25-35) given in a way intended to be secret and at the same time to inspire confidence. Many a life father has deposited in some savings bank the money he had obliged his son to earn. Something like this was the conduct of Joseph toward his brethren.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning May 11, 1913

Topic—The mustard seed. Mark 4:30-32.

The disciples of Jesus were discouraged. They had just listened to two disconcerting parables. The parable of the sower had taught them that a large part of the seed-sowing of our Lord and his disciples would not result in any harvest, because it fell on unprepared ground. The parable of the enemy sowing tares among the wheat had taught them that even in the case of the soil that promised propitiously they must expect deliberate vitiation of the harvest from the malignant counter workings of the evil one. "What then is the use of sowing at all?" the disciples might question in their minds. And Jesus gave his answer in the parable of the mustard seed.

—

In this parable there are three things to consider—the seed, the tree and the seed's vitality, by reason of which the seed becomes a tree.

—

The immediate insignificance of the kingdom was always disturbing to the thoughts of the disciples. They were but a handful, and the world was wide. What were they among so many? They expected the kingdom to come with observation, but there was little in their condition or attainments to attract attention. They expected a great mass movement of the Jewish people which would soon be organized by their leader into an army, somewhat after the manner of the Maccabean army, and would overthrow Rome and conquer all the nations of the world. All worldly achievements are adjudged to be great according to their material resources and visible victories. These disciples would gladly have built another tower of Babel that they might mount directly up to heaven. They were more than doubtful about the sufficiency of any kingdom so small and so uncertain as their Master's present following.

—

The kingdom was surely small—"like unto a grain of mustard seed," which indeed is "less than all seeds." Some commentators have found difficulties in the fact that there are other seeds, such as the poppy and rue, that are smaller than the mustard seed. We need not share their perplexity. Jesus is not using the language of modern science, which would not have been understood by his audience. He is speaking to plain people in plain speech, for the good of their souls. And, in the common language of the Jews of the time, the mustard seed was the least of all seeds, the symbol of the smallest possible particle (compare Luke 17:6). The Koran, which so often perpetuates an old Semitic tradition, contains the following: "O my son! verily, if there were the weight of a grain of mustard seed and it were hidden in the rock, or in heaven, or in the earth, God would bring it to light" (Sura 31:15).

—

As was the mustard seed, so was the kingdom of our Lord. As was the kingdom, so was the King. He was born a member of a despised race and reared in an obscure village of an unimportant province. Until he was 30 years of age he remained in the seclusion of his boyhood home and the carpenter's shop. He then went about teaching and healing among the villages of Galilee, and made a few unpromising appearances in Jerusalem. His followers were chiefly unlettered fishermen and laborers. And even among the common people he early became a discredited leader, because he seemed to be incapable of acting at a critical moment. Whenever vigorous efficiency was demanded, he tried to put off the people with words. At the last he was deserted by his closest associates, was arrested by his enemies, was abandoned, without resistance, defense or sympathy, to a hostile mob, and was crucified as a felon between two other felons. Such was the beginning of his kingdom.

—

But in the face of all apparent failure the mighty optimism of Jesus remained undimmed. His kingdom was destined to become a tree, "so that the birds of the heaven come and lodge in the branches thereof." This does not necessarily mean a tree in our sense of the word, as containing timber. The word is just as appropriately used of a shrub. And the mustard plant is a tall shrub, larger than other garden herbs, often attaining a height of ten or twelve feet and having branches which attract the flying birds. The kingdom is destined to attain this large, conspicuous visibility, and to afford refreshment and shelter for those that pass by.

—

The interest in seeds and germs is almost a modern thing. Science has taught us that the importance of any living organism is not to be measured by its present size, but by its inner nature. Small seeds may be productive of stupendous results by reason of the quality of the life that is in them. The important consideration is not the present size of any institution but the vitality of the idea which is embodied in that institution. Thoughtful men recognize this principle today; but in Jesus' day nothing was held to be important that was not already big. Jesus alone taught that the importance of any event, or any idea, or any kingdom, is not its present bigness, but its inherent vitality. The mustard seed is little, but it is vital. The kingdom is small, but the kingdom is the King himself; it is Jesus.

—

The growth of that kingdom shall be of a marvelous rapidity. The man took the mustard seed and sowed it in his garden. One season sufficed to produce the tree. So is it with the kingdom of Christ in its extension in the world. The Master has here set forth for us the hastening, surging activity of the seed, which incorporates into itself the latent, inert strength of the underworld, which emerges from its secret place beneath the soil to toss its fragrant branches in the light of the glorious sun.

—

The Singing Heart

Thou Heart! why dost thou lift thy voice?
The birds are mute; the skies are dark;
Nor does a living thing rejoice;
Nor does a living creature hark;
Yet thou art singing in the dark.

How small thou art; how poor and frail;
Thy prime is past; thy friends are chill;
Yet as thou hadst not any ail
Throughout the storm thou liftest still
A praise that winter cannot chill.

Then sang that happy heart's reply:
"God lives, God loves, and hears me sing;
How warm, how safe, how glad am I,
In shelter 'neath his spreading wing!
And there I cannot choose but sing."
—Danske Dandridge.

—

If I can live
To make some pale face brighter, and to give
A second luster to some tear-dimmed eye;
Or e'en impart
One throb of comfort to an aching heart,
Or cheer some wayworn soul in passing by;
If I can lend
A strong hand to the fallen, or defend
The right against a single envious strain;
My life, though bare
Perhaps of much that seemeth dear and fair
To us of earth, will not have been in vain.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

May 18, 1913

THE MEASURE OF A MAN

Topic—"The stature of Christ"—growing up into it. Ephesians 4:11-16.

Customs vary with place and time. Standards are as variable as people. What is correct in one land is wholly improper in another. Usage, therefore, cannot determine character. For the measure of manhood we must have some fixed standard which applies always and everywhere. That standard is Jesus, our Example. He is as adequate a gauge and guide for the Chinese as he is for the Americans. His life is as good a measure for the life of the city man of today as it was for the peasant in Judea 2,000 years ago. To be like Christ—that is the sufficient and absolute test of the stature of Christian life.

—

Only a great goal calls forth great endeavor. The loftiness of the Christ-ideal is the explanation of the nobility of the Christian life.

—

It does not greatly matter what else is happening to us in life, if only we are growing like Christ.

—

All the power of the divine Christ is promised to those who would live his life over again.

—

In his best known poem Sidney Lanier analyzes the characters of the great teachers and leaders of all time. In each there is found some lack or defect, except in the life of Jesus, whom the poet apostrophizes as the "Crystal Christ":

"But thee, but thee, O sovereign Seer of time,
But thee, O poets' Poet, wisdom's Tongue,
But thee, O man's best Man, O love's best Love,
O perfect life in perfect labor writ,
O all men's Comrade, Servant, King or Priest—
What if or yet, what mole, what flaw, what lapse,
What least defect or shadow of defect,
What rumor tattled by an enemy,
Of inference loose, what lack of grace
Even in torture's grasp, or sleep's, or death's—
Oh, what amiss may I forgive in thee,
Jesus, good Paragon, thou Crystal Christ?"

—

Religion is a growth. Nobody becomes a saint over night. We attain the character of Jesus only by degrees. This means full employment for time; and all of eternity will be needed in becoming like him.

—

Every experience in life may be a school for the teaching of Christlikeness.

—

Occasionally the physicians report a case of arrested development. The child has failed to grow, in body or in mind. The sadness of it is beyond words. Violent disease or sudden death is less melancholy than this. And in the spiritual realm there are analogous instances. Some Christians simply do not mature. They remain babes to the end. The experience which made them Christian is all the religious experience they ever know. The Bible has opened no new vistas to them. Prayer is no more precious as the years pass. The worship and work and fellowship of the church are no more prized than at first. The deeds of a disciple do not become more natural. In short, there has been no growth. These stunted saints have not matured toward the Christ stature.

—

We grow like that to which we aspire.

—

The many-sidedness of Christ reminds us that disciples may be different from one another yet all be like unto him. For Christ ministers to his friends in many ways.

—

The stature of the Lord Jesus was not of itself reached by work, and he who thinks to approach its mystical height by anxious effort is really receding from it.—Henry Drummond.

—

I pray thee, Lord, that when it comes to me
To say if I will follow truth and thee,
Or choose instead to win, as better worth
My pains, some cloying recompense of earth—

Grant me, great Father, from a hard-fought field,
Forespent and bruised, upon a battered shield,
Home to obscure endurance to be borne
Rather than live my own mean gains to scorn.

Far better fall with face turned toward the goal,
At one with wisdom and my own worn soul,
Than ever come to see myself prevail,
When to succeed at last is but to fail.

Mean ends to win and therewith be content—
Save me from that! Direct thou the event
As suits thy will: where'er the prizes go,
Grant me the struggle, that my soul may grow
—Edward Sanford Martin.

MISSIONARY WORK

Language of China's Call for Prayer

At the request of Dr. A. J. Brown, chairman of the committee on reference and council of the foreign missions conference, the state department at Washington made special inquiry as to the exactness of cable reports telling of the now famous action of the Chinese government in appealing to the Christian churches to observe a day of patriotic prayer. In return, the American legation in Peking transmitted a precise rendering of the message which was adopted by the cabinet at Peking and sent out officially to the provincial governors. This message read as follows:

"Prayer is requested for the national assembly now in session; for the new government; for the president who is to be elected; for the constitution of the republic; that the government may be recognized by the powers; that peace may reign within our country; that strong and virtuous men may be elected to office; and that the government may be established upon a strong foundation. Upon receipt of this telegram you are requested to notify all churches in your province that April 27 has been set aside as a day of prayer for the nation. Let all take part."

Some Samples of Progress in Korea

Rev. William C. Kerr, the junior missionary in the Chai Ryong station, who has been in charge the past year of the churches regularly under the pastoral care of Rev. E. W. Koons (now on furlough), sends an encouraging report that goes with many others to offset the impression that the recent year of persecution had been a year of reaction for missions in Korea. As samples of the past year's success, Mr. Kerr says that Anak Eub has added 150 new believers, Tongchangi 120, Kyodong forty. Some smaller churches have doubled in size. A number of congregations report average attendance at their regular service considerably larger than their enrollment of adherents. Several congregations are obliged to consider the enlargement of their church houses. In one tiny hamlet of eighteen houses there were four individual believers a year ago. There are now only two families in the hamlet left outside the church. The Toora church had been nicknamed with grim humor by some of its critics "Kumantoora" (quitter), but recently the church has become so active that the nickname has lost all its point.

Foreign Not Crowding Home Missions

The Chai Ryong Presbytery of the new Presbyterian General Assembly of Korea voted at its recent meeting to abide by the order of General Assembly directing the Thanksgiving collections of the churches to be set aside for the new foreign mission work of Korean Christians in China. But this created a difficulty about the home mission work in Chai Ryong province, which had been supported heretofore by this Thanksgiving offering. Presbytery was of the opinion that this work could in no case be abandoned, and the puzzle was solved by ordering another collection to be taken in all churches at Christmas time. The home mission operations will be continued by the aid of this fund.

Presbytery at the same meeting admitted ten candidates to study for the ministry, and eleven other men were approved as suited for service as elders in local congregations. They were sent back to the various sessions for ordination.

Dr. James S. Gale of Seoul conducted the men's general class in Chai Ryong in February. There were 500 students enrolled, and the evening meetings ran to an attendance of nearly 900. Sessions were held in the new Bible institute building. The sunrise prayer meetings, with an attendance of 600, were led by Pastor Kim of Pyeng Yang. The class dubbed Dr. Gale "cold water," because the refreshment of hearing him was like drinking cold water on a hot day. The attendance at the regular term of the Bible institute is 116.

A New Picture of China's Greatest Pastor

The name of Pastor Ding Li Mei has come to have a familiarity with American Christians that does not yet attach to any other name in the native Chinese Christian ministry. On that account, many who have heard of him will be especially interested in the accompanying portrait taken from a recent photograph, which is considered by Mr. Ding's missionary friends to express better than any other picture yet taken the spiritual quality of his face.

Pastor Ding is a graduate of Shantung Christian University, and it is well said that if the college could boast no more than one such graduate, its foundation would have been well vindicated. Without doubt Ding Li Mei is today the most effective native preacher of Christianity in China. During the last ten years he has been the means of turning hundreds to Christ, and since 1909, when 108 men in Shantung University decided for the ministry, he has been the means of leading upwards of 500 students in various parts of the country to take as their life purpose the work of the ministry. One day a missionary was talking with him about methods in Christian work when he exclaimed: "It seems to me I have only one method, and that is prayer." Indeed, the wonderful prayer life of the man is often spoken of by men who know him at close range. Recently at a students' summer conference he was known to have arisen more than once after all others had retired for the night and spent several hours in prayer.

Ding Li Mei of China

Union Seminary in Manila Expanding

The Ellinwood Bible Seminary at Manila for the training of Filipino youths in the gospel ministry was founded as exclusively a Presbyterian institution, and bears the name of the great Presbyterian mission secretary whose chief interest in his last days was the development of evangelical religion in the Philippines. And the Presbyterian minister, Dr. George William Wright, who was sent first to build up the school, continues still at its head. But the institution, several years ago, ceased to be exclusively Presbyterian. First the Methodists adopted it, and supplied a part of its faculty, and then the United Brethren joined in the work, appointing Rev. J. Ernest Pace as their representative in the teaching force. And now the fellowship is being extended once more to embrace the Baptists.

This arrangement has been effected by Secretary Franklin of the Baptist Board, who has just been visiting in Manila. Three candidates for the Baptist ministry will enter the student body at the beginning of the school year, and a Baptist professor will join the faculty as soon as the mission can arrange to spare a man from regular pastoral work. The seminary includes a first-class theological course for men prepared to take it, and it also provides instruction for men whose educational equipment confines them to simpler lines of Bible training.

Conference for Outgoing Missionaries

The Board of Foreign Missions in New York announces its sixteenth annual conference with missionaries newly appointed and others on furlough about to return to their fields, which will be held as usual in the Presbyterian building, New York City. The first exercises will be held on Saturday, May 31. On Sunday the entire group will attend service at Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, where Dr. Jowett will adapt his message to them. Mornings throughout the following week will be devoted to sessions of the conference, afternoons to private consultations by appointment with the secretaries of the board. On Monday night the prospective missionaries will be guests of the New York Presbyterian Union at Hotel Savoy.

Missionary Brevities

—When Mr. Mott and Mr. Eddy were touring China, only Mr. Eddy was able to reach Paotingfu. There he addressed 1,500 students in the military college, and 350 of them signed cards promising Bible study and prayer. The missionaries are doing their utmost to get all of these into suitably manned classes.

—A very fine workers' Bible conference was held in the Collingwood church at Kochou, China, under the direction of Rev. Charles E. Patton. The enrolled attendance was 182, representing twenty chapels scattered over a range of country with a sixty-mile radius. Nearly all of these walked the whole distance, and practically all met their own expenses.

—The village Christians of the North India Presbyterian mission are in great need of education, according to the organ of the mission in a recent issue. "There are thirty schools for 213 villages in which Christians live," the report states of the region around the Kasgang station which, with the near-by Etah station, is responsible for 8,000 Christians. "In the Etah end there are but twenty-four village schools among probably a greater number of villages. Another fact which shows the pressing nature of the problem is this, that but eighty-two Christians not in financial connection with the mission can read their Bibles. In the Fatehgarh district with 4,500 Christians . . . there are but 190 boys and a few girls learning to read."

Board Notes and Announcements

The Siam and Laos secretary, giving the map talk for May at Room 48, Chicago, told of the railroad nearly completed and the hope that this would make it possible to have delegates from each mission attend the annual meetings of the other; spoke of the 175 students in Bangkok Christian College; the large proportion of girls from the nobility in the Harrie M. House School, the great need of a large site for that school, whose roll could easily be doubled if there were room; the beautiful church built by the Christians of Sritamarat the schools of Ratburi, closed for lack of a building; the beginnings of a university in Chieng Mai; the plans being laid for pionee work in the north.

—New leaflets of the Woman's Board of th Northwest: "The Man Who Went to Chin to be Converted," "The Testimony of a Col lege Student," each 1 cent. "Taibai and He Two Sons" (India), 2 cents. "A Mission Schoo Under a Mulberry Tree" (Mexico), "Intercessory Foreign Missionaries," each 3 cents.

The Enlarging Work and Influence

Of Bloomfield College and Seminary

BY ARNOLD W. FISMER

BLOOMFIELD SEMINARY has had a small beginning. That is no reason for its remaining small. Its origin was no less humble than that of our greatest institutions of learning.

The oldest college in the United States, at its establishment, was little more than an Indian mission "schoale." A foreigner, who died within a year of his arrival, contributed a few books and a few thousand dollars to increase its usefulness. That was the beginning of Harvard University. But it was Jesus Christ who made Harvard a reality. It has been claimed that there are not six colleges in the United States that do not owe their life to Christ. It was Christ who laid the foundation of the Bloomfield College and Seminary. It bears visibly Christ's characteristic signature of a small beginning and expanding growth.

Specimen Class of Bloomfield Students Representing Four Races Now at Work in the Home and Foreign Field

A Kindergarten Cradle

In 1850 there came to Newark, N. J., one of God's saints in the truest sense of the word, Rev. George W. Winnes, neither a trained theologian nor a great pulpit orator, but he had a winsome way of capturing hearts for the Master. "His life was the best sermon," is the unanimous testimony of those who knew him. Doing single-handed pioneer work and organizing churches seems to have been his God-appointed mission.

In Newark he organized the first German Presbyterian church, which in God's providence became, in due time, the blessed mother of our school. The modest little lecture room in the rear of the church, now a kindergarten, was its cradle.

Academy, College and Seminary

That which was primarily "kindergarten" in conception has attained, with its academic, collegiate and theological departments, a scholastic status and dignity. By an act of the legislature of New Jersey our school has received college standing, with power to grant academic and honorary degrees. "Our graduates take the same presbyterial examinations and stand them as well as do the graduates of the English seminaries. We have graduated, in full course, 154 students who, as preachers of 'the glorious gospel,' have in other as well as in presbyterial relations, in this land and unto the uttermost parts of the earth, served God and their generation most loyally and efficiently. In addition to those thus regularly graduated we have instructed a long line of students taking special courses."

Living Epistles of Commendation

The best recommendation of a school is the character and quality of its graduates. The following letters of commendation coming from presbyterial stated clerks, we humbly submit, attest that the record of our alma mater through her sons is one which no institution need blush to face. They are, indeed, "our epistles, written in our hearts, known and read by all."

"I am directed by the Presbytery of Nassau to express to you the sincere gratification felt by all its members, because of the excellent examinations passed by Messrs. Jagnow and Schulz, candidates recently under presbyterial care. The young men acquitted themselves with the utmost credit and reflected honor upon the institution and the instructors that trained them. The presbytery extends its sincere congratulations to the faculty, with the hope that a long succession of men capable of acquitting themselves equally well may continue to graduate from Bloomfield."

Work of Two Young Men Appreciated

The stated clerk of another presbytery writes: "I would like to take the opportunity to tell you how highly we appreciate the last two men you have given to our German church in Passaic. I was inconsolable when Rev. Mr. Schmitt went away, for I feared we could never get another like him. But Rev. Mr. Jung takes hold in a spirit equally admirable. If we had an unlimited supply of youthful ministers like Mr. Schmitt and Mr. Jung, the future of the church would be hopeful indeed."

Graduates Fitted for Home and Foreign Field

God often pushes the work of his kingdom farther than his coworkers propose. So was it with our school. Ten of our men of German descent have gone to the foreign mission field, twenty into the English ministry in the home field.

This was in response to a call for a special ministry. Our country needs today, more than ever, educated ministry, but there is also a large uneducated population, chiefly foreign-American of the second generation, which requires a different kind of ministry—a ministry springing from among these peoples themselves and not too far removed from their social and domestic conditions. Candidates for such a ministry our regular theological seminaries are not prepared to receive for lack of the necessary stepping stones of approach so adequately provided in the academic and collegiate departments of our school.

Superintendents in the home field, unable to supply the increasing demand for such men, having had experience of the success of Bloomfield men, assure us that they will welcome our training of young men for this larger service and that they will find fields waiting for them.

$70,000 Knox Hall Fund Provided

With hearts full of gratitude to God for his manifest blessings upon the work committed to us, and to the host of friends for the loving generosity with which they have helped in bringing it within easy reach of completion, we announce that the funds needed for the erection of Knox Hall are now secured by subscription.

The subscription list presents a long, interesting roll of honor consisting of 350 names of individuals and many churches, Sunday schools and societies of ladies, men and young people scattered far and wide throughout our land from coast to coast and from New Hampshire to Texas, with subscriptions ranging from 25 cents to $10,000. There are seventy $1 subscriptions or contributions, thirty-six $5, thirty-three $10, ninety-six $25, thirty-five $50, 114 $100, six $200, one $400, seven $500, eleven $1,000, three $5,000, and last, but not least, two $10,000.

We are deeply grateful to these friends for meeting our need in this large and generous way.

Plans for a splendid building, submitted by Architect John F. Capen of Bloomfield, have been approved by the board of directors and are now in the hands of the building committee for execution. The contracts will be let and the work will push ahead expeditiously.

The new building will be of the Corinthian style of architecture, three stories in height. It will be used exclusively for academic purposes, containing twelve lecture rooms, chapel, library and gymnasium.

The hall will be erected on the seminary campus adjoining the present building, ideally located at the foot of the green and facing Broad street.

A Strategic Location

Bloomfield College and Seminary occupies a most strategic place in the home-foreign field. Two-thirds of the total recent immigration stopped in the states comprised in the North Atlantic division. The metropolitan district within a radius of thirty miles from Bloomfield is 43 per cent foreign, a total of over 3,000,000. New Jersey is 52 per cent foreign, and Bloomfield Seminary is the only institution in this great mission field prepared to give to candidates of several races a fair collegiate and theological education in the use of their own tongues.

Faithfully following the time-tested pentecostal policy of teaching in tongues to preach to "every man in his own tongue wherein he was born," Bloomfield College and Seminary provides a polyglot curriculum conducted by a polyglot teaching force, so far as feasible, for each race represented in the student body.

Those interested in fuller detail of this unique missionary school may address for further information Rev. Henry J. Weber, D. D., Chairman of the Faculty, Bloomfield, N. J.

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

CHAPTER XXVII.—Continued

AS HIS HOST led the way into the house Ansley smiled in satisfaction under cover of the darkness. This was exactly the move toward which he had been leading the unsuspecting Mr. Elmore. Reaching the office, the latter drew from his file the long preserved letter of Rosalie Horton, and without a word handed it to Ansley.

The lawyer read and reread it, as innocently as if he had never heard of it before. "Well, well, well!" he said at last, with well assumed surprise. "Now at last I've got to the bottom of this business."

Mr. Elmore had been watching him closely. He had great regard for the opinion of this man. "What business?" he asked quickly. "What do you mean, Ansley?"

The lawyer paid no heed to the question, but asked another. "Of course you showed Mr. Horton this?" He had no belief that Mr. Elmore had ever ventured such a thing; consequently the answer surprised him.

"Yes, I did, on the occasion when he outraged me by asking for my daughter's hand."

"But this letter is dated several years ago."

"Certainly. I received it at the time of his father's appearance here."

"And you never showed it to him, nor gave him a chance to explain?"

"No," said Mr. Elmore, but with a little less of self-confidence. His friend's evident disapproval made him uncomfortable, even in the midst of his self-justification.

"Mr. Elmore," said Ansley gravely, "you have been a just and noble gentleman through most of your life, but in this matter it seems to me you have been neither just nor noble."

Mr. Elmore made no reply, and a silence fell between them. Ansley drew out a third cigar, cut it, lighted it deliberately, began to smoke, then at last broke the silence.

"What I don't understand," he said, "is why, when you did finally show him the letter, his explanation didn't put everything right and lead to harmony between you."

"Explanation?" said Mr. Elmore curtly. "He made none."

"So? I suppose not. I have never found him the kind of man who offers explanations. His idea is that his life should speak for itself. I have always found that it did, and most eloquently."

Something like a sneer crossed the clear-cut face opposite him. "You share the current infatuation, I know," Mr. Elmore said coldly. "Did it never occur to you that the absence of an explanation sometimes arises from the fact that there is none to offer?"

"Sometimes. Be that as it may, Horton could have refuted at least one of the charges in that letter. I can tell you something that does not sound like ingratitude." Earnestly and slowly he began to tell the story of the Glencoe bank failure, and of Bradford's part therein, warming to his subject till he was almost fiery in his emphasis at the close of the narrative of unusual generosity.

"See, Mr. Elmore, what this man has done! In the last four years he has bought the house and paid for it to the last penny, the house in which now lives the woman who wrote that letter. He has given it by deed to her, without incumbrance. Besides this, he has given her every month the money on which she has lived and met her personal expenses. Ten days ago he made the last payment and sent the canceled mortgage to this woman. You ask, why did he not resign three years ago? He remained here to earn the money to meet his obligations and to secure this woman a home, knowing all the time what a wrong her spite had done to him. Now he has thrown up work he loved and has gone, God knows where, to get himself out of the sight of a man who could not recognize worth and manhood as exhibited before his eyes every day."

"Have you anything but his word for all this?" inquired Mr. Elmore skeptically.

"I have," said Ansley with heat. "As his business agent I handled the money."

The statement was convincing even to a prejudiced mind.

"Well," said the elder man reluctantly, "I must admit there has been great nobility in this conduct, especially when done by such a man as he. We seldom expect nobility from men of his class. For no matter what he's done, you can see for yourself, Ansley, that he's a man of no birth, probably of no name. The letter says it plainly enough. Besides, he told me himself that his father was that disreputable old vagabond whom he took such pains to bury. And as for his mother—well, we all know what she probably was. Could I have such a man as that marry my daughter? I am an Elmore, senator," he ended proudly.

The conversation closed there. Ansley had the information he wanted at first hand. There was nothing to do now but wait for a reply from Mrs. Horton. But when it came, some two days later, the Glencoe letter was written not by Mrs. Horton but by her daughter, and consisted only of the announcement of the mother's death after a continued feebleness of some weeks.

There was now nothing to prevent the delivery of the note from her to Mr. Elmore, but Ansley had a scheme of his own as to the time and place of the presentation. Morally certain of the explanation that the letter would contain, he formed a plan that he felt would in no literal way break his promise to Bradford. He had promised to say nothing about his father; well, he would say nothing. Silence might be made to prove more expressive than words, and if the reasoning which led to his resolution was sophistical, he felt that the advantage to come to his friend who so well deserved it justified the sophistry. So the day after the word came from Mrs. Vanderbosch he called for Mr. Elmore at the bank, just at the closing hour, asking him to take a walk.

The day was lovely, the June fragrance alluring. They strolled along as if aimlessly, talking of widely varied subjects, until the green and quiet of Mount Logan cemetery tempted them inside it. Wandering through the winding paths, they came, as Mr. Elmore thought unexpectedly, to a remote, inconspicuous corner where stood a lately erected granite block. "Have you happened to notice that, Mr. Elmore?" said Ansley, pointing it out casually.

The older man glanced at the inscription, then looked more closely, then read aloud, as if not crediting his own sight, the words engraved there:

"Erected in Memory
of Anson Horton
and His Wife, Laura Salter,
by Their Son."

The face of the reader turned very pale. "Laura! My God!" was all he said. Passing around to the other side of the shaft, he read the simple words, "My mother." The two men stood with uncovered heads for a moment. Mr. Elmore broke the silence. "I never knew she had a son, Ansley."

After another long, tense interval, "I suppose that is Bradford?" A moment later, "Was that old vagabond Anson Horton?"

Ansley nodded, still in silence.

"And you have known it all this time?"

"Yes."

"Why have you not told me long ago?"

"The secret was not mine to give, Mr. Elmore."

"But why did he not tell me, and put himself right in my eyes?"

"His father's dying wish was that you should not know to what he had come; he remembered your family's opposition to his marriage with Laura Salter. A man with the spirit of a Bayard will not break a promise to the dead. He compelled me also to keep his secret."

"Oh, I have been blind, blind!" groaned Mr. Elmore. Shaken and weak, he sat down upon a near-by stone and buried his face in his hands. "If I had not been possessed of an evil spirit I should have reasoned it out. But I thought Anson was dead—I never knew Laura had a son—and who could have recognized poor old Drum as the brilliant young man who married her? But I knew he went to the devil, and I might have put two and two together."

"Wasn't that exactly what you did do, my friend," said Ansley with real pity for the heart-brokenness he had caused. "You put Drum and Rosalie Horton's letter together, and added them up wrong."

Mr. Elmore looked up. "Yes, it was the letter that misled me. What do you suppose, Ansley, could have been her motive for lying so?"

Ansley produced a sealed envelope. "Perhaps this will tell," he said. "She did not want it given you till after her death, thinking, I gather, that Bradford had succeeded in spite of her and unwilling to be humiliated in her lifetime. I had word of her death yesterday. She was not a woman of as noble character as the mother from whom Bradford inherited his."

Mr. Elmore was hardly listening; his mind was intent upon the letter.

"Dear Richard: When you read this I shall be at rest. I could not bear to have you read it while I lived. I once wrote you a letter in which I did my adopted son Bradford great wrong. It was written in anger, and I am thankful to learn that my attempt to cause both you and him humiliation failed. I learn that his own record in Prestonbury has made for him the position I tried to keep him from. I am myself humiliated when I think of his wonderful goodness to me, in saving my home for me when the conduct of my own son had left me homeless.

"I want now to say what the truth was that underlay the false impression my letter was meant to convey. Bradford was indeed left on my doorstep, as I wrote, but we knew all about who he was, for his father was my husband's brother Anson, whom you yourself knew, as he married your almost sister. You knew, too, Anson's record; he broke Laura's heart and had no means of bringing up her child, so we undertook it. There is no trait in Bradford like his father. You must have seen his likeness to his mother, and in many ways, too, he is like my husband.

"Rejoicing that you have been the friend you have to Bradford, and trusting that you will not think too scornfully of one who can do nothing more than this to make amends, I am yours remorsefully,

"ROSALIE M. HORTON."

The letter fluttered to the ground as Mr. Elmore dropped his hands helplessly to his side. "Blind and more than blind!" he murmured. "Oh, Ansley, what a blunder, what a perverse and stubborn blunder I have made! But," with a sudden arousing of the spirit in him that made him feel no circumstance could be too strong for his will, "I will set it right at once."

"You cannot, Mr. Elmore," said Ansley soberly. "Bradford has gone, you know, and left not a trace behind. He will be hard to find, if he has made up his mind not to be found."

They started homeward. Winding among the shrubbery that lined the walks, they came at a sudden turn face to face with Eleanor, the warm color flooding the grave, sweet face that bent above an armful of June roses. Startled, she half turned as if to escape, but her father stopped her with a tenderness in his voice that had never been there even in the days of her girlhood, long past.

"The flowers are so beautiful, dear. Were you taking them yonder?" He pointed in the direction where lay the lonely grave.

She bowed her head in assent; in the sudden revulsion of feeling from hopelessness to hope she could not trust her voice.

"Come, dear. I will go back with you." His arm was lovingly about her. "I understand it all now, my poor Lennie. Can you forgive me?"

Ansley Jickers had not heard the last words; he had walked quietly away. His work was done. "I knew she would do that," he said to himself. "That's why I told her."

(Continued on page 658)

The Open Hearth

No Reduction of the Assembly

Should the General Assembly be reduced? No. It ought to be enlarged. Why? Because it can now get up a greater enthusiasm; it can reach more people; it can command more respect and exert more influence. A small body belittles the church, it belittles the cause. Numbers count on the masses, and it is the masses that the church must work upon. The world is influenced most by numbers.

Bring a single lion to town and the boys will scarcely leave their play to see it. But bring a whole animal show and the whole country will turn out to see it. The mills will shut down and farmers must give their hands a holiday. Bring twenty-five preachers and elders into a city and they will scarcely be noticed. But tell the people of any city that the Presbyterian General Assembly, consisting of a thousand delegates, will meet in the Metropolitan theater, because there is no church in the city large enough to hold it, and see how the people will want to see it, and hear from it, and read about it. No, it would be a great mistake to reduce its size.

But someone objects that such a large body can't deliberate. Deliberation is now done in committees, and this will never be changed, no matter how small the Assembly may be made. All legislation is now cut and dried and brought to the Assembly in somebody's grip, and the Assembly is expected only to sanction what has been prepared. Reducing the Assembly would only make this thing worse, not better. Now there is an occasional refractory fellow gets there, who upsets calculations. Reduction would only lessen the probability of this.

It is certainly a step backward when it is proposed to lessen the demonstration of the church. The spirit of the age is to catch the attention of the masses with an imposing public display. Enlarge the Assembly rather than reduce its size. If necessary meet less frequently. A body twice as large as it now is, meeting once in three years, would do more good for the church than one of your little select, dilettante affairs composed of a few professors, city pastors, learned jurists and retired bankers could do if they met every six months. Yes, enlarge the Assembly, but never reduce it.

A. G. EAGLESON.

The Korean Situation Through Missionary Eyes

Vindication of the Korean Christians in the celebrated trials for conspiracy is a cause for rejoicing, and we are very happy over it. We know something of the joy it must be to families, friends, churches and communities when the ninety-nine acquitted return, some after more than a year in prison and others after several months. Truth and justice have triumphed and the court deserves credit, for though a plain case the circumstances surrounding it made justice difficult.

It is a great thing for Korea and greatly to the credit of Japan that her civil courts are to maintain their integrity where the military power is paramount. Withal, however, rejoicing must be tempered and temperate, for it seems plainly established that a society existed, with large membership, a few understanding its objects in a bad way, but the great majority not so understanding it.

I look for a large uplift in the Korean work. In China the task of the hour is to press forward; in Korea it is to conserve and continue. We have "a going concern" there, and the church must see that it is kept going. Never did missionaries in a foreign field justify their cause better than during the trials in Korea. Few realize how severe the crisis was at times. The skill of the missionaries kept distress, disaffection, disintegration and some disaster away. This was accomplished through prayer and concerted action. The outside agency which had an untold influence was publicity secured through such excellent mediums as The Continent, The Herald, The Japanese Chronicle, The London Times, The Westminster Gazette and other influential periodicals.

The heretofore cordial relations of those who work for the political uplift of the Koreans and those who work for the religious conversion of the people will be enhanced. The missionaries have shown clearly that the conversion of souls is the one thing to which they look, while the higher authorities in Korea, as all along, may be expected to demonstrate that they want only the honor and obedience due the empire.

As Japan is spending millions for the material development of Korea, let us with the splendid start there in a religious way keep the good work up and it will overflow into both Japan and China, even as of old Judea overflowed into the world.

J. HUNTER WELLS.

Bill Against Medical Quacks

Attention of all Illinois ministers and church brotherhoods should be directed to the bill introduced into the Illinois senate by Senator Hurburgh to prohibit quack medical advertising and the publication of advertisements dealing with special classes of disease. Senator Hurburgh deserves the instant support of every minister and every Christian man in Illinois in this attempt to clean up our country newspapers and to save young men. A note to the senator at Springfield and action by all our churches would further this great purpose.

STUART M. CAMPBELL.

Men Wanted for the Frontier

Very little has been published concerning North Dakota's largest presbytery, Bismarck, comprising more than a third of that large state. We know the foreign mission field is calling for men; we know the home mission field is doing the same. We are part of the great Northwest home mission field and we need men.

Four men who are ordained, or will be ordained in the fall, are wanted at once. The empire of western North Dakota is being opened up this year. Probably there will be more railroad building in this state this summer than in any other part of this country. New railroads mean new towns. New towns mean new churches to be organized. And that means that men are needed to hold the banner of the Lord Jesus Christ. Four of our present home mission stations are vacant. We must have men in them before any of this pressing new work can be touched. There is no overlapping of work. We have, in each field, the only Protestant church for many miles.

Is it true that the spirit of our forefathers is dead? Is it true that there are so many "fat" jobs in the East that the front battleline must suffer? I know that a pulpit in the East, with schools and colleges near, may seem to many to be more attractive than a home mission field. But there are souls to be saved out West. Bury yourself? Yes, if you cannot stand the pace, you will bury yourself in ground that will raise thirty-five bushels of wheat to an acre. The men we need are men like those we see pictured in "Black Rock" and "Sky Pilot"; men who will take Henry Ward Beecher's advice and spend some of their life working for Christ on his mission field.

HENRY M. TENNEY,
Moderator of Bismarck Presbytery.

Vacation Schools an Example

Some time ago an article which I wrote for The Public Ledger of this city on the teaching of the existence and attributes of God in the public schools was quoted with approbation in The Continent. I said that it was only by accident that the average school child, without proper home or church training (and how few have that!) had any conception of a God; further, that the growth of knowledge of natural law and its study in the schools has nullified largely the inherited or traditional sense of a supreme Being, both in adults and children; and that a remedy should be sought in this very nature study by using it to turn the mind to the great Creator and Developer; thus inculcating the basis of all religions. This could not be objected to by any form of Christianity, by Mohammedans, Buddhists or pagans and should be a duty of government.

No doubt all this is liable to the remark that mere intellectual belief is not religion. This is true, but note that I urge it only as the basis of all religion. The apostle James, also arguing against mere belief, says, "The devils also believe and tremble." But he would have admitted that unbelieving devils would have been even more devilish!

But my present purpose is to carry these thoughts farther by calling attention to the recent step in school work which may land us on a more advanced stage in religious education. The daily Bible vacation schools, now in operation in about thirty of our large cities, provide Bible instruction along with manual occupations, singing and amusement. Bible instruction can be given because the schools are held in churches or other private buildings, not in schoolhouses, and are under the direction of Christian people of all denominations, mostly volunteers.

I commend this movement in its present state, and as to its possible development, to the many thoughtful persons who are studying how religion can be taught not in, but in connection with, our public schools. The Federation of Churches may find the daily vacation Bible school a valuable factor in the work.

Philadelphia. J. S. WHITNEY.

Publicity and Social Work

Rev. Eugenio de Luca, Chicago Christian missionary for the Italians, criticises publicity given in daily newspapers and religious papers to work of city missions in encouraging personal cleanliness. He believes such statements to be unwise and either unjust or embarrassing to the people concerned. His further comment follows:

"I am not against religious social centers or missions and their work. I heartily approve baths in our missions. I believe it to be the duty of Christians as individuals and as churches to uplift man in every way possible. But our first and everlasting duty is to preach Christ and him crucified—our supreme aim must be to win sinners to the Saviour. To do this we need the support of the Christian people and we must obtain it not by misrepresentations, funny stories about dirty children in kindergartens, or saying that foreigners need prizes that they may allow others to bathe them. We must show to the Christians the awfulness of the sin that exists, the great ignorance about the truths of the gospel and the need of a Saviour; and unless the Christians of today have lost sight altogether of Christianity we will get the support necessary for our work. As far as my people are concerned, I have been working with them for over six years. I have tried every means that I knew to reach them, and my experience is that of all other Italian missionaries—if we want to help them, first of all we must give them the gospel in their own language. Everything else is good if done in the right spirit and in the right way, but Christ first and foremost!

EUGENIO DE LUCA.

Why Has Doctrinal Preaching Disappeared?

With the exception of a special course by Keigwin some years ago churchgoers have heard very little doctrinal preaching in New York City in latter days. The writer was talking with a group of men recently, some of whom are under the ministrations of one of the most brilliant preachers of the day, and one of these men, a keen, thoughtful surgeon, said very bluntly:

"The ministers of today do not believe in the so-called fundamental doctrines of Christianity, such as the virigin birth, the resurrection of the body, the Holy Trinity." Being asked his reason for such a statement, he replied that he had listened in vain during the years he had been in New York (and he had gone to church after church) for any sermons on the doctrines that were supposed to be fundamental.

Another member of the group, an elder in a city church, endeavoring to combat this theory of insincerity on the part of the ministry, was forced to admit that he had been connected with five churches, that he had personally requested the pastor of each of these churches to preach on questions of fundamental doctrine and that not one of them had complied with the request.

Dr. Keigwin told the writer that he announced undisguisedly that he would preach on the doctrines of the Presbyteriaan Church at his evening services, and that these services were jammed, and mostly with men.

I heard a college professor say very recently that young men are leaving the colleges without any belief in the doctrines of the Christian church, but that they are satisfied that there is, to use the term of Matthew Arnold, "A power that makes for righteousness." The professor said these youths are eager to enroll themselves on the side of righteousness, but they do not believe any of the "mythical teachings" of Christianity. The surgeon above referred to said with scorn, "Do you suppose that if these ministers had a sincere belief in the truth of these doctrines they would fail to teach their people to understand them and to believe in them?" This is a bitter assertion, but is it not very largely true?

There are half a dozen men in New York City who have in special measure the gift of clear, terse exposition of truth. They can get more kernel out of the nut than the average preacher, and if any one of them were to announce that during the coming month he would preach doctrinal sermons I venture the prediction that his services would be crowded.

Missionaries in foreign lands have their probation classes, and alleged converts have to make good before they are received into the communion of the church. How many churches of the Presbyterian denomination have any such preliminary instruction or probation, or make the slightest attempt to train or teach their children the doctrines of the church in any systematic way after they are received into its communion? In how many pulpits are ten doctrinal sermons preached in any one year?

PRESBUTEROS.

Father Bird and the Chippies' Nest

(Continued from page 640)

Then the next largest said, "Ho! if you can do it I can!" And he flew almost across and was boosted up onto the limb. Then the third went across in much the same way; then the littlest one of all.

Father and Mother Bird danced with joy, and the young birds danced, too, shouting gayly, "We can fly! We can fly! We can fly!"

Father Bird and Mother Bird brought more worms and more worms, and soon the youngsters flew back to the nest limb without any help at all.

The next day they flew over to the worm tree without mishap and began to hunt worms for themselves. But when night came they flew back to the nest tree and sat in a row on it, tucking their heads under their wings to go to sleep. After the youngsters were thus all tucked in Father Bird looked at the empty nest and slipped a wing about Mother Bird.

"Mumsie, dear," he said, "I think you are the wisest little Mother Bird I ever saw. But wasn't it lucky I built that nice strong nest when I did?"

Omaha Cylone Handicaps Bellevue

The Omaha cyclone of Easter Sabbath indirectly brought great suffering, though not through loss of life or buildings, to the well known Presbyterian college at Bellevue, one of the suburbs of the stricken city.

The institution, with its nearly 200 students, is largely dependent on Omaha for financial support. For the time being this is cut off. All givers, of all the region, are necessarily concentrating upon relief to people who have lost their all, and this historic Presbyterian college is face to face with an imperative and distressing need.

Bellevue believes that the voice of its need, calling through this note to the readers of The Continent, will not be unheeded.

Reading Matter for Alaska

Dr. S. Hall Young is asking for subscriptions to magazines or old magazines and books for reading rooms in Alaska. Two years ago a similar appeal brought a large amount of material, which was used widely. He asks that matter be sent to the following stations during the summer, when it can go on boats at third-class rates: Free reading room, Iditarod; Rev. T. P. Howard, Knik; free reading room, Susitna; Rev. R. J. Diven, Petersburg; Rev. Edward Marsden, Saxman; Sheldon Jackson Institute, Sitka; E. N. Bradshaw, D. D., Ruby; Rev. G. G. Bruce, Fairbanks; J. H. Condit, D. D., Juneau; Rev. George G. Good, Hoonah.

Dr. J. A. Marquis, president of Coe College, has returned from a month's rest and recuperation in California.

Ways of Working

Practical Evangelism in the Sunday School

The falling off of accessions from the Sabbath schools and the great danger of the situation has awakened the church to the duty of Sabbath school evangelism. First church, Ashland, Ohio, was gladdened on Easter Sabbath by the accession of thirty-two young people from the Sabbath school. The methods employed may be suggestive to others.

Only the regular agencies of the Sabbath school and church were used. The plan was first presented to the Sabbath school officers and teachers and to the parents six or seven weeks before Easter, and their cooperation solicited.

A children's church attendance band was organized for the five Sundays preceding Easter. Each Sunday the pastor, Rev. William Ellsworth Bryce, made a short talk to the children gathered on the front seats at the opening of the morning service. Each child was provided with a numbered card on which record of church attendance was kept. On Easter the pastor presented thirty-nine children with souvenirs for faithful church attendance. The souvenirs consisted of an illuminated Easter cross and a package of flower seeds. The seed was the basis for a short talk on the resurrection and the children were requested to plant the seeds and use the flowers for the church and for the sick during the summer.

The pastor organized a communicants' class, which met in the afternoon on each of the three Sabbaths preceding Easter. All children over ten were invited. The pastor went over the apostles' creed with this class, explained what it meant to be a Christian and to unite with the church. At the second meeting the pastor distributed "Covenant cards," reading, "Trusting in God for help, I accept the Lord Jesus Christ as my personal Saviour, and by the aid of the Holy Spirit I will confess and follow him." At the third meeting the members of the session were present, the cards were collected and the children who had signed were subjected to a thorough examination by the pastor. On Easter there was a public reception of all those who had been received by the session.

—The druggists of Philadelphia are appealing to the church people through the various church bulletins for a cessation of Sunday business. The Association of Retail Druggists requests congregations to refrain from buying postage stamps, cigars, candies and sodas on the Sabbath.

—January was set aside as decision month of First church, Oklahoma City, Okla. The pastor, Dr. Phil C. Baird, distributed cards asking members to sign a resolution to bring someone into the church before the next communion. There were sixty-one cards signed, and without any special evangelistic effort seventy-one members were received during the month.

Dr. H. A. Johnston for Moderator

To the Editor of The Continent: The Presbytery of Connecticut Valley has unanimously elected Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston as a commissioner to the Assembly to meet at Atlanta, and at the same time has commended him for the moderatorship for several reasons. He has been one of the most helpful leaders in the denomination by his books and voice in stimulating the work of personal evangelism. His recent visit to the missionary fields, as the representative of the evangelistic committee of the Assembly, by the universal testimony of the missionaries, was accompanied by constant blessings. His membership on different boards of the church gives him an intelligent and sympathetic relation to the problems of administration to be discussed at the next Assembly. Few men in recent years have served the whole church more helpfully. As moderator of the Synod of New England, he revealed unusual ability as presiding officer over an assembly.

JOHN F. JOHNSTONE, Stated Clerk.

Hartford, Conn., April 24.

A Plea for Mothers' Day

"Olean, New York, April 22, 1913.

"REV. W. H. FOULKES, D. D.,
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

"Dear Sir: I have arranged for our Sabbath school to observe Mothers' Day, May 11, by taking up a special collection for the mothers and children under care of the Board of Relief.

"The school took to the suggestion at once, and I wonder if you could not swing many schools into line by an appeal for such a collection on that day. There is time to get an article in the church papers for May 1 and 8. I believe that such an article would bring in a substantial sum from our Sabbath schools.

"With every good wish for your continued success, I am,

"Cordially yours,

(Signed) "HARRY BURTON BOYD."

Fine! Splendid!! God Bless the Mothers of the Manse!!! Mr. Boyd's idea ought to grow immediately.

Pastors, Superintendents, Teachers, Parents and Pupils of all Presbyterian Sunday schools, won't you rig up the little machinery needed, set it in operation, take a Sunday school offering for the widows and orphans under our care on Mothers' Day, May 11, and send it to us?

Every dollar and every cent will go to the widow and the orphan.

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building - - - Philadelphia, Pa.

News Notes from Various Fields

Nebraska

Among the Omaha Churches

The visit of Mel Trotter of Grand Rapids to Omaha April 13 enlisted church people anew n the gospel mission. He spoke at First church n the morning and at a union service at North church in the evening. Upward of $2,300 was raised, two-thirds of which was contributed by First church.

Rev. William Ralph Hall of the young people's department recently met representative young people of the churches in conference, where interest was aroused in the Storm Lake young people's gathering Aug. 7-14.

Dr. Grant E. Fisher of Dundee church assisted in special meetings at Wessington, S. D., April 6-13.

North church has extended to Trinity M. E. congregation the use of its auditorium for Sunday evening services. Trinity church had its structure greatly damaged. The two churches merge their second service of Sunday, the pastors preaching alternately.

First German church, which suffered more han any other Presbyterian church by the Easter tornado, was treated so liberally by the nsurance adjusters that it can repair its church without other aid.

Rev. R. H. Houseman, in addition to presentng the educational phases of the Sunday school o several spring meetings of presbyteries in is own jurisdiction, conducted a Sunday school nstitute for St. Joseph Presbytery at Marysville, Mo., April 15.

Dr. T. H. McConnell, who leaves Westminster church this month, has been chairman of presbytery's committee on church extension and secretary of the executive committee of the board of directors of the seminary.

President W. S. Stookey of Bellevue College has returned from the East with many fine pledges for the maintenance and endowment of the school. RALPH H. HOUSEMAN.

An effort is being made to raise $10,000 immediately to enlarge the church building at York.

Kansas

McLains church, Rev. H. W. Ewart pastor, has recently made large growth through special meetings conducted by the pastor.

The salary of Rev. Floyd Poe, pastor at Independence, was raised at the annual meetng. The church will take steps to renew its present charter in accordance with the statutes.

Rev. George McNab was installed pastor over Axtell church April 9. Dr. Alexander of Atchison, Rev. L. M. Scropps of Clifton, Rev. . M. Crocker of Horton and Dr. A. B. Irwin of Highland took part.

A decided effort will be made during the comng year to increase the contributions to benevolences by Horton church. Howell Lair, who completes his work at McCormick this year, will be ordained June 9 at this church and go as a missionary to China.

Rev. H. Frank Reid was installed pastor of Memorial church, Marysville, April 10 by Dr. W. I. Alexander of Atchison, Rev. Frank Zugg of Washington and Rev. A. R. Bichenbach of Frankfort. This church has its largest congreation in the evening, when an orchestra adds o the service.

Washington

Moderator Matthews recently addressed the ministers of Tacoma at a luncheon at the Commercial Club and was the speaker at an evening opular meeting in First church.

The Home Mission Council of Western Washington, a branch of the national organiation, is hard at work. Eight denominations —Baptist, Congregational, Disciples, Episcopal, Methodist, Southern Methodist, Presbyterian and United Presbyterian—are represented. By the assistance of the home mission boards of the several churches some information about the religious condition of more than 1,000 school districts of western Washington has been gathered and tabulated. It is estimated that there are 70,000 people in Washington west of the summit of the Cascade mountains who do not live nearer than four miles to a place where regular preaching services are held. Following a recent "get together banquet" the council has assigned each school district to some church, expecting that church to hold services. Presbyterians received much territory which will require pioneer service of the most self-sacrificing kind.

Oklahoma

Okmulgee church under the leadership of its pastor, Rev. C. P. Dubois, is making splendid progress. Audiences have shown a very large increase. The pastor's salary has been enlarged.

The general aid society of First church, Oklahoma City, Dr. Phil C. Baird pastor, last year made 3,550 church calls. The work was systematized through the pastor's office, whose stenographer assigned three members of the church to call on each stranger. The same society also raised for the church $3,599. The memorial of the dedication of the church was held recently when the trustees repeated the ceremony of the transfer of the keys of the church as on the day of dedication and the pastor gave an account of the use of the church building during the year.

Colorado

A committee has been appointed by Fort Morgan First church to draw up proposals under which the U. P. church of the same city will be invited to join the Presbyterian congregation. Dr. W. H. DuBose is pastor.

Rev. L. H. Eddleblute was installed at Byers, a farming and ranching community forty miles east of Denver, on April 6, by Rev. J. M. Travis and the pastor-evangelist. The entire day was given over to church work, the people attending for miles and bringing with them their well filled baskets. The installation service was in the morning, a conference on the church and methods of work in the afternoon and an evangelistic service in the evening.

South Dakota

The church of Huron, Rev. Hubert Ketelle pastor, greatly increased the aggregate of its contributions to beneficence the past year.

The church of Watertown, which worships with the Congregational church, but under the lead of their own minister, Rev. C. E. Kearns, is contemplating a merger.

A strong rural church of thirty-six members was recently organized in Reserve Presbytery by Rev. William Smiley of Garland and Henry Cullen, D. D., pastor at large of Midland. They worship in the schoolhouse.

Oregon

Upon the return of Rev. Alfred M. Williams, educational superintendent of the Board of Sunday School Work for the Pacific Northwest, the headquarters of the board were moved to 207 Central building, Portland.

The ladies' aid society and the Christian Endeavor society of Medford doubled their membership during the past year. The Sunday school as well as the church is growing rapidly under the pastorate of Rev. W. F. Shields.

Wisconsin

Rev. J. Boyd Stephenson of Weyanwega has been holding special meetings in Fremont church with success. For several years it was thought that the little church would have to

Pears'

Pears' Soap furnishes all the skin needs, except water. Just how it cleanses, softens and freshens the delicate skin-fabric, takes longer to expound than to experience. Use a cake.

Sold in every quarter of the globe.

PRESBYTERIAN TRAINING SCHOOL
of Chicago
for Christian Workers
Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

The Church has her Evangelists patrolling the highways, urging people to accept her Head as Saviour and Master. For the training of such men there are many schools—notable among them the Moody Bible Institute.

The Church has her Ordained Ministers standing at the door inviting people to come in and doing their utmost to take care of them after they are in. For the training of such men there are our splendid Theological Schools—notable among them McCormick Theological Seminary.

The Church needs a corps of assistant housekeepers, trained in ecclesiastical domestic science, who shall conserve the time and strength of the pastor, and, under his direction, guard the back door and apply scientific rules of church household economics.

The preparation of such a corps is one of the tasks for which the Presbyterian Training School was established. If you are interested in the process or the product write for information.

H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS
Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

Blackburn College Offers a High Grade College Education for $100 a Year
Carlinville, Illinois
Miles North of St. Louis
Includes room, steam heated and furnished (except bedding), board and tuition.
Students do manual work three hours a day. It's not cheap; it's different.
Students for the Presbyterian Ministry $50.00

be disbanded, but now with the large company of new members they all renew their strength and courage.

Misses Smith and Hintz, women evangelists in Wisconsin, have been successful in their work around Chetek.

Rev. Gerritt Verkuyl is holding a five days' school of instruction in teacher training at Merrill with good attendance and success.

First church, Green Bay, at the recent annual meeting added to the salary of the pastor, Rev. Herbert W. Knox, who is now closing his sixth year with the church.

Rev. V. Rettig of Buffalo, N. Y., has come to Juneau Reformed church. It is hoped that with services in the English language the little remnant of the Presbyterian church will find a home in the Reformed church.

Iowa

Delmar Junction church has recently been improved at a cost of over $1,400.

Fire in Oakville church recently damaged the structure to the amount of $700.

The duplex system has been adopted and will be used this year by Bedford church, Rev. John A. Currie pastor.

Shellsburg church has begun the building of a manse. Rev. George Lindsay is pastor of this church and Pleasant Hill.

Monticello church has just come into possession of $2,000 by the death of one by whom an estate was held in trust. The balance goes to church boards.

Deep River church is soon to celebrate its fiftieth anniversary, when former pastors and members will be invited to return and take part. Rev. H. S. Condit, pastor, has been ill with pneumonia.

There has been raised $14,090 as a permanent investment in the religious work of Presbyterians among the university students at Iowa City. A house for the university pastor has been obtained.

A contest between two divisions of the young people's society of Third church, Dubuque, to see which could raise the largest amount of money for the new Sunday school room, resulted in a total of $460.

First church of Knoxville during the year, led by the pastor, Rev. John F. Lackey, in addition to the running expenses paid $1,300 back debts, $450 on improvements and has on hand $1,200 for a pipe organ. Mr. Lackey has not missed a Sabbath school or church service and only two meetings of the Endeavor society in nineteen months. Every two weeks in the afternoon he drives out eight miles, preaches and returns for service in the evening.

MORE THAN EVER
Increased Capacity for Mental Labor Since Leaving Off Coffee

Many former coffee drinkers who have mental work to perform, day after day, have found a better capacity and greater endurance by using Postum instead of coffee. An Illinois woman writes:

"I had drunk coffee for about twenty years, and finally had what the doctor called 'coffee heart.' I was nervous and extremely despondent; had little mental or physical strength left, had kidney trouble and constipation.

"The first noticeable benefit derived from the change from coffee to Postum was the natural action of the kidneys and bowels. In two weeks my heart action was greatly improved and my nerves steady.

"Then I became less despondent and the desire to be active again showed proof of renewed physical and mental strength.

"I am steadily gaining in physical strength and brain power. I formerly did mental work and had to give it up on account of coffee, but since using Postum I am doing hard mental labor with less fatigue than ever before."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum now comes in new, concentrated form called Instant Postum. It is regular Postum so processed at the factory that only the soluble portions are retained.

A spoonful of Instant Postum with hot water, and sugar and cream to taste, produce instantly a delicious beverage.

Write for the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

"There's a Reason" for Postum.

Malcom church during the past year has prepared better for the social side of the church life by putting in a thoroughly equipped kitchen in the basement. The church also has organized a boys' club of twenty members. Rev. G. S. Baskerville is pastor.

Springville church under the leadership of Rev. R. A. Brough is advancing. The women's societies had the church carpeted recently and are planning new pulpit and choir furniture. Attendance at Sabbath school and morning service has increased 50 per cent during the past year.

Presbyterian work at the Iowa State Agricultural College under the leadership of Dr. J. W. Innes has received a substantial help in a gift of $10,000 by Mrs. Stuart of Audubon. The manse and lots have already been paid for and this gift goes toward the building fund for the church.

Dr. S. Conybeare, Central Park church, Cedar Rapids, recently observed the twenty-fifth anniversary of his ministry. Dr. Conybeare was brought up a sailmaker in England and, like the apostle Paul, worked and labored for years as lay preacher. His pastorates in Iowa have been Tranquility and Salem in Tama county; Oelwein, Tipton, Audubon and Central Park. During the six years in his present charge he has built up the membership from 187 to 330, plus one of the best Sabbath schools of the city.

Montana

Rev. H. G. Klemme, pastor at Harlowton, has increased his membership sixfold during the year and raised about $1,000 to clear off an old debt.

Helena First church, Rev. Newman Hall Burdick pastor, has made the last payment on the new church building. An Easter offering for special purposes amounted to $1,100.

White Sulphur Springs church, Rev. Paul E. Ratsch pastor, is making a special effort to erect an addition to the church to be used as a gymnasium for the young people of the town.

Toston church, Rev. George W. Thomas pastor, has more than doubled in membership this year. The pastor is president of the Commercial Club and takes a leading part in the civic affairs of the town and neighborhood.

In Gilman, a town four months old, the pastor at large recently held services in a restaurant. The people voted to have a Presbyterian church and subscribed $500 at once for the building of a little chapel.

Three students from McCormick Seminary will be employed in Helena Presbytery during the coming summer at missionary points: E. L. Jones at Gilman, E. E. Freed at Glasston and Melville and A. G. Shriver at Gardiner and Emigrant.

Beginning with a membership which had dwindled to ten, Rev. Issac S. Mershon at Melrose has organized during the past year a Christian Endeavor society, a Boys' Scout troop, a mission study class and reorganized the ladies' aid society and graded the Sunday school.

Texas

First church, Denison, A. W. Ringland, D. D., acting pastor, has had about fifty ladies studying in seven mission classes. They raised over $50 for the China emergency fund.

First church, Austin, paid all current debts promptly and provided for the debt on the building last year, leaving a balance of about $4,500 to be applied to the purchase of a manse.

West Virginia

The report of Grafton church was the best in six years. The women have about $400 toward renovating the church building. Five hundred dollars was subscribed in fifteen minutes on a recent Sabbath for the immediate use of the trustees. May 1 is the sixth anniversary of the coming of Rev. J. A. McClelland.

Minnesota

Rev. James Wray preached the last sermon in the old church building at Rushmore April 20. The structure is to be replaced by a $6,000 church, and while it is being erected services will be held in the town hall.

Where the finest biscuit, cake, hot-breads, crusts or puddings are required Royal is indispensable.

ROYAL
Baking Powder
Absolutely Pure

Not only for rich or fine food or for special times or service. Royal is equally valuable in the preparation of plain, substantial, every-day foods, for all occasions. It makes the food more tasty, nutritious and wholesome.

A manse and three lots have been recently purchased by Woodstock church.

An addition to First church, Duluth, to contain Sunday school rooms will be erected this summer at a cost of $37,000.

First church, Albert Lea, has made substantial gains. An every-member canvass for the board showed a 60 per cent advance. Rev. James B. Lyle is pastor.

Bethlehem church, Minneapolis, raised $16,632 last year from all sources, of which $4,132 was for benevolences. Dr. Stanley B. Roberts is in the fourteenth year of his pastorate with this people.

Rev. H. J. Minder, pastor of Lismore and Hardwick churches, assisted by the Sunday school missionary, has worked up another preaching station to be added to his church field in Kenneth, a village without any Christian service in English. A Sunday school wil begin this month.

Missouri

The St. Louis depository of the Board of Publication will move to new quarters, 10th an Locust streets, May 20. The increased busines makes necessary larger quarters.

The pastor of Webster Groves church, Davi M. Skilling, D. D., has declined the call recently extended by Hawthorne Park church o Portland, Ore., and the announcement of hi decision was received with joy by his peopl Contributions to benevolent causes the pa year were the largest in the history of th church. The woman's missionary society, i addition to its regular work, has subscribe $1,000 to the special China fund.

Greenfield church has built an addition to i Sunday school room and made other improv ments at an expense of $3,000. Rededicati services were held April 13, with a serm by George H. Williamson, D. D., who w pastor of the church thirty years ago, wh the main auditorium was built and dedicat This is the oldest church of its denominati in southwest Missouri and one of the few th escaped the ravages of the civil war. T present pastor, Rev. E. S. Brownlee, was i stalled April 16.

Ohio

An assistant pastor will be employed and Sunday school quarters of Collingwood chur Toledo, will be enlarged.

Examination of the walls of First chur Dayton, show that a portion of the building l sunk considerably on account of the act of the recent flood.

A gain of over $3,000 in contributions fr all departments of Westminster church, Cle land, was reported at the annual meeting. M than seventy banquets, socials and outings w held in connection with the church during year. An effort is being made to have all members give to the church 5 cents on each dollar they earn. Rev. R. R. Bigger is pastor.

There is an organization of twelve young men studying for the ministry which meets regularly with Dr. Robert Waston, pastor of the Church of the Covenant, Cincinnati.

Rev. D. H. Rohrabaugh, who has resigned his pastorate at Harris Memorial church, Ashtabula, was given a gold watch at the farewell reception April 19 in appreciation of his two years and a half of service.

Pleasant Valley church, Blaine, will remodel its property this summer at an estimated expense of $3,000. The Sabbath school of this church is one of the best organized in the ~~state.~~ Rev. Daniel H. Mergler is pastor at Blaine and also at Shadyside. The latter congregation will build a manse this summer.

Pennsylvania

A second mission study class has recently been organized at Marietta church, Edward F. Reimer pastor. This church is attracting a large number of young men.

Doe Run Presbyterian church has presented its pastor, Rev. Arthur Richards, with a purse to enable him to visit his old home in Wales the coming summer after an absence of eighteen years.

Out of a total amount of $30,000 raised last year by Market Square church, Harrisburg, $5,000 more was given to benevolences than was spent for congregational purposes. Dr. J. Ritchie Smith is pastor.

Bethany church, Lancaster, dedicated its remodeled church and Sunday school room recently. A large number of the windows and much of the furnishings of the church are memorials for former members.

At a recent largely attended communion at Bellwood church Rev. J. A. Cowan, pastor, varied the usual reception service by reading a verse of Scripture appropriate to the individual as each of the new members was called by name.

Several of the churches in Wilkes-Barre and the Y. W. C. A. served noon and evening lunches for working girls so that they might attend the Sunday meetings. A spirit of fellowship between the churches and the working girls was established.

Reorganization of the young people's work of the Towanda church has resulted in spiritual awakening. The organ was rebuilt at a cost of $1,200 and the budget plan of finances brought much larger contributions last year. Rev. J. Shearer Wolff is pastor.

Two bronze memorial tablets were unveiled in Jersey Shore church April 20 to Rev. John H. Grier, who was pastor from 1814 to 1851, and to Joseph Stevens, D. D., pastor from 1850 to 1886. The memorials are the gifts of the late Hamilton B. Humes and Mrs. Humes. Rev. Joseph Lyons Ewing is pastor.

New York

Plans are being made for an addition to the Sunday school room of First church, Middletown, to cost about $10,000. Dr. Robert O. Kirkwood is pastor.

An Easter collection of $4,777 completed the canvass for $25,000 to wipe out the indebtedness on North Avenue church, New Rochelle, Rev. R. E. McGregor pastor.

The church at Lima, Rev. William C. McCormack pastor, has repaired and redecorated its building. The property is in excellent condition and the church work is prospering.

By the recent overflow of the Hudson river Waterford First church in Troy Presbytery has suffered the practically entire ruin of its church home. The congregation is now worshiping in a public hall.

The congregation of Groveland practically rebuilt its edifice during the past few months. It is good as new inside and out. It is one of the best suburban churches in the Rochester vicinity, with the banner for giving to missions. Rev. Louis F. Mayle is pastor.

Rev. F. Hyatt Smith was installed pastor of Kenmore church, a suburb of Buffalo, April 24. Those taking part in the exercises were Rev. George S. Swezey, Dr. A. V. V. Raymond, Rev. W. S. Carter, Rev. John D. Campbell, Rev. John W. Ross and Professor Charles E. Rhodes. The church is equipped with modern appliances, including a splendid gymnasium.

Dr. William Hiram Foulkes recently presented the cause of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation in First church, Albany. The response was $1,088.

An organ to cost $7,000 will be given by Mrs. Margaret Beattie Sparrow for the new Webb Horton Memorial church at Middletown in memory of her father, Dr. Charles Beattie, for forty years pastor of the church.

First church, Watkins, has appoined the clerk of the board of trustees, H. S. Abbey, church historian to collect and preserve all matter relating to the early life of the church, and to preserve the church calendars and other printed matter for future use. Rev. J. E. Russell is pastor.

In addition to large increases in membership First church, Mount Vernon, during the past year has organized a large number of the boys of the community into clubs, which include members outside of the church organization. The salary of the pastor, Rev. J. H. Hollister, was increased.

The fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of First church, Binghamton, was recently observed by a week of special services. The church has 1,090 members and ranks nineteenth in size in the denomination. It is the mother of a number of churches. Rev. J. J. Lawrence has been pastor since 1907.

Michigan

Historic First church of Detroit has at last fallen in line, and in answer to the almost unanimous recommendation of the session adopted the rotary system of eldership. The four-story church house which was begun under Dr. Boyd's pastorate has proved a most valuable addition to the church plant, and is in use every night and day of the week as well as on Sunday. The attendance runs up to an average of 1,000 to 1,500 a month, not counting the Bible classes, which fill it on Sunday.

Mrs. Mary Conwell Barkley, wife of Dr. James M. Barkley of Detroit, died April 26 at Cleveland of pneumonia. She was on a visit to her daughter, the wife of Dr. F. E. McClure. She is survived by her husband, one son, Dr. Earl C. Barkley, and two daughters—Mrs. McClure of Cleveland and Mrs. Frank Sibley of Detroit. During Dr. Barkley's term as moderator of General Assembly Mrs. Barkley accompanied him on a tour of the churches in the West, and everywhere won warm friends, as she had done for the twenty-five years that Dr. Barkley has been the beloved pastor of

THE WORLD IN CHICAGO
EVERY WEEK DAY—MAY 3 TO JUNE 7, INCLUSIVE

COLISEUM
GREAT MISSIONARY EXPOSITION
REPRODUCING LIFE AND SCENES IN EVERY LAND
Open 12 Noon to 10 p. m.
ADMISSION 25c CHILDREN 15c

AUDITORIUM
PAGEANT OF DARKNESS AND LIGHT
PORTRAYING FOUR TRIUMPHAL EVENTS IN THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS
2:30 and 8:15 p. m.
RESERVED SEATS—50c TO $1.50

SMITH GRANITE MONUMENTS
Statues Crosses Mausoleums
Meets the demands of the most discriminating more thoroughly and satisfactorily than any other "work in granite" known.
The world's Best in the world's best granite—WESTERLY.
Write for Booklets.
THE SMITH GRANITE CO.
Westerly, R. I.

Professors, Teachers and Others
Join Archaeological and Geological Exploration Expedition on Horseback under the distinguished Geologist, Professor James Perrin Smith of Stanford University, from the Cliff-Dwellings in S. W. Colorado by Great Natural Bridges in S. E. Utah, thence down Colorado River and through Grand Canyon, Arizona—the expedition covering the region of the World's Greatest Natural Wonders, July 9 to August 23. For particulars and Reservations address R. R. Smith, Cortez, Colorado.

The Great Natural Bridges
in UTAH—the greatest in the world—OPEN TO VISITORS, men and women, in JULY and AUGUST. Travel by team. Complete arrangements for comfort and pleasure. Address W. R. LEWIS, Lewis, Colorado.

Young Women coming to the WORLD IN CHICAGO will find
The ELEANOR CLUBS
pleasant and inexpensive boarding homes.
Rates by day or week. Call or write to
THE ELEANOR ASSOCIATION
37 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

Illustrated Sermons They draw—the impression lasts. Good Lantern with Electric Rheostat or Acetylene Generator, $29.00 Large stock of Slides, Stereopticons and Educational Apparatus Get our latest catalog and terms
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

MINISTER AGENTS WANTED
Sell Typewriters For Us
SAMPLES AT WHOLESALE
Big commissions—monthly payments—trial shipments—new stock—visible models—special prices to all Ministers.
Write today for Agency offer. Mention The Continent.
Use the Coupon ☞
FOX TYPEWRITER COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

FROM THE CONTINENT
Name..
Address..

Forest Avenue church, Detroit. Mrs. Barkley has filled positions of honor in the woman's missionary work in Michigan.

Warren Avenue congregation, Saginaw, in appreciation of the ten years of service of their pastor, Rev. J. Ambrose Dunkel, voted him an increase of salary. The church and Sunday school are crowded for room.

New Jersey

Work will soon be under way for a magnificent new parish house for Fifth Avenue church, Newark, of which Dr. Joseph Hunter is pastor.

A debt of $1,500 was recently raised in two weeks by Knox church, Kearny. The congregation has doubled in size since the coming of Rev. Robert T. Graham.

Westminster church, Jersey City, celebrated its forty-third birthday by burning its mortgage. Now plans are being made to raise $25,000 for improvement.

The church at Blairstown has had a very successful year under Rev. J. N. Armstrong. Blair Academy students numbering 223, with sixteen teachers, are a part of the congregation.

A memorial service for Dr. Wilson Phraner was held in the chapel of Munn Avenue church, East Orange, the evening of April 29. Dr. Phraner was associate pastor there. Dr. Robert B. Beattie, the pastor, was in charge.

Dr. Charles H. Stewart, late of St. Paul's church, Winnipeg, Canada, was installed pastor of North Reformed church, Newark, the evening of May 1. He succeeds Dr. James I. Vance, now of Nashville, Tenn., who left more than two years ago.

Mrs. Alice A. Mundy was elected a trustee in Metuchen church recently. So far as is known she is the only woman in the denomination to hold such an office. The church is 125 years old and the pastor is Dr. J. G. Mason. Mrs. Mundy is a suffragist.

Laurence Fenninger was ordained at First church, Bloomfield, April 29 under the auspices of Newark Presbytery. He is a senior at Union Seminary and for the last year has had charge of the services at Broughton Memorial chapel, Bloomfield. Early in June he becomes assistant to Dr. George L. Curtis of First church, Bloomfield.

Illinois

Rev. Edwin Craven, who has served Cobden church on half time for the past two years, has become pastor on full time.

Rev. Martin E. Anderson, pastor of McKinley Memorial church at Champaign, served as campaign manager in a recent local election when the law enforcement element was successful in electing a mayor and five aldermen pledged to see that the saloons obey the law. Mr. Anderson is also chairman of a committee of ministers seeking legislation which will keep saloons at least four miles from the University of Illinois.

Dr. Shaw Goes to Los Angeles

John Balcom Shaw, D. D., pastor of Second church, Chicago, for nine years, announced last Sunday his acceptance of the call of Immanuel church, Los Angeles, and will go there next September. It has a membership of about 2,200 and is one of the largest churches in the country. Dr. Shaw came to Second church from West End church, New York City, a congregation which he built up after leaving the seminary. He is one of the foremost pastors of Chicago, connected with many boards and committees, and is well known throughout the country. Dr. Shaw will find on the coast a field for leadership which he is quite certain to occupy most successfully.

Stelzle as Labor Arbitrator

Rev. Charles Stelzle, superintendent of the Presbyterian bureau of social service, has been requested jointly by the publishers of all the daily papers of New York City and by the various unions that include the mechanical employees of these newspapers, to become the permanent arbitrator of all trade disputes arising in the newspaper offices. Mr. Stelzle has already arbitrated four cases in this line of industry in Manhattan, and has on his hands now four more. In the last of these cases to be taken up seven suggestions for an arbitrator were submitted by each side, and Mr. Stelzle was the only one satisfactory to both parties. These cases are left to Mr. Stelzle with the understanding that there shall be no appeal and that his decision is final. In the cases so far handled Mr. Stelzle has returned a majority of his decisions in favor of the employers, yet has been so conspicuously fair that the union men trust him as fully as ever.

Plan for Care of Immigrants

Religious Leaders Talk on Future Problems of Coast—Big Peace Demonstration Developing—Free Vote on All Church Officers.

SAN FRANCISCO—The recent Pacific coast immigration congress under the auspices of a committee of which Captain Robert Dollar is chairman gave consideration to the ways of stimulating public sentiment so that immigrants now on the Pacific coast and those expected on the completion of the Panama canal may be received with a helpful hand. Dr. Edward A. Steiner was one of the speakers on the relation of education to the immigrant. Y. M. C. A. secretaries and various church officials participated in the discussion concerning the best way to shield immigrants from the unscrupulous and aid them until they are self-supporting.

Captain Dollar, who is an elder in San Rafael church, is devoting a large part of his time at present to the formation of a Pacific Coast Peace Association at the Pacific Panama exposition in 1915. Associated with him are Judge W. W. Morrow of the federal court, former Congressman Duncan McKinlay and Bishop W. F. Nichols.

First church, Oakland, has adopted the Australian ballot system for all church elections hereafter.

Dr. Frank S. Brush of Alameda First church, whose resignation was presented to his congregation some months ago to take effect the 1st of May, has been induced by an earnest appeal from his people to withdraw it. Dr. Brush's pastorate extends over a long term of years.

Berkeley churches, including First, St. John's and Knox, have had a profitable year in respect to work among students of the University of California. Rev. Arthur Hicks, the students' pastor at Berkeley, has been extremely busy with the help of these churches. College and high school professors and teachers have been very effective in leading Bible classes.

High Street church, Oakland, has just completed a prosperous six years under the pastorate of Rev. C. C. Herriott. A new church building is to take the place of the original structure, as the work has entirely outgrown the present capacity.

New Pastors for Cincinnati

Ministers for Westwood and Fourth Churches in May — Field Secretary Put at Work for Church Extension Committee.

CINCINNATI—The ebb and flow of the ministerial tide continues. There are still distinguished vacancies, such as Seventh and Avondale charges. During May two installations will occur. Rev. E. M. Martin will be put in charge of Westwood congregation May 4 and on May 14 Rev. Sylvester I. Dear is to be invested with pastoral power at old Fourth church.

The new moderator of Cincinnati Presbytery was called from one of the country churches—Rev. James T. Miller of West Chester.

Cincinnati has taken a big step forward in church extension work and put a field secretary to work—Rev. D. W. Malcolm, who has been pastor of the fire-swept Third church.

The past year has been one of good results for local Presbyterianism. The annual census shows total additions of 693 upon profession of faith, and of this total 447 were from the Sunday school.

Mount Auburn's ladies entertained delegates to the April meeting of presbytery.

Walnut Hills is the scene of great religious interest. All the churches are joining in a campaign directed by Dr. Henry Ostrom.

Norwood church rejoices in the recovery of Rev. George W. Shields, who won out in a fight against double pneumonia.

Ren Mulford, Jr.

Good Things in This Issue

Several days ago during the debate on the tariff bill one enterprising congressman sent to the desk a list of questions which a clerk read one at a time. The member answered the questions, thus making a tariff speech after the manner of a primer lesson. It was effective. In the same way the class in Continent topics might rise:

Where in this issue may I find modern examples to rejuvenate my faith? On page 650 is the account of the pledging of $500 for a chapel in a Montana town only four months old. At another town in the same state from a membership of ten people the pastor has organized a full grown church.

Is anything similar occurring in foreign lands? Look on page 644 and read of the big gains by Korean churches where the people fill even the windows at church services.

What can I do to help? You might aid in a mission like that described on page 635, and if you are the wife of a home mission worker you may have to help kill rattlesnakes, as one does on page 637. But everyone can help the Alaskans as requested on page 648.

Are there as many interesting things in each issue of The Continent? Yes. Helpful information of all sorts and encouragement for pastors and people are crammed into every number.

Plans of Women at Atlanta

The annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Home Missions will convene Thursday, May 15, at 2:30 o'clock in Central Congregational church, Atlanta, Ga. The usual public session will be held Friday and on Saturday a fellowship meeting will signalize the unusual event that several Presbyterian bodies are convening in the same city at the same time. Mrs. D. Everett Waid of the Woman's Board; Mrs. D. B. Wells, representing the Council of Women for Home Missions, and Miss Margaret E. Hodge, president of the Philadelphia Board of Foreign Missions, will speak. Sunday afternoon the vesper service at 5 o'clock will give opportunity for missionaries to speak informally of the work, and Tuesday will be devoted to business. All women of the Presbyterian Church are invited to attend these sessions.

Latest Report on Overture Vote

With reports from about forty presbyteries still to be made, Dr. W. H. Roberts, stated clerk of General Assembly, reports the following vote on overtures up to May 3. With the exception of No. 6 each overture has a majority of the votes in favor of its adoption. In the case of the first five the votes not yet reported may turn the tide against the proposals.

	Yes	No
No. 1	127	109
No. 2	122	116
No. 3	131	103
No. 4	126	107
No. 5	130	116
No. 6	103	147
No. 7	218	25
No. 8	217	28

Ridiculous Tibetan Salutation

There is a wide range of difference between the salutations and personal greetings of various races and tribes, but one of the most interesting and ridiculous is that of the Tibetans. If the Tibetan is particularly pleased or wants to express his approval he sticks out his tongue as if he were exhibiting it to a doctor. When he greets someone on the street his salutation consists of sticking out the tongue, holding out his hands palm up and repeating the words "Aka demo." In certain parts of Tibet the greeting is varied by shooting out the tongue, pulling right ear, rubbing left hip and making slight bow—all done at the same time.

These salutations are one of the features of a very interesting set of slides and lecture on Tibet, which are being offered for the first time by the McIntosh Stereopticon Company of Chicago. After you have seen these pictures you will appreciate the great missionary need and opportunity in that strange country only recently opened to the world.

New Organ at Fifth Avenue

Contributions Greatly Exceed Request—Hymn Books for Two Churches—Bohemians Celebrate Anniversary.

NEW YORK—Fifth Avenue church, Dr. John Henry Jowett, will have a fine new organ to take the place of one worn out with age. The officers asked the members for $35,000. But when the money was all in it was found there was $50,000. So a new organ will also be placed in the prayer meeting room. The work will be done this summer. As it will necessitate the tearing out of a good part of the back of the auditorium it has been found necessary to close the church. But arrangements are being made to hold union worship with a near-by congregation. Dr. Jowett and Frank Seeley, organist of Fifth Avenue church, are collaborating on a new hymn book. When this is completed it will be used by the congregation. Dr. William P. Merrill of Brick church and Clarence Dickinson, organist there, have in Brick church pews a book they arranged.

Jay Knox, son of the late Professor George William Knox of Union Seminary, was ordained April 28 in the chapel of the seminary. He will become assistant at First church, Morristown, N. J.

TABLET FOR FRENCH PASTOR

A tablet was unveiled the afternoon of April 27 in French Evangelical church in memory of Rev. Henri Grandlienard, who died suddenly just a year ago after a pastorate of forty years. Mr. Grandlienard at his death was the senior pastor in service of New York Presbytery. He was founder of the French Y. M. C. A., the French Y. W. C. A. and the French Evangelical Home for Young Women.

Former Moderator John F. Carson of Central church, Brooklyn, has had his furlough extended five months by that congregation. Dr. Carson is home and able to move about, but is in very had health.

North church, Dr. John R. Mackay pastor, held the annual dinner of its brotherhood April 28. There were about 250 present.

Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston of Stamford, Conn., and moderator of New England Presbytery, is giving a course of six lectures on successive Tuesday evenings in St. Paul's Methodist church on "Personal Work" under the auspices of the Evangelistic Institute.

Professor Charles A. Briggs of Union Theological Seminary has been quite ill for the last two weeks, but was somewhat improved later. Dr. Briggs is past 70 years old and is the senior professor in the seminary.

Labor temple has the use of the East Twenty-Fourth street pier each Monday afternoon and evening for the next few months.

At the Presbyterian ministers' association May 5 James C. Cropsey, former police commissioner of New York, spoke on "Crime in New York." Mr. Cropsey is now district attorney of Brooklyn. May 12 Dr. James A. Francis of Clarendon Street Baptist church, Boston, will discuss "Is Mormonism a Real Menace or Only a Scarecrow?" The other speakers for this month will be: May 19, Dr. St. Clair Hester of the Episcopal Church of the Messiah, Brooklyn, "A Cycle in Panama"; May 26, Dr. George P. Mains of the Methodist Book Concern, "Present Religious Literature."

A new baptismal font has been placed in "old" First church, Dr. Howard Duffield pastor. It is the gift of Roger A. Williams and it was first used for the baptism of his son.

Gifford Pinchot has accepted an appointment as chairman of a committee to represent the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America in the interest of country life.

One half of the estate of Dudley Jardine, a member of the Jardine Organ Manufacturing firm, which amounts to more than $100,000, will be divided among the Board of Foreign Missions, the Prison Association of New York, the woman's branch of the New York City Mission and Tract Society and the New York Protestant Episcopal Mission Society. Mrs. Cornelia Eaton bequeathed $15,000 to the Presbyterian hospital.

MEETINGS BY BOHEMIANS

The Bohemian Presbyterian church of New York, which is named after the national hero, John Huss, is celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the dedication of its church building in a series of meetings which began May 4 nd will last until May 11. The service last Sunday was a consecration meeting. Dr. Marvin R. Vincent, who presided at the meeting twenty-five years ago, was in the chair to introduce the speakers for the English service. Concerts and entertainments are being given every night during the week, and the final one on Saturday, May 10, will be an operetta entitled "Czech Life in Song," arranged from the national Bohemian songs by the pastor, Rev. Vincent Pisek, who has recently published a book of these. A settlement house next door to the building is being planned. Over 26,000 Bohemians are in this section of the city, within seven blocks of the church.

The anniversary services of Union Theological Seminary will be held the evening of May 13. A lawn party will be given on the terrace the same afternoon.

Dr. Maitland Alexander of Pittsburg, one of the leading moderatorial possibilities, is a son of Fifth Avenue church. A brother, Charles B. Alexander, is a trustee and has been a member fifty-two years.

Former Congressman William S. Bennet, a member of the Home Board, is one of those elected an elder in the new Fort Washington church on Washington Heights, for which a $300,000 building is now going up.

Robert C. Ogden, an elder in Central church and president of the board of directors of Union Seminary, has been reelected president of the Conference for Education in the South.

Dr. Arthur J. Brown of the Foreign Mission Board is head of the executive committee of the newly organized "Asiatic Institute," a society formed to bring about a better understanding between the peoples of eastern Asia and this country.

Serve Luncheon After Church

St. Louis Congregation Helps People to Get Acquainted—Slavic Worker Honored Before Leaving City.

ST. LOUIS—An experiment is being employed at Second church Sunday evenings. The pastor conducts a brief devotional service, after which those present are cordially invited to adjourn to the parlors of the church, where, during a social hour, they may become better acquainted. A light luncheon is served.

April 27 was generally observed by the churches as a day of prayer for China. Dr. W. R. King of Monmouth, Ill., addressed the morning congregation at Tyler Place church and spoke to a large congregation at a union service in Washington and Compton Avenue church in the afternoon. Dr. F. W. Russell of West church, chairman of the foreign missions committee of presbytery, delivered an address at the afternoon meeting.

The retiring moderator of presbytery, Rev. George F. Ayers, invited Dr. Norman B. Barr of Olivet church, Chicago, to preach the opening sermon at presbytery. Reports by Rev. John L. Roemer, chairman of the home mission committee, and of the federated committee, read by Rev. A. F. McGarrah, superintendent of church extension, showed that presbytery is awake to the opportunities in this city. A special report of the work in the East end parishes was made by Rev. George W. King.

Miss Agnes Hornicek, who has been employed for the past eighteen months as visitor and worker among the Slavic people, has accepted a position as visitor among the foreign-speaking people of Ambridge, Pa., where her brother-in-law is pastor. Before her departure Markham Memorial church held a farewell service in her honor.

Samuel J. Niccolls, D. D., and Rev. George W. King are to leave June 1 for Aberdeen to attend the tenth anniversary of the Alliance of Reformed Churches.

The Woman's Missionary Society had charge of the service Sunday night, April 27, at North-Covenant church. J. M. Patterson, field secretary of the Foreign Board, made an address.

R. A. Holland, superintendent of the city art museum, spoke to the ministers of the city Monday morning, April 28, on "The Art Museum and Its Influence on the Community."

St. John's church of Boyle Memorial center held a song service Sunday evening, April 27. Moving pictures were shown.

The annual junior Endeavor rally, an event that has been of great interest for some years in this city, was held the last Sunday in April at Grand Avenue U. P. church.

E. W. McCLUSKY.

Lake Forest College

issues a 40-page

Book of Views

showing the buildings, without and within, a little of the beautiful environment, and some phases of the student life.

Copies of this book will be sent on application to parents and others who are genuinely interested and who will mention The Continent.

Address: President's Office
LAKE FOREST, ILLINOIS

TEACHERS, COLLEGE STUDENTS, MINISTERS ON THEIR VACATIONS

And others who desire pleasant, helpful and remunerative employment during all or part of the summer (or longer) will do well to write us, applying for entrance into the summer CONTINENT enlisting campaign. Your eligibility as a volunteer will depend somewhat upon your location during the summer. Write us and we will be glad to tell you about our plan.

THE CONTINENT

509 So. Wabash Avenue,
Chicago, Ill.

156 Fifth Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

The study of economy

There's a very real money value in the study of the advertisements in these columns. Through them you learn, in many instances, how to buy for less articles of everyday use. In other instances you learn of things which enable you to utilize materials which you have been in the habit of throwing away. Again, you learn of things which enable you to accomplish some everyday task in half the usual time and with half the usual effort.

So that the study of advertising is really the study of economy—of time, of labor, of money.

Good reason, surely, why you should give heed to the messages of the advertisers in these columns.

THE ADVERTISING MANAGER

One of the most perplexing church problems is the selection of the right hymn book.

GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS

will readily solve this problem. The one hymn book used in the Great Billy Sunday meetings. Send today for copy on approval. Ask for complete catalogue and how to obtain our new music at half price.

THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
12-14 W. Washington St., CHICAGO

Good subscription man wanted to travel in Eastern States. Address with references The Continent, 156 5th Ave., New York, N. Y.

Has Club of 90 Scrubwomen

Dr. Alexander Tells Philadelphians of Work in Pittsburg–Tabor Church Has Fiftieth Anniversary–Get Old Synod Record.

PHILADELPHIA—The Presbyterian Social Union at its April banquet at the Bellevue-Stratford listened to two interesting addresses. Dr. Maitland Alexander, pastor of First church, Pittsburg, and candidate of his presbytery for moderator of General Assembly, discussed "What We Can Do with the Downtown Church" in the light of what is being done in his own church. "One of its unique classes," he said, "consists of ninety women, all of whom are cleaners of office buildings. All are married and they gather for the discussion of family problems." A club of 850 girls consists of employees of department stores. Rev. William Muir Auld, pastor of Calvary church, talked on "Romantic Sir Walter Scott."

The Adelphoi, a social organization of Presbyterian ministers, gave a farewell dinner at the Hotel Walton to Dr. C. A. R. Janvier in view of his proposed departure to India. The toastmaster was Rev. C. C. Tyler of Chestnut Hill, and among those who made addresses were Doctors W. Courtland Robinson, J. B. Laird and J. Harvey Lee.

OBTAINS OLD MANUSCRIPT

Dr. J. B. Turner, secretary of the Presbyterian Historical Society, was enabled recently to purchase at an auction of old manuscripts in New York the original manuscript record book of the Minutes of the New England Presbyterian Synod 1745-54 and 1766-83. The purchase price, $51, was generously paid by Charles B. Alexander. The volume was from the library of the late Hiram Carson, professor of English literature in Cornell University.

Tabor church, next to Bethany in size among the Presbyterian churches of the city, and located but a few squares from it in the downtown district, celebrated on a recent Sunday its fiftieth anniversary. It was also the thirty-second anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Willis B. Skillman, who spoke at the morning service on "Fifty Years of Unwritten History." In the evening the speakers were David S. Kennedy, D. D., and George W. Bailey, M. D. The church is doing a prosperous work.

Emmanuel church, Dr. E. S. Bowman pastor, recently celebrated its twentieth anniversary. The church rejoices in the completion of a handsome new edifice fronting on Girard avenue, West Philadelphia. The contributions for the payment of it, as for outside benevolences, have been on recent occasions most generous.

The financial report of Mount Airy church, John Calhoun, D. D., pastor, shows $5,355 contributed for congregational purposes and over $10,000 for benevolence.

Dr. William Greenough, for a number of years visiting pastor of Bethany church, has been engaged to assist the pastor of Ninth church, Dr. Higgons, in the same capacity.

CONDUCT TENT MEETINGS AGAIN

The Presbyterian summer evangelistic committee has organized for the purpose of conducting a tent and open air campaign in congested districts as in previous summers for a number of years. William H. Scott was elected president and Dr. W. P. Fulton superintendent.

Two churches, Arch Street and Northern Liberties, voted at recent congregational meetings to unite with their pastors, Dr. M. J. Eckels and Rev. W. M. Holderby, in requests for dissolution of pastoral relations. The first retires on account of health and the second has accepted a call to a Pittsburg pastorate.

The closing "midnight" theater service in the tenderloin was made the occasion for a farewell reception to Dr. Janvier, one of its most diligent workers from its inception. Among the speakers was Rev. A. J. Ferry of Bethany temple.

The twentieth anniversary of the famous Germantown Whosoever Gospel mission was recently celebrated. William H. Scott, to whom it owes so much of its success, presided at one of the meetings and John C. Winston, the publisher, at another. Among the speakers were Albany R. Smith, son of Gipsy Smith; Doctors Janvier and Alexander Henry and Alba B. Johnson.

The two weeks' campaign of the Y. W. C. A. to raise $750,000, which began April 16, was most enthusiastically and courageously pressed, but was not successful within the time limit. The amount raised was $271,000, most of this being in $1, $2 and $5 bills. The largest subscriptions were $10,000, and there were but two of these. The time for raising the full amount was extended three days.

Preparations are under way in this city for the establishment of a mission for girls similar to the Faith Hope mission in New York.

Plans are maturing by which the Y. M. C. A. in this city will take over the religious work in five of the medical colleges of the city.

The Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary in Philadelphia May 4.

Rev. William M. Holderby, who for the past few years has been doing such energetic work in the Northern Liberties congregation and mission field of this city, has accepted an invitation to South Side church, Pittsburg, and will give up his work here July 1.

Bethesda church, Rev. James H. MacArthur, has taken on new vigor. Its last annual report is the best for many years. In addition to an increase in membership $10,264 was contributed. An indebtedness for improvement of property of $6,013 was canceled.

Central-North Broad Street congregation, Dr. R. H. Morris pastor, has recently largely increased its Sunday evening attendance.

Ernest Janvier, son of Dr. C. A. R. Janvier, has returned from India, where for the past year he has been a teacher. He will enter Princeton Seminary next fall.

The fifth of a series of meetings of the Drexel Biddle Bible class, celebrating the fact the 12,000 had joined, was held in Union Tabernacle church, the pastor, Dr. Robert Hunter, making an address. W. P. WHITE.

Twenty-Five Leave Seminary

New Preachers Graduated by Western–Board of Freedmen Has Interesting Exhibit–Y. W. C. A. Formed at McKeesport.

PITTSBURG—The commencement program for Western Theological Seminary began with the baccalaureate sermon Sunday, May 4, in North church and closed Thursday evening with the alumni banquet in the gymnasium of the new dormitory. A feature of the program was the induction of Dr. James Henry Snowden into the chair of systematic theology. The charge to Dr. Snowden was given by Dr. Maitland Alexander, pastor of First church. Twenty-one young men were graduated and four others received the degree of B. D. The seminary has closed a good year and is making extensive plans for additional work during the coming year.

The Board of Freedmen has had on display for several weeks at headquarters, Bessemer building, an elaborate exhibit of industrial work done by the students in its colored schools of the South. A large number of people in Pittsburg and vicinity visited the rooms during the display, which is to be put on exhibition again at Atlanta in connection with the Assembly.

The Anti-Saloon League held a large and demonstrative meeting in Penn Avenue theater Sunday afternoon, April 27. The principal address was made by Dr. Purley A. Baker, general superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of America. Rev. Howard Russell, founder of the league movement, and J. Denny Oneil also spoke.

A Y. W. C. A. of 1,100 members in McKeesport is one of the results of the Billy Sunday meetings. For some time the Bible classes have held their meetings in the rooms of First church, while other meetings were held in the abandoned building of old Second church. Recently rooms have been rented and a permanent home has been obtained.

A reception was tendered the veteran pastor of Grace Reformed church, Dr. John H. Pruch, May 2. It was the occasion of the thirty-third anniversary of his pastorate. In point of service Dr. Prugh is the oldest pastor in the city.

Rev. John R. Waddell assumed charge of Bellevue church Sunday, April 20. Rev. William Holderby, pastor-elect of South Side church, will take charge of the work the first of June. P. W. SNYDER.

Dr. George Norcross, pastor emeritus of Second church, Carlisle, Pa., recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his licensure. He is a brother-in-law of the late Dr. Sheldon Jackson.

Invite Commissioners to Tarry

Delegates to General Assembly Expected at Gatherings on "Presbyterian Day"–Training School Is Attracting Attention.

CHICAGO—There promises to be a large attendance of out of town Presbyterians at the various meetings incident to Presbyterian Day of "The World in Chicago" May 12. Inquiries are coming from pastors in neighboring states concerning details and every commissioner to General Assembly who will pass through Chicago has been urged to attend the meetings and the big Presbyterian dinner in the Coliseum the evening of May 12. Tickets should be reserved through Dr. Fox by Saturday evening. This dinner will be for men and women and is in charge of the brotherhood. Among the speakers will be Dr. T. H. McMichael of Monmouth College and Rev. J. E. Walker of Chicago, both representing the U. P. Church; Dr. W. H. W. Boyle and Dr. E. P. Hill, and prominent commissioners to Atlanta passing through the city. The annual meeting of the Chicago brotherhood will be held in Second church at 4 o'clock. Dr. S. S. Palmer of Columbus will speak at this meeting. Delegates are being appointed by the various local brotherhoods. Presbyterians are expected to be present at the popular meetings at the Coliseum at 10:30, when the program announced last week will be carried out.

A large proportion of the requests for information about the Presbyterian Training School looking to enrollment next fall are from college girls. H. B. McAfee, director, is also receiving many requests for workers.

A very large number of ministers have promised to observe Mothers' Day May 11 by speaking on the pending legislation on marriage and divorce reform.

HELP FOR Y. M. C. A. SCHOOL

Encouraging reports are being received by the Chicago officials in charge of the campaign to raise funds for the building of the Training school of the Y. M. C. A. The campaign which has been in progress for some time came to a head during the first ten days of this month, when reports were made daily to chairmen of the various districts in the central part of the United States. These reports are being forwarded daily to Chicago. Several large gifts have been received in addition to the $100,000 in hand before the campaign opened.

Plans have been completed for the erection of a dining hall of Olivet camp at Lake Geneva. A large number of other improvements are being made at this summer resort of Olivet Institute.

First church has bought the house and lot immediately adjoining the church building and will use the dwelling as a parsonage for Dr. Covert. Upon the rear of this lot and extending over the present church property will be erected a $75,000 building for Sunday school and club rooms, as previously announced.

The closing meeting of the Presbyterian Social Union was attended by a large gathering to hear Dr. Charles W. Gordon, "Ralph Connor," speak. The report of the nominating committee, as previously published in The Continent, was adopted. C. D. B. Howell is president.

Rev. Ernest Glen Wood is assistant pastor at Second church. He recently finished a post-graduate course at McCormick Seminary and is the son of Rev. Glen Wood, for long the Chicago representative of the American Tract society.

Local associations expect to send large delegations to the Y. M. C. A. international convention at Cincinnati May 15-18.

Presbytery has just appointed a committee to look into the purchase of a large residence in Morgan Park as an old people's home. It is proposed that this shall absorb the present home now conducted by Olivet Institute.

EARNS HIS OWN SALARY

Probably no church in the country can present a better report than that of the Italian church on Ohio street. The pastor, Rev. Philip Grilli, has supported himself by outside work and the church has paid all running expenses and contributed to all the boards. Of the 461 members who have joined during the eleven years of the present pastorate 435 were formerly Roman Catholics.

Rev. C. S. Adams, pastor of South Chicago church, will leave on or before Sept. 1.

The World Is in Chicago

In the largest hall that Chicago affords, which time and again has reechoed with the shouts of more or less friendly political parties, "The World in Chicago" opened last Saturday for a five weeks' exposition of missionary facts presented by thousands of church members of Chicago and vicinity. In the opinion of Rev. A. M. Gardner, general manager of the enterprise, the attendance on the opening afternoon was fully as large as that on the first day of "The World in Boston." Delegates from London, Boston and other cities were present at the opening.

"Like a mighty army moves the church of God" sang hundreds of people who were massed about the balcony from which the speakers at the opening exercises addressed the throngs which could scarcely restrain their impatience to view the exhibits. Following the singing of America and the doxology, and the invocation, Bishop W. F. McDowell of the M. E. Church in a short address answered the questions why the "world" is in Chicago and why Chicago is in the world. He predicted that what the world's fair of 1893 was to the commercial interests of the city "The World in Chicago" will be to the religious interests. President Wilson officially opened the exposition at 6 o'clock by pressing a button at Washington which lighted the electric star above the main entrance of the Coliseum.

Practically all of the exhibits were in place on the opening afternoon, and following the exercises groups of spectators gathered around the various booths representing different countries listening to the explanations by stewards who had been trained in their work during the winter in hundreds of mission study classes.

Occupying a prominent place near the main entrance is the Alaskan exhibit, where Dr. S. Hall Young is at present in charge of a team of dogs eager to draw their sleigh over the manufactured snow which lies in front of the realistically painted mountains of the Northland.

Every effort is made to reproduce the home life of missionaries or natives in the many countries represented. Strange grasses cover the roofs of some booths. Furniture from the far-off lands is in use and the stewards in charge wear the costumes of the country. In some cases natives give first hand information about the home life of their people. In the demonstration halls at various times during the day tableaux are given and missionary scenes depicted by parties from various churches.

The home mission exhibit of the various churches is very complete. The Baptists have a colportage wagon headed directly for a mountaineer's cabin transported from the South. The country life department of the Presbyterian Home Board has a very large showing of charts.

In the galleries are dozens of other booths in addition to those on the main floor, portraying more countries, each manned by successive relays of stewards, who tell about the mission work in the countries represented. There are many missionaries on furlough among the stewards, and the information given is not only accurate but very often first hand. Dr. John Timothy Stone of Fourth church, who is captain of stewards, said on the opening afternoon that he was very much encouraged by the number of stewards who were ready to take their places.

The pageant of "Darkness and Light," a musical drama of five parts, representing in song and action significant missionary events, is given each afternoon and evening at the Auditorium theater. Thousands of voices have been trained for a number of weeks for this performance, which already has given promise of being even more interesting than the exposition itself at the Coliseum. It is expected that many hundreds of visitors from near-by towns will come to Chicago during this month to witness this greatest missionary or religious enterprise ever organized in the Middle West.

Woman Would Be a Minister

Chemung Presbytery Receives Miss Brooks as Candidate—Other News of Spring Gatherings of Presbyters

Miss Rachel G. Brooks, a graduate of Elmira College, was taken under care of Chemung Presbytery as a candidate for the ministry at its recent meeting at Elmira, N. Y. Miss Brooks desires to work as a Presbyterian minister in rural churches not able to support regular pastors. This is probably the first action of the kind ever taken by a presbytery. General Assembly last year declared against the ordination of women. Presbytery also reversed its former vote and denied the overture reducing the size of General Assembly.

Big Gains in Benevolences

Boise Presbytery at Boise, Idaho, elected ex-Governor J. T. Morrison moderator. Rev. D. A. Clemens, who had served as stated clerk for sixteen years, having resigned, Rev. Bruce J. Giffen was elected. Messrs. William I. Hill and Arthur W. McFarland were taken under care of presbytery. The net gain in membership for the past year is 6.5 per cent. The increase in contributions to home missions is 13.5 per cent, to foreign missions 8.5 per cent and to all the benevolences 31 per cent. About half of the churches in the presbytery have adopted the duplex envelope system.

Holston Presbytery met with Mount Bethel congregation at Tusculum, Tenn., and elected Rev. William Forsyth moderator. Reports indicated some gain over last year in benevolences. Holston Presbyterial Missionary Society held its annual meeting, which was well attended. The society is maintaining the mission school taught by Miss Jennie Moore at Rocky Fork.

Fargo Presbytery at Erie elected Rev. C. M. Haas moderator. Rev. E. L. Copeland was licensed as a local evangelist. W. W. Kammerling was received under the care of presbytery. Affirmative action taken on overtures 1-5 at the fall meeting was reversed. Presbytery made a net total gain of nearly 300 members the past year.

Newburyport Presbytery met in Park Street church, Portland, Me., and elected Rev. George McArthur, Graniteville, Vt., moderator. Horace C. Hovey, D. D., was placed on the list of honorably retired ministers. Overtures 1, 2, 4, 5, 6 and 7 were denied; 3 and 8 affirmed. The first annual meeting of the Woman's Missionary Presbyterial Society met in Free Street Baptist church at the same time. Miss Julia Fraser, secretary of the Woman's Board of Home Missions, and Dr. John M. Kyle, missionary to the foreign-speaking people of Boston, made addresses. Miss Fraser also conducted a conference on methods of work. April 16 the society and the members of presbytery were banqueted by the brotherhood of Portland church.

Elizabeth Presbytery examined William A. R. Russum on part of the subjects required for licensure. After an address by Rev. H. B. MacCauley of the Interchurch Federation on the jury reform movement it was resolved to invite Governor Fielder to visit Elizabeth and other cities of presbytery for the purpose of speaking on this important topic. After an address by W. Y. Chapman, D. D., of Newark it was resolved to hold a number of conferences in different parts of the presbytery next fall in the interests of the united benevolences of the church.

Dr. Eells Exonerated

The Worcester Gazette reports that Boston Presbytery, meeting at Brookline April 16, voted to exonerate Dr. Edward Eells, against whom charges were made for expressions in a circular advertising his book, "A Mission to Hell."

Dakota Presbytery was greatly cheered by the presence of Thomas C. Moffett, D. D., superintendent of the Indian department of the Home Board. One new church was organized at Bear Creek. A petition was presented by Rev. D. E. Evans asking for the organization of a church at Macon, Mont.

Santa Fe Presbytery adopted a resolution expressing confidence in the integrity of the officials of the Home Board, pledging support to their progressive policies.—Spokane Presbytery appointed a committee to consider the feasibility of establishing a college at Spokane and answered overtures 1-5 in negative.—Kansas City Presbytery affirmed overture 7, pledged support to the Home Board and showed additions amounting to an increase of 33 1-3 per cent over a year ago.—Kendall Presbytery affirmed all eight overtures.—Flint Presbytery showed a loss in membership on account of close pruning of membership rolls; country churches are showing strength.—Florida Presbytery will raise $6,000 for the sustentation fund and directed each church to appoint a committee to visit communicants in an attempt to get at least $6 from each for the same fund.

Would Change Fiscal Year

Genesee Presbytery at Corfu, N. Y., chose Rev. William V. TeWinkel of Perry moderator. At an evening popular service addresses were given on Sunday school work by Reverends Stanley U. Mock, Evan M. Jones and Frank G. Weeks. Overtures were sent to General Assembly emphatically opposing reduction in the number of commissioners and urging Assembly to change the time of ending the fiscal year from March 31 to Dec. 31. For the first time the Ladies' Presbyterial Foreign Missionary Society met simultaneously with presbytery and both bodies listened to an address by Mrs. William D. Noyes, a missionary at Canton, China.

No member of Rochester Presbytery may attend General Assembly more than once in three years according to a rule adopted at a recent meeting of that body. Rev. Herbert S. Harris of Mount Morris was elected moderator. Scarcity of small children in Lima was reported as the cause of decrease in attendance of Sunday school, especially in kindergarten and primary classes. First church, Rochester, reported every cent advanced to poor families to assist them in buying coal and potatoes in large quantities had been returned to the fund from which it was loaned.

The full representation of Florida Presbytery at Eustis bore witness to the renewed vigor of this presbytery. Rev. Albert W. Pierce was elected moderator. Dr. R. W. Edwards, pastor-evangelist, and Rev. Mr. Albertson, Sunday school missionary, spoke of their fields of labor. Dr. Edwards said he was finding a hearty welcome from all classes of people and had several very important fields ready for occupancy if the "sinews of war" could be secured.

Santa Barbara Presbytery at Santa Maria, Cal., elected Rev. J. W. Quay moderator. Overtures Nos. 1-6 were negatived and 7 and 8 affirmed. The home mission committee was given fuller powers over the churches that receive aid from the Home Board. The churches of Somis and Simi were disbanded. Presbytery reported a net increase in membership of 132, nearly 8 per cent gain.

Dedicate New Church

San Joaquin Presbytery at Clovis, Cal., ordained M. Oseko, Japanese pastor at Visalia. Rev. Charles W. Anthony was placed on the list of honorably retired ministers. Rev. George B. Greig was reelected pastor-evangelist. Dr. McNinch gave notice of a motion for next stated meeting relative to a division of presbytery. Three petitions for new organizations were presented. The beautiful new church at Clovis was dedicated the evening of the second day of the meeting.

If General Assembly follows the desire of Austin Presbytery a committee will be appointed to confer with like committees from the other Presbyterian bodies looking to a plan of organic union whereby the present Assemblies will be styled provincial Assemblies to be united in one General Assembly over all Presbyterians. Presbytery was opened by a sermon by Dr. R. E. Vinson, president of the Austin Theological Seminary, U. S. Increase in both membership and offerings was reported.

Willamette Presbytery at Newport, Ore., elected Rev. N. C. Dunsmore moderator and Rev. W. S. McCullagh stated clerk. Rev. E. H. Edgar was reelected pastor-evangelist. Rev. I. G. Knotts sent in his report of his twelfth year's work as Sunday school missionary and resigned. Overtures 1-5 were answered in the affirmative and No. 6 in the negative.

Proposes Declaration by Three Assemblies

Dr. W. S. Plumer Bryan of Chicago, who is a commissioner to the Atlanta Assembly, believes the time is opportune for a concurrent declaration by the three General Assemblies on the relation between Christian faith and social service. In a letter to The Continent, received too late for complete publication, Dr. Bryan says:

"The last word on this question has not been spoken yet by any means. The churches whose Assemblies will meet at Atlanta are all members of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. The recent session of this council in Chicago was marked chiefly by its emphasis on the social problem, and the action taken has led many to question whether the churches, the Presbyterian churches among others, were accurately represented in the pronouncements of that body, especially as to the avoidance in the papers and the discussions of those cardinal truths of the gospel which are the real bond of union among the churches.

"It is for the Assemblies at Atlanta to speak for the churches which they represent. Doubtless there are differences of opinion in each of these churches on this subject, but surely churches which believe the same Bible, and hold practically the same Confession of Faith, and have practically the same form of government, are sufficiently agreed to speak on this subject to the world out of one heart and with one voice.

"The proposal respectfully submitted to those who will participate in the deliberations of the Assemblies at Atlanta is that they unite in a declaration which will make clear to the world their common faith in such great truths as—

"That man does not live by bread alone, but by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever, and which is infallibly revealed in the Scriptures.

"That man's greatest need is to know God and to be at one with him through his Son Jesus Christ.

"That man has sinned and come short of the glory of God, and is subject to eternal death.

"That man can be recovered from sin and death only by the love of God, unmerited, sovereign, and manifested in the sacrifice on the cross.

"That man's first step toward a better life is the resolve, I will arise and go to my Father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against thee.

"That man's new life begins with the forgiveness of his sins through the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus and the renewal of his nature by the Holy Spirit, which new life manifests itself in a marked change in his outward conduct.

"That truth is in order to godliness, and that godliness is profitable in all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come, producing not only piety and devotion toward God but kindliness and sympathy toward men, honesty and purity, courage and endurance, industry and invention.

"That the charitable, philanthropic and progressive movements of the day owe their beginnings and their growth chiefly to those men and women who fear God and keep his commandments, whose God is the God of their whole life.

"That beyond the civic and the social lies the eternal and the heavenly, as the true goal of the human spirit, and that our noblest duty is to look and to labor for that city which hath foundations, whose Builder and Maker is God.

"That these and like truths committed of God to the keeping of his church are so potent for human good that Christian men, both individually and collectively, must at all costs maintain them, and apply them to the present needs of men, lest in the great day they be found unfaithful stewards of the mysteries of God, and themselves cast out of the kingdom.

"That Christian fellowship and cooperation thrives upon and is nourished by these and like truths, and that any religious fellowship which requires the denial or the avoidance or even the dilution of these truths is delusive and dangerous.

"Such a declaration will clear the air of much mist that is afloat just now. It will bring our churches close together. It will call forth a response from churches which are not Presbyterian. It will set us right before the Christian world. And if it appear to any that such a declaration may endanger our existing fellowship, the reply is, that the churches gave to this fellowship its present form and, if they value it, they will make such changes in that form as will express and emphasize the real bond of unity among them, namely, the truth as it is in Christ Jesus."

Board Will Tell About Itself

The College Board has just closed the best year in its history, according to the reports made to the annual meeting held in New York April 29. The total receipts were larger during the year when the Kennedy bequest was received, but with this exception the total receipts last year were larger than ever before. Almost without exception the colleges of the denomination have made splendid progress during the past twelve months. During the year the board has been formulating plans for the enlargement and more aggressive prosecution of its work, and took action at the annual meeting establishing a department of publicity and extension to inform the church more fully concerning the missionary character of the board's activities.

Dr. Wylie at Dubuque Commencement

Commencement exercises of Dubuque German Seminary were held in Westminster church April 30. David G. Wylie, D. D., of New York City delivered a strong address on "The Christian Ministry: A Message from the Outside World." Two splendid orations were given by Robert E. Niebruegge and Henry J. Noeding, graduates. The board at its annual meeting elected Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, D. D., of Philadelphia president of the board. Rev. J. E. Drake of Holland, Iowa, was elected to the Van Vliet chair of theology. Mr. Drake is a young man of splendid preparation, having received his education in this country and in Europe. The college commencement will take place May 28, when seven young men are to be graduated. All expect to enter the Christian ministry.

Ministerial Obituary

Rev. David Brown

Rev. David Brown of Cedar Rapids Presbytery, of the class of '67 of Washington and Jefferson College and of '70 of Western Seminary, died at the home of his niece, Mrs. Dillie Carrier, at Newton, Iowa, Jan. 28. He was forty consecutive years a pastor and past 70 years of age. He had two ten-year pastorates at Oxford (with Unity) and Newton, and also at New Sharon, Perry and Anamosa. He is survived by his widow and Rev. Charles C. Brown of Muscatine, Iowa, pastor-elect of First church, Savanna, Ill.

Clergy and Laity

Rev. William Metcalf recently celebrated his forty years in the ministry by preaching at Bethany church, Seattle, Wash. Dr. Metcalf is nearly 72 years old and has been a resident of Seattle for many years. He was ordained by the Cumberland Church in Iowa and has preached in Nebraska, Kansas, California and Oregon.

Dr. Jesse C. Bruce of Crafton, Pa., has been offered the secretaryship of the Board of Church Erection and it is reported that he will probably accept. He is president of the trustees of Western Seminary and a trustee of Washington and Jefferson College. He has had pastorates in Peoria, Ill., and Franklin, Allegheny and Crafton, Pa.

Official Notices

By order of the Presbytery of Indiana its stated clerk is instructed to publish in the columns of The Continent its action in deposing from the ministry Rev. Winfield C. Helt, Ph. D.

William F. Padgett,
Stated Clerk Presbytery of Indiana.
413 William street, Evansville, Ind.
April 25, 1913.

By order of the Presbytery of Brownwood its stated clerk is instructed to publish in at least two of the church papers its action in deposing from the ministry Rev. W. M. Burgess.

George W. Fender,
Stated Clerk of Presbytery of Brownwood.
Brownwood, Texas, April 21, 1913.

Selected
FARM LOANS
I offer only First Mortgage Farm Loans made by thoroughly reliable firms who have stood the Test of Time. I diversify as to climate, rate and crop yield. Interest and principal collected free.
Ask for Circular No. 101
G·F·CARSON
717 JEFFERSON BUILDING, PEORIA, ILLINOIS.

5% and 6% Interest
The most careful investor always selects a choice farm mortgage when placing funds. Ask for detailed information, references and list of offerings.
G. W. HART, Pres. The Merchants Bank
BRYANT SOUTH DAKOTA

REAL ESTATE LOANS
6% Safest, Most Promising and Profitable Investment on the Market Today 6%
During the Past 30 Years no Client has Lost a Dollar.
BEVERLY H. BONFOEY
Send for Booklet B UNIONVILLE, MO.

NORTH DAKOTA
FARM MORTGAGES
THE IDEAL INVESTMENT
¶ 30 years Residence and Business activities in Banking and making Farm Mortgages. ¶ Write for my Booklet, Investment Facts, and List .075
WALTER L. WILLIAMSON, LISBON NORTH DAKOTA

7% FARM MORTGAGES 8%
Title guaranteed. On choice farms in Panhandle and fertile valleys of Eastern New Mexico. No loan made for more than thirty per cent of value, nor closed until examined and approved by our experienced examiner who is an officer of Company. We collect and remit interest free. Larger loans drawn to net investors 7 per cent; small ones, 8 per cent. Write for sample application, references, etc.
The Union Mortgage Company, Clovis, New Mexico

$25,000,000 Loaned; not one dollar lost for an investor. J. L. Pettyjohn & Co., of Olathe, Kans., will invest your funds in absolutely safe First Farm Mortgages to net you excellent interest return. Write them for particulars and references.

Farm Mortgages 6%
Your money safe and your income sure. Send for descriptive pamphlet "C" and list of offerings. 30 yrs. experience. Highest references
E. J. Lander & Co. Grand Forks N. D.

High Grade Farm Loans
Oklahoma Farm Mortgage Co., Oklahoma City U. S. A.

15,000 CHURCHES USE THE
THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Noiseless, dust-proof, self-collecting, saves ¼ cost other services. Uses shallow glass—no tipping of head. Our SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER makes purchase easy. Outfits on trial—state number of communicants.
Thomas Communion Service Co., Box 1, Lima, Ohio.

W. W. KIMBALL COMPANY Chicago
Builders of PIPE ORGANS For CHURCHES
Hundreds of prominent churches have installed Kimball Pipe Organs. Among Presbyterian churches may be mentioned: Shadyside Pres., Pittsburgh, Pa.; Gaston Pres., Philadelphia, Pa.; Presbyterian church, Seneca Falls, N. Y.

COLONIAL TRUST AND SAVINGS BANK

La Salle Street, N. E. Corner Adams
CHICAGO

Resources over $8,000,000.00

Those in search of reliable investment at 5% and 6% should communicate with our Bond Department.

3% interest on Savings.
2% interest on Checking Accounts.

SAFETY AND 7%

IDAHO offers today a splendid field for safe and profitable investments. Carefully selected first mortgages on improved CITY AND FARM property are securities which will give you no worry, but will return regularly and promptly an excellent interest return, ranging from 6 per cent to 7 per cent, and occasionally even higher. The city of Boise has trebled its population in ten years, and the agricultural districts in which the IDAHO TITLE AND TRUST COMPANY and THE NATIONAL TRUST AND SAVINGS COMPANY operate are among the most productive in this prosperous state.

CHARLES B. COXE
President
BOISE :: IDAHO

YOUR MONEY
SHOULD MAKE
SIX to EIGHT PER CENT

Write to me and I will explain about SAFE investments. No Risk.

References:
Farmers Savings Bank, Walla Walla, Wash.
Hillsboro National Bank, Hillsboro, Ill.

Address B. F. CULP, WALLA WALLA, WASH.

6½% Net First Mortgages

on improved OKLAHOMA FARMS from $200 up are safe investments. I have sold them for years to ultra conservative investors with entire satisfaction. Write today for list and interesting BOOKLET "E." Refer to Dun or Bradstreet.

GEO. R. FISH, Investment Banker, Ardmore, Okla.

6% 7%

We offer, subject to prior sale, First Mortgages on Improved Farms, also on City Residences and Business Property. Titles guaranteed. Interest collected without expense to investor. Descriptions mailed on request

JEFFERSON TRUST CO.
McAlester - Oklahoma

6% NET GUARANTEED AS WELL AS BACKED BY 20 YEARS OF SUCCESS

Farm Mortgages sold by us net six per cent, and we guarantee their payment. Interest remitted the day due Write today for booklet and references and ask your local banker to investigate us.

BROAD & BOMAR, Bankers, Ft. Worth, Tex.

$33,000,000 INVESTED IN ALBERTA MORTGAGES

by insurance, trust and loan companies. The Associated Mortgage Investors, Inc., has applied the FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE of its Officers to making Alberta loans, which yield 6% NET and have many advantages, including GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED TITLES. Inquiries are welcomed and imply no obligation.

ASSOCIATED MORTGAGE INVESTORS
KINGMAN N. ROBINS, Treasurer, Granite Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

Readers will confer a favor on the publishers of The Continent by mentioning this paper when answering advertisements.

Financial Situation

Capital Hesitates When Met with Rumors of Violent Business Changes—Money Tied Up in Present Armed Truce Relations.

The intimate relation of capital of the world to war and rumors of war has been brought out recently in connection with two important actions—the passage of the anti-alien law in California and the revelations of the German socialist leader concerning the secret methods of the Krupps and other manufacturers of war material. Business of any sort always dreads a radical change in present conditions. It means that time and money will be consumed in becoming readjusted. Business is done largely on credit, and on the entrance of any new element into a given situation, because the result is unknown, credit is contracted, financial nervousness results. Many business men on the Pacific coast seriously objected to the new law on the ground that capital would be adversely affected and withdrawn. Large sums have been invested there by foreigners, much of which is said to be affected by the law.

The revelation of the practices of the great gunmakers of Germany in maintaining secret representatives whose whole duty was to foment discontent with France and England has been partially acknowledged. This method of creating business for the armor plate factories, it has been insinuated, has been attempted less directly by business interests of the same sort in other countries. It is said that in Germany there has been a reaction from the investment of large sums in industries which produce war material.

Cost of Powder in Terms of Food

Advocates of universal peace will not be slow in pointing to the advantages to be gained in releasing for other uses the tremendous sums now tied up in factories and in the products of factories designed to equip armies and navies. A single charge of a large battleship gun costs enough to feed a family of three nine weeks, or it would pay the interest on enough capital to buy a farm from which sufficient could be raised to support a family an entire year. Financial experts are pointing to the large amounts of money invested in support of the present armed truce between nations as one of the reasons for the lack of capital to finance railways and other corporations. One of the strongest lines in the country recently was unable to borrow money at a rate considerably above what has been accounted reasonable, and it is predicted that before long lesser reads will be forced to offer as much as 6 per cent on bonds.

This higher rate, together with the growing demands for more wages by employees, will greatly reduce, if not obliterate, the returns to stockholders. This is, of course, speculation, but careful bankers are unwilling to say just where they expect new capital to come from to absorb the issues of bonds which railways must put out in order to extend their lines in response to the growth of the country.

This lack of capital for large affairs naturally is not felt by the small investor, who from his saving has $1,000 to put into a farm mortgage every year or so. This class of security is becoming more popular and the demand for money is sufficient to maintain interest returns at an attractive figure. As land gets more valuable there reasonably will follow an even larger demand in order to purchase the same acreage.

Brief Bits of Business News

—Flower seeds and advice to make gardens are being distributed to station agents of the Soo Line.

—The determination of Secretary McAdoo that the government shall be paid 2 per cent interest on active accounts in banks will bring in about $1,053,000 annually to the government. In this is seen one of the reasons why banks in the past have been so eager to have government deposits.

—In the last thirteen years the Pennsylvania railroad has paid pensions amounting to over $8,000,000 to 7,152 employees. The rules of the road provide that a man must retire when he reaches the age of 70. The pension amounts to 1 per cent of the average wage during the ten years previous, multiplied by the number of years he has been with the company.

A Non-Speculative Investment

—yielding a known income every January 1st and July 1st Safe, conservative, non-fluctuating—adapted for investing either savings or surplus.

6% Gold Mortgage Bonds

Denominations: $100, $500, $1000

Protected by Trust Mortgage
Interest Payable Semi-Annually

Thoroughly secured by the actual ownership of millions of dollars' worth of high-class, improved, income-producing city property—located on Manhattan Island, New York City, the most valuable and most productive area of its size in the world

¶ Write for Illustrated Booklet 25.

NEW YORK REAL ESTATE SECURITY CO.
Assets over $17,000,000 Capital Stock $3,950,000
42 Broadway :: New York

6% SECURITY, RATE AND SERVICE 6%

Is what we offer YOU in our FIRST LIEN REAL ESTATE MORTGAGES. They are placed only on income bearing property on a basis of 40 per cent actual value.

INTEREST and PRINCIPAL remitted on due date by NEW YORK check.

EIGHT LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES attest the soundness of these mortgages by purchasing in increasing volume.

Write for list, information and references to

REYNOLDS MORTGAGE CO.
R. B. BISHOP, Vice-Pres.
FORT WORTH TEXAS

6 and 7% Sure

When you purchase from us a mortgage on Improved Georgia City or Farm Property you take as little chance as is humanly possible. You receive from 6 to 7 per cent and you can be sure of receiving it regularly. Our property appraisals are the work of successful experts. We are extremely careful in our estimates of the moral hazards. We protect your principal with ample security. Let us send you our list of loans and interesting literature. Address "Dept. F."

Sessions Loan & Trust Co., Marietta, Ga.

FIRST MORTGAGE FARM LOANS

6% 6%

We offer only select first mortgages on improved Northeastern Oklahoma farms at 40% value of farm. Interest collected semi-annually and remitted investor without charge.
SEND FOR BOOKLET.

PARKER-WISE INVESTMENT CO.
VINITA, OKLAHOMA

SEASONED
North Dakota Farm Loans
and
FARM LAND BONDS
Netting 6%

Write for particulars regarding our investment service.
Highest references.

R. C. KITTEL & CO., CASSELTON NORTH DAKOTA

FARM MORTGAGES bearing 6% interest, first liens on improved farms. Original papers held by the investor. Principal and interest GUARANTEED; interest payable at the Hanover National Bank, New York. Thousands of satisfied customers for references. We've been doing the same thing for TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS

The W. C. Belcher Land Mortgage Co.
Capital $320,000.00.
Fort Worth, - - Texas.

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 646)

CHAPTER XXVIII.

THE SINGER IN THE WOODS

THE SECOND summer after that day when father and daughter stood together at the grave of old Anson Horton was the first that the Elmores spent in the new house on Jake's point. With some difficulty Mr. Elmore had persuaded the conservative German to part with his land and purchase elsewhere. The beautiful summer home which was erected on the site of the old farmhouse was Eleanor's, by her father's gift, and the name she gave it made of it a memorial—"The Shelter." When the fourth of the anniversary notes came that year it made the recollection of the crisis that it signalized all the more vivid, as she read it in the very place made dear to her by that storm and rescue so long past.

In the more than a year that had passed since Bradford Horton's departure nothing had been heard of him, and the silence which surrounded him seemed impossible to dissolve by any effort that could be made. Such efforts on Mr. Elmore's part were untiring, but beyond the railway terminus in New York, to which the ticket agent remembered that he had purchased transportation, no clew could be found by which to trace his movements. The brief time which had passed between his disappearance and the disclosure to Mr. Elmore had been sufficient completely to erase him.

The months of anxiety, of mental and sentimental struggle, had told heavily on Mr. Elmore, and he had aged rapidly. "If I had only known—if I would only have let myself see!" were the words oftener on his lips than any others, and Eleanor, seeing his grief, forgot every feeling of resentment that had ever hardened her heart, put aside her own pain and loneliness and answered tenderly, day after day:

"Let it go, daddy dear. It will all come right, some time. Bradford said that we would meet again. Don't grieve so—that can't help things any, and only makes it worse for me. Believe me, it will all come right."

But even as she comforted him, her loveliness, and his remembrance of how he had robbed her, would deepen his remorse, while at the same time it made him constantly more dependent on her strength.

Eleanor, too, had grown more than a year older in the year's time. Resolutely refusing to let her sadness sadden others, the effort at self-control made her strong, and the determined faith for a future of happiness somewhere to which she clung kept her from bitterness. Those of her own circle who knew her secret wondered at her steady cheerfulness, at her interested sharing in all the pleasures of her friends. But in her letters Lucy Sleighton could sometimes detect an undertone of sadness, and Caroline Jickers had once or twice been her refuge and comforter when the uncertainty and strain became too hard to bear. Lucy, taking Caroline into her confidence, formed with her a conspiracy for persuading Eleanor to accept the often repeated invitation to come to St. Paul for the rest and change that was really so much needed.

The plot was clever. Lucy invited Alice Jickers also to make her a visit; Joe promptly decided that he would accompany his wife and use the journey as a pretext for a hunting trip in northern Minnesota. The next move was to induce Charles Elmore to go with Joe, which left Charlie's mother free to spend the time of their absence at the house on Sunset hill, Ansley being in Albany. When Eleanor was offered the opportunity to make the journey to St. Paul by way of the lakes and in company with these three companions, and was assured that Caroline would take the best of care of Mr. Elmore, whom she had been reluctant to leave, the pressure of attraction was too great for her resistance. So it came about that the party of four set sail that October from Buffalo for Duluth.

At Mackinac, as they stood leaning over the rail while the steamer made its landing, among the people who came aboard from the quaint little fort village Eleanor's attention was caught by the sight of two men in hunting garb. At once she knew that a shuttle bearing a thread from the past was to fly across the web in the loom of her life. "Do you see that smooth-faced man in hunting costume?" she whispered to Joe.

"Next the military-looking chap with the British whiskers?"

"Yes. Keep him away from me all you can. He'll be up here in a minute."

"All right. Is he dangerous?"

"Not the way a gun is. He won't go off—that's the difficulty." She turned, as the hawsers were cast off, to leave the deck for her cabin, but not so quickly as to evade the man with the smooth face in the hunting dress. He had espied her as he came up the gangplank and had wasted no time in making his way to the deck. As she turned he was before her with cap off and right hand extended. "May acquaintance begun in the old world be continued in the new, Miss Elmore?" she heard him say.

If Malcolm Stuart had thought her beautiful five years ago in Berlin, he knew she had never looked so superbly lovely as now, when she took the hand he offered. "Between us," she said, "'auld acquaintance' should not be forgot. Let me present you to my friend Mrs. Jickers, Mr. Stuart."

Thus in a moment the party of four had been enlarged to one of six for the remainder of the journey. Sir Henry Joralemon, Stuart's companion, was an English merchant, who like many another of his race had risen to wealth by his own genius and industry. He was a man of 45, tall, heavily built and looked more like a general in undress uniform than like a civilian. His voice was smooth, his manners suave, and, although devoid of any sense of humor, he yet had a keen appreciation of the meaning of commercial facts. He was widely known in England as a man of large benevolence and had been knighted by the queen for the founding of an orphanage in London.

Ere half an hour had passed after the introductions, Joe, mindful of Eleanor's whisper, spoke suddenly to Charlie Elmore: "Your honor, wouldn't you like to see the guns of these two new malefactors?"

Sir Henry was astonished. He could not at all comprehend this remarkable phraseology. "Did I understand," he asked, "that you called the young gentleman 'your honor'? Is he not young to be a judge, then?"

"Counsel is in error. His honor is not too young to be the best judge of a foul ball among all our attorneys."

"And who is 'counsel,' Mr. Jickers?" asked Sir Henry, no less puzzled. "And what is a foul ball? I do not comprehend."

"Sir Henry, you are counsel, and a foul ball is one that wanders outside the lines of duty, and so does not count, you know."

"No, I don't know, you know. And how could a ball count?"

Malcolm Stuart was Scotch enough to appreciate a joke. "Sir Henry," he chuckled, when they had all stopped laughing, "you'll have to study Mr. Jickers a little, I fancy. But from what he says I understand he wants to see our guns."

"By all means," said the baronet, grasping with relief at a statement he could understand. "So that's what he means? But I don't see, don't you know, what my gun has to do with a foul ball."

The four men were gone on their tour of inspection a half hour, and when they returned to the bow the ladies had disappeared. At dinner, when the six next met, Eleanor managed to say to Joe, in passing, "That was well done, Joseph. Keep it up."

Accordingly, Joe proceeded to fasten himself to the two Englishmen, an arrangement with which Sir Henry was well content, finding himself extremely well entertained by the incomprehensible young druggist. Stuart had little chance to talk reminiscently or confidentially with Eleanor, as Joe controlled the conversation. Once, however, impatient of the situation, he asked very abruptly, "And how is my acquaintance of the Rigi, Miss Elmore?"

Joe's wife had not been Eleanor's confidant to no purpose. Joe was posted on the story of that last night in Berlin; he knew Stuart was sounding the girl to know whether the inopportune visitor on that occasion was still a rival to be feared. Before Eleanor could answer, and regardless of etiquette, he responded, "Counsel, the court does not know the name of the acquaintance of the Rigi. To answer what the court does not know is impossible."

Once more, unwittingly, Sir Henry helped Joe's purpose. "That's what I told you, Malcolm," he said in laughing complaint; "you can't comprehend him, don't you know?"

"Oh, yes, I can," said Stuart, a trifle annoyed at the interruption. "He wants to know the name of the man I met on the Rigi. I did not mention it, as I was sure Miss Elmore remembered the circumstance. It was Horton, Mr. Jickers." Then once more addressing Eleanor directly, he said what he was sure Joe could not reply to, "I wonder if he will happen along on this trip as unexpectedly as he did that last night in Berlin?"

It was a direct challenge, a deliberate effort to get at one jump back into the old relation, and Eleanor so underdstood it. The moment was painful to her. The rich color flooded her face as she began, "I do not think——"

"Pardon, counsel," interrupted Joe with his ready wit. "Court does not wish opposing counsel to know at this stage what counsel does not think. Court can tell what counsel thinks better than she can herself. This court, as well as counsel, has a case against Bradford Horton. He broke jail and escaped. He vamoosed. He decamped. He issued a writ of habeas corpus to himself, served it on himself and took away the body."

Once more the rich English coffee merchant came to Joe's aid.

"But how could he do that? I don't know, you know. He couldn't do such a thing as that, don't you know."

By the time this matter had been explained Eleanor and Charlie had gone up the deck together, and Stuart began for the first time to suspect that the girl was eluding him and that the dapper little man was helping her play the game. So he accepted what he plainly saw was inevitable. He made no more effort toward Eleanor, but like the gentleman he was, helped her to enjoy the company of himself and his friend. The past was past. He would make no attempt to force it into the present. Eleanor saw that he saw and was proportionately grateful. (To be continued)

Dr. and Mrs. E. M. Wherry, who have spent forty-five years as missionaries in India, are on a visit to this country. Dr. Wherry spoke April 13 in Honey Brook church, of which both himself and Mrs. Wherry were formerly members, the latter being the daughter of a former elder.

Commissioners to the General Assembly

Adams—Minister, R. N. Adams; elder, Henry Beardmore.

Arkansas—Minister, Nathan D. Hanks; elder, W. T. Moore.

Athens—Minister, Abbott Y. Wilcox; elder, George E. Wetherhold.

Austin—Minister, Arthur F. Bishop; elder, William G. Bell.

Baltimore—Ministers, Alfred H. Barr, J. Wynne Jones, Charles G. Cady; elders, P. Bryson Millikin, Richard P. Baer, Olion W. Cummings.

Binghamton—Ministers, James A. Anderson, Arnold W. Bloomfield; elders, Lee M. Winans, Hector S. Williams.

Bismarck—Minister, R. H. Myers; elder, C. F. Peterson.

Buffalo—Ministers, Charles T. Shaw, J. T. Badgley, William H. Boocock; elders, H. Osgood Holland, Charles B. Butler, Theodore L. Jimerson.

Clarion—Ministers, Samuel Davis, F. A. Kerns; elders, R. K. McKnight, W. M. Walters.

Columbia-A—Minister, S. H. Polk; elder, W. T. Galloway.

El Reno—Minister, W. E. Voss; elder, C. D. Garvin.

Fargo—Minister, H. D. Robertson; elder, W. H. Northup.

Flint—Minister, William H. Fulton; elder, Lewis G. Seeley.

Fort Smith—Minister, W. L. Darby; elder, W. H. Wilson.

Great Falls—Minister, Ezra P. Giboney; elder, T. A. Ewart.

Hastings—Minister, Samuel Linn; elder, John R. Maxon.

Havana—Minister, E. P. Herrick.

Hudson—Ministers, Arthur J. Vaugh, Theron Brittain; elders, Charles L. Jessup, Eugene F. Perry.

Indiana—Ministers, John Kennedy, Henry M. Rogers; elders, W. S. Baldridge, J. E. McCarty.

Iron Mountain—Minister, E. W. Behner; elder, W. E. Gibson.

Jefferson—Minister, M. E. Choppell; elder, J. E. Watkins.

Kalamazoo—Minister, Curtis B. Newsom; elder, Samuel C. Thompson.

Kendall—Minister, James C. Garver; elder, W. P. Havenor.

Lackawanna—Ministers, Griffin W. Bull, James Leishman, Andrew M. Brown, Alexander J. Kerr; elders, L. A. Stevens, James A. Linen, Andrew W. Sawtelle, William J. Ward.

Marion—Minister, William L. Barrett; elder, Frank N. McMillin.

Maumee—Minister, William A. Most; elder, S. M. Dotson.

New Albany—Ministers, T. J. Boyer, E. C. Lucas; elders, Joseph Weatherford, J. W. Wolpert.

New Castle—Ministers, John McElmoyle, Julius A. Herold; elders, Eben B. Frazer, Lewis A. Bower.

Omaha — Ministers, Daniel E. Jenkins, Thomas H. McConnell; elders, James B. Wootan, Andrew J. White.

Otsego—Minister, J. C. Russell; elder, Thomas Hughes.

Pueblo—Ministers, M. H. MacLeod, W. K. Wright; elders, J. C. Lanton, O. W. Ward.

Shenango—Minister, William H. Miller; elder, M. D. Artherholt.

Southwest (Bohemian) — Ministers, Joseph Sesulka, Joseph Miksovsky; elders, Adolph Dvorak, Tom Pala.

St. Clairsville—Minister, Kiddoo P. Simmons; elder, John W. Laughlin.

St. Joseph—Minister, Henry A. Sawyers; elder, James R. Patton.

St. Louis—Ministers, David M. Skilling, Harris H. Gregg; elders, George B. Cummings, James J. Parks.

Spokane—Ministers, Charles J. Boppell, William T. Russell; elders, Delos B. Stowell, David R. McClure.

Steubenville—Ministers, O. J. Gregg, H. N. Campbell; elders, William Simpson, James Strasbaugh.

Topeka—Ministers, R. B. A. McBride, J. S. Glendenning, V. B. Scott; elders, A. V. Wilson, C. H. Lerrigo, James Mains.

Troy—Ministers, Lindsay S. B. Hadley, Robert S. Wightman; elders, James M. Hall, John R. Morrison.

Westchester—Ministers, Clarence Wells Dunham, Paul Stratton, Andrew Szilagyi; elders, Charles D. Hilles, Howard Whittemore, Edward Buckley.

Wichita—Minister, R. B. Norton; elder, William H. Hare.

Yukon—Minister, S. Hall Young.

Calendar and Record

Moderators Elected

Arkansas—J. H. Kirkpatrick.
Bellingham—J. E. Nelson, Friday Harbor.
El Paso—W. C. Baber, El Paso.
Ewing—R. G. Shafer.
Flint—D. S. Carmichael.
Fort Smith—R. T. Phillips, Fort Smith.
Kendall—Clyde E. van der Maaten.
Kearney—A. F. Ernst.
Niobrara—J. W. Angell.
Omaha—J. B. Butter.
Kansas City—A. H. Stephens.
Lackawanna—J. S. Wolff, Towanda.
Portsmouth—J. C. Francis, Ripley, Ohio.
Milwaukee—William B. MacNeil, Horicon, Wis.
Santa Fe—R. C. Jackson, Farmington.
Sacramento—J. Fraser Evans, Fair Oaks, Cal.
Syracuse—S. W. Steele, Oswego, N. Y.
Steuben—A. C. Stuart, Almond.
Spokane—S. Willis McFadden.

Stated Clerks

Shenango—Sherman A. Kirkbride, New Wilmington, Pa.

Ordinations

El Paso—Joseph C. Gray.
Fort Smith—A. F. Welsh.
Lima—Charles K. Alexander.
Milwaukee—Harvey E. Holt.

Resignations

California—Vacaville First: Henry A. Fisk.
Colorado—Denver Corona: A. M. Stone.
Illinois—Wabash and Pisgah: S. L. Roper.
Indiana—Union City: J. H. Miller.
Maryland—Elkton: Frank Malvern.
Missouri—West Plains: Halls Glanville.
New York—Dolgeville: Robert G. Jones.
Ohio—Lebanon Main Street: J. W. Willbanks; Pulteney: Thomas C. Bell.
Oregon—Dallas: E. W. Miles.
Pennsylvania—Hickory Mount Pleasant: V. W. McMillan; Conneaut Lake and Harmonsburg: Joshua K. MacDivitt.
Vermont—West Barnet: Stephen P. Brownell.
Washington—Interbay: W. J. Manifold; Rolling Bay: C. R. Rodman; Quilcene: E. N. Juist.
Wyoming—Laramie: W. A. Henricks.

Calls

Arkansas—Boonville: J. L. McAdams; Sulphur Springs: G. A. Wilson, accepts.
California—Corcoran: J. R. Skinner, Fresno, accepts; Oakland Union Street: Henry Quickenden, Boise, Idaho; Davis: Henry N. Wieman; Sacramento Fremont Park: Edward C. Philleo.
Illinois—Galum and Pinckneyville: R. G. Carnahan, accepts: Hanna City and Limestone: C. J. Grimes; Prospect: Lewis H. McCormick, accepts.
Indiana—Michigan City First: Willis L. Gelston, accepts; West Lebanon: Frank H. Heydenburk, accepts; Albion and York: E. F. Lilley, accepts.
Kansas—Coffeyville: H. M. Markley, accepts.
Missouri—St. Louis Carondelet: Frank B. Cleland, accepts; St. Joseph Calvary: E. J. Nickerson, accepts; Springfield Second: W. T. Salmon.
Nebraska—Valley: B. A. Fye, accepts; Wahoo: J. W. Larkin, accepts; Seward: C. M. Rohrbaugh, accepts.
New Jersey—Hamburg: Richard H. Hughes, accepts.
New Mexico—Santa Fe First: B. J. McCullough, accepts; Tucumcari First: P. B. Henderlite, accepts.
New York—Rochester Westminster: H. H. Barstow; Hartsdale Hitchcock Memorial: George H. Smyth, accepts; Unadilla: Frank W. Townsend, accepts; Whitesboro: C. F. Kittredge, accepts.
Ohio—Findlay Second: G. W. Applegate, accepts; St. Mary's: S. G. Dunning; Carrollton and Harlem Springs: K. J. Stewart, accepts; Mansfield: E. M. McMillan, accepts; New Richmond and Monroe: E. V. Belles; Georgetown: A. C. Powell, accepts; Sardinia and Arnheim: C. A. Wallace, accepts; Jackson: E. J. Lewis, accepts; Cumberland Buffalo: W. T. Paterson, accepts; Belmont: Thomas Melvin, accepts: Arkport: Frank E. Hoyt.
Oklahoma—Shaunee: J. Herron Miller, Union City, Ind., accepts.
Oregon: Wallowa: F. S. Shimian, accepts.
Pennsylvania—Ashley: T. M. Polk, Olyphant, accepts; Bradford: John Richelson, accepts; Beechwoods: Charles Cribbs, accepts; Summerville and West Millville: Edward Bate, accepts; Moravia: Howard J. Baumgartel; Slatington: James H. Boal, accepts; Upper Lehigh: James A. Donaghue, accepts; Ulster: T. W. Davies, accepts.
Texas—El Paso East: Kenneth Brown, accepts.
Washington—Quilcene: W. J. Manifold, accepts; Port Townsend: A. Raymond Eckles, accepts; Green Lake: A. A. J. Hogg, accepts; Woodland Park: J. W. Haman, Chippewa Falls, Wis., accepts; Stanwood: H. T. Murray, accepts.
Wisconsin—Portage: A. D. McKay, Mount Pleasant, Iowa, accepts.

Installations

Illinois—Ridgefarm: Otto L. Carr, April 24; Monticello: M. C. Long, April 22; Wellington: E. M. Snook, April 24; Danvers: E. B. Landis, April 18.
Indiana—Lima: Chester Irwin, May 8.
Massachusetts—Haverhill: Robert Atkinson, May 1.
New Jersey—Newark Park: Cyrus M. Creighton, April 24.
New York—Binghamton Immanuel: H. Lewis Smith, April 29.
Pennsylvania — Summerville: Edward Bate, April 28; New Castle First: Robert R. Little, May 8.

Vacant Pulpits

Illinois—Gardner; W. S. Allison clerk of session.
New York—Martinsburg and Glenfield, Turin, Inlet, Knoxboro, Cochran Memorial.
Pennsylvania—Olyphant.
Wisconsin—Lodi.

Supplies Arranged

Arkansas—Lamar Mulberry: E. E. Morris; Hartford: A. F. Welsh; Mansfield: R. M. Wimmell; Russellville: W. L. Hurie.
California—Redding First: Merchant S. Riddle; Elk Grove: J. M. Wylie; Los Molinos: Edward S. Farrand; Tehama: David M. Marshman.
Oklahoma—Dewey: Edward Warren.
Pennsylvania—Stevensville and Rushville: W. E. Lewis; Transfer: A. F. Alexander; Harlansburg: F. B. Shoemaker.
Washington—Clinton: C. A. Dolph.

Change of Address

Todd, Thomas N.—Lewisville to Otisco, Ind.
Edwards, Charles E.—Washington, Mo., to Peoria, Ill.
Little, Robert R.—Winchester, Ind., to New Castle, Pa.

Accessions

Illinois—Champaign McKinley Memorial, 57, April 27, M. E. Anderson.
Kansas—Derby First, 5, April 27, David Townley; Conway Springs, 12, R. E. Fleming; Topeka First, 42, April 6, S. S. Estey.
Minnesota—St. Paul Hamline, 27, March 23, B. S. Bates: Minneapolis Andrew, 25, April, T. W. Graham.
Nebraska—Fremont, 27, April 6, J. F. Reed.
New Jersey—Newark Sixth, 27, April 20, R. P. Littell.
New York—Gowanda, 18, March 23, J. C. Buchanan.
Pennsylvania—Wilkes-Barre Memorial, 285, April 20, A. J. Kerr; Philadelphia Hebron Memorial, 12, April 13, William McFarland.
Washington—Naches, 10, March 23, F. D. Healy; Tieton, 3, A. C. McIver; Hanford, 4, O. P. Devin; Oakesdale, 12, L. N. Williams; North Yakima, 41, O. M. Jones.

Churches Organized

Washington—Olger, 19, members; Utopia, 26 members.

Necrology

Parsons—Williamstown, Mass., Jan. 24, 1913, Eben B. Parsons, D. D., aged 78.

Obituary

Death notices will be inserted at the rate of one cent a word. PAYMENT MUST BE SENT WITH THE NOTICE. Those who ask their pastor to write such notices should be careful to hand him the money to forward with the copy.

MORROW—Margaret C. Morrow was born in 1843 on a farm in the fertile Sinking Valley near Tyrone, Pa. The early part of her life was spent on the farm until the spring of 1883, when she came with her brothers, John and Matthew Blair, to what was then the newly founded town of Keystone, Dakota Territory, about two miles northeast of the present site of Monango, N. D. Shortly afterward they located on homesteads of what is now known as the Morrow farm, which is located about six miles west of Monango.

In her early life she became an ardent Christian and united with the Presbyterian church of Sinking Valley. Thence she transferred her membership to the newly organized Presbyterian church at Keystone. She spent nearly thirty years on the farm, first living on her homestead until she had proved up. From that time she kept house with her brothers until the last two years. Since then she had been a resident of Monango, having given up the cares and worries of the farm for a little easier time and a well earned rest.

Of her Christian character too much cannot be said. Always a worker in and for the church and for its good and, since she was able, a liberal supporter of the church in all its branches. Of the family originally there were six brothers and five sisters. One brother, William, went on before. The deceased and her brother John, as has been stated before, have for thirty years been residents of North Dakota. The remaining sisters and one brother have never left the vicinity of the old home. One brother, Blair, was in North Dakota for many years but returned to make his home at the old homestead several years ago.

Miss Morrow passed away at her home in Monango, Wednesday morning, Feb. 26. A large concourse of friends gathered for the funeral service, which was conducted by Rev. Morton W. Merrell, her pastor in Monango; then her brother John accompanied her remains to Arch Springs, Blair county, Pa. Funeral services were also held at the old homestead near Arch Springs, Rev. L. M. Lewis officiating, and the body was laid to rest in the Arch Springs cemetery.

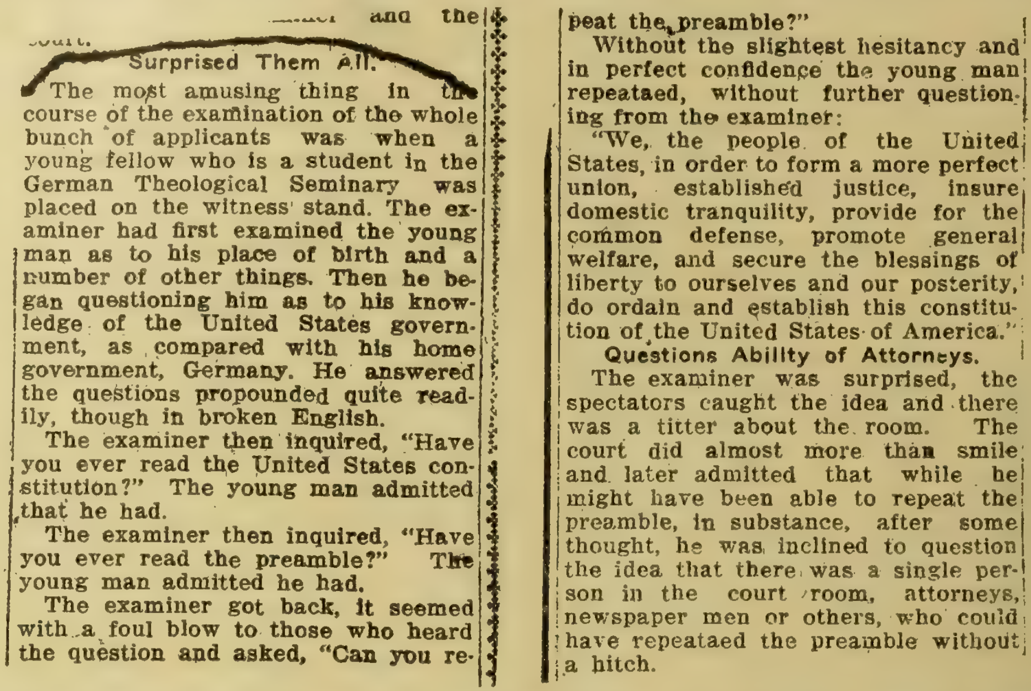
There survive to mourn her loss five brothers—Robert, Matthew B., Alexander C., Joseph of Sinking Valley, and John of Monango; four sisters—Mary E., Anna M., Nancy and S. Alice, all of Sinking Valley. A host of friends gained in her childhood home, also in her home in Monango, join with the bereaved in their sorrow.

"Tis hard to take the burden up,
Since she has laid it down;
She brightened all the joy of life,
She softened every frown;
But oh, 'tis good think of her
When we are troubled sore;
Thanks be to God that she has been,
Though she is here no more!

"More homelike seems the vast unknown.
Since she has entered there;
To follow her were not so hard,
Wherever she may fare;
She cannot be where God is not,
On any sea or shore;
Whate'er betides, Thy love abides,
Our God forever more."

Dubuque's Young Man Met the Citizenship Test

A short time ago applicants for United States citizenship were examined in Judge Bronson's court at Dubuque. Among them was a student at Dubuque German College and Seminary. He surprised the court by the fullness of his answers and stirred the reporter for the Telegraph-Herald to write over half a column about the incident. Here it is:



and the

Surprised Them All.

The most amusing thing in the course of the examination of the whole bunch of applicants was when a young fellow who is a student in the German Theological Seminary was placed on the witness stand. The examiner had first examined the young man as to his place of birth and a number of other things. Then he began questioning him as to his knowledge of the United States government, as compared with his home government, Germany. He answered the questions propounded quite readily, though in broken English.

The examiner then inquired, "Have you ever read the United States constitution?" The young man admitted that he had.

The examiner then inquired, "Have you ever read the preamble?" The young man admitted he had.

The examiner got back, it seemed with a foul blow to those who heard the question and asked, "Can you repeat the preamble?"

Without the slightest hesitancy and in perfect confidence the young man repeataed, without further questioning from the examiner:

"We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, established justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this constitution of the United States of America."

Questions Ability of Attorneys.

The examiner was surprised, the spectators caught the idea and there was a titter about the room. The court did almost more than smile and later admitted that while he might have been able to repeat the preamble, in substance, after some thought, he was inclined to question the idea that there was a single person in the court room, attorneys, newspaper men or others, who could have repeataed the preamble without a hitch.

This new made American is only one of scores of young men whom we are training to speak the language and adopt the customs of their new home. They are studying with us in order to be preachers and leaders of their countrymen in the United States. Some of them heard of our institution in their homes across the sea and came to Dubuque confident that they could find work to support themselves. The story of what the graduates of the institution have been able to do is worth hearing. May we tell you something of it? Send us word—a postal is sufficient—that you are interested in this work. Dubuque German College and Seminary, Dr. C. M. Steffens, President, Dubuque, Iowa

---

Sparks Marion E tjan14
1205 Springfield av

S[illegible] after giving the ma[illegible]urer electricity, steam and machine[illegible] with which to make things, contributed just one factor to help sell them—

Advertising Art

Illustrations and engravings that picture his wares in a life-like manner, introduce them to the public and create sales and profits for the advertiser.

Barnes-Crosby Company makes illustrations, designs, commercial photographs, zinc etchings, wood cuts, electrotypes, photogravures and color plates in two or more colors, all of the highest quality, charged with selling power and persuasiveness.

Day and Night Service

Barnes-Crosby Company

E. W. HOUSER, President

Artists :: Engravers :: Catalog Plate Makers

Manufacturing Engraving Plants:

Madison and Franklin Streets, Chicago
Eleventh and Locust Streets, St. Louis
Branch Offices in Fifteen Principal Cities

If you ever published a catalog, booklet or folder or if you intend to do so some day, send for our free folder, entitled "Cover Designs." It throws an entirely new light on a troublesome subject.

An American Flag

FREE to
CONTINENT READERS

YOU WILL want a flag for Memorial Day and Fourth of July, and all other patriotic occasions. In no more favorable manner can your love of country be expressed than by unfurling our silent but impressive emblem of patriotism, "OLD GLORY," from your home, church, club or business house.

SHOW YOUR COLORS

In sympathy with the effort for quiet and profitable patriotism THE CONTINENT has arranged a plan with the American Flag Company whereby a 4 by 6 fast color American flag may be sent CONTINENT readers without cost. All that is necessary is for any present subscriber either to pay for the paper for a new subscriber for one year at the regular price of $2.50, or secure from some friend who is not a subscriber $2.50 for a full year's subscription. The flag will be sent postpaid at once to either the old subscriber or the new subscriber.

If for any reason you do not care to pay for a new subscription yourself, and are unable to secure one from among your Presbyterian associates, we will mail the flag to you postpaid upon receipt of $1. Send us your order at once.

Address THE CONTINENT

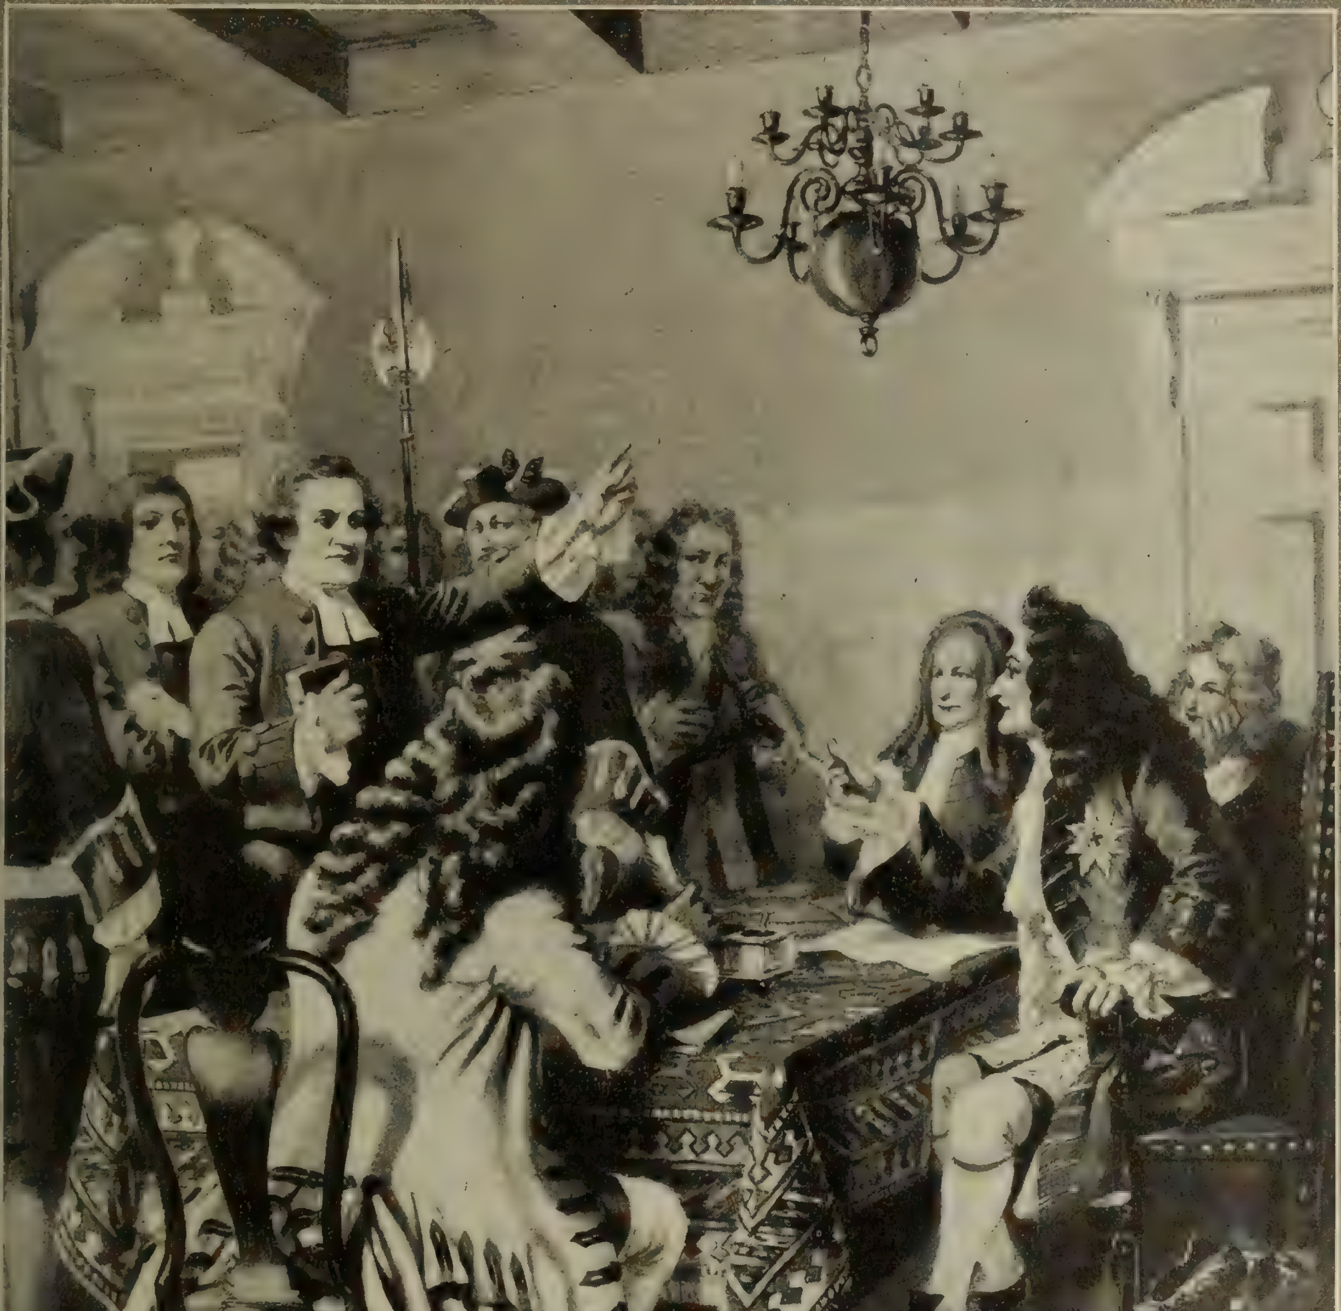
156 5th Ave., New York 509 So. Wabash Ave., Chicago

The CONTINENT



Francis Makemie's Plea for Religious Liberty

MAY FIFTEEN—NINETEEN THIRTEEN

NEW HODDER & STOUGHTON BOOKS

THE PRINCIPLES OF AUTHORITY

In Relation to Certainty, Sanctity and Society

By P. T. FORSYTH, M.A., D.D., Principal of Hackney College. The authority of religion goes to the foundations of Society. Principal Forsyth discusses the social revolution now in progress in its relation to God and human destiny. Octavo. Net $2 50

THE SPIRITUAL INTERPRETATION OF NATURE

By PROF. JAMES Y. SIMPSON, D.Sc., F.R.S.E. In this volume, unequaled since Drummond's "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," Prof. Simpson has shown how, with our growing knowledge, Science and Religion are daily drawing together, harmonizing, and increasingly supporting and confirming one another. Large 12mo. Net $1.50

GREAT IDEAS OF RELIGION

By THE REV. J. G. SIMPSON, D.D., Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral. The great truths of Christian Religion in the medium of contemporary thought by one to whom the Guardian gives "What few deserve nowadays—the title of 'a great' preacher." 12mo. Net $1.50

THOUGHTS OF THINGS ETERNAL

A Book of Short Studies in Life Here and Hereafter. A new edition of "Ephemera Eternitatis"

By THE REV. JOHN KELMAN, D.D. The steady purpose of this volume is to build up the faith and loyalty of the Christian to his vision throughout the year. 12mo, Net $1 50

THE ESSENTIALS OF CHRISTIAN BELIEF

By DAVID FYFFE. M.A. Here are stated the vital, incontrovertible elements of Christian belief attested in modern experience. 12mo. Net $1.25

THE WEAPONS OF OUR WARFARE

By THE REV. J. A. HUTTON, M.A., Author of "The Winds of God." The history of the great war between Christianity and the world, and the victory of Christianity. 12mo. Net $0.75

THE AFTERGLOW OF GOD

By THE REV. G. H. MORRISON, M.A., author of "The Unlighted Lustre," etc. The great aim of this book is to attract the attention of that vast class of people who think habitually of religion as a mystery beyond their comprehension. 12mo. Net $1.35

Latest Books on Missions

THINKING BLACK: Twenty-Two Years Without a Break in the Long Grass of Central Africa.

By D. CRAWFORD, F. R. G. S. With many illustrations and maps.

8vo. Net $2.00

An extraordinary book. Mr. Crawford literally steeped himself in the black life in the long grass of Central Africa in order to interpret the black mind to the white.

LOTUS BUDS

By AMY WILSON-CARMICHAEL. With 50 superb illustrations. New Popular Price Edition 8vo. Net $2.00

A truly wonderful story of Missionary work among the Temple children of India. It is a call of the child-life of one great country to the child-love of another.

NEW THRILLS IN OLD CHINA

By CHARLOTTE E. HAWES, Presbyterian Missionary, Wei Hsien, Shantung, China. Illustrated. 12mo. Net $1.25

A stirring story of missionary perseverance and sacrifice.

A CATALOG OF IMPORTANT NEW BOOKS

Our new books are now in the hands of your denominational publishing house, from whom also may be obtained our NEW BOOK BULLETIN, containing full descriptions of a really remarkable list of books. Or we will promptly send the list upon request.

GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY, 38 West 32nd Street, NEW YORK
PUBLISHERS IN AMERICA FOR HODDER & STOUGHTON

Equipment for Leadership

MESSAGES OF THE MEN AND RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT

SEVEN VOLUMES $4.00 CARRIAGE COLLECT

1. Congress Addresses
2. Social Service
3. Bible Study-Evangelism
4. Christian Unity-Missions
5. Boys' Work
6. Rural Church
7. Church and the Press

The crowning achievement of the Men and Religion Movement. Indispensable to ministers and laymen.

(The volumes on "Social Service," "Bible Study," "Boys' Work," "Rural Church" and "The Church and the Press" may be obtained separately at $1.00 each postpaid.)

THE MEN AND RELIGION LIBRARY

ELEVEN VOLUMES $5.00 CARRIAGE COLLECT

1. The Message and Program
2. Individual Work for Individuals—Trumbull
3. Recruiting for Christ—Stone
4. The Bible in the World of Today—Barbour
5. The Teaching of Bible Classes—See
6. Misery and Its Causes—Devine
7. Christianity and the Social Crisis—Rauschenbusch
8. Boy Life and Self-Government—Fiske
9. Boy Training—Alexander
10. The Why and How of Foreign Missions—Brown
11. The Decisive Hour of Christian Missions—Mott

Chosen by experts, guided by the evident preference of the intelligent Christian public.

THE MEN AND RELIGION SERIES

TWENTY-ONE VOLUMES 50c PER COPY

(Postage 10c extra on volumes starred.)

*The Marks of a Man—Speer
*The Principles of Jesus—Speer
True Manhood—Clarke
*The Ideal Life—Drummond
Passion for Souls—Jowett
The Decisive Hour of Christian Missions—Mott
*Christianity and the Social Crisis—Rauschenbusch
The Life That Is Easy—Horne
The Relationships of Life—Horne
Individual Work for Individuals—Trumbull
*Twice Born Men—Begbie
Methods of Bible Study—Thomas
*The Bible, Its Origin and Nature—Dods
The Art of Life—Meyer
Religion for Men—Hobart
Youth and Life—Meyer and Others
Life of General Booth—Bateman
*The Gospel of the Second Chance—Holden
*David Livingstone—Horne
*The Life of Sir George Williams—Williams
*Life Story of Henry Clay Trumbull—Howard

Send for descriptive Catalogue

THE BIBLE AND THE SPADE Ill. Cloth $1.00

EDGAR J. BANKS, Ph.D., Explorer and Orientalist

Popular descriptions of those discoveries which have shed a direct and wonderful light on the Bible. Just Published.

LEADERSHIP OF BIBLE STUDY GROUPS Cloth $0.50

HERMAN HARRELL HORNE, Ph. D., New York University

Peculiarly rich in practical suggestion for the training of leaders.

MAKING RELIGION EFFICIENT Cloth $1.00

CLARENCE A. BARBOUR, D.D., Editor

In this volume the experienced leaders of the Men and Religion campaigns put their best messages before the public. (The Bible Study Chapter and Bibliography by F. S. Goodman are issued separately under the title of "Effective Bible Study" Cloth $0.25.)

THE FAMILY AND SOCIAL WORK Cloth $0.60

EDWARD T. DEVINE, Ph. D., Director, New York School of Philanthropy

"A skillful interweaving of academic interests with the social ideal, the religious motive and the practical purpose."—The Survey.

ENGAGEMENT AND MARRIAGE (Sex Education Series) Boards $0.25

ORRIN G. COCKS, B. D., Secretary, Laity League for Social Service

A straightforward discussion of all that marriage involves. (Send for list of other titles in this series).

CHALLENGE OF THE COUNTRY Cloth $0.75

PROF. G. WALTER FISKE, Oberlin College

"A vital, comprehensive and adequate book."—Prof. E. A. Ross, University of Wisconsin.
"Suggestions to Leaders," a pamphlet guide to above, price $0.05.

COUNTRY CHURCH AND COMMUNITY COOPERATION Cloth $1.00

This volume presents the fruitful results of a searching investigation pursued by a specially appointed commission.

THE SOCIAL PROGRAM OF THE LORD'S PRAYER Boards $0.40

I. J. LANSING

A unique and eminently practical interpretation of the Lord's Prayer as a program of social service.

Important Volumes for Early Publication

Sunday School and the Teens. Edited by J. L. ALEXANDER.
City Church and Its Social Mission. A. W. TRAWICK.
Use of the Bible Among Schoolboys. (Schoolmasters' Conference.)

YOUR NEAREST BOOKSELLER WILL SUPPLY YOU

ASSOCIATION PRESS ::

NEW YORK: 124 East 28th Street
LONDON: Paternoster Row, E. C.

Subscription Terms—The subscription price of THE CONTINENT is $2.50 per year payable in advance.

Postage is prepaid on all subscriptions in the United States, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Guam, Porto Rico, Canal Zone, Cuba and Mexico.

Foreign Postage—For Canada, 50 cents should be added for postage, and for all other countries in the Postal Union $1.10 should be added for postage.

Remittances should be sent by draft on Chicago or New York, Express or P. O. money orders payable to THE CONTINENT. If personal check is sent, 10 cents must be added for collection.

THE CONTINENT

Continuing THE INTERIOR (Established 1870) and THE WESTMINSTER (Established 1904)
PUBLISHED WEEKLY

THE MCCORMICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Proprietors
OLIVER R. WILLIAMSON, Publisher

CHICAGO
509 South Wabash Avenue

NEW-YORK CITY
Presbyterian Building, 156 5th Avenue

PHILADELPHIA
Witherspoon Building

Entered as second-class matter October 6, 1910, at the post office at Chicago, Illinois, under the act of March 3, 1879. Copyright, 1913, by the McCormick Publishing Company.

Acknowledgments—Within two weeke the date following name on "yellow label" will show to the first of what month subcription has been paid. No other receipt is given unless stamp is sent.

Change of Address—Kindly send us both old and new address a week previous to the date of the desired change.

Discontinuances—No subscription is dropped without a definite request from the subscriber; otherwise it is assumed that he wishes to continue.

Manuscripts—The Continent does not accept responsibility for damage or loss of manuscripts sent to it for consideration.

Advertising rates on application.

IN THIS ISSUE:

THURSDAY, MAY 15, 1913

THE AMPLER OBJECTIVE 665
EDITORIAL—
  Measuring with a Long Line.......... 668
  Good Steps in the Moral Education Problem 668
  The Crisis in American Tract Affairs... 668
THE WORLD—
  New Tariff Bill Passes the House..... 666
RELIGIOUS WORLD—
  Retirement of a Great Figure in Theology (with Portrait)............... 667
WORLD'S AND GOD'S WISE MAN ....John Henry Jowett 670
PAN-PRESBYTERIANSIM FORECASTS FOR ATLANTA 671
IN THE FOOTSTEPS OF FRANCIS MAKEMIE (with Illustrations)....William T. Ellis 672
WHERE PRESBYTERIANISM IS CENTERING (with Illustrations).................... 676
THE HOME COUNCIL—For a Sunny Day ....Frances Harmer 678
  Warmth for Sabbath...Frances M. Fox 678
YOUNG AMERICA—The Story the Picture Told Me: Prize Story Contest. Harlan Ball, Harry L. Bird, Jr., Groves Kilbourn, Helen Alford, Rosa S. Lehners 679
BRADFORD HORTON, MAN. Chapter XXVIII. —Continued........Richard S. Holmes 680
THE SUNDAY SCHOOL ....J. L. Scott, H. D. Jenkins 681
DEVOTIONAL SERVICE........E. A. Wicher 682
YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE......W. T. Ellis 682
MISSIONARY WORK (with Illustration).... 685
THE OPEN HEARTH—
  A Rejoinder from Dr. Fox............ 686
  The Lord's Prayer Sufficient........... 686
  Good Work with Graded Lessons...... 686
NEWS FROM RELIGIOUS FIELD—Beginning 686
FINANCIAL SITUATION...................... 697

Around the Shop

The Around-the-Shop Man would be disloyal to his life training if he did not stand, in season and out, for good reading matter and plenty of it. He would be out of place in the Continent family if he were not honest in assuming such an attitude.

Surely the printing press never was so busy as it is in this time, and the world was never so receptive to its products. By the ingenious arrangement through which the venders of life's necessities stand a part of the expense in order to bring their wares to the reader's attention, practically all periodicals are provided at a price less than actual cost. The publications are outwardly attractive, and the temptation is to load up the magazine rack until the housewife almost wonders if she is not maintaining a paper warehouse.

This is not meant to be an argument against the purchase of magazines. Any home is better for its well read copies of The Century, Scribner's, The Youth's Companion and others that might be named. It is meant as a plea for some discrimination. The cost is the least factor; one's reading opportunities are too precious not to be properly conserved. Is hit-or-miss periodical reading worth while? What elements should be represented? These are questions one well may insist on—and there is some reading matter that may also be considered from the negative point of view.

—

We liked this expression from a woman subscriber in Arizona:

> "The Continent is the most satisfying periodical I have ever taken. For a few months there has been no other available reading matter, yet I feel in touch with all good things."

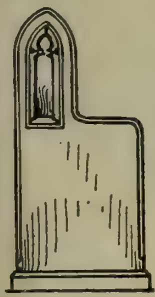
Ponder that, and ask yourself if it doesn't have some significance to you—and to your neighbor. Does that Presbyterian neighbor of yours know about The Continent?

Up-to-Date Sunday-School Equipment



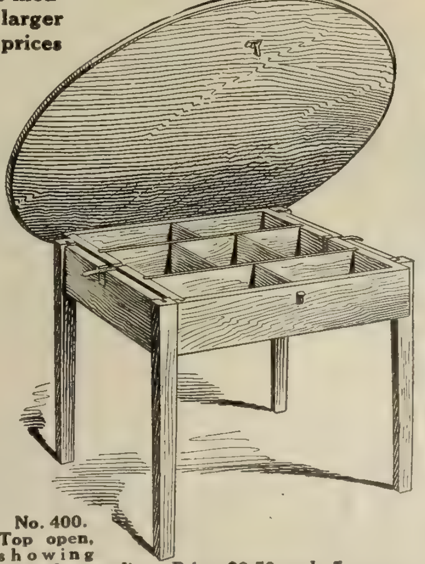
WE HAVE HAD YEARS OF SUCCESSFUL EXPERIENCE in manufacturing and furnishing church and Sunday-School furniture. Pastors and building committees have been good enough to tell us that we have pleased them by the work that we have done. In order that the equipment may harmonize with the architectural treatment of the building, we will welcome the opportunity to work out special plans or designs for pulpit furniture, seating and other fittings. If your building committee will give us opportunity to confer with them about their needs in this way, we are confident we can please by the suggestion made, and that the equipment when completed will be pleasing to all. We guarantee to execute work in plain artistic fashion at the minimum of cost for the modest chapel, as well as more elaborate work for the larger city church. We are confident that you will find our prices reasonable where quality and service are considered.

Sunday-School
Chairs and Tables for All Departments

The top is built up of three plies of wood. The top ply is oak and the lower ply is soft wood. The top made like this is practically unbreakable. It is 36 inches in diameter, and from 18 to 28 inches in height. It is hinged and opens at right angles with the table. The soft wood on the under side affords an excellent place to tack up class records, and displaying them before the class.

The space under the top is subdivided into seven spaces, each one large enough to hold hymnals or Bibles. The divisions run up to the top, so that in moving the table around the contents will not be mixed.

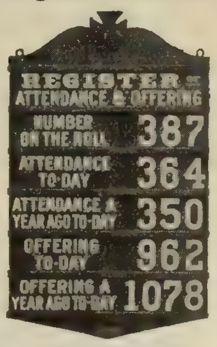
Write for designs and prices. Send for our Catalog. Furniture for Church and Sunday-School.



No. 400. Top open, showing space for supplies. Price, $8.50 each; 5 or more, less 5%; 10 or more, less 10%. Delivery prepaid anywhere east of the Mississippi.

Oak Tables, without compartment, round or hexagonal, 18 to 28 inches, $5.00. Delivery prepaid anywhere east of the Mississippi.

Register Boards



REGISTER OF ATTENDANCE & OFFERING
NUMBER ON THE ROLL 387
ATTENDANCE TO-DAY 364
ATTENDANCE A YEAR AGO TO-DAY 350
OFFERING TO-DAY 962
OFFERING A YEAR AGO TO-DAY 1078

No. 90A. Light Oak.
No. 90D. Dark Oak.
Size, 31½ x 19½ inches.
¾-inch thick.

These Register Boards are made of oak, light or dark wood. Highly grained and finished. The best boards on the market at the price. So arranged that cards and numbers can be readily withdrawn and the board used for general announcements. Price, complete, including slides and numerals, $3.00. Delivery extra.

Hymn Boards

Made of light or golden quartered oak, light or dark wood. Size, 17x34½ inches; about one inch thick. Price, complete, including words Psalter, Sel., Hymns, and four sets of numerals; $5.00 to $28.00. Delivery prepaid.

Single Portable and Folding Chairs, all Heights and designs. Price, $7.50 to $35.00 a dozen.

Headquarters for
The Conquest Flag
The Christian Flag, and Conquest Supplies

New York, 156 Fifth Avenue
Chicago, 509 S. Wabash Ave.
St. Louis, 505 N. Seventh St.
San Francisco, 400 Sutter St.

The Westminster Press
Headquarters: PHILADELPHIA, Witherspoon Bldg.

Nashville, 415 Church Street
Pittsburgh, 204 Fulton Bldg.
Cincinnati, 420 Elm Street

Headquarters for
The Pocket Testament
League and Personal
Workers' Testaments

STERLING

The Note of Distinction

"Beauty made the bride of Use"

It is hardly worth while to buy silverware that may cause a guest to question the taste of his hostess, or the recipient of a gift to wonder whether the giver has been "shopping."

It is always safe to purchase Gorham Silverware, because the distinctive and sustained design betokens its artistic merit and because the Gorham trade-mark assures its quality.

The best shops sell it. The others cannot get it to sell.

Leading jewelers everywhere supply this perfect product which always bears this trade-mark

STERLING

COPYRIGHT 1913

THE GORHAM CO.
SILVERSMITHS
NEW YORK

GORHAM SILVER POLISH - THE BEST FOR CLEANING SILVER

THE CONTINENT

CONTINUING THE INTERIOR (ESTABLISHED 1870) AND THE WESTMINSTER (ESTABLISHED 1904)

VOLUME 44, NO. 20 MAY 15, 1913 WHOLE NO. 2242

Nolan R. Best, Editor—156 Fifth Avenue, New York. Oliver R. Williamson, Publisher—509 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. William T. Ellis, Editor Afield—Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia. The McCormick Publishing Company, Proprietors

The Ampler Objective

THE ASSEMBLAGE of Presbyterians gathered today at Atlanta, the beautiful and hospitable capital of the state of Georgia, is without dispute the largest and weightiest convocation ever drawn together anywhere in America under the formal auspices of organized Presbyterianism. The interesting importance of the occasion, therefore, cannot miss impressing church men of all names throughout the country as well as those of Presbyterian relation present in Atlanta.

But it will not satisfy conscientious Christian thinking to look idly on the occurrence as only a flitting picture flashed on the screen in a show of current happenings, and pleasant to see because of genial faces photographed in it.

Of an event so considerable a serious world demands some profounder meaning. The unique circumstance of four separate Presbyterian bodies meeting simultaneously in one city, and commingling every day not only in close personal fraternity but in many public demonstrations of their common feeling and purposes, must suggest instinctively, both to those in attendance there and those onlooking from a distance, the hope that in some aspect of lasting influence the occasion shall prove as significant as it is spectacular.

Here is a tremendous concentration, individually and representatively, of potential religious force, compactly available for application to American moral and spiritual problems. It is not tolerable to contemplate such a strategic condition being created and then passing away without producing some effect commensurate with the possibilities of power involved in it.

* * *

Mere denominational promotion—vainglorious exaltation of the name Presbyterian—will not meet the measure of this demand. The denominations included in the Atlanta quadrilateral have been doing well enough denominationally as they went their separate roads to separate seats for their respective annual councils. To change their courses and converge them in imposing array at a common center ought to be for greater purposes than they have singly accomplished hitherto—for more than their own advancement, for other than their own glory.

It has been rather usual in the talk of Presbyterian church men to say: "We must conserve Presbyterian interests!" But as light brightens, there are found to be no Presbyterian interests. All that was rightful among what seemed such is discovered to belong to the interests of the Kingdom of God. And there is nothing else.

Hence it is not the interests of Presbyterianism but the interests of God and humanity that are to be talked of and planned for and prayed about at Atlanta, and held up to challenge the Christian forces represented there.

* * *

It is not to be expected, of course, in an atmosphere where so many meet together under the Presbyterian name, that grateful allusion to the common history and heritages of Presbyterians will be reserved or scanty. The Presbyterian past must be remembered with thankful honor. But let none who thus speak Presbyterianly suppose that with such speech alone they strike a keynote high enough to dominate the fourfold symphony of this fellowship of churches.

The commanding overtone must be ampler than all this—not pride or boastfulness for Presbyterianism, but this searching question trying out what manner of Christians these Presbyterians are:

What can the Presbyterian churches do to make Christ's religion in America more vital, more unselfish, more efficient, more unified on the one supreme object of persuading all men to acknowledge the Master of the churches as the King of their lives?

In a word, the problem is, How can Presbyterianism give itself out more self-sacrificingly and self-forgetfully for the help of humanity?

May every commissioner, every officer, every speaker, in the sessions of legislation as in the sessions of joint fellowship, cherish bigger than all else in his heart this transcendent purpose of larger spiritual service to mankind by and through all the churches for which the Atlanta event stands.

May no overbusy absorption in the mechanics of church management crowd from the mind and heart of any Presbyterian, for any moment of all the long week while the Assemblies are together at Atlanta, the passionate desire to make Presbyterianism more efficient in bringing the living Christ to needy man.

And may the Spirit of God enforce and fulfill that great objective.

The World

New Tariff Bill Passes the House

The Underwood tariff bill was passed by the house of representatives last Thursday by vote of 281 to 139. Practically all the Democrats voted "aye" and the Republicans and Progressives voted "no." The bill is regarded as an earnest attempt by President Wilson and his followers in Congress to fulfill the pledges of the party platform, and its progress thus far has been expeditious. Few changes have been made in it, and its friends are well satisfied.

From the friendly house with its overwhelming Democratic majority the bill has gone to the senate, with a nominal Democratic majority of six, but two of the six (the Louisiana senators) are expected to oppose the bill because of the sugar schedule. Free wool may perhaps draw away one or two more, but leading Democrats of the senate assert that the bill will go through all its stages within two or three months substantially unchanged. If this proves true it will make a history in marked contrast to the fate of the Democratic tariff bill passed in President Cleveland's first term, which was so badly butchered by the senate that Mr. Cleveland felt compelled to repudiate it utterly.

President Wilson has not been unmindful of, though apparently not greatly disturbed by, the protests against the pending tariff bill made by some of the manufacturers of the country. He has directed the secretary of commerce, Mr. Redfield, to make an investigation to ascertain the truth or falsity of the claims that their business will be ruined if the proposed schedules become law. The first inquiry ordered is limited to pottery manufacturing, where the "outcry" is described as loud and persistent. Secretary Redfield's report may be such that the President will suggest changes in the pottery rates, though obviously the investigation will have to be brief and somewhat superficial. President Wilson's order is taken as further proof of the need of an expert, nonpartisan tariff board or commission. This idea has been strongly advocated by the Progressives in Congress.

* * *

For Banking and Currency Reform

While the senate is wrestling with the tariff bill President Wilson has suggested to Mr. Underwood that the house take up the currency question—by many persons considered fully as urgent as the tariff. The taxation of imports has been an issue before the American people ever since civil war days, so that any man of average information can make at least a pretense of understanding it, but currency reform has thus far been left largely to bankers and students of finance. Congress, and the nation as well, undoubtedly need to be educated beyond the point of mere criticism of the present antiquated currency system and beyond the point of hostility to the Aldrich plan merely because the name of the former Rhode Island senator is attached to it.

Representative Glass of Virginia, chairman of the house banking and currency committee, has a bill which retains some of the Aldrich features, with new provisions intended to restrict the control of the system by the banks and allowing greater governmental supervision. A division of the country into fifteen districts with a central reserve and discount bank for each district is proposed. Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo is reputed to be a joint author of the bill.

* * *

Century of Peace Between English-Speaking Peoples

Some notable visitors with a notable mission are in this country in the persons of the international peace conferees, who are arranging for fitting celebration and commemoration of the century of peace between England and America, which dates from the signing of the treaty of Ghent in 1814. The delegation is headed by Lord Weardale, formerly known as the Hon. Philip Stanhope. He is president of the Interparliamentary Union, a body representing twenty-one parliaments. Besides the distinguished visitors England also has a large committee at home interested in promoting the celebration.

Lord Weardale in his first interview on arriving took pains to say that the object of the celebration was not to bind the United States and Great Britain together to the exclusion of other nations, but to show the world the beneficent effects of peace in the hope that other nations would follow the Anglo-Saxon example. This point was emphasized later by Andrew Carnegie and Professor George F. Peabody in replying to Professor Hugo Munsterberg, who hinted that there were too many non-English people who regarded the movement as a possible forerunner of an alliance between England and America, antagonistic to Germany.

William Jennings Bryan made a striking address Friday night at a dinner given the foreign visitors in New York. He directed attention to the new peace plan for national agreements that there shall be no war until after investigation and report by an international tribunal. The idea had been credited to the secretary of state, but he gave the honor for it to President Wilson. Mr. Bryan said he saw three forces at work throughout the world for peace—a growing intelligence, an increasing understanding of the doctrine of brotherhood and a growing power of the people to control their destinies through the control of their government.

* * *

President Huerta Faces Many Difficulties

The Mexican situation has not been clearing up as anticipated after the Huerta-Diaz combination had killed or driven from the country President Madero and his relatives. President Huerta, according to the Mexican consul general in New York City, is sparing no effort "to obtain the patriotic end of restoring peace," and promises that peace within a short time. But Mexico will not be "pacified" by Huerta if General Carranza and his soldiers can help it. Carranza has been active in the northern tier of states and is moving southward to hem in the capital. The men opposing Huerta call themselves constitutionalists, not revolutionists, and appear to be growing more formidable daily.

Last week General Carranza issued a manifesto saying that upon his capture of Mexico City he would hang President Huerta, Generals Diaz, Blanquet, Mondragon, Granados and Reyes, and Mr. de la Barra, minister of foreign affairs, on the ground that they participated in the Madero assassination conspiracy. It is probable that this sort of talk did not disturb the Huerta regime nearly so much as the later action of a confidential agent of the constitutionalists in cabling to French and British bankers cautioning them not to lend money to the de facto government. The Huerta administration is reported to be in dire need of funds, and was on the point of effecting a foreign loan of $75,000,000 secured by customs receipts.

Great Britain has officially recognized the Huerta government, recognition having been obtained or influenced by Lord Cowdray, who has immense business interests in Mexico under the name of Pierson and Sons. President Huerta made a forceful request for recognition by the United States in conversation with H. L. Wilson, the American ambassador, recently, and later asked Washington for the same thing. However, opinion at the capital, as elsewhere in America, is adverse to the existing Mexican government because it rests upon a foundation of blood instead of votes. If the moral test is to be strictly applied to Mexico it will mean that Uncle Sam's right hand of fellowship will not be extended until after the next popular election, now tentatively set, after some juggling, for October 26.

* * *

Naturalization for Japanese Now Considered

Japan's injured dignity is troubling President Wilson and Secretary Bryan and other people outside of California. The formal protest of the Japanese government against the antialien land ownership law of the state was presented at Washington last week by Viscount Chinda, the Japanese ambassador, and was considered by the cabinet. In the Japanese note, which is said to be polite but positive, the claim is made that the legislation contravenes the treat of 1911, is discriminatory against Japanese and therefore in violatio of the rule of equal treatment for the citizens of the two nations It is not expected that a reply will be made at once. The seriousnes with which the Japanese view the California issue is reported to b a revelation to President Wilson and his advisers.

One solution of the difficulty, seriously proposed in the absenc of a veto by Governor Hiram Johnson, is the enactment of federal law admitting Japanese to citizenship. If the Presiden were to recommend this to Congress it would show Japan tha there was no objection to its citizens on the part of the highes American authority. And as Japan has been withholding passport from laborers desiring to go to the United States it is not likely tha the Nipponese population of California would be greatly increase

Another Japanese baiting bill was passed by one chamber of th California legislature last week. It seeks to prohibit Japanese fro owning or having in their possession shotguns or rifles, or fro hunting. Another bill proposed would impose an exorbitant l cense upon Japanese fishermen. And just when an effort is bein made in the city of Washington to conciliate Japan, in the state o Washington a Hindu who applied for naturalization was grante citizenship at Seattle on the theory that he is a free white perso "belonging to the Aryan race"—which may be true, ethnologicall but friends of the Japanese are pointing out that the Hindus are probably much less desirable citizens than the Japanese.

* *

Prison for New York Police Inspectors

New York City has had encouraging success in discovering and convicting its police "grafters." The first conviction, a month ago, was of Thomas F. Robinson, a henchman of Police Inspector Sweeney in the Harlem district, and last week Sweeney and three other inspectors—Murtha, Hussey and Thompson—were found guilty of conspiring to defeat justice and sentenced to a year in the penitentiary and fined $500 each, the maximum penalty for the offense. The prisoners did not appeal, presumably because District Attorney Whitman holds over their heads nineteen indictments for bribery. Mr. Whitman is said to consider the four convictions the most important he had obtained in connection with the exposure of the connection of the police and "protected" vice and crime, which followed the public murder of the gambler Rosenthal last year by four "gunmen" hired by Police Lieutenant Becker.

The trial showed something of the organized system by which graft was collected by patrolmen and divided among the high officials of the police department. It failed to reveal what part of the corrupt funds was passed on to "men higher up" outside the department. But the boast that "the system" was invulnerable has been shown to be as false as the assumption that crime is more powerful than law and order. And with the promised change in municipal administration New York has a chance further to eradicate graft and corruption in the police service.

* *

Friedmann Tuberculosis Cure Condemned

Dr. F. F. Friedmann's much-heralded tuberculosis serum was declared by the public health service of the government "not to justify that confidence in the remedy which has been inspired by widespread publicity." The report was presented last Friday at a meeting of the national tuberculosis organization in Washington, and the association immediately adopted resolutions to the effect that no specific cure for the white plague has yet been discovered, and urging the public to continue "present well tried agencies."

Notwithstanding failures, physicians and scientists continue to search for a tuberculosis specific. It was recently announced in London that Dr. Frederick Mehnarto, a bacteriologist who worked with Dr. Koch in Africa on the deadly "sleeping sickness," was experimenting successfully with a serum which counteracted the presence of micro-organisms in the blood, including tuberculosis and persistent anæmia. The remedy has been named contra-toxin, and is claimed to be harmless and stimulating.

Hope for the future is held out through the million dollar gift of Henry Phipps of New York to the University of Pennsylvania for an institute at Philadelphia for the study and prevention of tuberculosis among the poor. The institute was dedicated on Saturday with elaborate ceremonies.

* *

esting with a Serious Subject—Albania

While the Balkan situation is grave, with the allies at swords' points with each other, and Austria and Russia still suspicious, yet from the American point of view the most interesting piece of late News from the Near East had a decidedly humorous aspect. Some clever newspaper correspondent—perhaps it took more than one to hatch the idea—conceived the fancy of nominating Theodore Roosevelt for king of Albania. Ismail Kemal, leader of a delegation from the new buffer state, is in London trying to find a ruler for his troubled people, the French Duke of Montpensier and others having declined or been found not available. To Kemal the correspondents repaired and with due solemnity proposed the statesman from Oyster Bay for the kingship. Kemal and his fellow delegates were surprised and delighted, and questioned only whether the colonel were wealthy enough to meet their requirements. The correspondents promptly met this difficulty with the pat suggestion that certain persons in the United States would be indeed glad to subsidize the colonel to stay in Albania a long, long time.

* *

—Congressman H. O. Young did a magnanimous act last Saturday when he announced from the floor of the house that he would resign his seat in favor of W. J. Macdonald, his opponent at the last election, as he was convinced Macdonald has received more votes than he. The authorities had thrown out 458 votes and given Mr. Young a clear legal title, but he felt that morally he was not entitled to the advantage thus gained.

Religious World

Retirement of a Great Figure in Theology

The resignation of Dr. Patton from the presidency of Princeton Theological Seminary at the commencement season last week was not a surprise to any in position to have heard current ecclesiastical gossip. Dr. Patton had expressed to so many friends his purpose to retire at the completion of his seventieth year that it was impossible for his intention to be much of a secret. Yet even those who anticipated it now or soon will find it difficult to feel that the fixed order of things is not somehow shaken; Dr. Patton and Princeton have been so long associated names that it seems impossible for the Presbyterian mind to think them apart. If he were still to reside in Princeton the change would seem less radical, but news is that Dr. Patton is to retire to his native island of Bermuda—from which indeed he has never removed his citizenship—and spend his final years there. If this be true, his resignation constitutes an event as impressive as the final exit of a great actor from the stage of a great drama.

Francis L. Patton, D. D.

It is to be hoped that the record of Dr. Patton's life is not yet by any means made up—at least not as to the production of theological literature. Yet he seems to have set a period to his active career, and a summary accounting of his service to the Christian world becomes inevitable. Without question he has been one of the greatest figures of his time in the church and theological life of America.

Brilliant Career of an Extraordinary Scholar

From his birthplace in Bermuda Francis Landey Patton went first to Toronto for study, and coming thence to Princeton he graduated from the seminary in 1865. From his ordination he was marked by all who knew him for large service. After three pastorates successively in New York City, Nyack-on-Hudson and Brooklyn, he was called in 1872 to become Cyrus H. McCormick professor of theology in what was then the Presbyterian Seminary of the Northwest—now McCormick Seminary—in Chicago. He coupled this service with the pastorate of the Jefferson Park church, and his brilliant qualities both as teacher and preacher made a mark on the city not yet obliterated. During this time he entered the public eye as the chief prosecutor in the trial of Dr. David Swing for heresy. He also, while resident in Chicago, served three years in association with the late Dr. William C. Gray as editor of The Interior, predecessor of The Continent. Recognition of his brilliant parts came to him early in his elevation to the chair of moderator in General Assembly at Pittsburg in 1878. He was then in his thirty-sixth year.

In 1881 Dr. Patton was called from McCormick to Princeton Seminary as a professor in its faculty. Five years later he added to his work the professorship of ethics in the university in the same classic village. The latter institution in 1888 elected him its president, following the retirement of the famous James McCosh. A prosperous term of fourteen years in this position ended with Dr. Patton's return to the seminary in 1902, where he took up the presidential duties which he has just now resigned, while in the university he was succeeded by Professor Woodrow Wilson, now President of the United States. Dr. Patton is quoted as saying that again in this instance he "gives way to a younger man." And, of course, it must be again giving place to a more progressive man, for, like all conservatives, Dr. Patton has had to watch a general drift of things toward liberalization with which he could not personally sympathize. Yet among those who have sought to advance that liberalizing process, The Continent, firmly believing both the conservative and liberal temperaments needful to the poise of the church, recognizes with the utmost cordiality what Dr. Patton's life has meant to the progressing church by way of imparting stability. And it must never be forgotten that over and above all the Princetonian philosopher's idiosyncrasies of view, his stalwart fighting strength has been spent bravely for things on which evangelical Christianity founds its hope of present power and ultimate triumph.

Editorial

Measuring with a Long Line

IN HIS ESSAY on Goethe, Carlyle suggests that a London tailor would doubtless criticise the costume of an ancient Greek, censuring the absence of a collar and lapels and finding other faults. It would be a barbarous costume to him. But Winkelmann, the Grecian archæologist, might think otherwise. He might see merits in it which the London tailor would never guess. One is judging how it would look before men of his own time and in his own streets; the other asks how it may look in the universe and before the Creator of men. One is measuring by the standards of the day, and the other by the standards of a long period of time. As Paul put it once, it seemed a very small thing to be measured by current opinion or even by his own standards. The only thing that really counted was God's thought of him.

That measuring with a long line is vastly important. There is emphatic need for it just now in the councils of our church. How are we to measure the duty of the church today? Are our brethren right who are insisting that the service of the Presbyterian Church must be measured by the number of new organizations we form, without particular reference to their relation to other organizations within the one kingdom of God?

Here are two policies of church work which are at issue now between our Board of Home Missions and its opponents. One policy calls for a wide survey of the field, a fair reckoning of all the forces that are at work, a cordial cooperation with them and an earnest effort to take our place as a church in dealing with the great problems of the national religious life. That is the board's policy. It has led to the organization of departments which deal with the whole field. It has created no problems, but it has persistently refused to be blind to any problems that occur in our situation. Immigration, the country church, the Indians, survey of city and country fields, the city populations, are pressing exigencies of our own time.

The board has read its commission in those large terms. It has not the less endeavored to maintain the care of the feeble churches, and to extend the church in the rapidly developing western fields. It has always sought to make that development consistent with the theory of the church—that all churches which bear the name of Christ are our fellow workers and that thrusting in another organization or maintaining a feeble enterprise, simply because it is Presbyterian, though it is not needed in that particular place, is not good Christian policy. That is one theory, one standard of measurement. The Continent counts it the statesmanlike standard. It is the standard of Winkelmann rather than the London tailor. It sees the work as it looks in the universe, and before the Head of the whole church.

The other policy is older, and is not difficult to frame. It assumes that the best way to advance the kingdom of God is everywhere and always to press the Presbyterian Church forward. It counts it a cowardly surrender to abandon a dying church in an overchurched community. It asks why the Presbyterian Church should give up instead of other churches. It tends to magnify the instances in which the Presbyterian Church has yielded in the interests of Christian unity and advance. It so far fails to recognize the essential element of the home mission problem that it would take the home mission agency out of the church's greatest home mission field in the modern sense and remove it to what was our great home mission field in earlier years.

It requires no minimizing of the great task of home missions in the central and farther West, and especially in the magnificent Southwest, to say with great frankness that the cities today, over the whole land, constitute the most trying home mission problem we have. No board which overlooks that phase of the problem can fairly represent the Presbyterian Church. It is idle to declare whether this or that is the graver peril of the nation, but it seems plain that the cities today carry more peril for the future of the country than any other part of the land. The greatest city has in it the greatest peril. There is no tendency on the part of the board to centralize its interest in New York, but it could not be true to the mission given it by the church if it did not give careful heed to New York City.

In the midst of this, however, it must take account of all the other phases of the home mission problem. The church must guard at this time against any retrogressive movement which will question the duty of the board to measure its work by the long line. All of us have sad knowledge of individual churches whose pastor and session consider that they are entities in themselves, and do not measure their work with long lines that reach to the denomination at large, or to the kingdom of God as a whole. We even know the shame and pity of denominations which talk in narrow terms of themselves, as though they were the whole church and as though church union were the surrender of all others to them. The results of such a course are too unchristian, too deadening, to warrant any approach to it on the part of the Presbyterian church.

We thank God that the Presbyterian Church seeks to be passionately loyal to the purpose of Christ. We do not know how to make it a better church than it is except by making it more fully what it already tries to be. We do not acknowledge that other churches are superior to it, except at points in which we are honestly striving to imitate them. But Presbyterians will not be led as a church into any position that implies that our sister churches are not following Christ with the same eagerness, and are not equally accepted of him. We have no warfare against them. The only rivalry we have with them is a zeal to be so much the more worthy of his praise. It is not a time for London tailors. It is the time for a world view.

The Crisis in American Tract Affairs

We trust that the advertising of the American Tract Society in the columns of The Continent and other religious papers has impressed a host of people with money to give and the disposition to give it. The tract society's history shows its possibilities of ministry in a line that cannot be dispensed with anywhere where the gospel is pushing a missionary advance. The distribution of Christian literature in tract, periodical or book form is always a kind of clincher to the work of preaching, upon which the permanent effect of the preaching very largely depends. Any organization prepared to furnish such literature is too valuable an agency to lose.

The tract society's advertising fully explains the crisis to which it has come—a crisis in which the society undefended would be almost irremediably ruined, yet a crisis out of which, if properly defended, it may rise to a far stronger position than at any time in its past experience. For paying off the mortgage on its property is not simply protecting its building from foreclosure, but the interest saving makes it equivalent to adding this much to the society's endowment. An office building at 150 Nassau street, in the heart of New York's busiest business section, is obviously a first-class security, and the society could not find a better investment. The wise thing is to help it keep what it has.

* * *

Good Steps in Moral Education Problem

The Pennsylvania legislature has just passed a significant and interesting bill providing that at least ten verses out of the Bible shall be read every school day in the presence of the scholars in every public school within the bounds of the state. Any teacher refusing to do so is subject to dismissal. Inasmuch as this bill was made into law on the same day that another bill was beaten which would have made over all Roman Catholic Church property in that state into the hands of the Roman bishops, it is comfortably plain that Pennsylvania is at least one place in this country where the influence of the Roman hierarchy doesn't count for much politically.

Although, as The Continent has heretofore said, the mere reading of the Bible in the public schools is not of itself sufficient to mee the demand for that regular moral instruction which ought soo to be made a part of every public school curriculum, neverthele the passage of this law is a most encouraging step in that direction Certainly the public sentiment which pushed through this bill ough to be able as the next advance to provide that certain great vita portions of the Bible, which rise far above the plane of sectaria dispute and which would be agreeable to all creeds that are God fearing at all, shall be gathered in a public school textbook an taught to the pupils in stated classes. As an earnest of unsectaria fairness in the proposal, a conference including the greatest possibl variety of Christian types should be called to formulate a polic centering on the common religious and patriotic interest involve Pennsylvania has a chance just now to lead the way in this respe for all her sister states.

While we speak of this subject, let us observe that Profess Vernon P. Squires of the University of North Dakota "merits we of the republic" for his service in this field. It was he who con ceived the plan of giving course credits in high school to boys an girls who pursue the study of the Bible in connection with thei respective churches and Sunday schools. And his proposition, of ficially adopted by the state high school board just a year ago, i already working out a big success. The state board prescribes th syllabus of study, but beyond the Bible itself, only recommend textbooks. Naturally it takes care to make the recommendation various enough to satisfy all creeds and all theological temperaments. The examinations are set up by the state board and given under oversight of local school authorities, just as examinations in all other studies. Questions of fact make up the examination material; points of theological controversy are avoided. The classes are organized under independent church auspices, but in some cases high school teachers volunteer to lead them.

Ninety recitations are required for the course; classes that meet only on Sunday must therefore take two years to complete the syllabus. But many classes have been meeting also in the middle of the week in order to finish within a year. The whole scheme appears remarkably effective for interesting young folks of high school age in Bible study, and the way it has been taken up in North Dakota indicates that it has in it fertile elements of popularity as well as the conditions of lasting education. The state, of course, takes cognizance of only the intellectual results of the study, but there is no limitation on the teachers to prevent their working for spiritual results at the same time.

Mott at Home After Wonderful Trip

John R. Mott, the great American missionary and educational leader, is once more in the home country, having returned from his round-the-world tour in time to attend the international convention of Young Men's Christian Associations in session this week at Cincinnati. All in all, the trip of Mr. Mott and his traveling companion, Sherwood Eddy, has been the most extraordinary circuit of the earth made by any representative of any interest for a generation past. Mr. Mott's mission, undertaken at the request of the continuation committee of the Edinburgh conference, has fulfilled two great functions, bringing about an unprecedentedly thorough discussion of foreign mission methods with missionaries on the field and affording the opportunity of a widespread and marvelously effective preaching of the gospel to young men in the universities of the chief non-Christian nationalities. The evangelistic results among the students in China in particular, from the appeals of Mr. Mott and Mr. Eddy, have been so notable that they promise to mark a new epoch among the forces at work to make the China of the future.

Incidental to the trip, a new distinction has been given to Mr. Mott in the eyes of the world at large by President Wilson's urgent pressure to induce him to accept the post of United States minister to China—a request cabled to him while in Korea. Few men in all Christian history have had so severe a test of personal judgment placed upon them as was thus laid on Mr. Mott when he was called upon to decide between two positions of such enormous importance—obliged to balance his present vast responsibilities as chief of both the continuation committee and the World's Student Federation against the immeasurable opportunities for influencing China which would certainly come to him as a diplomat in Peking.

Fair Play Commanded the Presbyteries

A mighty fine assurance that Presbyterian fair play can always be depended on comes in the welcome news that the overture for the reduction of the size of the U. S. A. General Assembly has been decisively defeated. The satisfaction in it is, of course, not at all that the Assembly goes unreduced, but that the church won't reduce it in an unfair way. The overture was drafted and passed in the Assembly of 1912 too carelessly; its contradiction to the principle of representative government was not realized. Many presbyteries adopted it with the same inattention, thinking merely that it would be a good thing to get a more wieldy Assembly and not considering the means of getting it. But the most admirable thing about the whole process of dealing with the matter in the presbyteries was the way in which certain of the smaller of these bodies—as Chemung, for example—reversed their approval when they did come to appreciate the real effect of the overture. They had themselves nothing to lose, but they "looked also on the things of others," and would not do wrong to neighbor presbyteries to whom the amendment would have been seriously unjust.

The Assembly has now put forward several sorts of unsatisfactory schemes to reduce its own membership, and each has in turn met deserved rejection from the presbyteries. Perhaps it is better now to let the subject rest awhile. But the experience of this period of experimentation should be stored in mind, and when the effort is made next the futility of these trials should point to the one remaining method of reduction—the only really rational way—synodical representation, with a "loading" attached which would give some extra advantage to synods big in territory but small in membership.

Working Christian's Opinion on Workingmen

Nobody who reads these pages—unless perchance some very new subscriber or some casual acquaintance for this week alone—will need to be told who John J. Eagan is. He was one of the heroes of Mr. Ellis's unforgettable story of Atlanta's deliverance from commercialized vice. And there was plenty in that story to demonstrate that he is not "knocking" the church, as the phrase of the day goes. On the contrary, his record justifies his own description of himself—"one who was devoting a great part of his time and his talents to the work of the church because he believes it to be the God-appointed agency for the salvation of a lost world." So there is no supercilious critic to be dealt with in him, but such a thoroughgoing church man as the church cannot afford to ignore if he speaks in criticism of it. And it certainly ought to ponder when out of his experience in Atlanta with the labor unions who came in to help the Men and Religion Movement fight vice, Mr. Eagan writes these solemn words:

"I am convinced that it is not so much the laboring man who has alienated himself from the church as that the pharisaism of the church and the hypocrisy of its members have caused this alienation. My hope is that the church is to break the traditions that have bound it so long, and recalling its Master's example, forget itself in its passion to save mankind. When it does this, both laboring men and capitalists will enroll under its banners."

—As campaign literature to be scattered over the church in the interest of its $10,000,000 endowment proposition, the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation has procured the republication of Thomas Nelson Page's exquisite story, "The Shepherd Who Watched by Night," which appeared in the March issue of Scribner's Magazine. An edition of 75,000 copies in pamphlet form, with the original illustrations included, is now running from the Scribner presses in New York and will be mailed widely from the board's rooms in Philadelphia. The pamphlet is prefaced by a letter addressed from Mr. Page to Secretary Foulkes, expressing the author's gratification at this use of his story, which he says he wrote with profound hope that it would serve just such a practical purpose as this in furthering pension provisions for aged ministers of the gospel. Certainly few writers have ever delineated the aged "worn-out" minister in such dignity of silent appeal as Mr. Page has given to his hero in this instance.

—Because Dr. Shailer Mathews, president of the Federal Council of Churches, has been widely misrepresented as a man of destructive tendencies and an advocate of a mere social reform gospel, The Continent aims to do him the frequent justice of repeating fragments from his constant preaching to precisely the opposite effect. No man could be stronger than he in emphasis on the imperative necessity of spiritual religion at the bottom of any worth-while social service on the part of the church. One of his recent utterances on this theme runs thus: "We cannot let social service take the place of God. Picnics are not the equivalents of prayer meetings and Sunday school baseball leagues have not yet developed into revivals. Church leaders cannot delegate the duties of spiritual parentage. A Protestant church cannot be an ethical orphan asylum. It must be a home in which souls are born into newness of life."

—An anonymous but obviously informed writer, treating in The Presbyterian Banner the objections offered to the Home Board's system of field secretaries in the districts of the West and South, points out that the synods which these four officers serve have increased their annual home mission offerings from $44,000 to $115,000 since this sort of secretaryship was created. So the four of them don't seem at all a bad investment, judged from this financial standpoint alone, which makes no account of their usefulness in systematizing and energizing the work in their respective territories.

—Pennsylvania Synod's committee, conducting a campaign to add half a million of endowment to the resources of Lafayette College, has already got more than a running start, and seems to have the goal surely in sight. A gift of $25,000 from a loyal Presbyterian lady, who wishes her name to continue unknown, brings the total now subscribed up to $114,000. Approval of the campaign will be asked from the General Assembly at Atlanta, and will without doubt be heartily given.

—The removal of Dr. John Balcom Shaw from Second church, Chicago, to Immanuel church, Los Angeles, fills one very important Presbyterian pastorate at the expense of another, and illustrates again how few are the qualified laborers for the trying fields of the great cities. In both New York and Chicago Dr. Shaw has shown peculiar adaptation to the city problem, and will undoubtedly redemonstrate the same gifts beside the Pacific.

DR. JOWETT'S MESSAGE

WE ALL KNOW Mr. Worldly Wiseman, strutting about in the parade of wisdom, making himself obtrusive by his assumption of superiority, by his hasty impatience with the ignorant and by his generally disagreeable airs and supercilious contempt. Mr. Worldly Wiseman is clever, and knows himself to be clever, and he assumes his cleverness to be wisdom. "But this wisdom descendeth not from above," but belongs to the earth, and to unspiritual nature, and to evil spirits.

World's and God's Wise Man

Now, as opposed to Mr. Worldly Wiseman, the apostle James gives us a description of God's wise man. He is created from above, and he is nourished and sustained by the full and ample ministries of grace. And here is his portrait: "The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality and without hypocrisy."

Streams of Purity from Heights of Serenity

As I pondered on these words and attempted to see the character as a whole, I was taken in memory to Switzerland, and recalled an experience of a few years ago. I was gathering fruit from a great, hospitable tree, that was almost overladen with bounty. Near it flowed a deep, brimming, quiet river, which watered the roots of many similar trees that lined its banks. Always in the far distance I saw the snow heights, whence the river had flowed and where it had been born. And this scene offered itself as a symbolism portraying the character of God's wise man.

The truly wise man is "first pure"; the primary characteristic is a snowy-white sanctity. His life originates in hallowed heights. And then out of the purity there flows a river of quiet but powerful dispositions; "then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated." And lastly, fed by these waters, there are trees of beneficent habits, laden with gracious and acceptable fruits; "full of mercy and good fruits." And so does the apostle's description of God's wise man include the primary background of sanctity, certain reigning dispositions and certain active services.

"First pure." What an order of things! Who would have thought of beginning here in the conception and description of a wise man? When we seek to image to ourselves the wise man we are prone to think first of his strength of mind, his power of analysis and discernment, his power of control over gathered knowledge. When we think of a wise man we are apt to think of his brow, of his brain, of his mental balance and capacity. But in the scriptural portrait of a wise man he is first of all pure.

The Bible never begins anywhere else in its description of true life. Its first criterion is purity; its first demand is the expulsion of all dirt. It is not concerned first of all with the style of a garment but with the condition of the fabric. It first inquires about the cloth, then the vesture. And its very first question about the cloth is as to whether it is clean in the warp and the woof. In the manufacture of fine porcelain the great emphasis in the process is the earliest stage. The primary substance must be purified until it is the peer of the purest cream. And so the first requisite in the making of God's wise man is purity; it is not mental ingenuity but inherent sanctity. It begins with the snow.

Peaceful and Reverent Quests for Truth

Now out of this purity there flows the river of quiet and mighty dispositions. "Then peaceable." What an unfamiliar road we are treading! Worldly wise men, merely clever men, men who pride themselves on their cleverness, are the opposite of peaceful; they are polemical. They like to stir things up not because they are lovers of hidden truth but because they delight in fierce controversy and debate. Such people were in the church of which the apostle James was a member. Everything that was introduced into the church life became to them an occasion of battle. They brought out their weapons and on every occasion were marching as to war.

Now the apostle teaches that this is not the way with the truly wise man who is in quest of truth. Truth is exceedingly shy and retiring, and she has to be sought with very reverent step. We can never catch truth with cavalry or with the use of the tomahawk. Seeking truth is something like seeking a bird upon her nest. And Mr. Kearton, in his studies of bird life, has shown us with what superlative delicacy of approach he has to draw near to the bird's home, lest he should frighten her away. It is even so with the truly wise man who is seeking truth.

"Take off thy shoes from off thy feet." That is not the step of the indifferent; it is the movement of the reverent. God's wise man touches every matter peacefully. It may be firmly but still peacefully, if so be that he may surprise a new truth of the Lord, hiding in the place of shy retirement.

"Then gentle." Elsewhere this word is translated "moderation," and again it is translated "patience." And if we put the three together we come very near to the significance of Matthew Arnold's phrase, "sweet reasonableness." It is the disposition that does not mistake loudness for emphasis, or impatience for zeal, or abruptness for decision. Mr. Worldly Wiseman never expresses himself in "sweet reasonableness." His convictions are prejudices and are therefore uttered with passion. He stands looking out of one window, and for no inducement in the world could be be persuaded to look out of another. There is no "sweet reasonableness" about his life and demeanor, none of the gentle moderation which leads a man to contemplate the world through another man's eyes. And yet this is the characteristic of a truly wise man. He is willing to look through any niche if perchance it may unveil to him some novel aspect of God's manifold world.

Open Windows for Rays of Morning Light

"Easy to be entreated." This is a word not found elsewhere in the New Testament. It appears to add an extra feature to the one we have just described. It suggests a man who is open to persuasion, and who is ready to receive a new ray of light from whatever quarter it may shine. There are some men who are so clever that they will learn nothing. Their windows are closed and the light can find no entry.

"Here is a new interpretation for thee, with new significance!" No, he will not have it. "Here is a new hymn for thee, with a new ray of light from the throne of grace!" No, he will not have it. And so it happens as in the picture of Holman Hunt, the Light of the world is outside, and the door and the window are both closed. The truly wise man is "easy to be entreated." He lives with his window "open toward the east," and the ray of every new morning is admitted as a welcome guest. Here, then, are the dispositions of God's wise men, the dispositions that flow like a quiet, deep river from the virgin snow; peacefulness, sweet reasonableness and the absence of stubborn self-will.

And lastly, there are the fine trees that grow by the river banks and the fine fruits which they offer to the passer-by. "Full of mercy and good fruits." There is the chivalry of compassion. It is beautiful to link the ripe fruit with the virgin snow. It is beautiful to think that the exquisite compassion is born of untainted purity. Compassion is responsiveness to human need. The chords of the compassionate vibrate to the low callings of the tired and the fainting and the fallen. Noble compassion answers not only to the wail but to the almost silent sigh. The æolian harp not only sounded to the call of the tempest but to the breathings of the morning air, and to the low call of the wind that moved in the evening twilight. God's wise man responds to his fellow men in a love and pity that redeems.

And to that chivalry of compassion there is united the ministry of love. We all know the people who are "full of good fruits." We come into their presence and feel as though some gracious thing were being offered to our taste. Their life is nourishing like strengthening fruit.

Impartiality and Reality Requisites of Wisdom

There is one statement left in the apostle's description, a negative statement, mentioning two things that are missing in the wise man's life. God's wise man is without partiality. There is no shadow of favoritism about him. His kindness does not pick and choose. He is not rasping at home and gentle abroad. He is not sweet in his own family circle and bitter with those he employs. There is no partiality. Everybody who comes to his fruit tree can eat of his fruit. He is "the same all round."

Lastly, he is "without hypocrisy." He wears no mask. He never reveals a false face. He plays no part. He employs no illusions. He is just what he appears to be, and what he offers he truly gives. Being pure, all his dispositions are quiet and powerful, and the fruits of his life offer refreshment to all the pilgrims who may pass his way.

J. H. JOWETT.

—The man who cannot see more good than evil in his fellows is either looking the wrong way, else blind to all beyond himself.

Pan-Presbyterian Forecasts for Atlanta

HE EXTRAORDINARY task which Atlanta has undertaken of entertaining three Presbyterian General Assemblies simultaneously, and providing likewise for evening mass meetings in which the members of all three bodies and the citizenship of Atlanta generally are expected to join, requires some unusual arrangements, among which is the necessity of borrowing a church from another denomination for the largest of the three Assemblies in question. There is no Presbyterian house of worship in Atlanta sufficiently ample to accommodate the 900 commissioners and corresponding members of the Assembly "U. S. A." and leave room besides for a large enough body of onlookers to make good the claim that the Assembly always meets with open doors and in the public presence. But happily this requirement is completely met by the ready loan of the great Baptist tabernacle, which its congregation offered for the purpose with cheerful Christian fraternity. This is the imposing church and hospital combined which Dr. Len Broughton built shortly before he was called to his present pastorate in London. The auditorium is spacious enough to seat all the commissioners of Assembly on the main floor, and its two large galleries will accommodate spectators and visitors in hosts.

The Southern, or U. S., Assembly will go to North Avenue church, which stands on Peachtree street where that famous central thoroughfare of Atlanta crosses North avenue in the midst of a delightful residence district. The corner stone of this beautiful building was laid in the presence of the Southern Assembly when it last met in Atlanta, and there is therefore special appropriateness in the return of that body to enjoy the hospitality of Dr. R. O. Flinn and his earnest and progressive people. The United Presbyterians, third in the trio of General Assemblies, will be entertained meantime in Central Presbyterian church, located on Washington street, opposite the state capitol of Georgia—an excellently appointed and comfortable edifice which houses regularly the largest membership attached to any Presbyterian church in the state. Dr. D. H. Ogden is pastor here. The same week at Harris Street Presbyterian church, which is the home of the only organization in Atlanta connected with the U. S. A. Assembly, the Women's Board of Home Missions auxiliary to the same body will hold its annual meeting, Rev. Jere Moore being pastoral host to the ladies.

Nightly Assemblages of Inspirational Fellowship

The fourth factor in this interesting Pan-Presbyterian rally is the commission appointed by the general synod of the Associate Reformed Church to represent it in this memorable gathering of the Presbyterian clans. As has before been stated in these columns, this commission has no legislative functions to perform, and therefore will not be occupied as are its brother bodies with parliamentary work during the days. But it will be ready to bear its full component share in the evening mass meetings, when the magnetism of fraternal sentiment and the attractions of live inspirational speaking are expected to draw vast crowds to Atlanta's splendid Auditorium. This is a room of metropolitan proportions, having seats for abount 8,000 people; yet Atlanta Presbyterians alone have time and again filled the hall practically full on the day of their annual rally, when they abandon service in their own community churches and come together there for united worship. So the prospect would seem to be that, with 5,000 strangers in town and interested in these gatherings, the audiences will nightly overflow the Auditorium. But it is the biggest meeting place Atlanta has, and will have to serve.

These united evening sessions are to supersede the traditional program of "popular meetings" which have long been a routine feature of the Presbyterian General Assembly. This year all the routine is dropped, and while the same series of church interests is traversed the programs are arranged in different order and include some new topics. For Thursday evening the gathering announced is a fellowship meeting, and the communion service which the U. S. A. Assembly usually observes at that hour is postponed, to be held in the Baptist tabernacle the next afternoon at 4 p. m., all of the Assemblies participating. Friday night the union theme is evangelism; Saturday night Christian social service. On the latter occasion Marion Jackson, the Atlanta lawyer who wrote the advertising which, as Mr. Ellis has shown, advertised Atlanta free from vice, will tell the story of that campaign. Monday night work among young people will be considered, Tuesday night home missions, Wednesday night foreign missions, Thursday night church and public education. On the intervening Sunday the Auditorium will be used only for a mass meeting for men at 4 o'clock, at which Secretary of State Bryan is expected to be the speaker. A mass meeting for women will follow at the next hour in Central Congregational church, as a mass meeting on church and country life will precede at 3 o'clock in the Baptist tabernacle. In the evening a varied array of mass meetings will hold forth at various churches covering the interests of the Sunday school, ministerial relief, colleges, brotherhoods and temperance.

Organic Union Proposed for Two Assemblies

Of prospective business to come before the different Assemblies the only matter which seems surcharged with possibilities of radical change in the policies or status of either denomination is the report on organic union which has been prepared by a joint committee of the Southern and United Presbyterian Assemblies and which will be submitted separately to the consideration of each. No hint has been allowed to reach the public of this report, except the bare statement that the committee is unanimously agreed that the union of the two churches is desirable and feasible.

The terms on which it is proposed that such union shall be effected are, however, still unknown in either denomination, and when the commissioners of the two bodies learn the precise nature of these proposals there will doubtless be a lively debate in both Assemblies. Apparently the most difficult question to be adjusted is the position which the United denomination would take in regard to the singing of psalms in public worship. The Southern Church is no doubt favorably disposed to the use of psalms in the song service of its congregations, but seems scarcely prepared to abandon the use of hymns, to which the United Presbyterian denomination has never yet given countenance. Perhaps to allow this matter to be determined by the choice of local congregations will satisfy both parties.

Leaving aside the difficulties that attend such specific accommodations as this, it appears plain that prevailing sentiment in both denominations favors the union, and the probabilities are that both Assemblies will take action favorable to the merger—at the very least, will provide for a continuance of the negotiations.

Both these Assemblies are likewise much interested in the "every-member canvass" plan of promoting enlarged liberality toward the benevolent boards of the church. Both have very vigorous laymen's movements, captained by lay leaders whose enthusiasm and efficiency have made them famous in Christian circles throughout the nation. The two churches have worked together a great deal on these lines. Indeed, it appears to have been their friendly relation in laymen's missionary work that brought forth, a little over a year ago, the first suggestion of their organic union. Both Assemblies will undoubtedly take aggressive action in these missionary lines, and that of itself will tend to quicken union sentiment. In the Southern Assembly, however, there will be a detail of some perplexity to work out in this connection, for circumstances will call for a new definition of the functions of the committee on systematic beneficence. The Southern Assembly of 1912 reduced the powers of this commission somewhat, and several of its most active members resigned because they felt that their efforts for a higher efficiency in benevolent administration had been thus stultified. Fuller consideration of this matter will doubtless elucidate the misunderstanding and point a way for reconstituting the committee on systematic beneficence with full liberty for the development of its aggressive policy.

Modern Doctrinal Statement Under Construction

The last Southern Assembly named a committee to provide for the denomination U. S. such a "brief statement" of Presbyterian faith in modern terms as the denomination U. S. A. has had since 1903. So far as has been indicated at the present writing this committee has not yet completed its task and will probably be simply continued on its report of progress.

Great interest will be concentrated on the returns from the presbyteries showing the vote on the latest overture framed to deal with the vexed question of elect infants. The Westminster Confession of Faith as held in the Presbyterian Church U. S. still reads in the original form, "Elect infants dying in infancy are regenerated," implying, according to at least the casual interpretation, that some infants dying in infancy are not elect. The amendment proposed by the Assembly of 1912 would change this to read, "Being elect, all infants dying in infancy are regenerated." It will take the favorable vote of two-thirds of the presbyteries to make the change.

Another matter on which the Southern Assembly will receive returns from the presbyteries is an overture submitted last year providing that representation from presbyteries shall be based not

(Continued on page 687)

In the Footsteps of Francis Makemie

Looking Back Upon the Life and Work of the Founder of Presbyterianism in America—A First-Hand Study

BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS, Editor Afield of The Continent

OF ALL THE arms which stretch out from the American continent into the Atlantic ocean, there is but one so famous as to be known generally as "the Peninsula." That is the long stretch of land which is embraced between the Chesapeake bay and the Atlantic ocean, and includes in its area most of the state of Delaware, a considerable portion of Maryland and a small part of Virginia. The peninsula shelters Washington and Baltimore from the open sea. This is distinctive territory, with a distinctive people, who call themselves "Eastern Shore folks." They bear the characteristics of those who live by the water, and in certain particulars are not unlike the residents of the New England coast.

The one great personality of the peninsula is the founder of American Presbyterianism, Rev. Francis Makemie of Ramelton, in the north of Ireland. Other notable names appear in the annals of the Eastern Shore from the day that Captain John Smith touched there in 1608. George Fox blazed like a beacon through the colony in 1673, for the Quaker folk found tolerance here on Lord Baltimore's grant, ere William Penn's plantation was established to the north. But the one name which abides in brightest luster, so that even the unlettered natives know it, is that of Francis Makemie, the young Irish Presbyterian minister who landed on the peninsula in 1683, and straightway set up at Rehoboth the first thoroughly organized Presbyterian church, later extending his labors over a wide area, and in 1706 founding the General Presbytery of America at Philadelphia, of which he was chosen the first moderator. What history has been written by Presbyterianism between the meeting of the little Assembly of 1706 and the three great gatherings in Atlanta in 1913!

"The Big Meeting House," Ramelton, Ireland. This Was the Home Church of Francis Makemie

Certain distinctively Presbyterian qualities gave Makemie his preeminence. He was not the first Presbyterian clergyman to land on these American shores. Others had been before him; and other congregations, of a semi-Independent or semi-Episcopalian character, had been formed. But it remained for this young Irishman, who had been ordained by the light of the fires of persecution, and at a time when Presbyterians in Ireland and Scotland were being harried and hunted like wild beasts, to erect a church after the strict manner of Scotland; and then to gather, Presbyterian fashion, all the scattered members and groups of the same order into one body, and subject to the law of the Presbyterian Church. The old Presbyterian passion for civil and religious liberty flamed brightly in young Makemie's breast, and he stoutly contended, by tongue and pen, for the principles which have since become peculiarly American, as they then were Presbyterian. How he promoted orderly expansion of the civil life, as well as of the church, will be duly shown.

Trail from North Carolina to Boston

The pioneers often had spacious views, because they had been set in a large room. Narrowness and bitterness are not easily cherished by the man who finds himself in an imperial expanse of nature, with old associations an ocean's length away, and with a limitless future to engross him. Makemie seemed to exult in the unhampered work before him. He was of the race of men who must be ever on the move. His footprints may be found as far south as North Carolina and as far north as Boston.

To follow the Makemie trail one must take to the water. The peninsula is laced by waterways, so that nearly every farmer is also a fisherman. Of these streams none is fairer than the deep, black Pocomoke river, said to be the deepest stream for its length and width in the country. To this day steamers go up as far as Snow Hill, which, along with Rehoboth, became a "port of entry" about the time of Makemie's arrival. The churches at Rehoboth, Snow Hill and Pitts Creek (which is the present Pocomoke City) have always engaged in more or less friendly rivalry as to their relative antiquity, but the truth doubtless is they were all part of the one charge. While the records seem to show quite clearly that the first organization was at Rehoboth, the five churches—Rehoboth, Snow Hill, Pitts Creek, Manokin (the present town of Princess Anne) and Wicomico (now Salisbury)—were all regarded as one field.

The deeply romantic nature of the impressionable Irishman—Makemie was about twenty-five when he landed—must have been stirred by the sights and sounds of this new country, whose greenness reminded him of the fair island upon which he had turned his back for conscience' sake. Somebody has called the peninsula "the land of the evergreen." The sides of Pocomoke river are bordered with a jungle of trees and shrubbery, cypress dominating all. This is popularly called the bald cypress, to differentiate it from the evergreen cypress. A curious characteristic of this tree is the way its roots spring up into knees, or knuckles, which at a distance look like the ruins of walls and turrets. The cypress is impervious to water, and a former industry in the peninsula was the digging for cypress logs in the great swamps, these afterwards being made up into shingles. Along the banks of the river there are frequent inlets and tributary streams, and often in the mouth of one of these a lone cypress will stand in real majesty, surmounted by a fish hawk's nest.

The scenery with which Makemie's eyes were familiar appeals to any lover of out-of-doors. Here, especially in the springtime, are all the shades of green, although on the holly trees the red berries still glisten. Bunches of mistletoe hang high on many trees, and graceful festoons of Spanish moss pendent from the water oaks add a beauty which only southern waters know. As I went to and fro on Makemie's river nature wore her fairest garb and reminded one that there are some displays which cannot be carried to the eyes of city folk. Only the deer and the wild turkey and the bears and the Indians are needed to make this land along the water seem as it was in the days of Makemie.

Tobacco was the principal harvest in Makemie's day, and indeed it was the commonest form of currency. Thus the Episcopal clergyman who frowned upon Mr. Makemie's coming was obliged to sue his vestry before the Accomac court for an arrearage of salary, the sum of 20,000 pounds of tobacco being due him, which meant that his salary of 16,000 pounds of tobacco a year was in arrears for fifteen months. The friable, gray, sandy soil of the peninsula is hospitable to many kinds of crops, and in time tobacco gave way to wheat and corn, while now the farmers plant principally potatoes and small fruits. The peninsula folk boast that they produce the greatest strawberry harvests in the world. When intensive farming comes to this region transformations in the entire life of the people will be wrought.

Both prosperity and population have gone in waves over this point of land. The historian's task is made difficult by the disappearance of whole communities. Rehoboth has risen and fallen more than once, and within the memory of living men the old church would have been abandoned and forgotten had it not been for the tireless devotion of Elder E. G. Polk. Withal, there are interesting persistencies. The plantation of Colonel William Stevens, who sent the appeal to Laggan Presbytery in 1680 which resulted in Makemie's coming to America, is still a fertile and prosperous farm along the river bank. It was from Colonel Stevens's plantation of Rehoboth (Gen. 26:22) that the first Presbyterian church in America took its name. Within 200 or 300 yards of the river bank on the Stevens estate the first log church was built in 1683. Here Makemie preached his first American sermon.

It was a great event for this community of scattered dissenters, whom persecution had impoverished in worldly goods, although not in devotion to their church, when Makemie arose before the assembled company, his eyes sparkling with the ardor of the devotee who had lived close to the light of martyr fires. His dominant thought was of loyalty to Christ's crown and covenant; yet his eyes must have strayed curiously to the negroes and Indians present—the first he had ever seen. Little did he dream that the race problem which he there confronted would persist centuries after the question of religious tolerance had been settled.

Makemie was a cultivated man; he was an alumnus of the University of Glasgow; and he belonged to a church which contended sturdily for an educated ministry. The style of his preaching is shown by this extract, which is still pertinent:

> "Neglect of family religion promotes as much irreligion as any one thing beside. Many parents will labor hard, rise up early and sit up late to provide for the backs and bellies of their children; and he is worse than an infidel that does not; but what must they be that take no care of, and make no provision for, their souls, but ruin them by sinful indulgence and so train up vassals for the devil instead of training up servants for the living God? And as youth and tender years are fittest for bearing the yoke of religion, so they are the most suitable for receiving impressions of divine knowledge and habits of right living. For want of which early Christian education, many run naturally, as the sparks fly upward, to a thousand disorders and all excess of riot."

Rehoboth to Be Perpetually Presbyterian

The organization which Makemie established at Rehoboth first worshiped in a church of cypress logs. Later, in 1706, this was succeeded by a brick building, 40 by 60 feet, erected on Makemie's own property. Referring to it in his will, Makemie used these words: "I order and empower my executrix to sell my lot adjoining the new meeting house lot in Pocomoke town, called Rehoboth, in as ample manner as shall be required for the ends and uses of a Presbyterian congregation, and to their successors forever, and to none else but to such of the same persuasion in matters of religion."

Photo by courtesy of Mrs. Henry C. McCook

Memorial Pillar to Makemie's Wife, Daughters and Relatives in the Old Cemetery on Holden's Creek

As to the church in Philadelphia, he was willing it should enjoy his liberality, whether it assumed decidedly the Presbyterian or Independent form of government; but about the church in Rehoboth, which he had planted, watered and endowed, he felt no such uncertainty, and therefore he permits no option as to the religious name of the persons who should be benefited by the devise.

Despite the vicissitudes of the years this church still stands, reminding one in its general form of the preacher's home church at Ramelton in Ireland. The bricks of which it was built were made in America, for Makemie himself speaks in one of his letters of the materials for brickmaking in this country. The architecture was of the simplest. At either end of the structure was a gallery, probably for the negroes and the Indians. Half way between was a very high pulpit, with a sounding board. The ceiling was the roof, with the apex rounded off. The door, which then was at the side, opposite the pulpit, has now been made into a window and a new door cut into one end of the church, where there is today also a little vestibule. The room has been ceiled over and attractively frescoed, and the present-day members, who number more than 100, have a delightful church home. The tablet in the wall behind the pulpit, and the memorial windows, speak of the history of the long years agone. The tablet refers to Rehoboth as Makemie's "First and Favorite Child."

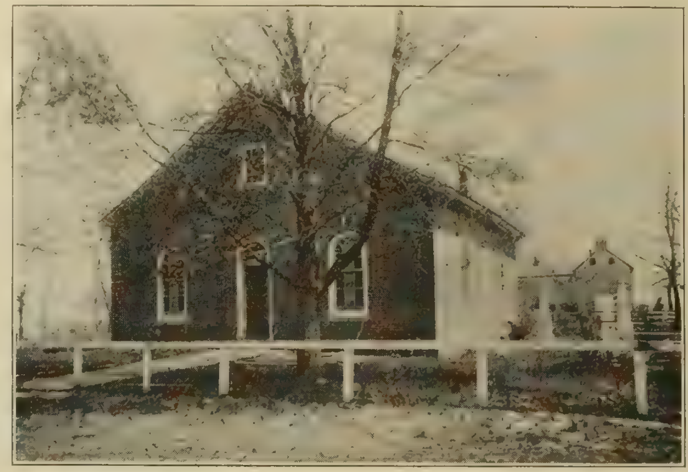
There was a touch of suggestiveness to me in the fact that on the little cabinet organ I saw several copies of the catechism. They are still Presbyterians at Rehoboth. These walls stir the imagination. Here not only Makemie but a multitude of great preachers have taught, and here have been great visitations of spiritual refreshing, that continued through years, when the community was strangely swept by tides from heaven. Within these walls the pioneers heard the comfort of the gospel for which they had forsaken home and native land, and here their children and children's children for many generations were taught the way of life. Now that the Presbyterians of America have shown a new zeal for Makemie this national Presbyterian shrine will not be suffered to fall into decline again. Whatever the changes of population, old Rehoboth will be tenderly cherished. The zeal for Presbyterianism is not as great as zeal for the kingdom; yet a new and tolerant and judicious sense of the common heritage of our divided denomination is abroad in the land.

Wicomico Presbyterian Church, Salisbury, Md., One of the Churches Organized by Francis Makemie

Snow Hill Also Has Pioneer Claims

When I went up the river from Rehoboth to Snow Hill, I found a mild form of rivalry, for the Snow Hill folk, while not particularly interested in history, expressed the firm belief that theirs was the first of the Makemie churches. There are no graves here earlier than the latter part of the eighteenth century, for in those days it was customary for persons to be buried, like Colonel Stevens, on their own homesteads. Near to the Snow Hill church is All Hallows Protestant Episcopal church, which was founded in 1692, and preserves its original building, quite in the form of the Rehoboth church. The church bell is one given by Queen Anne, and it hangs in a tree, still summoning worshipers to service.

I have been reading in the old documents of the bitter strife of those early days between Presbyterians and Episcopalians, but as I wandered through the two graveyards in Snow Hill it became clear how human nature had triumphed over traditional animosities; for the young folk of rival families would persist in intermarrying, and now the family names appear in both graveyards, and their descendants are in both churches. The old bitterness is but an interesting memory, and it seems a far cry from the day when all who did not belong to the Established Church bore the stamp of "dissenters" and could not organize churches in Virginia, but could hold only "conventicles," being forced by sharp strife to flee to Roman Catholic Maryland for tolerance.



A Cradle of American Presbyterianism. Rehoboth Church, Founded in 1683
This building was erected in 1706. In the wall above the pulpit is a memorial tablet to Francis Makemie, its founder

This explains why Makemie founded no church in Virginia, where he lived. He did in self-protection obtain authority to hold meetings in his own home at Onancock, and at Accomac Courthouse. It was in Onancock that Makemie dwelt for a time, and did business. His home, the remains of which are now incorporated in the parsonage of the Methodist church, was on a commanding bluff overlooking the fork of the Onancock creek. It was here that he married Naomi Anderson, the daughter of the wealthy merchant whose name is still borne by the present vigorous Southern Presbyterian church in Onancock.

Although both branches of the denomination have equal claim upon Makemie, the Presbyterian church at Accomac Courthouse in Virginia is the only one of the Makemie churches connected with the Southern Presbyterian General Assembly. It, like Rehoboth, languished and almost passed away nearly a century ago, and its preservation came about in this fashion, as I have the story from an elderly lady at Onancock to whom Presbyterian traditions are dear:

General Wise—later Governor Wise—fell in love with the daughter of President Jennings of Washington and Jefferson College in Pennsylvania. He wanted to take his bride to his home at Accomac Courthouse in Virginia, but her father would not let her go unless there should be a Presbyterian church in the community. Inquiry developed the sad plight of the Makemie church. General Wise bestirred himself to arouse the people and, with substantial help from Brick Presbyterian church in New York, the Makemie church was rebuilt, and continues to this day.

Gave Immigrants Land and a Vote

One of the most curious discoveries concerning Makemie which a visitor to the scene makes is the persistence of the name. To this day children who are not of Presbyterian lineage are called Francis Makemie. The explanation reflects credit upon the civic spirit of the pioneer. In those days a man could vote only if he had land, and Makemie, whose varied talents led him into business wherever he was, including extensive trading and preaching trips as far south as the Barbados, had a thousand acres of grant land in Machatank, Virginia. This he distributed among the worthy immigrants so that each could have a vote; and it is gratitude for this which has made the name a family name throughout this part of Virginia.

Manokin Presbyterian Church at Princess Anne, Md., Also Organized by Makemie
Photographed in 1900

Most of the American life of Makemie was spent on the Virginia shore of the peninsula. The monument which the Presbyterians of America erected to his memory stands on his old homestead at Holden's Creek, Virginia, where he established his family and raised his children. It was a vast estate, with slaves among its assets, inherited from his father-in-law. The monument, a really striking figure, has been placed above the old family burying ground. It looks over toward Makemie's first church, Rehoboth, on the north, and the hand is upraised in benediction.

There is an intimation that, inasmuch as the names of the undertaker and physician who cared for Makemie at the end are not found in the Accomac county records, perhaps he was on a visit to Boston when he died. This, like certain other moot points, will surely be made clear in good time. Meanwhile, it is to be hoped that an investigation will be made of the books in the library of First Presbyterian church of Philadelphia, which were bequeathed to the church by Makemie in his will. So far as I could learn, this mine has never been worked.

The Makemie monument is inclosed within the homestead space along Holden's Creek, and the hedge and grass are kept in good repair. The monument is a center of pilgrimage for the countryside, and occasionally visitors from afar drive out from Makemie park on the railroad, three miles away. The fisherman and the hunter would revel in this region. The landscape, like that of all the peninsula, is flat but pleasant, with a surprising number of distant views. As one goes out Holden's Creek, past the oyster boats and the marshes, where the natives hunt the muskrat, he finds himself quickly in the open water, where he can look from his punt across to Rehoboth and dream of Makemie making the same voyage weekly, in the same kind of boat, preparing his sermons the while.

Zeal Like Paul's for "All the Churches"

We have no glimpse into the adventures of this traveler into the wilderness, except that we know that he set sail from North Carolina, intending to go to South Carolina, but was caught by stress of weather and driven back to the Virginia shore. His passion for preaching carried him up and down the land. He was Pauline in his zeal for "all the churches." He got as far north as Boston and conducted a friendly correspondence with Increase Mather. Even after he had come into his fortune he still ministered in the word. He made at least one journey to the homeland, bringing back two ministers with him. He must have gone often to Philadelphia, New Jersey, New York and Long island, and his most intimate friend seems to have been Rev. Jedidiah Andrews of First church, Philadelphia.

In addition to his preaching, Makemie was a vigorous controversialist with his pen. The first Eastern Shore book ever published was his "Catechism," of which not a copy remains. A belligerent Quaker assailed this book, and Makemie's answer, printed in 1694, is still preserved. Five years later we find another pamphlet from his hand, of which there is a copy in the Harvard library, "Vindicating the nonconformists from the misrepresentations commonly made of them, and demonstrating that they are indeed the truest and soundest part of the church of England."

We have seen how Makemie furthered good citizenship and democracy by distributing land among men qualified to become voters; and he was also somewhat of a town "boomer." We find him the author of a pamphlet in 1705, distributed in Great Britain, to promote emigration to the colony. When he had been put into prison and fined for preaching and baptizing in New York, he did not sit supine under the injustice but sent forth a tract which later was republished to promote the cause of American independence.

His Trial for Preaching Without "Permission"

This New York experience in 1707 was a heavy blow to Makemie. While he was acquitted even by a prejudiced jury, he nevertheless was obliged to pay expenses amounting to $400. The type of man is revealed by this extract from the examination. The defendant waived the hearing of witnesses to prove that he had preached, and then the records run:

Mr. Attorney—You own that you preached a sermon, and baptized a child at Mr. William Jackson's?

Francis Makemie—I did.

Mr. A.—How many hearers had you?

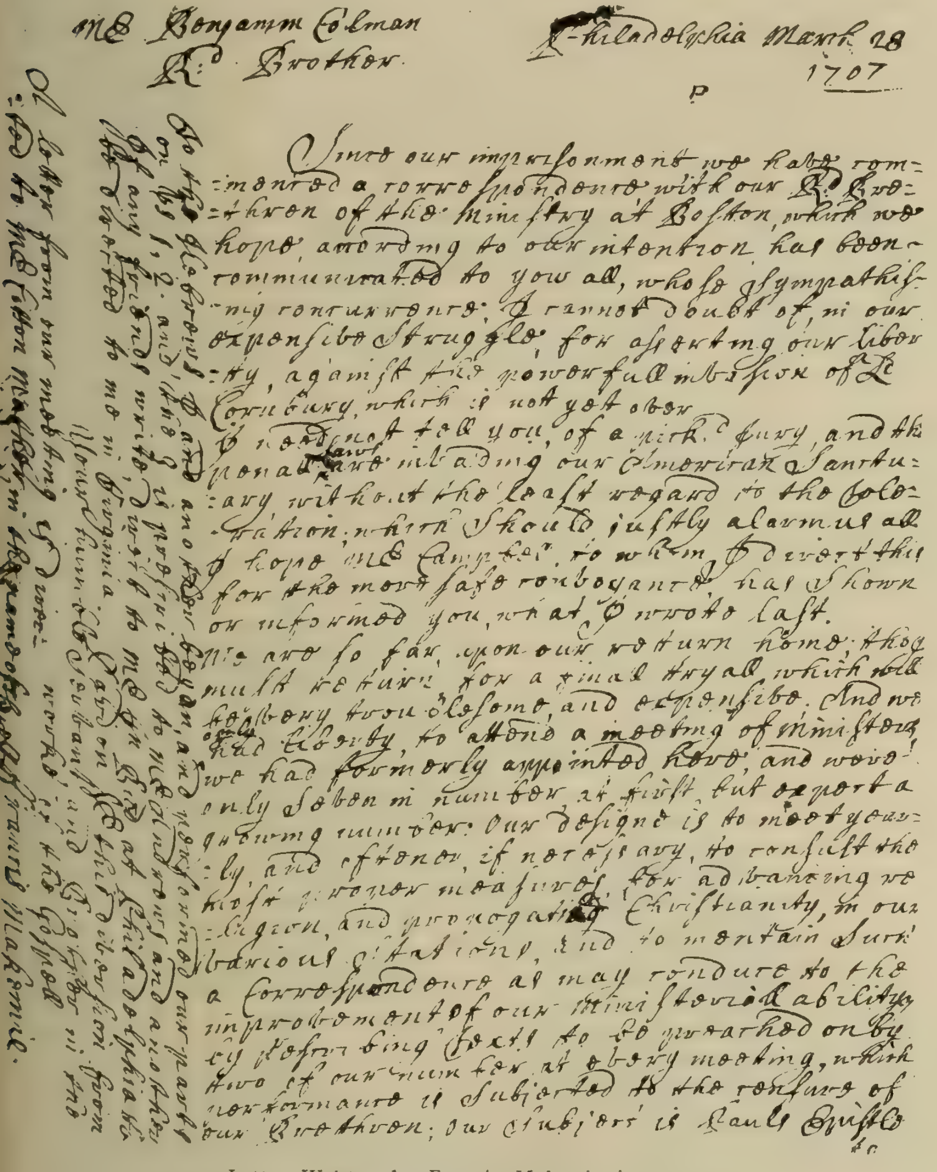
F. M.—I have other work to do, Mr. Attorney, than number my auditory when I am about to preach to them.

Mr. A.—Were there above five hearing you?

F. M.—Yes, and five to that.

Mr. A.—Did you use the rites and ceremonies enjoined by and prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer by the Church of England?

F. M.—No; I never did, nor ever will, till I am better satisfied in my conscience.



Mr Benjamin Colman
Rd Brother
Philadelphia March 28
1707

Since our imprisonment we have commenced a correspondence with our Rd Brethren of the ministry at Boston, which we hope, according to our intention has been communicated to you all, whose sympathising concurrence, I cannot doubt of, in our expensive struggle, for asserting our liberty, against the powerfull invasion of Ld Cornbury, which is not yet over.
I need not tell you, of a pick'd Jury, and the penall lawes invading our American Sanctuary without the least regard to the toleration, which should justly alarm us all. I hope Mr Campbel, to whom I direct this for the more safe conveyance, has shown or informed you, what I wrote last.
We are so far upon our return home, tho we must return for a final tryall, which will be very troublesome, and expensive. And we had liberty, to attend a meeting of ministers we had formerly appointed here, and were only seven in number at first, but expect a growing number: Our designe is to meet yearly, and oftener, if necessary, to consult the most proper measures, for advancing religion, and propagating Christianity, in our various stations, and to maintain such a correspondence as may conduce to the improvement of our ministerial ability by prescribing texts to be preached on by two of our number at every meeting, which performance is subjected to the censure of our Brethren; our subject is Pauls Epistle to the Hebrews, I and another began, and performed our parts on ch 1, 2. and the 3 is prescribed to Mr Andrews and another. If any friends write, direct to Mr John Bud at Philadelphia to be directed to me in Virginia. Pardon this diversion from

Your humble Servant and Brother in the worke of the Gospell
Francis Makemie.

A letter from our meeting is directed to Mr Cotton Mather, in the name of the whole

Letter Written by Francis Makemie in 1707
Original in the museum of the Presbyterian Historical Society, Philadelphia

Mr. A.—Did you ask leave, or acquaint my Lord Cornbury with your preaching at York, when you dined with him at the Fort?

F. M.—I did not know of my preaching at York when I dined with his Excellency; nor not for some days after. For when we came to York we had not the least intention or design of preaching there, but stopped at York purely to pay our respects to the Governor, which we did; but being afterwards called and invited to preach, as I was a Minister of the Gospel I durst not deny preaching, and I hope I never shall when it is wanting and desired.

Mr. A.—Did you acquaint my Lord Cornbury with the place of your preaching?

F. M.—As soon as I determined to preach, leave was asked, though not by me; for it was the people's business, and not mine, to provide a place for me to preach in. And I would have been admitted to preach in the Dutch Church, but they were afraid of offending Lord Cornbury. And Anthony Young went to the Governor to have his leave or permission for my preaching in the Dutch Church, though all this was done without so much as my knowledge. But my Lord opposing and denying it, I was under the necessity of preaching where I did, in a private house, though in a public manner, and with open doors.

Broad Visioned in Time of Bigotry

In a time of bigotry and intolerance Makemie was strangely broad-visioned and brotherly. He had a restless zeal for service and a versatile mind that would not be content to settle down in a charge and carry out a routine. He was essentially a builder. He had the vision to see, and the executive force to meet, the religious needs of the new land. Loyal beyond question to his own convictions, yet he could fraternize with men of divergent views. The work of winning souls always loomed largest in his eyes. Circumstances made it possible for Makemie to support himself, so that he was not a charge upon the poor flock to which he ministered, nor upon the British churches which helped support these first ministers to the colonies. He prospered in this world's goods, yet he never abated a jot of his evangelistic zeal; and never departed from the character of a minister of the gospel. The qualities of a southern gentleman characterized him long before the land knew any North or South. His name will always be a fragrant heritage to all American Presbyterians. Dr. Henry van Dyke has fittingly apostrophized this "man of God":

To thee, plain hero of a rugged race,
We bring a meed of praise too long delayed.
Thy fearless word and faithful work have made
The path of God's republic easier to trace
In this New World: thou hast proclaimed the grace
And power of Christ in many a woodland glade,
Teaching the truth that leaves men unafraid
Of tyrants' frowns, or chains, or death's dark face.

Oh, who can tell how much we owe to thee,
Makemie, and to labors such as thine,
For all that makes America the shrine
Of faith untrammeled and of conscience free?
Stand here, gray stone, and consecrate the sod
Where sleeps this brave Scotch-Irish man of God!

The Continent's cover page this week bears a reproduction of "Makemie's Plea for Religious Liberty Before Lord Cornbury," a painting by H. A. Ogden, well illustrating the incident referred to in the foregoing article, except for the absence of a jury. The figures shown, besides Francis Makemie and Lord Cornbury, are Rev. John Hampton, Peter Schuyler and Philip Van Dam. The picture shows the first hearing which preceded the jury trial. It is taken, through the courtesy of his widow, from the collection of the late Dr. Henry C. McCook, to whom Presbyterian churches of the world owe an abiding debt of gratitude for his tireless and scholarly researches into Presbyterian history. Other pictures in Mr. Ellis's article are from the Presbyterian Historical Society collection.

The Engagement Ring

He was not a very rapid wooer, and she was getting a bit anxious. A persistent ring came at the front door.

"Oh, bother!" she said. "Who can be calling?"

"Say you're out," he suggested.

"Oh, no, that would be untrue!" she protested.

"Then say you are engaged," he urged.

"Oh, may I, Charlie?" she cried, as she fell into his arms.

And the man kept on ringing the front door bell.

Where Presbyterianism Is Centering

ATLANTA is eager to meet and greet representatives of the Presbyterian Church—North, South and United, and Associate Reformed—who are gathering from the four corners of the earth to attend the remarkable series of meetings which marks the century and a quarter of Presbyterian Assemblies. This Thursday evening there will be a joint fellowship meeting at the Auditorium, to be presided over by Rev. Richard Orme Flinn, with fraternal greetings and brief addresses by the spokesmen of the four churches, Doctors T. S, Clyce, Hugh H. Bell, J. H. Pressly and Mark A. Matthews. Previous to the formal opening there will be pre-Assembly conferences, those of the Northern Church being held in Harris Street Presbyterian church, of which Rev. Jere A. Moore is pastor. This is the only U. S. A. church in Atlanta, and is the society through which the invitation to Atlanta was extended.

It was formerly of the Cumberland denomination. Its building is shown at the upper left hand corner of the preceding page.

To the right is the great Baptist tabernacle, the largest religious building in the city, where the Assembly of the Northern Church will hold its separate sessions. Across the page from the picture of the capitol is North Avenue Presbyterian church, meeting place of the Southern Assembly. Central Presbyterian church, shown at the right, will house the United Presbyterian Assembly.

The city stands high on the crest of the ridge which divides the South Atlantic coast watershed from that of the Gulf of Mexico. Its location is commercially strategic, and in consequence more than a dozen lines of railroads radiate from here. Although founded nearly seventy-five years ago, Atlanta is virtually a young city, for it was burned to the ground at the time of its capture by General Sherman in 1864. Its population, then about 10,000, was scattered and its railroads destroyed. Since then a metropolis has been built, more than twenty-five square miles in area, with a million dollar post office and a million dollar state capitol, here shown, schools and colleges in abundance, and all the attractive features one would expect to find in the leading city of the Southeast. Present population is estimated at 185,000. The small picture gives a glimpse into the heart of Atlanta's business district.

Cotton helps to form a substantial basis for the city's prosperity. An immense volume of the crop is produced in what is known as Atlanta territory. The cotton picking machine has not yet done away with hand labor, and white cotton and black folks continue in picturesque combination in the fields.

THE HOME COUNCIL

For a Sunny Day

BY FRANCES HARMER

"IF THERE'S one adage more foolish than another," said Aunt Amantha, "it is the one that bids us put by for a 'rainy day.'" We all knew Aunt Amantha as a radical; this utterance sounded almost revolutionary. But we waited for her explanatory modification. She had formed a habit of throwing a bomb, so to speak, merely to insure attention.

"Just think," she continued, as she met our bewildered gaze, "of finding our balance a pleasant overplus; or of the coming of a tiny windfall. Into our minds will instantly flash a vision of all the things we have wanted and can now have. At least, we can have one of them. Then this adage stalks along; exhibits a picture of 'a rainy day'; assures us that that is the true destination of the windfall! So we deny ourselves fulfillment of our wishes, which are sometimes our rights, and put aside the money."

"But, Aunt Amantha," we protest, "would you have us spend all we have? Not save at all?"

"Save, certainly," was Aunt Amantha's prompt reply, "only save for a sunny day! Save it," she continued, "for that trip next summer; for those classes next winter; for books, for music, for a new window! But, as you save, think of bright and useful things your saving will bring. Picture a future of sunny days. And if"—here Aunt Amantha's eyes twinkled—"if the rain comes before the time for buying any of these, why, it is a fine thing to have money for a silk umbrella!"

"Oh, it's only a difference in thought, not in aim," said the wisest of us.

Aunt Amantha smiled.

"Thought is so creative," she said.

Prize Boys on World Tour

At the Panama-Pacific exposition in San Francisco in 1915 there is to be a model boys' city. As a "runner up" for its foundation fifty boys chosen from the various cities of the United States by the national youth achievement committee by reason of superior quality and achievements set sail from Boston May 7 on a nine months' tour of the world. The ages of the boys range from 11 to 18.

The candidates were graded on general achievements, scholarship, character, athletic ability, musical ability and health. Each boy was asked the questions: Can you run the 100 yard dash? Do you smoke? Did you ever take part in any dramatic performance? Can you swim? Do you work in the summer? Have you a bank account? The accomplishments of one boy, as sent to the committee, include: Ability to play the piano and sing. Worked in summer time and on Saturdays at a clothing store and for an electric light company. Put a device on the furnace for closing and opening it from upstairs. Played on basket ball and gymnasium teams. Assists physical director at high school. Secretary of Sunday school and prominent in Christian Endeavor union. Can milk a cow. Installed a private telephone system from his home to a friend's house. Can do general housework.

Besides a number of exhibitions and contests in athletic games, the boys while in foreign cities will give a formal program.

"There are 18,000,000 boys in the United States," says Judge Willis Brown, chairman of the committee. "All that the most of them require is some wholesome incentive to do something worth while. Every boy who can go to his teacher and produce proof that he has done something worth while will be entitled to one of the boys' achievement badges."

To point his belief that an occupied boy is a safe boy, and that proper direction of his energies may be the salvation of the boy delinquent, Judge Brown tells the story of a boy arrested for housebreaking. This boy, says the judge, had an amazing mechanical facility which, lacking other outlet, spent itself in picking locks. Lock after lock he opened before the astonished eyes of the court. None was too difficult for him. His ability was tested in various ways, and in not one of the tests did he fail. The examination resulted in convincing the judge that it was a case of misdirected energy. The thing now was to turn this energy into an honest, legitimate channel.

"Why don't you try," he said, "to make a lock yourself? A good one that no one can pick—good as the Yale but cheaper? Not everybody can afford Yale locks, you know; but there ought to be a good market for a less expensive substitute."

The boy seized the idea with avidity and went eagerly to work, and it was a proud day for him when he presented himself again before Judge Brown, the successfully completed lock in his hand.

This boy now has steady employment with a locksmith and is a useful member of society.

A companion story is that of a delinquent Chicago boy, who passed from one corrective institution to another until he arrived at the John Worthy School. Here, in spite of every effort, he grew increasingly incorrigible, until there seemed nothing left but to send him to the industrial school at St. Charles.

This boy, however, had a special friend at court. Though the other instructors had found him an impossible pupil, his art teacher thought she had discovered in him a spark—only a tiny one at that—of interest in drawing. She begged the superintendent to turn him over to her.

After weeks of tireless labor she succeeded in fanning that spark into a flame. John became so absorbed in his art that he hadn't time to be naughty; and he developed a talent, amounting almost to genius, which has taken him at last to the Art Institute, where he has outstripped all his classmates, with brilliant prospects of becoming a light in his profession.

Where industry and interest go hand in hand a boy's entirely natural activity has little chance to lead him astray.

He Gave as He Had Received

The eldest boy, having reached the mature age of 6, had started upon his scholastic career.

But before he had pursued his studies a week, according to The Chicago Tribune, he caught a fine case of chicken pox and had to take a temporary vacation, during which he shared his affliction with his younger brothers.

But all were well at the end of the third or fourth week, and he started to school again.

In a few days he came home with the mumps. He shared this likewise with the other juveniles of the family and had to take another vacation, but all outlived the mumps, and in time he went back to school as before.

Then he caught the measles.

He passed a few of them to his little brothers.

But at last the doctor ordered the warning sign taken down from the door, and the boy was permitted to go to school once more.

"Mamma," said little Jamie as his elder brother took his books and his departure, "I wonder what Yarley'll bring home dis time? 'Pendicitis, I bet yuh!"

Verses Old and New

UNDYING LIGHT

O thou the Lord and Maker of life and light!
Full heavy are the burdens that do weigh
Our spirits earthward, as through twilight gray
We journey to the end and rest of night;
Though well we know to the deep inward sight
Darkness is but thy shadow, and the day
Where thou art never dies, but sends its ray
Through the wide universe with restless might.
O Lord of Light, steep thou our souls in thee!
That when the daylight trembles into shade,
And falls the silence of mortality,
And all is done, we shall not be afraid,
But pass from light to light; from earth's dull gleam
Into the very heart and heaven of our dream.

—Richard Watson Gilder.

Warmth for the Sabbath ❧ By Frances Margaret Fox

THE BIOGRAPHY of Noah Webster, even though written by Charles Dudley Warner, is more or less prosaic; however, a turn of the page, and when one least expects a glimpse of unusual interest, we come, without warning, upon the Sabbath day houses.

The Sabbath day house is to the majority a novelty. Nevertheless, Sabbath day houses in the period of their existence were no more uncommon than "Sunday best" in the twentieth century, and far more necessary.

Going to church in the winter in old New England was not the comfortable experience that it is now. The buildings were not heated and all services were of unusual length. Not only were the services long, but the entire day was devoted to church attendance.

Connecticut was especially noted for strict observance of the Sabbath, and it was in Connecticut, in old colonial days, that Sabbath day houses came into being. We have often heard, perhaps enviously, of the oldtime custom of picnic dinners eaten at noon outside the meeting house, where country neighbors met once a week and renewed their acquaintance with one another as well as with the truths of religion. To be sure, these ancestral cold dinners were not commonly referred to as "picnics," and gossip was supposed to form no part of conversation; but it must be that the sermon was not always the only subject under discussion while robins sang in the treetops and perfume of flowers filled the air.

That was in summer. Winter was shiveringly different. To meet the difficulty and danger consequent on remaining hours in an unheated building the settlers of Connecticut wisely constructed Sabbath day houses, where they might thaw out between winter sessions.

"These houses," we are told by Noah Webster's son-in-law, "were from twenty to twenty-five feet in length, and from ten to twelve feet in breadth, and one story high, with a chimney in the middle, dividing the whole space into two rooms, with a partition between them, for the accommodation of two families, who united in building the house."

We are further enlightened as to the furniture, which consisted of chairs, a table, dishes and "some iron utensils, it may be, for warming food which had been cooked."

Whether stoves or fireplaces were used is left to the imagination, but it is cheering and entirely satisfactory to know that the Sabbath day houses were heated. Reading matter was also provided; usually a Bible lay upon the table, with a religious book, "Baxter's Saints' Rest" or "Allein's Alarm."

When the owners arrived at the Sabbath day house, early on Sabbath morning, they built a good fire and got thoroughly warm before entering the meeting house. At noon they returned to the snug and cozy Sabbath day house to eat the dinner brought from home and to return thanks for their blessings. They talked over the sermon. The father of the family in those days used to take notes during the sermon, which enabled him to talk profitably with his family. Sometimes a Bible chapter was read and usually hymns were sung. Then back to church went our nation's pious ancestors to shiver through another long service.

The worshipers started homeward warm and comfortable, thanks to final visits to Sabbath day houses. When father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, aunts and all the children were ready the fire was put out, the door locked and the Sabbath day house left undisturbed until another week had passed.

In time these houses were abandoned to the poor or whoever needed shelter.

YOUNG AMERICA

The Story the Picture Told Me

Prize Story Contest

Beyond the Hills

First Prize

ABOUT THREE years ago two zebras were trotting along in the mountains of southern Africa. Between them was a little zebra whom we shall call Billy. The two other zebras were Billy's mamma and papa.

They were going to the plains below to feed on the grass and tender sprouts. But Billy was not content to feed lazily day after day; he was always looking longingly to the green hills farther on.

"Oh, how I would like to see the world from the tops of those green hills!" he thought.

Billy trotted a little way beyond the circle of their feeding. But he heard his mother's sharp snort of command and he turned back; not without a wistful look at the hills.

"Danger lurks beyond those hills," his mother told him.

But Billy would not believe; he wished to see for himself.

The small family grazed all day, and toward night they lay down for their night's rest. But Billy did not sleep. His thoughts were with the green hills. The mother was sleeping peacefully as Billy finally stole off through the night, headed for the green hills. Billy kept on traveling, until dawn found him on the ridge of the green hills, tired and hungry.

He was nibbling at the short tufts of grass when he heard a step behind him, and turning his head he perceived a zebra about the same size as himself.

Billy whinnied a greeting and the other answered with a toss of his head.

"Where are you going?" asked the stranger.

"Oh," Billy replied, "I intend to graze in the valley below and then go on and see some of the world."

"I, myself, have the same intention," the other declared.

So they trotted side by side down to the valley. There was a dense foliage of trees in the lower valley and Billy and his new friend walked through it. When they reached the open space they heard the shouts of men.

Billy was astounded and paralyzed with fear, but the other ran off. Billy knew not which way to turn, when he felt a rough rope thrown around his neck and the next instant he was lying on the ground with his feet tied. He tried to bite, but he could not reach any of the men with his sharp teeth. The captors were men from the zoo, hunting for zebras and other wild animals for a collection.

Thus was the wayward Billy captured, and you see him standing inside the fence at the park. He often wonders what has become of his loving mother, and thinks of her warnings.

He had reached the green hills and saw what was beyond. Harlan Ball (age 13).

Bradford, Pa.

How "Ze-Brah" Got Its Stripes

Second Prize

ONCE UPON A TIME there lived in the land of Vosturia a herd of wild ponies, who played every day on the meadow and had a very happy time. But one of the young ponies, called "Ah-we," was not happy, but was always discontented.

One day Ah-we met Ne-ko the rabbit.

"Oh, wise rabbit," cried Ah-we, "tell me why I am so unhappy!"

"You are a very wise pony," was Ne-ko's foolish reply, "and should not stay here all your life, but go out and see the world."

So Ah-we began to long to see the world. One day an opportunity for escape came. He had gone with his mother to a near-by hill to get food. She left him standing on the hillside while she climbed to the top. "Now is my chance," thought Ah-we, and away he ran, and did not stop till he came to a brook, by which he lay down and slept.

In the morning he awoke and started on. He traveled many miles until evening, when he came to a garden, in the center of which a fountain bubbled.

"Here at last," thought Ah-we, "is a place of rest!"

He staggered in, lay down, and, surrounded by the sweet perfume of the flowers, fell asleep.

Suddenly his peaceful sleep was disturbed by angry voices. He was picked up and carried by four soldiers into a large building—a palace. In the middle on a throne sat the king, and near him his fairy godmother, Wistee.

"What has this pony done?" roared the king.

"O majesty," said a soldier, "he has run away from home and slept last night in your flower garden!"

"Oh, wicked pony! How shall I punish him?" asked the king of Wistee.

Turning to the chief scribe she said, "Bring hither ten bottles of your best ink and a brush."

When the ink was brought Wistee ordered the artist to paint big black stripes around Ah-we's body. Then she said: "Because you have been naughty I have punished you. You and your children shall always look as you do now, for these stripes will not come off. You shall be called 'Ze-brah,' which means "the punished.' And whenever anyone sees a 'Zebra' they will think of him as the descendant of a naughty pony, who ran away from home."

Chicago. Harry L. Bird, Jr. (age 13).

Uncle Tim's Story

Third Prize

LITTLE ROBERT had been to a show that afternoon. What he enjoyed most was seeing a zebra and being allowed to ride on its back. Immediately after reaching his home he sought out Uncle Tim and asked why the zebra had stripes on his back. This old darky was a genius at story telling, and agreed to tell him if he would be quiet and listen.

"Wal, one time de animuls wuz all frien'ly, an' dey decided to have a fair. Even de 'coons wuz invited. It wuz to be at Br'er Sinnerman B'ar's house, an' he fixed a lot o' benches fur 'em to set on. He tole his kids to paint de benches, but de leas' one put some sour merlasses in his black paint an' when he had painted his bench it didn't dry up but stayed sticky an'——"

Here Robert interposed: "But bears can't paint, Uncle Tim. A man must have painted it for them."

"No, dey wa'n't no mans in doze days. But when de day uv de fair come all de animuls wuz dere, an' two colts went an' layed down on de sticky bench. Dey went ter sleep an' rolled over an' over an' got de merlasses an' paint all over 'em.

"Dat merlasses wuz ser sour dat dey nurver did grow enny mo'. Dat's how it happens dat de zebers is littler dan hosses an' dat dey is so striped. I guess it must 'a' been white colts, fur zebers have white stripes.

"An' now, chile, whenever you go to set down on a bench, be sure dat it's not sticky."

"Weren't the other animals afraid of them after that?" asked Robert.

"Yep, dey all run off, but perty soon dey got used to 'em—dat is, all 'cept Br'er Mamuth an' his kids. Dey run——"

"What is a mamuth, Uncle Tim?" interrupted Robert.

"Aw, er—it's er animal dat's bigger'n er eliphunt. Dey ain't none lef' now, 'cause Br'er Mamuth an his kids wuz so skeered o' de zebers dat they run clear off, an' it quite ex-tinc-ted 'em." Groves Kilbourn (age 13).

Canyon, Texas.

Ted's Pet Zebra

Third Prize

ONE TIME after a circus had spent its season in the West it was traveling eastward through the mountains, and going through a narrow pass was approaching a wrecked bridge. A small boy who lived in the mountains came running down to warn the engineer, but was too late. The train crashed through the bridge and the animal cages were wrecked and many animals were injured.

Among them were the pretty striped zebras, who ran away, leaving behind one much smaller than the others, who was badly crippled.

Ted, looking over the ruins of the wreck, found the little zebra. He went home for a cart, and his father, who was a veterinary, went with him to take the little zebra home. Then they cared for him and doctored him until he was able to walk.

As the days passed on Ted discovered that his pet was growing very old or, at least, very gray; for his pretty stripes were disappearing.

One day when Ted was playing with him he watched him to see how he acted; then he went and told his father that something was the matter with his pet.

His father examined him, and then laughed and laughed. Then poor Ted realized for the first time that underneath his stripes of paint his zebra was a common jackass.

Helen Alford (age 10).

Shawnee, Okla.

How Robert Got a Zebra

Third Prize

ONE DAY last summer Uncle Joe, who always takes my little brother Robert and me to the circus, took us to the Ringling Brothers' show. After seeing the ring performance, uncle took us to see the animals and told us all about each one; but when we came to the zebras Robert listened with greater interest. Robert took a great fancy to the zebra and wanted one for a riding pony. Uncle told him they would not be gentle like our pony Billy, and that Billy was much nicer for us to ride or drive. But Robert liked the striped pony and still regretted he could not have one.

Well, the next day after the circus brother and I went out to play and he told me he knew how to make a tame zebra—one we both could ride. I was surprised, but he explained his own plan and we were soon busy.

Our Billy is a dark brown Shetland, and Robert told me to run in and get auntie's calico she had to line her quilt with and we would make strips to wind around Billy, like zebra stripes.

I hesitated at first, but Robert insisted, so I slipped auntie's calico out to Billy's quarters and there we wound and fastened the strips on Billy just like zebra stripes. Then Robert ran to the workshop, returning with uncle's pail of white paint. Just think, we painted Billy all over, between the strips, and left him to dry!

(Continued on page 687)

BRADFORD HORTON, MAN

BY RICHARD S. HOLMES

CHAPTER XXVIII.—Continued

IT WAS on Saturday night, two weeks later, that Joe and Charlie, with two guides, entered the camp of the Great Northern Lumber Company in upper Minnesota. It was the night of the week when the lumberjacks gathered in from their work for a night and day of recreation. There were more than a hundred of them—tough, hard, strong fellows, with no regard for God and but little for man, though they understood fairly well the persuasive power of a gun. For law they cared nothing; each man was his own law. The one who could fell the most trees in a day and chop them into log lengths, the one who could drink the most whisky without becoming intoxicated, the one who could tramp all night and chop all day, the one who dared to bet his whole pile on the game—this one was accounted the best man in the forest.

The guides with Joe and Charlie were Abram Hall and his son Jack. Abram was a man of large experience, knew every man in that section of the woods and anything or anyone for whom he vouched was welcome in any camp. He took Joe and Charlie to a small unoccupied bunkhouse. "Go in. Ye'll be safe. Nobody 'll tech ye. Ef any fellow does, ye holler for Abe Hall."

Jack made a fire and coffee and cooked supper, and after it the two went out among the pines. They heard singing presently and started to get nearer. Meeting Abram, they asked him who was the singer.

"The mish'nary," he replied. "He's jest come in tonight. Most fellers calls him 'The Hooter.' I'm sorry he's come in."

"Why?" asked Charles Elmore.

"'Cause yer down on yer luck. Thar won't be no circumstantial evidence goin' while the mish'nary's in. He busts the game every time."

"What do you mean by 'busting the game'?" asked Charles Elmore.

"Keepin' the jacks from gettin' bilin' drunk. Keepin' 'em from drawin' knives an' pullin' guns, an' all sich."

"Well, Abram, that's a good thing."

"No, sir, 'tain't. 'Twon't do fer nobody ter bust the game too often. Jacks wouldn't be jacks ef ye busted the game too often."

"What's the missionary's name? Where did he come from?"

"Where did he come from? Don't nobody know. He come in one night with a little wooden box, all fastened up tight. He was carryin' her in his hand by a handle. He sot that 'ar box down, an' opened her up, an' began punchin' her with his hands, an' trampin' on her with his feet, an' she begun to squeak out tunes. Next thing we knew he was a singin' a tune. Yas, he was, a singin', an' the jacks listenin'.

"An' I tell you he can sing. No jack never heerd no sich singin' afore. He went at it easy like, fust off, singin', 'I'm but a stranger here.' 'That's so. You'd better go to yer ma,' one jack hollered. 'Shut up,' roared another. 'I want ter hear that song. I used ter sing that in Sunday school.' Wal, he went on tellin' 'bout heaven's bein' his home. 'Why don't ye go home, sonny?' called out a jack. Then the other jack hopped up and p'inted his gun, an' sez, 'You do that ag'in an' I'll make a hole through ye.' Wal, the other feller simmered, an' then that singer yelled so every feller in camp jumped. He yelled way up high, 'Heaven is my fatherland,' an' ever sence the jacks has called him 'The Hooter.'"

"Does he preach?" asked Charles Elmore.

"Preach? Wal, that's the queer thing. I allus s'posed mish'naries preached, but he don't. Jes' talks—but by gum he's the durndest talker ever I see! Poker Bill kin talk, but the mish'nary kin give Bill the hull dickshunary an' then beat him fust showdown."

"What sort of talking?" asked Charles Elmore.

"Yarns. Durndest yarns ever I heerd. 'Bout a feller makin' lame men walk an' deef men hear, an' all such as that. Tells 'em jes' 's though he b'lieved 'em. An' the jacks listen jes' 's though they was little boys a-listenin' to their mas."

"What did you say his name was?" asked Charles Elmore again.

"Didn't say. Don't nobody know. Some feller asked him, an' sez he, 'Jes' call me the mish'nary. That's name enuff fer me.'"

As they talked they had been strolling nearer the spot from which the music had come, and now once more the voice of the singer rose, clear, sweet and strong, in the words, "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." Two of the three listeners started, with a surprised exchange of significant glances.

"Abram," said Joe, "take us round back of your missionary, so we can see him without disturbing him."

Making a circuit they reached a spot quite close to the little organ, but where they were unseen behind some great trees. One glance was enough. "I knew there weren't two men alive with voices like that," said Joe. "Abram, we've seen your missionary before."

"Sh-h!" said the guide gruffly. "Don't ye hear he's a-talkin'?"

The speaker was already well into the midst of his talk, and from their vantage point they could hear every word:

"He was dead, boys," he was saying; "just as dead as Jimmie the Snipe when the big pine fell and the stake went through his body. There wasn't any doubt about Jimmie the Snipe, was there?" An emphatic shaking of heads answered. "Well, there wasn't any doubt about this man, either. His name was Lazarus. He died, I suppose, because when he was taken sick his doctor had gone away, miles away over a big river. Lazarus had two sisters, and they knew where the doctor had gone, and they sent after him, and finally he got there. But it was too late. The man was dead before the doctor reached the place where he lived. The funeral was over, too. He had been buried four days.

"They didn't dig graves in the earth in that country as we do. They cut big holes in the rocks and laid the dead bodies in on shelves, and put a big flat stone at the opening of the tomb to hold it safe. When the doctor got there he asked where they had buried his friend. So the girls took him out to show him. It was right in their own garden. Well, when the doctor saw it he felt mighty bad, and he said, 'Take away the stone.' And they said, 'Oh, no! He's been dead four days.' 'Take it away, I tell you,' said the doctor. So they took it away. Then that doctor prayed. Doctors don't do that very often. None of you ever saw a doctor go to a dead man's grave and begin to pray. Well, he did. And then he called out loud, oh, very loud, 'Lazarus, come forth!' And what do you think? Out he came. Yes, he did, men. He came right out. I tell you they were happy, for that dead man had come to life. And they all went up to the house where the man had lived, and they had dinner. That doctor's name was Jesus, boys. Did you ever hear of him before? Yes, you have. I've told you about him."

And without a break he began to sing the second verse of the song already begun—

> "Are you weak and heavy laden,
> Cumbered with a load of care?"

As the dramatic recital of the story of the raising of Lazarus had been in progress, it had grown constantly harder for Joe to hold his enthusiasm in check. As the verse of the song finished he broke away from Abram's detaining clutch. "Let me go!" he ordered. "He's my long lost brother, I tell you, man!" And he ran out from behind the sheltering trees. With a mighty clap on the shoulder of the singer he spun that surprised young man square round, to look into the beaming faces of two friends he had not seen in what seemed far more than eighteen months.

"That's great, old chap!" Joe was crying excitedly. "That beats the best thing you ever did in Prestonbury! That beats Greek Testament, it beats banking, it beats anything! Shake hands, old man, shake hands!" He hardly left it possible to do so, so tight was his grip on the two brown hands he held.

Around them there arose a hubbub of cries and remonstrances from the jacks, angry at the intrusion. "Get out o' here!" roared those nearest. "What ye breakin' up our meetin' fer? Get out o' here, or we'll run ye up!"

"No, you won't, boys," Joe Jickers told them jubilantly. "The mish'nary won't let you touch me. I'm half a doctor myself, but that yarn the Hooter told beats the band. This Hooter's my friend. I know him. You don't. I'm going to tell you his name. He's Professor Bradford Horton of Prestonbury, N. Y., and he's about the best fellow in the woods."

"That's all right. He's the best fellow, all right, but who the hell be ye? What ye breakin' up our meetin' fer?"

Bradford came to the rescue. "Hold on, boys," he said, and the men quieted at once. "This is a friend of mine, just as he said. He's told you my name; I'll tell you his. He's Joe Jickers. Not very big in body, but his heart's as big as that of any jack in the woods; big as Abe Hall's; big as Poker Bill's. Put up your guns. Come and shake hands with my friends, Joe Jickers and Charlie Elmore. Then I'll sing."

Joe was equal to the occasion. He knew men by intuition, and he said just the right thing in the right way to each of the men who crowded up. The hand-shaking over, Bradford said, "Now, boys, close right up, and any fellow that knows the song I am going to sing, pipe up, too." He sounded the note on the little organ, and, standing under the great old trees, he, a homeless man, led those homeless men in the dearest of all songs to a man who has once known what the word home means, "Home, Sweet Home."

There was dead silence under the pines when the music died away. In that hush Horton's voice, low, sweet, tender, began the old prayer whose first words are, "Our Father." Then, "Good night, jacks," he said. "Don't fight tonight. Let the cards go tonight. Tomorrow's Sunday, and I want my friends here to see you all sober in the morning. Will you promise?"

"You bet!" came back the roar from all around him as he turned to go with Joe and Charlie to their bunkhouse, a much surprised but very happy man.

CHAPTER XXIX.

TIDINGS FROM THE FOREST

WHEN, LONG after midnight, Bradford Horton left his friends and departed to his own cabin, he was informed of all that had happened in Prestonbury since his departure. He had learned for the first time of his mother's death, and of its important consequence to him in Mr. Elmore's change of attitude.

"He knows now," his thoughts ran as he sat down alone in his lantern-lighted hut, "he knows how unfair he was, how cruelly hard he was and how absolutely true I was. Eleanor always knew it. Bless her dear heart! She believed in me in spite of her father. Ah, well, we might have been very happy, she and I, in that house on Branscombe's point. It can never be now. Now that I'm free, as far as her father's concerned, to tell Antigone I love her, I'm not free in another way. I mustn't ask her. I cannot ask her to come to a log cabin in a forest, and here's where I must stay, for here God sent me. I could tell Professor Dragham now to what I was called; I've enough 'sum of direction' to show it."

Then, as the face of his dreams rose before him, wistful pleading in the lustrous eyes, he dropped his head on his arms on the table with a groan.

"Oh, Antigone, am I breaking your heart too? I'm yours; I'll always be yours. But I cannot leave my work even for you. It may be thus God will have me atone for my father's sins. But, dear one, it's far harder to give you up when it's only at the word of my own conscience, of my own will, than when circumstances forced us apart. God is stronger even than your father."

For a moment he sat so, then rose resolutely. "This will not do," he said. "I have work to

(Continued on page 688)

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

May 25, 1913—Joseph and Benjamin

Everyday View of the Lesson

By J. L. Scott

Lesson Text, Genesis 43. Golden Text, I. John 2:10: He that loveth his brother abideth in the light.

Blood runs in a single channel. The slightest deviation is likely to create complications farther on. Such was the disaster that came to Israel. There were two channels when there should have been but one. No roof was ever spacious enough for two houses. Israel had tried it. In one house lived Leah and in the other Rachel. The result was two halves of a home rather than one complete home. Joseph was a half brother to the other ten. The father should have loved all his sons equally well, but he didn't. The love that he bore Rachel was perpetuated in her children. This the other sons saw and resented. That Joseph, however, should have suffered for his father's sin does not seem to accord with our sense of justice; but God's ways are not ours, and the end did not fail to justify the means. The purpose of all history lies revealed in its closing chapter. But the reader becomes impatient. He judges from partial knowledge and thus misunderstands God.

Joseph's Purposes Were Gentle, Though His Dealings Seemed Harsh

Joseph's treatment of his brothers was after the same plan of God's treatment of him. His purpose was godlike, although the process at times may have appeared as unjust and cruel. Joseph's accusation that his brothers were spies, his detention of Simeon and the condition that Benjamin must accompany them else they could never again see his face, seemed arbitrary and unjust, but these actions were evidences of a love which even his own father could not comprehend. And so we try to think of God's dealings with us. At times it may be hard to believe they are only good, but faith would lead where we cannot see. Such is religion applied to life. Many seem to regard their faith as bringing immunity from the reverses that come to others. Service to them is a contract with God. They give so much for an equal amount in return. Then comes adversity and with it the soul sickening thought that either God is not, else he is unjust. But God has not promised immunity from suffering. "In the world ye have tribulation," says Jesus, "but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world." His strength is to become ours. The mountain may not be removed, but we shall have strength sufficient to ascend it. Nor is the element of punishment always present. Joseph was not punished but tested. But for our reverses we would never know what God is.

The time came when a second visit must be made to the land of Egypt. The first supply of bread was only temporary and five years of famine were yet to come. God gives no man sufficient grace at one time to last him all through life. The Christian who is better at his conversion than he ever becomes again has good grounds to doubt that he ever was converted.

"Give us this day our daily bread" is the one prayer that all must offer. Jacob was a man of precaution. He knew that the bread supply would soon be exhausted, so he ordered his sons back to Egypt for the second time. The second time is often more difficult than the first. The element of speculation is eliminated and reality faces us at the very outset. So it was with the sons of Israel.

Jacob Is Tried to the Very Limit of His Strength

The conditions imposed were of the hardest kind. Benjamin was now a young man, and without him they could not see the governor's face. This was the final blow that brought the patriarch to the earth. "Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away; all these things are against me." Some have criticised the patriarch for his lack of faith, but Jacob was being tried to the very limit of his strength. He was wrestling with a power stronger than himself. Starvation was knocking at his door, and response was becoming more urgent every hour. Israel, although a man of faith, was also familiar with works. Memory of the means by which he would have appeased Esau came to him in his dealings with the man in Egypt. Costly presents and double the money found in the grain sacks made up an offering for the hard Egyptian with whom he was compelled to deal. But some things transcend money value. Benjamin must be included. "If I be bereaved of my children, I am bereaved." He had reached the end.

The second journey was but a repetition of the first, with additional complications. Wherever one goes he must take his conscience along. The past is always present. A guilty conscience ever predicts the worst. But the steward at the door gave the brothers assurance of peace. This steward, although possibly not a Hebrew, knew the language and appears to have been in the confidence of his master. It is always very difficult for a sincere man to act a part. Joseph was a brother and slowly the disguise began to disappear. The salutation was changed to suit the hour. "Is your father well, the old man of whom ye spake? Is he yet alive?" And then he lifted up his eyes and saw Benjamin, "his mother's son." Twenty years had passed since he had last seen him. The child had become a man, while Joseph had arisen from obscurity to the towering heights of political power.

All the Movements of Life Directed by Hand of God

But position cannot change relationship—brothers are brothers to the end of time. "God be gracious unto thee, my son." It was all that he could say, but Joseph saw in the young man what no historian could describe. The features of his mother still lived in that youthful face, and the scene by the wayside came back with all the force of unforgotten love. Joseph retired to his chamber and was a child again. The table was soon prepared and each given a place according to his birthright, all save Joseph, who, as an Egyptian, ate by himself.

God no more creates the workman than he does his work. The workman's body is no more a piece of mechanism than is his life. We act from will or impulse, only to learn that God sat behind the curtain and directed all from the very first. Such is the teaching of Joseph.

The Lesson Verse by Verse

By Hermon D. Jenkins.

Analysis—There must be more than one interview with the Ruler before men in need understand him. But the suppliants get more than they ask for. Their presents are ignored but their persons are treated with honor. Forgiveness is crowned with such a feast as only royal favor can bestow.

The first seventeen verses of this chapter constitute the connecting link between this lesson and the one which preceded it. We remember that Simeon had been left as a hostage in Egypt by the command of Joseph, who knew that in this way he would secure a second interview with his older brothers and probably procure the presence of Benjamin, toward whom his heart went out tenderly. The food the brothers had bought in Egypt was nearly gone and the famine was not sensibly relieved (vs. 1-2). It would be needful to repeat the journey and once more to intercede with this agent of Pharaoh for enough to keep soul and body together. But when Jacob urged them to make the second trip they responded that it would be useless unless he was willing to send Benjamin with them (v. 3).

It was only after many disputations that Jacob consented to the arrangement (v. 13), and then he instructed them to take a present of such little as the land now produced (v. 11) to propitiate this strange vicegerent whose next demands no one could foresee.

To the surprise of the sons of Jacob they were received with every mark of honor and found themselves on their arrival in Egypt the guests of the prince at his own private house (v. 16). Before they were aware of his intentions they were brought to the court of this powerful ruler and, in no little trepidation, they awaited the next move.

Verse 18—Whispering among themselves, the sons of Jacob made up their minds their detention was all on account of the money which somebody had put into their bags, the money which should have been kept as pay for the grain they bought (ch. 42:28). They had never felt easy about that. They knew how often such tricks were played in the Orient, one man hiding stolen property in another man's belongings in order to make up a case against him.

Verse 19—They got hold of the chief steward of Joseph's household and tried to explain to him their fears and to prove their innocence, since they had brought the money back with them untouched.

Verse 23—But this officer appeared strangely indifferent to the whole transaction. He said: "Don't worry about that. I was paid all right. I received your money. Whatever you found in your baggage you had better thank God for and keep still about it. If nobody makes any fuss you don't need to." And before they had time to guess what was in reserve for them this same man went out and brought in Simeon!

Verse 24—Wonder of wonders! They were received as distinguished guests. They were ushered from the outer court to the inner house and found preparation made for their comfort such as they had never been accustomed to at home. Besides, the beasts of burden on which they had come were sent to the stables and fed with grain to which the poor creatures had long been strangers.

Joseph Ignores Presents in Interest in Brothers and Their Kin

Verse 26—The brothers were much occupied with the present they had brought, a poor and trifling thing, we may be sure, considering their long distress, Even in the days of plenty there was not much in Canaan that a prince of Egypt would desire. Yet how many men flatter themselves that when they become Christians they give the Lord of glory something well worth his grateful acknowledgment!

Verse 27—So far as the narrative informs us, Joseph never looked at the present, but was interested only in themselves and their kin. He did not seem to set much store by their gums and wild honey and few mountain nuts. The prodigal who went back to the father's house did not take any of the husks with him to give to his father. The sinner who comes to God empty-handed will perhaps the better realize the divine abundance.

Verse 28—Joseph inquired in more than a formal way after their welfare and passed quickly to inquire as to whether their father still lived.

Verse 29—But when he suddenly saw his brother Benjamin his reserve broke down, and to conceal his emotion he had to leave the room (v. 30). It was only by a supreme effort that he controlled himself and reappeared with the dignity becoming his position as a prince and host (v. 31).

True Forgiveness Is Never Satisfied with Simply Forgiving

Verse 32—The etiquette of the court was carried out after a fashion and the customs of each country strictly preserved. Nothing was permitted to happen which would mar the good feeling of the hour. The scene is a beautiful illustration of the character of forgiveness, but it does not equal that our Saviour gives us in St. Luke 15, in the picture of the son who had made life itself such a burden to his sire, welcomed back by that father to a more than regal banquet. For our own part, we can be quite sure that our forgiveness of an enemy has not been all it should be if it contents itself in not doing harm and fails to seek means of doing good to one who has formerly injured us.

Verse 33—While the company was divided into groups, those groups were not suggestive of any favors except such as rested upon custom. All were treated alike, except the youthful Benjamin, toward whom Joseph was drawn by natural feeling of fraternal affection.

Verse 34—It seems to have been the object of Joseph's feast partly to give himself time to study his brothers, of whose sincerity and penitence he was not quite sure, and partly to break down their timid reserve which might stand in the way of the plans he was forming for the future. Before God can do all for us that he would do we must learn to trust him without reserve and without fear.

DEVOTIONAL SERVICE

BY EDWARD ARTHUR WICHER

Week Beginning May 18, 1913

TOPIC—The wise steward. Luke 12:42-48.

This parable is given us in two entirely different settings, here and in Matthew 24:43. It is evident that Jesus held this exhortation to watchfulness and fidelity to be of so great importance that he repeated it at least twice during the latter end of his public ministry. It is just as evident that Peter was so confident of his own fidelity and watchfulness that he felt no need of this exhortation. And it is Peter's word of interruption in verse 41 that called forth the warning of his Master.

—

"Lord, speakest thou this parable unto us, or even unto all?" Peter's question doubtless refers back to verse 37, where Jesus says: "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them sit down to meat, and shall come and serve them." Peter likes the prospect of such ample treatment at the hands of his Lord. But he wonders just how many of Christ's followers are to be so dealt with. When Jesus speaks in parables he ordinarily addresses the multitude. Are they all to be included among those watchful servants, who will be thus rewarded? If so, there is a danger that the favor may be somewhat attenuated by being so widely spread around. But perhaps Christ means to restrict his favor to the twelve. In this hope Peter puts his question.

—

But Jesus does not like this question. It assumes too much on Peter's side, namely, that he and his associates will surely be found to be watchful servants, and that they need have no other consideration than the extent to which their Master's favor is to reach. The former parable was not simply one of promise of a reward for faithfulness, it was also an exhortation unto faithfulness. But lest the exhortation should be overlooked in the promise the Master adds this discourse from which the parable of the wise and faithful steward is taken. Jesus answers one question by asking another, which tells Peter not what he wants to know but what it is important for him to know.

—

The steward of Roman times was a slave who enjoyed the special confidence of his master, and who was intrusted with the management of his master's property and the expenditure of his master's income. He had other slaves under him for the right conduct of his office. He appointed the duties and controlled the activities of the rest of the family, whether at the town house or the country villa.

—

The duties of the steward were specially onerous and responsible whenever the master might absent himself from his estate. There was then no eye to observe his conduct, and no appeal from his decisions. If he were not a wise and faithful steward he might easily forget that he was a servant at all and think himself to be the master.

—

And this is just what happened in the case of the faithless steward. He presumed upon the continued absence of his lord, and practically persauded himself that there never could be any reckoning for his conduct. He began to abuse the other servants, to be cruel and self-indulgent, to be drunken. His confidence in his impunity increased with his descent into wickedness. This is the characteristic folly of sin.

—

The exceeding deceitfulness of sin is one of the recurring themes of the Bible. The need of watchfulness is one of its constant admonitions. We are bidden to guard our lips, to guard our hearts, to guard our thoughts. It is so easy to fall into sin unawares. We intend to be truthful; we love truthfulness. And yet some day we are a little too confident of our strength and rectitude, a little too desirous to gain an end; and before we know it words have passed beyond our lips which have conveyed a false impression to the detriment of our brethren and the injury of our souls. We intend to be honest; we love uprightness and hate graft. And yet in our cramped circumstances our thought has lingered too long over the delights of a life with plenty of money. We have insensibly grown to love money. Sudden temptation to quick wealth has been presented to our eyes. And we have fallen, the victims of the very sins we once so loudly condemned in others. We love purity and hate uncleanness. And yet we have not resolutely thrust aside the sensuous images that have arisen in our minds. We have harbored evil thoughts, and even welcomed them. And nothing remains between us and the hour of our fall but a sudden, swift temptation.

—

This is the experience not of the exceptional man but of multitudes of the men who stand close around us. If God has kept us pure and true we should rejoice with trembling and give him thanks for the power of an unstained life.

—

No man who falls ever intended to fall. Most men, just before their most signal overthrow, have thought themselves too strong to fall. Peter did. And the warning to watchfulness and fidelity is never inappropriate.

Even the best of us are only half awake to our dangers, and less than half awake to our duties. We are often actually drunken, when we should be alert and attentive to our Lord's business, steadfastly watching for his return.

—

Woe to that servant whom his Lord shall find faithless. What the full meaning of the figure of the stripes may be we cannot here determine. The servant who knew not his Lord's will was responsible for not knowing, and he was punished. His punishment was indeed less than that of the servant who knew his Lord's will and did it not; because his sin was less. But every transgression of his Lord's will, great and little, will meet with its full penalty in the day of reckoning.

—

Do we desire to be strong? Then we must be watchful. Do we desire to be honest? Then we must be watchful. Do we desire to be true? Then we must be watchful. Do we desire to be pure? Then we must be watchful. Do we desire to be worthy of our blessed Lord's approval and glad commendation? Then we must be watchful. And above all, blessed is that servant whom Christ has placed over a congregation of his fellow servants, that he may give them a portion of bread in due season, and whom, when his Lord cometh, he shall find so doing.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SERVICE

COMMENTS IN BRIEF BY WILLIAM T. ELLIS

May 25, 1913

THE GOSPEL AND LABOR

TOPIC—Mission work at home and abroad. V. Industrial missions. Acts 18:1-6.

The strength of the church is the everyday man who labors. Though the rich man may do his part, the Christian ministry understands full well that it is the small, regular gifts of the workingman rather than the contributions of the few large givers which pay the expenses of church work. This is true on the financial side. It is doubly true on the side of service and worship. The great bulk of the church membership of North America is made up of workingmen. The best friends and followers of the Nazareth Carpenter have ever been the men who toil.

—

One of the finest of all poems of labor is Henry van Dyke's "Toiling of Felix." These extracts may stand by themselves:

"Every mason in the quarry, every builder on the shore,
Every chopper in the palm grove, every raftsman at the oar,

"Hewing wood and drawing water, splitting stones and cleaving sod,
All the dusty ranks of labor, in the regiment of God,

"March together toward his triumph, do the task his hands prepare:
Honest toil is holy service; faithful work is praise and prayer.

* * * * *

"They who tread the path of labor follow where my feet have trod;
They who work without complaining do the holy will of God.

* * * * *

"This is the gospel of labor, ring it, ye bells of the kirk!
The Lord of Love came down from above to live with the men who work.
This is the rose that he planted, here in the thorn-curst soil:
Heaven is blest with perfect rest, but the blessing of earth is toil."

—

"The Great Catastrophe of 1913" is what Dr. Charles M. Sheldon called a brilliant allegory which he published recently. It pictured the gradual palsying of the hands that labored. This strange affliction spread from man to man, until all the hands that did the world's work were useless. In kitchen, mill, shop, mine—wherever men and women toiled with their hands this mysterious epidemic spread. When soft-handed brain workers and employers tried to take the place of the laborers, they, too, became afflicted. All the machinery of civilization was stopped within a week. Then, in the darkness of this unparalleled calamity, the world learned how dependent it is on the manual worker. Dr. Sheldon's dramatic allegory was a unique tribute to the part industry plays in life.

—

On the mission field, as everywhere else, Christianity has to do with men who work. In some lands, notably in India, the missionaries have had to train their converts up into new forms of self-support. Rejected from their old relationships because they have become Christians, these natives have to be taught other industries. Thus it is that in India especially there are a great many industrial missions, some of which are almost wholly self-supporting.

—

"Ascend a step in choosing a friend" is the wise saying. The choice of Christ by multitudes of pagans has resulted in their rising to a new and higher plane of life. The case of Christian Indian sons of outcaste fathers who become converts is in point. There are young men in the government service in India today whose stimulus to new life and whose education were secured through the missionaries, who are making more money in a month than their fathers made in a year. They have risen above the old despised caste and have become honored members of the community. With them, as ever, the gospel has meant largeness of life as well as newness of life.

—

The old cry "rice Christians" is seldom heard nowadays. It once was freely charged that Asiatics became Christians only for gain. The strength and self-support and benevolence of the native Christians are a sufficient answer to this. On the whole, the converts on the mission field give more, relatively, to the work of the gospel than the Christians in the home land.

—

The lacemaking of Armenia, China, India, Japan and Korea—immense industries, which now support tens of thousands of persons—was taught to the natives by missionaries, Protestant and Roman Catholic. This is but one instance of the introduction of new vocations by the representatives of the gospel. It was a missionary who invented the jinrikisha, that indispensable vehicle of Asia, which has given employment to hundreds of thousands of men.

—

The gospel has business with all of man, as well as with all men. It imparts self-respect and habits of thrift and industry, so that, for instance, in Korea today the difference between the Christians and the heathen is apparent at a glance. "If any man is in Christ he is a new creature"—all the way through.

Entrance to the Campus, with a Glimpse of Some of the Buildings

Reaching to High Standards at Wilson College

A Pennsylvania School for Young Women Putting Genuine Educational Quality Back of Its Diploma

BY OLIVER R. WILLIAMSON

YOUR DAUGHTER is to enter a world different from that which presented itself to her mother when she reached womanhood. This is obviously an age of woman's recognition. Regardless of views regarding suffrage, she is claiming for herself and is being granted the privilege of living her life in its proper completeness, and the right to a life preparation that shall equal in its standards the education provided for men.

Higher education for woman, now so long accepted as desirable, has done much to foster this movement, and itself has been fostered in turn. Your daughter is quite certain to find her school, wherever she may go, evidencing a stronger educational conscientiousness than her mother discovered in her alma mater. If she seeks an institution providing something more than high school, but something less than a full college course, there is less likely than ever before to be a misleading pretense; the school is frankly a "junior college," seeking in straightforward fashion to fulfill its promises, but not promising beyond possibility of fulfillment.

Modern School Must Fulfill Promises

The institution, on the other hand, that proposes to give your daughter a complete college course is equally bound to give evidence of its just claim to that distinction. There are not many woman's schools in this class, and there is yet some confusion in the minds of parents and students with regard to their exact status. A careless decision is easier than a careful one. But if your daughter's diploma is to stand for real thoroughness, is to be something of which she will have increasing reason to be proud as the years go by, you must find assurance before her precious hours of school life are invested.

The inauguration early last year of Miss Anna J. McKeag, Ph. D., as president of Wilson College was a notable event. Every one of the hundreds of Wilson's alumnæ must have thrilled with pride to read of the proceedings which drew to Chambersburg such a distinguished company—Dr. van Dyke from Princeton, the president of Wellesley, a host of other prominent college heads and representatives, officials and dignitaries of various sorts. It was a fine tribute to the institution and its new president. It was a great day for Chambersburg. But was it a mere passing gala day? If so, Wilson and its friends might well have devoted the time to other purposes. Let us see.

Viewed in relation to Wilson College's present and future, the joining of Miss McKeag to the institution—if one may so refer to the association—meant that high educational ideals are continuously to be made real at Wilson College. As professor of education at Wellesley College, Dr. McKeag had gained a reputation as an educator which she would scarcely have jeopardized by assuming responsibilities with a school which could not gain and hold the best standards. Happily, Wilson's career of four decades has led quite logically to this situation, and President McKeag finds herself in position to meet the responsibility placed upon her.

In the Famous Cumberland Valley

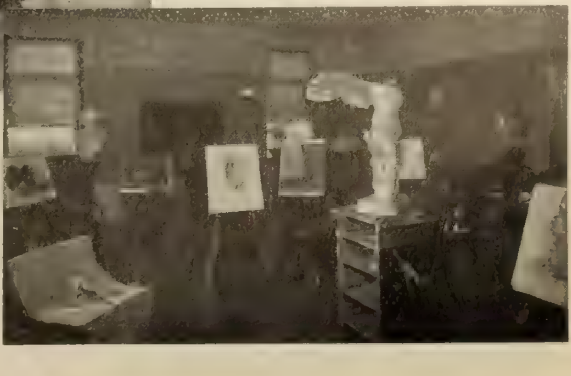
For a century and a half the fair Cumberland valley has been the abode of a thrifty, sturdy people who have clung tenaciously to the homes there established through the energy of the first comers. Rocky hillsides as well as the fertile depressions have been made to yield their portion year after year. Large fortunes have not been gained, and thousands of the younger folk have perforce gone forth to find futures elsewhere—many of them to earn wealth and distinction. But a characteristic substantiality shows almost universally, in this famous section, what may be achieved by intelligent persistence. Even the farmhouses from which go forth the plowmen to test their shares on what prairie farmers would consider impossibly stony hills are models of comfort and permanence.

Years ago Colonel A. K. McClure, famous as an American journalist and scion of the indomitable Scotch-Irish stock that survives in this region, built himself a beautiful home on the outskirts of Chambersburg. In time he found himself no longer able to make use of it, and the mansion became the home of Wilson College in its beginning. This structure, still a part of the equipment, is as perfect today as it was forty years ago. Donald G. Mitchell—known to an older generation of readers as "Ik Marvel," and who was also a landscape gardener—laid out the campus; and the present-day visitor finds no fault with his ability.

We cannot here trace the history of the college through these years. A dozen buildings are now required for its operation, and the fame of

On the Conochocheague

Busy in a Laboratory, Science Hall



A Corner of the Art Studio

A Student's Room

its work has been made secure in the splendid lives of hundreds of women who have enriched many sections of America with their presence. Educationally the institution has maintained a consistent relation to the development of the country in general and of the immediate East to which it has given special service. The final elimination of a preparatory department and insistence upon requirements that insure a homogeneous student body mark developments that mean much to the future of the college and its graduates.

Dr. McKeag, coming from her responsible position at Wellesley—an institution that cannot accommodate all who seek admittance—has admirably organized the work at Wilson. The secretary of the college, Miss W. J. Criswell, cooperates with the president in the administration of academic matters. Under the efficient direction of G. H. Bartle—with a strong executive board in cooperation—the business management constitutes a department properly separate from the purely educational functions of the school. The intimate personal attention to the students so important in a school for young women is especially the province of the registrar, Miss Frances L. Knapp, for a number of years associated with Ferry Hall, Lake Forest. Sympathetic relations between instructors and students are readily evident even to the chance visitor, and Miss Knapp's work does much to foster the "family" feeling that binds the young woman with ties of love to her temporary home.

Thomson Hall—Illustrative of the Substantial Character of the Buildings at Wilson College

The faculty with which President McKeag is associated as leader would well justify a more definite discussion than is possible here. Miss Adelaide Bird, head of biology, is, for example, a recognized scientific authority, her privately created herbarium being one of the best in the country. Miss Macmillan, Miss Scott and Miss Murray, representing English, history and economics, and psychology and philosophy, came to Wilson with exceptionally good preparation and experience—which may be asserted also of Miss Green (physical science), Miss Criswell (Latin), Miss McComb (German), and others, including Miss Donaldson (English), Miss Bancroft (Greek), Miss Hafer (biological science) and Miss Ingram (physical science).

Miss Bowerman (Latin) holds degrees from Mount Holyoke, University of Rochester and Bryn Mawr, has studied in Bonn and Rome, and was formerly head of the Latin department at Western College. Miss Syvret (French) was also at Western, after an earlier experience at Wilson, is a B. A. of Mount Holyoke and studied at the Sorbonne. Miss Andem (education and French) was graduated with high honor at Wellesley. Miss Voss, who has mathematics during Miss Davison's leave of absence, is an experienced teacher and a graduate of Teachers' College at Columbia.

One of the Twelve Buildings—A Representative Dormitory

Dr. Mansfield's Special Work in Music

The conscientious purpose in which the music courses are conceived has demonstration in the acceptance of the leadership of this department by Dr. Orlando A. Mansfield, late examiner of the London College of Music. Dr. Mansfield has too many degrees to enumerate in form here; he is a fellow of the Royal College of Organists, the author of a "Students' Harmony," now in its seventh edition, and in 1909 was president of the Free Church Musicians' Union of England. Under Dr. Mansfield's supervision a four-manual organ is to be built this summer—the finest organ in this part of the country. Dr. Mansfield is not only an organist but a pianist, composer and writer of accepted ability. Under his direction the place and character of music in church worship are bound to have special attention. He is ably assisted in the department by Miss Andrews, Miss Bashore, Miss Schumacher and Miss Senseney.

Physical Care a Part of College Courses

Physical culture is a recognized course in the school under the direction of Miss Salisbury, and the exceptional health of the students testifies to the value of the department. The water used at the college comes from an absolutely protected source on a mountain reservation owned by the state, the sanitary arrangements are fully modern and all the contributions tributary to healthful living are carefully guarded. The gymnasium is large and well equipped and is properly used in combination with abundant outdoor life.

One of the Attractive Cottages

In a community always dominated by Scotch-Irish it is quite natural that the religious element in the college should be so real that the question need scarcely be raised. The college itself is under care of the Synod of Pennsylvania, and its association with local churches has always been active. Rev. John Allan Blair, pastor of historic Falling Spring church, has long directed the Bible department. Feeling constrained recently to give up this addition to other duties, he has now retired—though still active as a trustee—and is succeeded by Rev. Edwin H. Kellogg. The young women's religious organizations are active and chapel services bring together all the students. The sororities that were for a time in being are to disappear with the graduation of their present members.

The Wilson College campus lies at the north of the fine old city of Chambersburg, sloping down to the winding Conochocheague creek. The buildings, all of excellent character and well maintained, include Music hall, Fletcher hall, Senior hall, President's hall, the gymnasium, Science hall, Frank Thompson hall, the president's residence, infirmary, the "Cottage" and the observatory. The dining hall, well lighted and charming in its tasteful decoration, seats 225. In the exceptionally fine auditorium there are seats for 500, a large pipe organ and two smaller practice organs.

Full College Work at Moderate Cost

Thus briefly we have delineated the outstanding features of this school which is bravely adhering to its ideal of a college training in its true sense. Its leadership, its faculty, its courses and its equipment will, we believe, stand the test of any proper consideration and comparison. To make such provision for the young woman of America, at a cost to her so much less than that demanded by the other schools of the high educational class, is an undertaking of great moment to this Christian college. This is especially to be said because the institution is not benefited from an endowment such as it ought to have and must have.

There is room in America's educational system for many kinds of schools; what may be insisted on is that each shall give the very best possible within its accepted limitations. In the West as well as in the East—and in the South, too—there is many a young woman who wants the best education to be had, and who will find here what she seeks and what she is able to have. She is quite sure to discover, when she comes, that Wilson is living up to its pretensions, and she is equally certain when she goes to have the gratification of knowing that her diploma stands for a fully realized college education.

MISSIONARY WORK

Two New Men for the Foreign Board

The Board of Foreign Missions is now transacting business of three times the expenditure it was supervising twenty years ago, and the scope of its activities in the education of givers at home has increased quite as much as the extent of its work abroad. Yet the executive force, now as then, consists of only four corresponding secretaries. The only extra aid which has come to the secretaries to bear these enlarged burdens is the service of two assistant secretaries, Russell Carter and Dr. Orville Reed. But now that the united missionary campaign looms up ahead, in which the Foreign Board is to join hands with the Home Board, and the Presbyterian Church to join hands with other evangelical denominations in promoting a nationwide "every-member canvass" for benevolences in March, 1914, it becomes absolutely necessary to increase the staff further in order to take care of the missionary conference that is to be held preliminary to that campaign, and other forms of cooperation to which the Foreign Board has committed itself.

In this exigency the board has been grateful to avail itself of the services of two ministers of the younger generation, who both were hindered by personal circumstances in their wish to serve in the foreign field, and who are therefore glad of the opportunity to give their time and strength to the same cause at the home base. These are Rev. William P. Schell, who has been for the last seven years pastor at Seneca Falls, N. Y., and Rev. George T. Scott, who has been assistant chaplain of Hampton Institute. Mr. Scott had experience of foreign work in three years' teaching at the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut. Both these men are ready to enter on their new relations at once, and are confidently expected to manifest power and proficiency. It is a special gratification that they enter the board's service under special arrangements which make only a very inconsiderable addition to the salary list.

"All Aboard!"—A Missionary Company in Korea

This party includes Dr. Bigger, Mr. and Mrs. Roger Winn and their two children, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Fuson, and son, and Mrs. R. K. Smith. The picture is printed by courtesy of President Culberson of Emporia College. All the missionaries are Emporia graduates. Mr. Smith took the picture.

31
SPECIAL CLASS

Where Protestantism Was Unheard Of

Rev. Thomas E. Barber, missionary at Medellin, in the republic of Colombia, South America, when recently on an itinerating tour to Antioqui and Frontino, entered territory where no other Christian church than the Church of Rome had ever been heard of. In Frontino many citizens welcomed privately Mr. Barber and his companion, Senor Navarro, but they advised the missionaries that it would not be safe for them to hold services in the town because of the number of fanatical people through the country roundabout who were entirely subject to the control of the priests. But these citizens urged the Protestants to come again soon, saying they felt sure that public sentiment would defend them in holding meetings when they revisited the place.

At Antioqui a greater breach had occurred between the populace and the priests, because the priests had refused to receive to the confessional any citizens identified with the liberal party. Inasmuch as local liberals included some of the foremost men of the city, this gave the Protestant visitors very influential patronage. The mayor and local congressmen gave them a warm welcome, and Messrs. Barber and Navarro were able to hold services two nights. At San Jeronimo on Sunday, however, the experience at Frontino was repeated, since the mayor advised that an open air service would not be safe. The priest had even forbidden the people to give the American and his companion a place to sleep, but finally about 9 o'clock in the evening they obtained lodging. Mr. Barber had already retired, when to his amazement he was awakened by voices in the house, and descending the stairs, he found a hundred people crowded in the rooms asking him to preach. He complied, and the people not only listened respectfully but urged his early return.

How Koreans Observe the Communion

Dr. Thornton A. Mills of Schenectady, traveling in Korea, writes interestingly of observing communion service in the new Second church at Taikü. This congregation has just been organized as an outgrowth of First church and has an attendance of about 300 at each Sabbath service, though the congregation in First church downtown seems to crowd its building as much as ever. Koreans taking the communion sit upon the floor in native fashion, crowded so close together that it is almost impossible for the elders passing the elements to move among them. Nevertheless, the communicants do not pass the elements among themselves. The average communicant does not even take the cup into his own hands, but drinks as it is held to his lips by the elders.

Part of the communion service was the reception of catechumens into the full membership of the church, while a large group of new believers were enrolled as catechumens after they had been examined in regard to their attendance on services, Sabbath keeping, Bible study and Christian living for six months previous. Dr. Mills observed with interest the ministry of the phonograph, which in many churches renders sacred solos as a regular part of the worship.

Missionary for a Third of Each Year

Rev. Edwin M. Haymaker of Warrensburg, Mo., was for fifteen years a missionary in Guatemala, but has found it impossible in recent years to live in the country all the year around. During the last winter season, however, he has spent four months in Guatemala in entire comfort, and now believes that it will be possible for him to serve the mission for that length of time each year. Rev. William B. Allison, the present director of the Guatemala Presbyterian mission, regards his help so valuable that he seeks now to raise a special fund which will enable Mr. Haymaker to carry out this program. Mr. Allison says: "There is hardly another missionary in the field who understands the people and their language as he. He doesn't have to be furnished with equipment and a home in which to live while here, and doesn't have to spend several years acquiring a working knowledge of the language. He can drop into any position on the field the day he steps from the train and fill it. We feel it is the part of Christian business and common sense to take advantage of this opportunity."

Christian Conference in Bangkok, Siam

"We have just finished three days of conference, a meeting for Christian workers of Siam," writes Miss Annabel Galt. "The railroads make it possible to have delegates from four outstations—Petchaburi, Rathuri, Prepatone, Pitsanuloke. The subject was 'Sowing the Seed,' and that thought was carried throughout. The number attending the largest session was about 200. Of course the total attendance was much more, for people in Bangkok were not as a rule regular attendants. To me the most impressive parts were the addresses which pointed out the unoccupied fields of Siam; whole provinces without any kind of Christian work. That showed Siam's needs in a vivid way."

Turning Away Students at Shantung

A recent letter from Shantung brings the news that "the unique opportunity of Shantung Christian University has just been freshly emphasized at this spring's opening, when in addition to the usual quota of Christian students sixty non-Christian students came crowding in from all directions, and upwards of fifty others had to be turned away for want of room to accommodate them."

Missionary Brevities

—Dr. Franklin E. Hoskins reports that two-thirds of the work of the manuscript and plates of the new reference edition of the Arabic Bible is now completed. The New Testament was recently printed at the end of seven years from the beginning of the undertaking.

—The special China bulletin No. 2 of the Board of Foreign Missions, just issued, carries on its cover an exceedingly interesting picture of the Christian congregation at Tsingtau standing before the church building there. In the middle of the group stand Dr. Sun Yat Sen and his family. The picture was taken on a recent Sabbath when Dr. Sun was in Tsingtau, and refusing all business affairs attended church instead in the little local mission station.

—A rather amusing example of the indifference of Chinese Christians to the denominational distinctions which prevail in America is reported from the union theological seminary which has been established in Nanking. As a basis of the union it was agreed that each mission would maintain a separate class for teaching its own denominational polity. But the students won't stay divided into these denominational classes. Presbyterians go into the class which studies Methodist discipline, and Methodists attend the class engaged on the Westminster Confession. The students want to know all about all the churches.

Board Notes and Announcements

—To Room 48, Chicago, Friday morning brought missionaries from Siam, Central America and Persia. Miss Rumsey of Lake Forest, who led the meeting, thought great blessing would result if all who criticise "The World in Chicago" would pray for it instead. Mrs. C. R. Murray of Resht, on the Caspian sea, told why missionaries in Persia do not get discouraged, even though baptisms are few and the proportion of the number of children in their schools to the thousands outside is small. Mrs. Allison of Guatemala read a letter from a fellow missionary there and rejoiced that more are appointed to go out in July. Dr. Shellman of Pitsanuloke told of villagers in Siam being reached without difficulty after the life of one of them had been saved by surgery; also of a whole family becoming Christians when prayer and care had saved a member whom the spirit doctors could not help, even though they were allowed to practice in his hospital. There should be forty-four instead of four missionaries at his station if the proportion of one to every 125,000 of the population is to be reached.

The Open Hearth

A Rejoinder from Dr. Fox

May I call the attention of The Continent to the following notable words from an article on "The Virgin Birth of Our Lord," by Dr. Charles A. Briggs:

"All of these doctrines are trembling in the balance in those very minds which doubt or deny the virgin birth. Those who give up the virgin birth will be compelled by logical and irresistible impulse eventually to give up all of these."

By "these doctrines" Dr. Briggs has just explained that he means the principal doctrines of the Christian religion, such as the incarnation, the atonement, the resurrection and the ascension of Christ. The fact that Dr. Briggs does not accept our confessional teaching as to the full inspiration of the Bible ought not to prevent us from acknowledging our deep debt of gratitude to him for such words. They have a direct bearing on your own comments on our "protest" in your issue of May 1, for Dr. Briggs brings into clear light what you ignore—that not only formal and positive denials but doubts are exceedingly perilous, and unless removed are sure to issue sooner or later in a denial of the faith.

It is surprising that The Continent should seem to treat this and the related doctrines which were "doubted" as merely academic questions which the church may safely intrust for settlement to the frivolous pedantry of skeptical critics, although its settlement indirectly involves among other things even the chastity of the mother of our Lord. May Dr. Briggs recover his health and live on to confute, if he cannot convert, the "doubters" or deniers of the virgin birth and to put to flight the armies of the Ritschlians.

I cannot now comment on your highly colored and thoroughly misleading praise of the papers and oral statements made by the candidates. Some of them were better than others. All of them showed in the background good family training marred by later false teaching—showed it not only by positive statements in some cases but much more by the hesitations and modifications and omissions by which orthodox phrases were made to cover up Ritschlian heresies, no doubt held more or less unconsciously by the writers.

If you wish your readers to know the truth, publish these statements in full. I can furnish you with copies of them if you so desire. I can only take time for one statement, as follows, from the paper of Mr. Bird:

"Person and Work of Christ—I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, that he was definitely aware of his Sonship, and that he had confidence in his ability to make full use of that relationship. I believe that there was manifest in him all of God that could be revealed in a complete human life, and that God is thus Jesus-like in every particular. In his dwelling among men we behold the final revelation of God in history; in his return to the Father we are brought, through him, into fuller fellowship with his and our God."

"All of God that could be revealed in a complete human life." There you have the poison germ of essential Unitarianism planted deep in the plastic mind of this attractive young man—planted deep by whom? Whatever doubts you may have about the doctrine, there is little room for doubt about the authors of this false teaching.

A word more on the question of honesty in the use of creeds. It is not a bad sign that the editor of The Continent and the authors of the presbytery's answer both wince under what they regard as the implications of the protest on this point, though there was no direct charge of conscious dishonesty made in the protest, and there was not intended to be. But there is a grave question which cannot be evaded. As the editor of The Continent has seen fit to pass so severe a judgment on the protestants, it would seem fair for me to ask him two questions, for his own words naturally suggest them:

1. Two of the candidates stated plainly that they had no hesitation in using the apostles' creed, though they "doubted" the actual fact of the virgin birth. Does the editor of The Continent regard such a use of this creed as one that God will approve and bless?

2. Is the editor of The Continent prepared to affirm for himself his own personal faith in the actual historical fact of the virgin birth of our Lord?

These are specific questions. May I hope for an explicit answer in your columns?

JOHN FOX.

The Lord's Prayer Sufficient

For several months I have been impressed with the conviction that two short sentences from our Lord's prayer will reduce human depravity and human suffering enormously, provided people would live with the purpose of securing for all what they ask for themselves.

If when we say, "Give us this day our daily bread," we will see to it that our employees and neighbors all have righteous treatment and living wages, and if in addition to praying, "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil," we will reasonably endeavor (for the protection of our neighbors as well as ourselves) to see that evil temptations are kept at least from young people, or better yet, totally suppressed, and that help is extended to the victims of evil, we shall do much toward solving the social evil and the temperance problem.

It is my firm conviction after seven years' study and work on the subject that the above two petitions from our Lord's prayer are the guides which will lead us to a greater success than any other plan of action in all the range of theory or practice that have come to my experience.

WIRT W. HALLAM.

Good Work with Graded Lessons

As a Sunday school teacher of twenty years' or more experience, I must express my distress to hear that there is a chance that our new graded lessons are likely to be taken from us. They have been an inspiration to me and many others in and outside our school. I have been teaching the intermediate course and, while the first years of it may be couched perhaps in too difficult language for the scholars' age, that is a mere detail which will be easily changed, while the whole scope of the four years has been a keen delight to my girls, exactly adapted to their period of life, and a wonderful eye-opener as to the history of God's people from Abraham to our own time. I shall not soon forget the interest my scholars took in the post-apostolic and reformation lessons. Their love for the Presbyterian Church was awakened then. The wonderful lessons on the life of Christ this last winter have been so suggestive and of such a character that each Sunday I have been able to bring home to their hearts and consciences the central thought of the day, and it is certainly no accident that my whole class has joined the church in these years and that we have had unusual religious interest in our school.

But I do not speak of the intermediate lessons alone. The beautiful lessons, admirably adapted for the kindergarten and primary ages, are helping young mothers in their homes to begin with their youngest children a study that will give the coming generation a good foundation of biblical knowledge, something the present one certainly lacks. As to the senior lessons, I am told they are equally adapted to the age for which they are intended. We have never had a real plan of instruction suited to the various ages of Sunday school children; can we endure to have it taken away in response to the clamor of those who seem to have given the subject a very partial investigation, judging from the objections that are raised by them?

E. H. NOYES.

The second summer term of the Bible Teachers' Training School in New York City will be from July 9 to Aug. 5. The courses of study will include analysis of the Scriptures, biblical theology and religious pedagogy. There will also be a series of lectures on missionary efficiency and a school for language study. The principal lecturers will be the president, Dr. W. W. White, Professor William Hoge Marquess, Dr. Lewis M. Sweet, Dr. Robert W. Veach, Miss Caroline L. Palmer and Dr. William I. Chamberlain.

Is He Worth It?

One of our aged ministers in answer to a letter from the Board of Relief and Sustentation writes that,

He has been in the Presbyterian Ministry fifty-eight (58) years;

He has sent his three sons into the Presbyterian Ministry;

His average salary has been about $450 ("My wife says nearer $350," he writes);

He is now eighty-eight (88) years old;

He receives from the Board of Relief and Sustentation $150 a year, though he is entitled to receive $400.

Is He Worth It?

When you have answered that question ask yourself another.

Is the Presbyterian Church Worthy of Him and His Ministry?

Do you want to help the church to help such men?
Do you want to help such men to help the church?

If you are interested write,

Ministerial Relief and Sustentation
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES, General Secretary
507 Witherspoon Building - - - Philadelphia, Pa.

HOT BISCUIT,

hot cakes, made with ROYAL Baking Powder are delicious, healthful and easily made.

Pan-Presbyterian Forecasts for Atlanta

(Continued from page 671)

upon the number of ministers as heretofore but upon church membership. If this is adopted the size of the Southern Assembly will be materially increased.

Home Board Issue Grows Less Tense

The U. S. A. General Assembly has been forecast from some quarters as probably to be the scene of animated contentions. This prediction is based principally on the notion that recent criticisms of the Board of Home Missions in New York will develop into a violent and heavily supported assault at Atlanta. But as the hour of meeting has drawn nearer, this prospect has appeared to be fading away. Disaffection has been formally expressed by only a handful of presbyteries—perhaps a half dozen at most—while two weeks in advance of Assembly more than fifty presbyteries had by definite resolution assured the board that its policy would be warmly supported by their commissioners on Assembly floor. So far as can be judged from popular indications, the proportion of these definite presbyterial utterances corresponds pretty well to the preponderance of sentiment in the church, and to the probable degree of support awaiting the board when it submits its case to the General Assembly. In Colorado Synod, where the most determined attack on the boards' methods originated, all the presbyteries except Pueblo have sent assurances of entire unsympathy with those criticisms, and even in Pueblo Presbytery a strong minority in the board's favor has expressed itself vigorously. Hope for an entirely agreeable adjustment of all this question in General Assembly is heightened by the certainty that Dr. Thompson, as secretary of the Home Mission Board, will emphasize the board's readiness to conform its policies to the will of the church and to receive disinterested criticism from any portion of its constituency. Moreover, it will be pointed out that a proper and uncontentious way for the synods to impress their desires upon the Home Board has already been provided for in the annual conference of synodical representatives and board members which is held every winter at the board's headquarters.

Union Seminary and Graded Bible Lessons

Other subjects on which wide differences of opinion are possible, but where it does not seem too sanguine to believe that common ground satisfactory to all parties can be reached, are the matters of Assembly's relation to Union Seminary and the revision of graded lessons as published by the Presbyterian Board of Sunday School Work. Reports of special committees on these two themes are expected to be unanimous. Contrary, however, to a mistaken impression somewhat widely diffused, the Union Seminary report will certainly not include any proposal to bring back Union Seminary from its present interdenominational position to formal connection with the Presbyterian Church. The most that is to be looked for is some assurance from the seminary of its evangelical faith and purposes which will justify the Assembly in dropping the avowed antagonism of past years to Union and in maintaining toward it hereafter the neutral attitude which the church holds toward other independent institutions of theology.

If the report of the committee on graded lessons should appear to weaken in any sense the approbation which the General Assembly has heretofore expressed for the principle of gradation in Sunday school instruction, there will doubtless be vigorous opposition expressed to it. But if, as is anticipated, the principle of gradation is reaffirmed, the details of any revision proposed can doubtless be adjusted so as to satisfy the friends as well as the critics of the present system. A proposal will likely be offered to join with the other churches represented in the Atlanta quadrilateral, as well as with the Canadian Presbyterian Church and the two Reformed denominations, in preparing a series of graded lessons satisfactory to the whole Presbyterian family. This suggestion will be congenial to the pan-Presbyterian atmosphere of Atlanta, and will no doubt have on that account peculiar weight with the commissioners from U. S. A. presbyteries.

The new intermediate catechism prepared by the committee of which Professor Schaff of Pittsburg is chairman comes up at this Assembly for final approbation, and will no doubt be heartily indorsed. Some specially conservative friends of the shorter catechism are still worrying over the appearance in the field of a supposed rival, but the test of use has proved very strong in the new catechism's favor, and undoubtedly the majority opinion will be that so useful an instrument of good can be included in the church's armory without doing despite in any way to the historic product of the Westminster Assembly.

A subcommittee of the U. S. A. Executive Commission has reported favorably to the commission on the proposal of the college presidents of the church for a combination of the College Board and the Board of Education.

President Wilson Not to Be at Atlanta

President Wilson has written Dr. W. H. Roberts that it will be impossible for him to attend General Assembly. He says: "In order that I may acquaint myself as quickly and as thoroughly as possible with all the activities of the government, I have found it imperative to deny myself the pleasure of accepting any invitations to attend public functions during the first year of my administration." Dr. J. A. Macdonald of Toronto has been substituted in President Wilson's place on the program.

How Robert Got a Zebra

(Continued from page 679)

Well, we met uncle and he soon noticed the paint on us and our badly spattered clothes, and asked how it happened. I let Robert tell uncle what we had done. Robert told him how he had wanted a zebra riding pony and all about it. Uncle went with us and took the calico off from Billy, as the paint was quite dry, leaving him looking just like the real zebra.

For punishment uncle sent us home with a note to father and mother telling them we had

Highland Park College Appeals to Presbyterians of Financial Ability

A Presbyterian School, recognized by Presbytery, Synod and General Assembly. The greatest Technical School under church supervision. Offers all regular college courses. It is a self-supporting institution, conducted without deficit. Just the kind of a school the practical business man wants to help. How it is serving a great body of young Americans is forcefully told by Oliver R. Williamson in the May 1st issue of The Continent. Necessary development and enlargement and increase of equipment lead us to make earnest appeal for money gifts and endowments.

What we need and what you can do to help us:

$25,000 is needed at once to complete a new $45,000 fireproof dormitory in process of construction. The loss of the dormitory now being replaced caused a net annual decrease of $7,000 income. (Tuition fees of students who could not be accommodated.) The opening of the new dormitory will mean an immediate increased income and must be completed by September 1st.

We need another boys' dormitory.

We need a new gymnasium.

We need new equipment in several departments

Your money will do real work here.

It will supplement the tuitions of students who are paying their own way with money they themselves earned to secure a practical college education and who cannot meet entrance requirements in other institutions.

Nowhere else can your money accomplish so much, dollar for dollar, for practical education and helpful training under Christian influences.

Your money will be spent to wisely develop the largest factors that within the next generation will shape the industrial and social life of the nation.

A small gift promptly given for this enlargement and development at the present time will do more good than large gifts in years to come. Further information will be sent you. Address Rev. GEO. P. MAGILL, D.D., Acting President, Des Moines, Ia.

been punished for our mischief. We were punished, too, for a visit with Uncle Joe and auntie was always delightful, and this one had been shortened a week. But just imagine father and mother's surprise when they saw us driving up with Billy!

ROSA S. LEHNERS (age 12).

Phœnix, Ariz.

DEAR YOUNG AMERICA: The boys are in the lead this time, you see. It's very plain that they like animals, better than they like "Benjy and Betty," or any others of our story friends. And the girls liked the little zebra only a wee bit less than the boys. The contest has been a very close one and we feel very proud of nearly every story that came in, for all save perhaps half a dozen were remarkably good. The editor congratulates you and wishes you to know that she honestly believes some day there will be some grown-up writers who will say, "I wrote my first story for The Continent!"

But—many boys and girls forgot what very wild, almost untamable little animals zebras are, and told quite impossible stories about them. The editor sighed as those stories dropped into the waste basket, for some of them were otherwise very nice. And then (the editor really blushes to confess this) there was some very poor grammar. Do you ever say "he done" or "he seen"? Some of you do, because you said it in your manuscript. Won't you try to break yourself of it? And there were some who thought because they had written for The Continent before that the editor could remember their ages! And she couldn't, and so their stories went into the waste basket, along with the stories of some others who just forgot. Some stories were written on both sides of the paper and some in pencil. You'll never be real authors while you do that, boys and girls.

But, of course, all this won't happen next time; and there'll be a next time—soon.

Bradford Horton, Man

(Continued from page 680)

do for my jacks tomorrow." He was ready presently for his hard, bone-racking bunk, and into it he crawled and slept like a little child till morning. The struggle was over.

"Uncle Joe, let's take Professor Horton home with us," was Charlie's first utterance in the morning.

"My boy, did you ever try to drive a pig through a gate when he didn't want to go?"

"But Professor Horton isn't a pig."

"He's worse, your honor. He's a man with a stubborn will and a noble purpose, and a conscience that rules him as if he had neither will nor purpose. Oh, I know him! But I'll try."

The trying, however, was in vain. All their arguments aimed to induce Horton to leave the camps and go back to civilization with them were without avail. Only one satisfaction did Joe secure—the promise that the "mish'nary" would not leave his present field without informing his friends of his whereabouts. He had, indeed, no longer the same reason for silence and concealment that had sent him away from Prestonbury to hide from all who knew him. He sent out three letters, when his friends left the woods; one to his sister, one to Sleighton and one to Barney O'Toole. In all their talk no allusion had been made to the state of affairs between himself and Eleanor Elmore. Joe had not known the details of the denouement of Bradford's identity, and had told only the bare fact of Mr. Elmore's change of heart. About more intimate matters Joe's delicacy was too great to let him speak, and Horton was not a man to betray his feelings. He was becoming more and more the still, strong man. (To be continued)

CLEARED AWAY

Proper Food Put the Troubles Away

Our own troubles always seem more severe than any others. But when a man is unable to eat even a light breakfast, for years, without severe distress, he has trouble enough.

It is small wonder he likes to tell of food which cleared away the troubles.

"I am glad of the opportunity to tell of the good Grape-Nuts has done for me," writes a New Hampshire man. "For many years I was unable to eat even a light breakfast without great suffering.

"After eating I would suddenly be seized with an attack of colic and vomiting. This would be followed by headache and misery that would sometimes last a week or more, leaving me so weak I could hardly sit up or walk.

"Since I began to eat Grape-Nuts I have been free from the old troubles. I usually eat Grape-Nuts one or more times a day, taking it at the beginning of the meal. Now I can eat almost anything I want without trouble.

"When I began to use Grape-Nuts I was under my usual weight, now I weigh thirty pounds more than I ever weighed in my life, and I am glad to speak of the food that has worked the change." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little booklet, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

School and College

The chair of biblical literature and interpretation at Huron College will be occupied by C. K. Hoyt, D. D.

The contract for the new organ at Wilson College, which is to be installed in Thomason auditorium by September, has been awarded.

Dr. W. L. Darby, pastor of Clarksville (Ark.) church, has been elected president of the Arkansas Cumberland College. Dr. Darby will take up his new duties as president June 1, but will still carry on his work in the pastorate.

The first temperance contest ever held at Buena Vista College, Storm Lake, Iowa, took place recently. The contest was established through the efforts of President J. P. Linn. The prize money of $25 was furnished by General Assembly temperance committee.

Right Rev. Theodore N. Morrison, bishop of Iowa, will deliver the baccalaureate address at Illinois College Sunday, June 8. The commencement address will be delivered on the following Wednesday by Rev. Allan A. Tanner, pastor of First Congregational church, Denver, Colo.

Hastings College is making progress toward its $100,000 endowment fund, $70,000 being now pledged. The institution has been loyally supported by the city of Hastings and by Nebraska, most of its funds thus far being secured there. President Crone and Field Secretary Smith are now in the East presenting the strong appeal of this worthy educational work.

Rev. Edward T. Mathison, now of Grace church, Oak Park, Ill., is to be associate rector of Shattuck School for Boys, Faribault, Minn. The rector, James Dobbin, D. D., has done a famous work at Shattuck during his forty-six years of service, and he will continue active as long as his health will permit. Mr. Mathison is a graduate of Yale and of the Berkeley Divinity School.

Continent Editorial Reprinted

The Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work has republished in pamphlet form for general distribution The Continent's editorial, "Children Missing," dealing with the importance of church attendance on the part of children of Christian families. The pamphlet, in quantities such as applicants believe they can distribute profitably, will be supplied to all persons sending request to the board at its headquarters in the Witherspoon building, Philadelphia.

Illinois Presbyteries Challenged

Former Congressman William B. McKinley of Champaign, Ill., has offered to the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation a donation of $10,000 on condition that $90,000 more be raised within two years in the presbyteries of Bloomington, Springfield, Peoria and Rushville of Illinois Synod. If only a portion of this sum is raised, Mr. McKinley's contribution will be reduced in proportion. Half of what he gives is to go to sustentation and half to relief.

Dr. Aquilla Webb of Louisville, Ky., who was recently injured, will probably not be able to take up regular work until fall.

Hamburg- American

Largest S. S. Co. in the World

Over 400 Ships 1,306,819 Tons

H.A. P. A.G.

VACATION CRUISES

Special Summer Rates, May 1st to October 1st

Cuba, Jamaica and the

PANAMA CANAL

Hayti, Colombia, Costa Rica, Nicaragua

Weekly Sailings by new, fast Twin-Screw steamships Carl Schurz and Emil L. Boas and the well-known "Prinz" Steamers of our

ATLAS SERVICE

11 to 18 DAYS .... $ 75
25 DAY CRUISES 115
CUBA—JAMAICA, Round Trip $75
PANAMA CANAL, Round Trip $110

Delightful Summer Cruises to the Land of the Midnight Sun

by the large Cruising Steamers Victoria Luise, Fürst Bismarck and Meteor. Leaving Hamburg during the months of June, July and August. Visiting Iceland, Spitzbergen, North Cape, Norway, Scotland, Orkney and Faroe Islands.

Duration 11 to 25 days.
Cost $56.25 and up.

Imperator

Newest and largest steamship afloat.
50,000 Tons, 919 ft. 98 ft. beam
OF THE
Hamburg-American Line
Now in Regular transatlantic service.

In addition to the well known features of modern ocean steamers there is a great Ritz-Carlton a la carte Restaurant, Ball Room, Grill Room, Private Dining Rooms, Pompeiian Bath, a Swimming Pool and a Gymnasium.

Cruise Around the World
AND
Through the Panama Canal

By Twin-Screw S. S. Cleveland, leaving New York January 27th, 1915.
135 days—$900 and up.

Register your engagements now. Good rooms will soon be taken.

Write for beautifully illustrated books, stating cruise.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE

41-45 Broadway, New York
Boston Philadelphia
Pittsburgh Chicago
San Francisco
St. Louis

TRADE MARK

Illustrated Sermons. Th
draw—the impression lasts. G
Lantern with Electric Rheos or Acetylene Generator, $29
Large stock of Slides, Stereo
cons and Educational Apparat
Get our latest catalog and ter
C. M. STEBBINS, 1028 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

Originality of Design and Expert execution in the world f
mous WESTERLY Granite commend in every detail th
Smith Granite Monument
Produced by THE SMITH GRANITE CO., Westerly, R.

Union Graduates 58 Young Men

Commencement Exercises Were Marked by Addresses by Prominent Men — Temperance Forces Win Victory.

NEW YORK—Fifty-eight young men were graduated from Union Theological Seminary May 13. Among the number are Tertius van Dyke, a son of Dr. Henry van Dyke, and Bayard Dodge, son of Cleveland H. Dodge. Another is a son of Dr. Frank Mason North, secretary of the Methodist Foreign Mission Board. The closing exercises began Sunday morning, May 11, with a sermon in the chapel by Dean Charles R. Brown of Yale Divinity School. Monday evening was the annual dinner of the alumni under the auspices of the Alumni Club of New York City, with addresses by Dr. John Henry House, president of the Thessalonica Agricultural and Industrial Institute, Salonica; Rev. David McConnell Steele of Philadelphia; Dr. Howard S. Bliss, president of the Syrian Protestant College, Beirut. Tuesday morning the annual business meeting of the alumni association was held, followed by luncheon in the gymnasium. The unveiling of the Willard Parsons tablet took place that afternoon. The commencement proper was Tuesday evening, when the address was delivered by Professor George Albert Coe, along with the conferring of the degrees by President Brown and Robert C. Ogden, president of the board of directors.

There is great rejoicing in church circles because the bill at Albany to open New York City saloons Sunday afternoons and evenings was killed. The temperance forces worked hard against it.

Philip S. Bird, one of the Union Seminary seniors, was ordained in Madison Avenue church, of which Dr. Henry S. Coffin is pastor, Sunday evening, May 11. He has been stationed there as an assistant for the last year.

Dr. Charles Carroll Albertson, until recently of Rochester, was installed pastor of Lafayette Avenue church, Brooklyn, May 6. Dr. Frank W. Gunsaulus of Chicago, Dr. Cleland B. McAfee, formerly pastor of the chuch, and Dr. Henry H. Stebbins took part.

ASK PROTECTION FROM VICE

The administrative committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America voted unanimously May 8 to urge the city government of San Francisco and the board of directors of the exposition to "adopt every means to prevent the exploiting of the exposition by commercialized vice and to protect the visitors to San Francisco from such influence as would tend to lower public morals and injure the good name of San Francisco and America."

Harlem church, Dr. John Lyon Caughey, observed the silver anniversary of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip Sunday, May 4.

The eighty-fifth anniversary of the American Seamen's Friend Society was observed in University Place church the morning of May 4. The annual sermon was preached by Dr. George Alexander, the pastor.

The eighty-eighth anniversary of the American Tract Society was celebrated in the Marble Collegiate Reformed church May 11 with a sermon by Dr. David J. Burrell on "Preaching in Print."

The Salvation Army has purchased a three-story building next to its headquarters in West 14th street, on which site there will be erected a tall structure for a training school in memory of the late General William Booth.

Upward of $31,000 was subscribed by West End church, of which Dr. A. Edwin Keigwin is pastor, Sunday morning, May 4, after the sermon, toward the $50,000 necessary for the new parish house which will be erected this summer. Dr. Keigwin's assistant, Dr. A. A. Dinsmore, has resigned to become assistant at Broadway church.

Dr. Jesse F. Forbes, clerk of New York Presbytery, has resigned from Assembly's permanent judicial commission, of which he has been secretary. His reason is ill health.

The special train for Atlanta at 12:30 Tuesday carried Vice-Moderator and Mrs. James Yereance, who have not missed an Assembly for many years. Most of the other New York commissioners were on board.

Dr. Edgar W. Work, moderator of New York Presbytery, at the last moment decided not to go to Assembly because of pastoral duties.

Lane Sends Out Sixteen Preachers

Lane Seminary, Cincinnati, sent sixteen new ministers to the gospel firing line—members of the class of 1913. The eighty-first annual commencement culminated in the graduating exercises at First church on Walnut Hills and was immediately followed by reunion and dinner served at the seminary by the ladies. Dr. Samuel T. Wilson, president of Maryville College, Maryville, Tenn., delivered the commencement address. President William McKibbin presented diplomas. The graduates all go to charges: Edward V. Belles, New Richmond, Ohio; T. F. Campbell, Rising Sun, Ind.; J. N. Coker, Hale Center, Texas; Jacob S. Dapp, Manchester, Ohio; A. F. Davis, Lawrenceburg, Ind.; H. W. Fischer, Pilgrim, Cincinnati; W. M. Gilliam, Greenfield, Tenn.; E. L. Guth, Whisler, Ohio; J. M. Literal, Glendale (Methodist), Cincinnati; Andrew McKinnon, Cooper, Texas; Daniel H. Moritz, Bellevue, Ky. (German Evangelical); A. B. Morrow, Rudyard, Mich.; W. T. Paterson, Cumberland and Buffalo, Ohio; Clarence M. Wallace, Sardinia, Ohio; P. H. Wiggerman, Spades, Ind., and J. W. Willbanks, Grand Prairie, Texas.

At the alumni meeting the address was delivered by Dr. Charles Lee Reynolds of Lexington, Ky. REN MULFORD, JR.

SAYS "FAT IS A CRIME"

Mary Garden, the Famous Grand Opera Star, Tells How She Avoids Fat and Keeps in Fine Physical Condition

Singing in grand opera may strike the superficial thinker as a gay, lightsome and frivolous pastime—as far removed from real work as one could imagine. As a matter of fact, however, the life of the grand opera singers calls not only for work of the most strenuous kind but involves much hardship and physical discomfort.

They must not only keep in good health but must make a study of the habits and foods that will preserve their physical attractiveness. A singer must always feel fit for the work and she must be neither too fat nor too slim. It is interesting to learn what measures are taken by some of the more successful singers to keep in top-notch condition and to preserve their physical charms. The grand opera season opened in Denver on the evening of April 10 and among the singers was Miss Mary Garden, who is probably the most noted of all of the modern interpreters of operatic music. In the course of an extended interview, published in The Denver Post, she condemned fat as "a crime which springs from laziness and dietetic errors," and then added the following statement:

"Coming down from Portland, while the people in our car were at the table most of the time I was drinking three quarts of milk a day and eating shredded wheat night and morning. As a consequence, after the tiresome, long journey I arrived as fresh and bright as sunlight in Denver."

This is interesting for many reasons. In the first place, the public is surprised to see a grand opera singer show so much dietetic sense as this. In the second place, it reveals a knowledge of food value that ought to be more largely disseminated among both sexes. Very few persons seem to understand that fat comes from eating the starchy vegetables, such as potatoes, carrots, turnips, and also from pastries, candies and other sweets.

In shredded wheat biscuit, which forms such an important part of Miss Garden's dietary, we have a well balanced "ration" which supplies just enough protein and just enough carbohydrates to keep a person in fine condition. It is therefore an ideal food for building the perfect human body. It will not create an excess of fat or an excess of muscle. It contains all the phosphates and nitrates in the whole wheat grain, and, being steam-cooked, shredded and baked, it is very easily digested. As it does not overtax the digestion it leaves the mind clear and strong for any mental task. In the summer days when it is very necessary to cut out heavy foods nothing can compare in wholesomeness or strength-giving qualities to a meal of shredded wheat biscuit with fresh berries or other fresh fruits.

PRESBYTERIAN TRAINING SCHOOL
of Chicago
for Christian Workers
Organized in 1908 by the Board of Church Extension of the Presbytery of Chicago

The Church has her Evangelists patrolling the highways, urging people to accept her Head as Saviour and Master. For the training of such men there are many schools—notable among them the Moody Bible Institute.

The Church has her Ordained Ministers standing at the door inviting people to come in and doing their utmost to take care of them after they are in. For the training of such men there are our splendid Theological Schools—notable among them McCormick Theological Seminary.

The Church needs a corps of assistant housekeepers, trained in ecclesiastical domestic science, who shall conserve the time and strength of the pastor, and, under his direction, guard the back door and apply scientific rules of church household economics.

The preparation of such a corps is one of the tasks for which the Presbyterian Training School was established. If you are interested in the process or the product write for information.

H. B. McAFEE, Director
210 East 50th Street
Chicago, Ill.

M. P. MÖLLER PIPE ORGANS

Builder of the large electric organs in Euclid Avenue Presbyterian Church, Cleveland, Ohio (2 organs); Russell Sage Memorial Presbyterian Church, Far Rockaway, N.Y.. and Bedford Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, N.Y.; the three-manual organs in Westminster Presbyterian Church. Detroit, Mich., Presbyterian Church, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and instruments in almost 200 other Presbyterian Churches alone. Specifications and estimates on application. For catalogues and particulars,

Address, M. P. MÖLLER,
HAGERSTOWN, :: MARYLAND

BOVEE FURNACES

At Manufacturers' Prices

THE BOVEE FURNACE HAS DOUBLE THE HEATING CAPACITY OF OTHER FURNACES FOR AMOUNT OF FUEL CONSUMED. They are made very heavy, of the best of material.

Measure the fire pots and combustion chamber and then note the long travel of heat through the compound radiator before reaching the chimney. Compare these measurements with those of all other first-class furnaces, and you will see WHY the Bovee Furnaces require so little fuel and last longer.

Send plans for our special winter prices. We save you about one-half on the price of a first-class heating plant.

BOVEE FURNACE WORKS
315 8th St. :: Waterloo, Iowa

Pulpit Gowns
and Choir Vestments
Custom Tailoring
for Clergymen. Suits from $20.00
Pulpit Hangings
COX SONS & VINING
72-74 Madison Ave. New York

Help Brotherhood to Celebrate

Andrew and Philip Men Remember Quarter Centennial—Third Church Has Oldest Sunday School—Ministers on Jury.

PHILADELPHIA—Many of the Presbyterian churches lent their aid in celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip. A rally brought together in Bethany church on Sunday evening a thousand men. John Wanamaker presided and spoke in connection with the pastor, Dr. Jarvis, and others. The celebration closed May 9 with the dedication of the new chapter house of Bethany church.

"The use of the kinetoscope in our churches" was demonstrated before the Presbyterian ministers May 5. Matthew Woods, M. D., gave interesting "Notes of Travel in Turkey, Palestine and Egypt" May 12. Other subjects are: "The Bible in Parchment and Print," May 19; "The Kingdom in Africa," Rev. J. C. Dorward, May 26.

Third, or "Old Pine Street," church claims to have the oldest Sunday school in Philadelphia. It celebrated its ninety-ninth anniversary May 8. An address was delivered by Harry P. Ford, elder of Hollond Memorial church. The church itself is 145 years old and worships in the same edifice, enlarged and improved, in which it began services. The pastor is Rev. E. Roy Simons.

Dr. Oxtoby Goes West

Dr. W. H. Oxtoby announced to the Tabernacle congregation last Sunday his intention to accept the chair of Old Testament history in San Francisco Seminary. He will ask for the severance of his relations here next month.

The Presbyterian Home for Aged Couples and Aged Men at Bala will observe its twenty-eighth anniversary Thursday, May 29. The new buildings will be open for inspection.

Rev. Samuel D. Price, pastor of Calvary church, Camden, was one of six ministers recently selected by the sheriff to serve as jurymen. Serving with them were a secretary of the Y. M. C. A. and a Sunday school superintendent.

In the Sunday services attendant upon the thirty-third anniversary congress of the Salvation Army May 11 twenty-two Presbyterian churches of Philadelphia welcomed to their pulpits the officers of the army as speakers.

Miss Ida R. Luther, at home on furlough from missionary work in Seoul, Korea, is addressing meetings in the city and vicinity.

Northern Liberties church, organized in 1813, has been celebrating its centennial. Doctors Montgomery of Pittsburg and Chalmers of New York, Alexander Henry and Joseph W. Cochran of this city, and prominent elders and officials also have had active part in the exercises. The pastor, Rev. William M. Holderby, after five years of very vigorous work with the church, will leave it soon for Pittsburg.

At a meeting of the Temperance Association of Friends Charles L. Huston, chairman of the evangelistic committee of General Assembly, gave an account of the recent successful "no license" campaign in Chester county, of which he was the valiant leader. Albert T. Bell, manager of a well known Atlantic City hotel, refuted the belief that a first-class hotel must have a bar in order to its financial success.

Church Has Grown Largely

Dr. J. Gray Bolton will observe the thirty-eighth anniversary of his pastorate of Hope church May 18. He has seen the church grow from a Sunday school of seventy-five children to a church and Sunday school with a membership of 700 each.

Much interest has been felt in the recent exhaustive and illuminating report of the vice commission appointed about a year ago by the mayor, and of which Dr. Joseph W. Cochran, secretary of the Board of Education, was a member. It reviews the various phases of evil as it affects the life of the city and is the result of trained investigators, both men and women, who gave five months to the work. Some conditions of an amazing character, said to be without a parallel in other cities, are revealed. Political clubs and certain magistrates and police are coupled with it. Fourteen recommendations are made for the prevention and suppression of the evil by means of legislation and enforcement of existing laws.

W. P. WHITE.

"The Standard Bible of the English-Speaking World"
THE AMERICAN STANDARD BIBLE
Edited by the American Revision Committee

This is the latest and best translation of the Scriptures. It is the same old Bible that we have always used, but it gives the exact meaning of the inspired writers in the language of today, instead of the language used three hundred years ago.

The American Standard Bible is the result of thirty years' work by the American Revision Committee, the greatest Biblical scholars of modern times. They had the advantage of all the oldest and most authentic manuscripts of the Bible, many of which were only recently discovered, and had for comparison the recent revisions made by England, Germany, France, Holland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

Rev. Wilbert W. White, D. D., President of Bible Teachers' Training School, New York, says:

"We use exclusively the American Standard Bible in our school. We do this because we believe that it is the best English version of the Bible published."

The demand is so great that the publishers have made this version in eight sizes of type and over 200 styles of binding, so as to meet every want. Prices from 35 cents up.

FOR SALE BY ALL BOOKSELLERS. SEND FOR BOOKLET TO THOMAS NELSON & SONS, PUBLISHERS
383V Fourth Avenue, NEW YORK

18,000 CHURCHES USE THE THOMAS INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

"My people, as well as myself, are delighted with your Individual Communion Service. After using it we would have no other."
Christian F. Reisner, Pastor Grace M. E. Church, Denver.

Over 18,000 churches now use the Thomas Individual Communion Service. Noiseless, dust-proof, self-collecting, saves ¼ cost other services. Uses shallow glass—no tipping of head. Our Special Introductory Offer makes purchase easy. Outfits on trial—state number of communicants.
THOMAS COMMUNION SERVICE CO., Box 1, Lima, Ohio.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

PIPE AND REED ORGANS AND PIANOS
Pure, sweet tone. Superior quality. Attractive styles. We sell direct at factory prices. Write, stating which catalog is desired.
HINNERS ORGAN CO., PEKIN, ILL.

The Trade Mark "1847 Rogers Bros." on Spoons, Etc., Is the Stamp of Quality

Attractive Sunday Evenings
With McIntosh illustrated sermons. Write for catalog.
McIntosh Stereopticon Co.
37 Randolph Street :: Chicago, Illinois

WEDDING INVITATIONS ANNOUNCEMENTS CALLING CARDS FINE STATIONERY
Send for Samples
S. D. CHILDS & CO., 200 CLARK ST., CHICAGO

HALLOWED HYMNS NEW and OLD
$25 per 100, not prepaid. 35 cents per copy by mail.
Returnable samples mailed to prospective purchasers.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

CHURCH PEWS AND PULPIT FURNITURE
Globe Furniture Co., Ltd., 10 Park Place, Northville, Mich.

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

CHURCH BELLS SCHOOL
Ask for Catalogue and Special Donation Plan No. 28
THE C. S. BELL Co. Est. 1858 Hillsboro, Ohio

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS.
UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

MENEELY BELL CO
TROY, N.Y. AND 177 BROADWAY, N.Y. CITY.
BELLS

CHURCH SEATING
HANEY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN.

Geo. Kilgen & Son
BUILDERS OF HIGH GRADE
PIPE ORGANS
Best of References. ST. LOUIS, MO. Correspondence Solicited.

STEREOPTICONS
FREE FREE FREE OPEN AIR Exhibition
A Great Soul-Winning Campaign for the Summer Months. Indoors or outdoors.
The Christian Lantern Slide & Lecture Bureau
30 W. LAKE ST., CHICAGO, ILL.

MINISTER AGENTS WANTED
Sell Typewriters For Us
SAMPLES AT WHOLESALE
Big commissions—monthly payments—trial shipments—new stock—visible models—special prices to all Ministers.
Write today for Agency offer. Mention The Continent.

Use the Coupon
FOX TYPEWRITER COMPANY
GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

FROM THE CONTINENT
Name....................................
Address....................................

Has $4,000 More than Was Needed

New Johnstown Church Has All Debts Paid—Ruthenian Church in Pittsburg Fills Field—Attend Dr. Lee's Funeral.

PITTSBURG—A number of local pastors, including Doctors W. A. Jones, Samuel Callen and J. H. Snowden, assisted in the week's services in connection with the dedication of the new First church at Johnstown, Dr. C. C. Hays pastor. It is one of the finest church buildings in the state and is equipped for taking care of a large congregation and Sunday school. The total value of church and parsonage is more than $200,000. It was not only dedicated May 11 with all debts cared for but with an overplus of $4,000. In view of the long, hard strain on the pastor the congregation voted to send him and his wife on a trip to Scotland. The dedicatory sermon was preached by Dr. J. Ross Stevenson.

In connection with the graduating exercises of Western Seminary the alumni association met Thursday, May 8, and elected officers. Rev. P. W. Snyder, the retiring president, presided at the dinner.

The corner stone of First Ruthenian church on the South side was laid May 6. The new building will cost $20,000, which was provided by an individual. Rev. Dimitry Halenda paved the way for this church by his faithful work during the past four years. There are now more than 200 converts.

About 200 attended the Presbyterian Union dinner May 5. Dr. R. M. Russell delivered an address on "The Importance of the Christian Element in Education." The following officers were nominated for the year: President, J. J. Gillespie; vice-president, Dr. W. A. Jones; executive committee, Willis A. Booth, T. D. McCloskey, R. M. Ewing, John W. Cunningham and Rev. W. I. Wishart.

About forty ministers attended the funeral services of Dr. E. Trumbull Lee in First church, Wilkinsburg, Tuesday at 4 o'clock. The Wilkinsburg Ministers' Association had charge of the services. No addresses were made. Two hymns written by the deceased were sung. The remains were taken to Connecticut, his old home, for burial. Dr. Lee was born in 1855, graduated at Union Seminary and held pastorates at Portland, Ore.; Pueblo, Colo.; Cincinnati and Philadelphia.

Dr. G. M. Duff, Princeton 1907, and teacher in the Presbyterian College at Constantinople, has been chosen assistant to Dr. W. A. Wycoff, pastor of Bethel church. P. W. SNYDER.

Western Seminary has been given $100,000 by Rev. N. W. Conkling of New York to endow the "president's chair."

Moderator at Omaha Seminary

The exercises centering in the annual commencement season at Omaha Theological Seminary were ushered in May 6 by an address on "Ministerial Responsibility and Duty" to the graduating class by Moderator Mark A. Matthews. In the evening at First church Dr. Matthews made a second address. The alumni association held a business session and conference in the afternoon, Rev. Ralph W. Orr of Lincoln presiding. The association elected as president Rev. Ralph W. Orr of Lincoln and as secretary-treasurer Rev. Walter N. Halsey of Omaha. Rev. Charles A. Arnold of Kansas City, an alumnus, was elected to the board of directors. The annual banquet and commencement at North church were largely attended. H. W. Reherd, D. D., of Waterloo, Iowa, made an address on "Worldwide Opportunity." A departure in the program of this year was an "alumni address" by Rev. Charles A. Arnold of Grace church, Kansas City, Mo. President A. B. Marshall presented the diplomas. This year's class, with the fields they are to serve: George Harold Ellis, Northfield, Vt.; Benjamin Augustus Fye, Valley, Neb.; Aaron Samuel Hutcheson, Emerson, Iowa; Thomas Seirol Hughes, Early, Iowa; Rolland Abraham McNall, Fulda, Minn.; Elbert Jerome Nickerson, St. Joseph, Mo.; George Chester Sprague, Parker, S. D. R. H. H.

Would Impeach Mayor Shank

Church Federation Committee Finds That Laws Are Not Enforced — Shop Meetings Reach 16,000 Men in Twenty-Two Centers.

INDIANAPOLIS—An echo from the Men and Religion campaign was sounded recently at the annual meeting of the local Federation of Churches, the permanent successor of that movement. Impeachment of the city executives was again strongly recommended because of failure to enforce the statutes regulating saloons and vicious resorts. Although Mayor Shank had issued an order for enforcement after pressure exerted by the federation last summer, yet the federation considers that he practically nullified it later by statements through the press. The result has been to make conditions worse—which seems to have been the hope of the opposition, in order to reflect upon the plans of the churches. But the revelations of the social service committee were so vivid and convincing that indignation was aroused and drastic action is now recommended.

Another feature of the work of the federation was the shop meeting campaign, reports from which were taken up at a special meeting last week. Speakers, leaders and representatives from the men of the shops met at the Y. M. C. A. for an evening reunion. It was estimated that 16,000 men attended the 264 meetings held at twenty-two centers, being an average attendance of sixty-four.

Installation of Rev. E. L. Douglass over East Washington Street congregation was happily consummated May 1. A reception to the pastor followed.

The sixth anniversary of the Witherspoon U. P. organization (colored) occurred last week. One feature was the supper planned and served by the men. Reports showed hopeful conditions, resulting from the faithful ministrations of the pastor, Rev. John W. Brice.

The annual rally of women's Bible classes at the Y. W. C. A. under direction of the Marion County Sunday School Association was

A Presbyterian woman, not a resident of Pennsylvania, out of loyalty to her Church, and because she believes that that Church is still as able as it used to be to train thoroughly rounded men for the tasks of life, has subscribed to the fund now being raised by the Synod of Pennsylvania for Lafayette College

TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND DOLLARS

There are surely many more Presbyterians who believe as she does. Will they prove their faith by their gifts? Will they do it now?

The Committee of the Synod of Pennsylvania
REV. WILLIAM S. BROOKS, Chairman,
Allentown, Penn.

Four of Our Leaders

A COSMIC VIEW OF RELIGION WILLIAM R. HALSTEAD, D.D.

Size, Crown Octavo (5½x8 inches). Pages, 337. Binding, Cloth. Price, $1.50 net, postpaid.

This book is the result of a long life of close study, wide reading and earnest preaching. It is thoroughly readable. It gathers up the questions that are surging through the average man's mind, and binds them together, producing a viewpoint that will bring the mind to rest.

> "This book is a trumpet call to action, a whiplash to indolence, breathing in every page an incentive to combat for the things worth while, instilling a comprehension of the pain and the trouble that too often in the average life take on only a cynical or a baffling meaning. * * * * Forceful reassurance, builded on a broad outlook that dovetails fact into fact."—The Atlanta Constitution.

THE MAKING OF TO-MORROW SHAILER MATHEWS

Size, 12mo (5x7½ inches). Pages, 193. Binding, cloth, gold top. Price, $1.00 net, postpaid.

In this book we have a series of brief essays dealing with modern social and religious questions. The main divisions are

1 The Common Lot.
2 The Church and Society.
3 The Stirrings of a Nation's Conscience.
4 The Extension of Democracy.

SOME OF THE SUBTITLES ARE

The Gambling Mania.
College Athletics.
Autobiography at the Ball Game.
Our Commercialized Christmas.
Are We Ashamed of Immortality?
Way for the Leader.
The Larger Social Service of the Church.
The New Social Conscience.
Better Side of Commercialism.
The Revolt of the Plain Citizen.
Playing with Social Discontent.
Safeguarding a New Epoch.

THE CLIMB TO GOD BISHOP WILLIAM A. QUAYLE

Size, 12mo (5x7½ inches). Pages, 275. Binding, cloth, gold top. Price, $1.00 net, postpaid.

A collection of pulpit and private prayers which are meant to gird the spiritual life. Tender, humble, intimate pleadings, set in Bishop Quayle's inimitable wording, and overflowing with the beautiful spontaneity of devout Christian manhood. As meditations on the abiding things of life, these sincere, touching petitions will thrill readers everywhere with a sense of genuine devotion.

> "Devotional literature is one of the needs of the age, and this is a wholesome contribution to it."—Michigan Christian Advocate.

A MAN'S RELIGION BISHOP WILLIAM F. McDOWELL

Size, 16mo (4½x6¾ inches). Pages, 225. Binding, cloth, gold top. Price, 50c net, postpaid.

A book that speaks out man fashion from the heart of a man. Such themes as "A Religious Man in Modern Society," "A Modern Man's Bible," "A Man's Religious Experience," and "A Man's Activities" are sure to claim attention. The style is crisp, clear, and challenging. For personal reading, or for class study in Brotherhood or Adult Bible Classes, there is nothing better than this.

> "Bishop McDowell clarifies the atmosphere of a man's thinking in a marked degree and makes it possible to tie up to a better ideal. The book can be read in a day; it will feed one for years."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE METHODIST BOOK CONCERN
CINCINNATI NEW YORK
Chicago Kansas City San Francisco Boston Pittsburgh Detroit
Send your order to the nearest House enthusiastic and helpful. A. B. Cornelius, superintendent of adult work, arranged the program, and the chief address was made by Dr. Sara Janson of Chicago. C. R. S.

Long Lost Sister Is Discovered

Brotherhood Official Reunites Part of Family —Crowds at "World" Increase — Presbyterian Day Attracts Many.

CHICAGO—A boy found his long lost sister last week through Dr. Francis M. Fox of the newcomers' bureau of the Chicago brotherhood and an item in The Tribune. The children had been separated after the death of the mother. The boy came from Pontiac, Mich., to hunt his sister and was sent to Dr. Fox by Dr. Covert. Dr. Fox was told that the sister had been in St. Mary's home. But she had left there and the trail was lost. Through the minister who married her she was traced to a former address and after a little more work Dr. Fox had the missing girl located for the stranger. A number of parents are making use of this newly established bureau of the brotherhood to keep track of sons in Chicago.

"Fifty-Five Years of the Y. M. C. A. in Chicago" has just been published. It gives a complete view of the growth of the association from before the great fire to the present, including pictures of the early workers and a full account of the semicentennial celebration five years ago. Chicago was the first to have a branch association, and it was here that the organ of the association, now called Association Men, was started.

According to the reports of eighty-four churches of Chicago Presbytery 54 per cent of the membership attend morning service and 26 per cent evening service. In only one church does the average attendance equal the membership; sixteen churches have the largest attendance at night, and in only one-third of the churches does the combined average attendance both morning and evening equal the membership. Sixty per cent of accessions last year were from the Sunday school. Only five churches retain pew rents.

GROWING CROWDS AT "THE WORLD"

Although the attendance on the opening days was satisfactory, the crowds at "The World in Chicago" are increasing. Special attractions on different days last week brought special crowds. Saturday thousands of Sunday school pupils from the South side filled the building in the morning. Next Saturday children from the North side will be there. Episcopalian Day attracted a large crowd, with 700 at lunch and over 800 at dinner in the Coliseum. The pageant at the Auditorium is attracting high praise. Fine effects are being produced by the chorus, which changes practically every performance. The musicians respond to the conductor in an especially zealous manner. This musical drama is presented every afternoon and evening except Sunday.

Nearly $7,000 more has been earned the past year over the previous year by the Christian Industrial League, Rev. G. A. Kilbey manager. The 12th street lodging house shows a profit of $523 with beds at 10 cents each. Five stores, in addition to the rescue mission, and two lodging houses are managed by this arm of the Presbyterian Church.

Fourteen institutional churches and missions are maintained by Presbyterians in this city.

The Italian ministers of presbytery for the first time week before last got together in a united effort for the evangelization of their countrymen. They held evangelistic meetings at the Church of Our Saviour in Chicago Heights, of which Rev. E. De Luca is pastor. The campaign lasted three days and consisted of a prayer meeting in the morning and preaching service in the evening. The afternoon was spent by the ministers in calling.

Dr. J. G. K. McClure, president of McCormick Seminary, presided at the alumni dinner at Princeton Seminary May 6 and preached at Williams College May 4.

Presbyterians from all quarters of the city and vicinity turned out in force last Monday to observe Presbyterian Day at "The World in Chicago." Various meetings led up to the big dinner in the evening in the Coliseum, when several hundred men and women ate together and listened to notable speeches. The exercises began at 10:30 o'clock in the lecture hall of the annex, with Dr. George L. Robinson presiding, and, although it was nearly two hours before the opening of the exposition, a large crowd was present. Among the speakers were Rev. W. E. Purvis of the U. P. Church, this denomination joining with the Presbyterians; Rev. Frank E. Higgins, Dr. W. M. Paden and Miss Marie C. Brehm. Miss Brehm gave a graphic temperance talk. The Presbyterian stewards marched through the Coliseum during the afternoon after lectures at various booths by prominent members of the denomination. The pageant was also well patronized. The Chicago brotherhood held its annual meeting at Second church and joined in the dinner in the evening, after which Dr. S. Hall Young gave a lecture on Alaska. Commissioners to General Assembly were among the special guests at the banquet. Tuesday evening the special train for Atlanta left Chicago with the local delegates and many from the West and Northwest.

Confer on Social Service at Newark

The second interdenominational conference on social service for the northern part of New Jersey has just been held in Old First church, Newark. The conference was opened on Monday night, May 5, with a sermon on "The Kingdom of God," by Dr. Francis of Boston.

On the following afternoon Mayor George R. Lunn of Schenectady spoke on "The New Protestantism." In the evening he spoke on "Socialism and the Church" to a very large congregation. Dr. Jonathan C. Day preceded him with a most eloquent and impassioned plea for industrial workers. Dr. W. J. Dawson presided and commented on the immense progress made in the direction of Christian socialism in the last twenty years.

Wednesday afternoon the subject of the church and recreation was discussed by Mrs. Alexander and Mrs. Israels. Each speaker held strongly that the church must take in hand vigorously the inspection of dance halls and must be prepared to provide opportunities for dancing under its own auspices. In the evening Bishop Lines pleaded for "Cooperation of All Churches" in all moral work for the community and Senator Everett Colby followed with a plea that all such work must be based on the spiritual elevation of the individual.

The effect of the conference has been to greatly quicken the sense of social duty. Many strong utterances were made in the course of discussion, particularly by Rev. Mercer Johnston of Trinity church, Newark, who said that unless the church could drive out the present corrupt municipal rulers of the city no self-respecting minister would care to remain in the city.

Auburn Seminary Has Conference

Commencement week of Auburn Seminary ended May 8. A class of eleven men was graduated. One graduate student received a degree. A number of the alumni came back to the yearly conference, which opened Tuesday afternoon with an address by President Charles A. Raymond of Union College, Schenectady. In the evening the alumni listened to an address before the Seminary Y. M. C. A. by Frederick W. Taylor, LL. D., on "Principles of Scientific Management."

Wednesday the conference subject was "The Challenge to the Church in the Life Forces of the Boy." Among the speakers were James A. Whitmore of the Y. M. C. A. international committee, Rev. W. H. Boocock, director of religious education of First church, Buffalo, N. Y., and Rev. A. W. Beaven, pastor of Lake Avenue Baptist church, Rochester, N. Y. The sermon before the alumni was preached by Rev. Robert Clements, pastor of First church, Erie, Pa., who was later elected alumni president. At the graduating exercises Thursday President Stewart preached the sermon.

Large Class at Princeton

Forty-eight received diplomas at Princeton Seminary commencement last week, including students from Great Britain, Japan and China. The baccalaureate sermon was preached in Miller chapel by Dr. Patton, the retiring president. It was announced that Dr. Benjamin B. Warfield, senior member of the faculty, will act as president until a successor is elected. Fellowship and prizes were awarded to John Victor, Herman Kuiper, A. R. Chaffee, Remsen D. A. Bird, Harm H. Moeter, William R. White, John C. Perry, Albert B. Curry, Jr., Erick T. Folke and John M. Lyle.

General Assembly and Dubuque

No institution whose activities will be reported at General Assembly has a larger content of heart gripping interest for all Presbyterians than has Dubuque German College and Seminary. Is is peculiarly a school of service, since its students come for the express purpose of preparing themselves for helpfulness.

As it was called several years ago by an observing visitor, it is "the church's West Point on the Mississippi" for training foreign-speaking ministers and home missionaries.

A National Responsibility and Worldwide Influence

Into Dubuque come young men fresh from foreign lands—knowing no tongue but their own—and others who have lived in America long enough to realize the needs of their people. Patiently they are instructed until they can preach in English and in their native language. General Assembly will hear of the work among foreigners in city missions and in rural communities. We are training men at Dubuque to man these churches and missions. If you are not fully acquainted with our work we shall be glad to send you details—a postal will do. Dubuque German College and Seminary, Dr. C. M. Steffens, President, Dubuque, Iowa.

LARGE ATTENDANCE SUNDAY EVENING

Your Sunday Evening problem will be solved if you will make it a song service and use

GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS

Try it during the summer months; you will be surprised. Prepare now by sending for a copy of this popular book. It can be used in all Church work and will arouse new interest on the part of your members.

THE RODEHEAVER COMPANY
Publishers of Songs for Men,
Chorus Collection, Solos, Duets, etc.
12-14 W. Washington St., :: Chicago

CHURCH FURNISHINGS

The Best Way

The use of the INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE has increased the attendance at the Lord's Supper in thousands of churches. It will do so for your church. Send for illustrated price list.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE CO.
107-109-111 S. Wabash Ave. Chicago

The International
The most practical Communion Service made.
Write us.
The International Church Supply Co.
3 Clinton Bldg, Columbus, O.

ILLUSTRATE YOUR SERMONS

Pastors! Write for Our Special Stereopticon Offer.
Detroit Stereopticon Supply Co., Detroit, Mich.

PEWS-PULPITS-S-S-SEATING

Write Today for Our "Catalog B"
Authoritative Guide on Church Seating: valuable suggestions on designs, finishes, seating plans, etc. Send Floor Plan and state fully your requirements
Blackboards, School Supplies, Catalog B1
School Desks, Catalog B2

American Seating Company
218 S. WABASH AV. CHICAGO
NEW YORK, BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA

From Various Fields

Ohio

Former Cleveland Pastor Dies

News of the death of Rev. Charles H. Scholey, pastor of Freeport (N. Y.) church, came as a shock to many Cleveland friends. His early life was passed in this city, he having been one of a number of young men sent into the ministry from Woodland Avenue church. He was graduated from Union Seminary, ordained by Cleveland Presbytery in 1898 and after pastorates in Brooklyn, New York City and East Aurora, N. Y., went to Freeport church, where five years of very successful work had been spent.

Mayflower church, Cleveland, Rev. W. P. Thomas acting pastor, has celebrated in a modest way its tenth anniversary. A mission Sunday school work preceded formal organization for at least another decade. The future of this church is uncertain, fully 100 acres of surrounding territory, once viewed as residential property, having been turned into industrial sites, but the acting pastor and loyal people are laboring zealously.

Rev. Thomas Turnbull, for twenty years pastor of Pomeroy church, has consented to take charge of North Springfield church, near Akron.

ARTHUR C. LUDLOW.

The building committee of North church, Columbus, has arranged for the erection of a new church to cost $60,000. Practically all of this sum has been pledged.

Dr. W. A. Robb recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his pastorate at Jamestown U. P. church. This church has had three pastors in eighty-three years.

First church, Camden, celebrated the eightieth anniversary of its organization April 27 with appropriate services, consisting of an historical sermon and a series of letters from former pastors and members. The church has never been very strong numerically nor financially, and is still on the home mission list. It now has an active membership of 148, the largest in its history. For three years it has been presided over by Dr. T. J. Gaehr, and during this period has had one of the most prosperous seasons in its history.

Iowa

Glidden church during the year has progressed along all lines. The offerings to the women's and the Assembly's boards were increased. Rev. W. H. Parker, pastor, is in his third year of work there.

Dr. Mark A. Matthews participated in the exercises at Sioux City incident to the dedication of Prospect Hill monument, erected to commemorate the first prayer meeting held in the vicinity forty-four years ago.

Owing to the illness of the pastor, Rev. Norman McLeod, the corner stone of the new church at Corning was laid in connection with ceremonies conducted by the Congregational, Baptist and Methodist ministers.

Kansas

The Sunday school of First church, Topeka, last year gave $1,000 to the church boards.

The laymen's evangelistic team had charge of the evening services at Conway Springs during the past three months. The pastor is Rev. R. E. Fleming.

Minneapolis church has granted its pastor, Rev. George T. Arnold, a four months' leave of absence for the purpose of visiting Egypt and Palestine.

Washington

First church, Seattle, of which Dr. Mark A. Matthews, moderator of General Assembly, is pastor, now has a total membership of 5,025.

In First church, Everett, on May 5 were held the closing exercises of the largest Bible class on the coast. It was organized in October as a Y. M. C. A. Bible class. Recently an organization was perfected for a second year's work, and of the twenty-seven officers twenty represent different denominations. Rev. Franklin T. Conner, leader of the class, is pastor of Brighton church, Seattle. A carefully prepared syllabus for each member made the work very definite. The class has grown so rapidly that the lecture room, seating 300, will be inadequate, so the trustees of the church have offered the auditorium for their coming year's work.

Texas

With El Paso Churches

First church has closed a very successful year under the pastorate of Rev. Charles L. Overstreet. The reports show that $8,100 has been raised for local maintenance and $2,200 for missions. During a six weeks' specialized service campaign, where emphasis was placed on the regular services of the church and classes of instruction conducted by the pastor on Wednesday and Friday afternoons, many members were received. Mr. Overstreet, who was in ill health last year, has fully recovered.

Rev. W. C. Baber has become fully established in the work of the new Altura Park church. This is one of the late undertakings of First church. Mr. Baber was installed pastor April 27, Reverends C. L. Overstreet, Kenneth Brown, E. E. Baker and James MacIntosh taking part.

Rev. Kenneth Brown, pastor of East El Paso church, is determined that his church shall be known all over the city. His enterprise in equipping a float in an industrial parade in El Paso was recounted several months ago in The Continent. He is now distributing heart-shaped red stickers to friends of the church, each of which bears an invitation to attend services. The weekly bulletin is so printed that it can be folded and used as a mailing card. This is being sent to a large number of residents who are not members of the church. He was installed April 22 after being stated supply five years.

Missouri

Dr. Mark A. Matthews, moderator, was the guest of a special meeting of Presbyterians at King's Highway church May 9.

Presbyterians of St. Louis will endeavor to raise $500,000 in the next five years for special missionary extension, social service work and new buildings.

Dr. H. L. Cornall, formerly a missionary in Laos, has been arousing the people of Revere church to greater interest. He has also revived Concord church at Shipley's Point.

Illinois

Second church, Springfield, which has been agitating a change in name, has decided not to be called Immanuel.

The first annual dinner of George McKinley Memorial University church, Champaign, Ill., was largely attended. Rev. Martin E. Anderson, pastor, was toastmaster.

A number of near-by pastors participated in the conference of the brotherhood of Peoria Presbytery recently at Peoria. District conferences are taking the place of a state convention of the brotherhood.

Oklahoma

More money was raised for all purposes by El Reno church last year than for any one of the previous six years.

Blackwell church has decided to assume the support of a parish abroad. Although the church was without a pastor for a portion of the last year, two mortgages were canceled. Rev. F. J. Stowe is now pastor.

California

The church at Azusa, which was burned recently, will be rebuilt at once. Officers of the church have received such encouraging response to the request for subscriptions that it is expected the edifice can be built without outside

Modern Housekeeping Demands

that food be kept fresh, healthful and appetizing no matter how hot the weather. Modern kitchens should include in their equipments, modern and sanitary which have a perfect circulation of pure, dry cold air that keeps food in perfect condition They have scientifically insulated walls and sanitary, easily cleaned interiors lined with opal glass, enamel, porcelain or odorless white wood. No zinc is used. Their convenience, economy of ice and food and perfect refrigeration are unequaled. They are used by the U. S. Pure Food Laboratories and in thousands of the better class of clubs, hotels and private residences.

McCRAY Refrigerators

McCray Refrigerators are made in a large number of regular sizes and built to order to suit special requirements. They can be arranged to be iced from the outside. They can be equipped with ice water cooler, and special racks for cooling bottled beverages

Write For Free Book "How to Use a Refrigerator" and any of the following catalogs:

No. 90—Regular sizes for Residences. No. 73—For Florists. No. 49—For Hotels, Clubs, Institutions. No. 69—For Grocers. No. 60—For Meat Markets. No. A. H.—Built to order for Residences.

McCRAY REFRIGERATOR CO.
583 Lake St., Kendallville, Ind.

Salesrooms in the Following Cities

Chicago, 158 No. Wabash Ave. New York, 231 W. 42nd St. Philadelphia, 206 S. 11th St. Boston, 52 Commercial St. Cleveland, 1915 Euclid Ave. Detroit, 239 Michigan Ave. Milwaukee, Water and Sycamore Sts. Minneapolis, 103 N. Sixth St. St. Louis, 404 N. Third St. New Orleans, 225 Barronne St. San Francisco, Geary and Stockton Sts. Washington, 611 F St., N. W. Louisville, 643 S. Fourth Ave. Pittsburgh, 114 Market St. Columbia, S. C., Main St. Atlanta, Ga., 82 Marietta St. Cincinnati, 303 E. Fourth St. Indianapolis, 1116 Prospect St.

For Branch salesrooms in other cities see your local phone directory

DON'T THROW AWAY YOUR DISCARDED Furniture, Clothing, Magazines, Papers, etc. YOU can do great good by sending them to the Chicago Christian Industrial League, helping the church to find work for the idle, to shelter the homeless, to feed the hungry and to preach the gospel to the men of the down town streets. Over 1,000 men helped annually. Every little counts. Send a card to GEORGE A. KILBEY, 12 East 12th Street, Chicago, Ill.

TRAVEL TO THE C. E. CONVENTION
ON A SPECIAL TRAIN
Enjoy all the advantages of private cars, congenial companionship and freedom from responsibility at a LOWER PRICE
than you must pay to travel with the crowds. Booklet with complete information from THE REX TOURS, Marquette Building

Blackburn College Offers a High Grade College Education for $100 a Year

Carlinville, Illinois
60 Miles North of St. Louis

Includes room, steam heated and furnished (except bedding), board and tuition. Students do manual work three hours a day. It's not cheap; it's different.

Students for the Presbyterian Ministry $50.00

aid. The pastor, Rev. Charles F. Richardson, has declined a call to Oregon.

Rev. H. H. McQuilkin of First church, San Jose, in a recent issue of The Church Review, a local interdenominational paper, has a strong editorial on the value of religious literature and the importance of having a church paper in the home.

Rev. R. A. M. Brown, pastor at Hamilton City, is making a vigorous effort to drive out all of the saloons from that place. He recently obtained the support of Los Angeles stockholders of a Hamilton City sugar plant in furtherance of this fight.

New York

The 100th anniversary of First church of Baldinsville will be celebrated in June.

Sweden church, Rev. L. R. Webber pastor, is remodeling and beautifying its building.

A campaign has been begun by Hope church, Watertown, for $4,500 with which to build an addition to the church.

Rev. A. S. Bacon of First church, Niagara Falls, has recently celebrated his twenty-third anniversary in the pastorate.

Improvements to cost $1,000 are in prospect for LeRoy church. The women of the organization have the project in hand.

West church, Binghamton, has suffered a great loss in the death of Benjamin A. Baumann, superintendent of Sunday school and for many years a trustee.

Dr. Charles H. Frost, pastor of Avon Central church, is having remarkable success with men. It is said that more than 50 per cent of his evening audience is made up of men.

Plans are being made under the leadership of the pastor, Rev. William A. Hallock, for a new church building at Williamson, congregation and Sunday school having outgrown the present plant.

Amos A. Kiehle, D. D., Lakeville, formerly of Milwaukee, Wis., is supplying First church, Geneseo. It is expected that South Lima church will be added to his field, as that church has voted to combine with Lakeville parish.

The church at Nunda is having remarkable success in work for boys. Two patrols of Boy Scouts are in active operation and a body of younger boys are in training for the honor of membership. The pastor, Rev. Albert E. Herrick, is having marked success in all his work.

The boys of Olmstead Avenue church, Bronx, by printing the church bulletin themselves have saved or made within the last six months $165. The boys also do other printing for this church, of which Rev. C. E. B. Ward is pastor. Church receipts for the year show an increase of $1,700, or nearly 50 per cent.

Excellent Sunday school facilities and accommodations for young people, including a swimming pool, will be part of the new $150,000 building of Webb Horton Memorial church, Middletown. It is expected that the corner stone will be laid very soon. Rev. E. van Dyke Wight is pastor.

The church has suffered a severe loss in the death of Andrew Sloan Draper, LL. D., commissioner of education for the state of New York. Dr. Draper was president of the board of trustees of First church, Albany, and previous to his acceptance of the presidency of Illinois University was a member of the session.

Dansville church is having remarkable success in building up large Bible classes, especially of young men and young women. The church has two societies of young ladies, the members of which visit shut-ins and the sick, render aid to the poor, send sentiments and write letters to those in sorrow. Rev. Marshall Harrington is pastor.

Mount Kisco church closed another year with all bills paid and the congregation authorized the purchase of a lot for a new manse that must be erected some time in the future to make room on the present site for a new or enlarged church building. Half of the purchase price is already provided. Rev. W. Dunham is pastor.

An increase of 50 per cent in benevolences followed the adoption of the budget plan of individual subscription at Troy Second church. There was at the same time an increase of $1,600 in systematic offerings for church expenses. The church has also pledged $1,250

THE WORLD IN CHICAGO
EVERY WEEK DAY—MAY 3 TO JUNE 7, INCLUSIVE

COLISEUM
GREAT MISSIONARY EXPOSITION
REPRODUCING LIFE AND SCENES IN EVERY LAND
Open 12 Noon to 10 p. m.
ADMISSION 25c CHILDREN 15c

AUDITORIUM
PAGEANT OF DARKNESS AND LIGHT
PORTRAYING FOUR TRIUMPHAL EVENTS IN THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONS
2:30 and 8:15 p. m.
RESERVED SEATS — 50c TO $1.50

EDUCATIONAL

Kansas

THE COLLEGE OF EMPORIA

A standard College fully accredited by the Kansas State Board of Education and the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

During the present College year this school has won the Rhodes Scholarship for Kansas, and the State Oratorical Contest.

One hundred and twenty courses are offered by the College faculty, including seven thorough courses in English Bible and Christian Evidences. A strong Music Department is maintained also.

The well equipped Mason Gymnasium is a feature attractive to both boys and girls. During the present year athletic teams of the College of Emporia have beaten teams representing every prominent college and university in the state, except the Agricultural College.

The new Girls' Dormitory, substantially built of brick in old English style, is the finest building of its kind in Kansas.

For catalog and literature address the President,
Rev. Henry Coe Culbertson, Emporia, Kansas

Oswego College
Oswego, Kansas
Vocational-Cultural for young women

Theological Seminaries

Hartford Theological Seminary
Scientific methods with practical training. Large faculty and library.
Graduate fellowships, both foreign and resident. Open to all college graduates.
Associated with
Hartford School of Religious Pedagogy
Training Sunday School and other lay workers.
Hartford School of Missions
fitting for foreign service.
Address Dean M. W. JACOBUS, Hartford, Ct.

THE DIVINITY SCHOOL
OF
The UNIVERSITY of CHICAGO
Summer Quarter, 1913
First Term begins June 16 Second Term begins July 24

COURSES will be offered in the Old Testament by Professors Willett, Smith, Luckenbill, and J. F. McCurdy of the University of Toronto; New Testament by Professors Burton, Votaw, Goodspeed, and Case; Systematic Theology by Professors Mathews and Smith; Church History by Professor Moncrief; Practical Theology by Professors Soares, Hoben, and Green; Practical Sociology by Professor Henderson; Public Speaking by Professor Blanchard; Music by Mr. Stevens. Courses in other departments of the University are open to students in the Divinity School.

Address the Dean for further information

Tennessee

Ward Seminary For Girls and Young Women
42nd year. Excellent faculty. City advantages. All outdoor sports. For Catalogue address J. D. Blanton, Pres., Nashville, Tenn.

CUMBERLAND UNIVERSITY
College and Preparatory Courses.
Write the President, LEBANON, TENN.

Read the "WANT" Column every week The thing in which you are interested may be advertised in this issue.

EDUCATIONAL

Illinois

MONTICELLO SEMINARY

76th year opens Sept. 18th. A home school for young women and girls. Preparatory and Junior College Courses. Domestic Science, Music, Art. Certificate privileges. Well-equipped laboratories. Gymnasium. Tennis courts, archery range, basketball and hockey fields. Rates moderate. Music and Art extra. Send for catalog. Miss Martina C. Erickson, Principal, Godfrey, Ill.

ILLINOIS WOMAN'S COLLEGE A Standard College
One of the best.
Full College and Preparatory Courses. Exceptional advantages in Music, Domestic Science, Art, and Expression. Expenses reasonable. Surroundings healthful. Home life ideal. Location central in Middle West. Very convenient to every part of the Mississippi Valley. Students from more than 26 States. Catalog free. Address President Harker, Box 31, Jacksonville, Ill.

The JAMES MILLIKIN UNIVERSITY
A Christian College offering full classical and technical courses

The Decatur College and Industrial School offers courses in the Liberal Arts, Engineering, Domestic Economy, Manual Training, Pedagogy, Library Management, Commerce and Finance, Music, etc.; full preparatory courses in the Academy admitting to the above and apprenticeship courses in the mechanical trades. Seven large and beautiful buildings. Fine equipment and superior faculty. Over a thousand students each year.
For Pictorial Bulletin or Catalog, address
A. R. TAYLOR, President
DECATUR - - - - ILLINOIS

FERRY HALL A Christian Home School
For Girls and Young Women
College preparatory certificate accepted by Smith, Vassar, Wellesley, Mount Holyoke. Junior-College Course for high school graduates. Art, Music, Expression and Domestic Science. Country life with best opportunities of the city. For catalog and other information address
Miss Frances L. Hughes, Box Z, Lake Forest, Illinois

NURSES are given a thorough and practical three years training at PASSAVANT Memorial Hospital Training School.
They also have the advantages of a monthly cash allowance, a separate Nurses' Home, and affiliation with the Illinois Training School for Nurses. For further information, address
MISS E. C. GLENN, R. N.,
149-151 West Superior Street. - - Chicago, Illinois.

TODD SEMINARY FOR BOYS
An ideal school for young boys near Chicago. No serious sickness in 50 years. We educate the whole boy. Send for prospectus. NOBLE HILL, Woodstock, Ill.

BUNKER HILL MILITARY ACADEMY
Instructors have wide experience in the "Boy Problem." ACADEMY ideally located, 35 miles from St. Louis. Healthful environment, Christian influence. Prepares young men for business or college. The ideal school for YOUR boy.
Write HEADMASTER, BUNKER HILL, ILL.

Indiana

Before Deciding Where to Attend School
Send for catalog of Valparaiso University, Valparaiso, Indiana. This is one of the largest institutions of learning in the United States.
Thorough Instruction at Lowest Expense.
Catalog mailed free. Address
H. B. BROWN, President.
O. P. KINSEY, Vice-President.

for three years to China. The pastor, Rev. C. Waldo Cherry, has completed ten years with this church and recently received a large number of members.

A floating debt of $2,500—the legacy of twenty-five years—discharged, two Christian Endeavor societies organized, one of young people of high school age with fifty members; large increases in gifts to benevolence and in membership are among the achievements of the past two years in First church, Nyack-on-Hudson. Rev. Ozel Hull Fish is pastor.

Pennsylvania

Swarthmore church, Rev. W. M. Woodfin pastor, recently pledged $1,500 for benevolences. Of this $700 will go toward the support of their China missionary, Mr. Hayes.

The people of Modena, on the Brandywine, connected with the old Doe Run church, a mile or two distant, will erect a $7,000 brick church. It is the first church building to be erected in the village of several hundred people.

Rev. Wilbur M. Campbell of Hunan, China, has been speaking in some of the churches of Washington Presbytery. This itinerary was arranged by the committee of foreign missions of presbytery, Rev. J. C. Laughlin chairman.

Kennet Square church recently unveiled a tablet to the memory of its first pastor, Rev. John S. Gilmore. It was a gift from four of his daughters. An address was made by Dr. J. B. Rendall, president of Lincoln University.

First church of Wayne recently observed the twenty-third anniversary of its pastor, W. A. Patton, D. D. An historical sermon, a reception and other interesting occurrences were associated with it.

The installation of Rev. Homer W. Taylor as pastor of Upper Octoraro took place the evening of May 8. Dr. W. R. Laird of West Chester, Rev. Thomas Kerr of Berlin, Md., and Rev. John Noarderwier of New London took part.

Great Island church, Lock Haven, Rev. C. H. Williamson pastor, not only paid the balance on a debt of $1,500 and raised $6,000 to apply on the purchase of a manse, in addition to the running expenses of $5,000, but also largely increased its offerings to the boards of the church.

Wisconsin

Westminster church, Milwaukee, recently held a rally when its campaign for raising a fund of $75,000 was started. Eleven teams of six members each were arranged to carry on the work.

Funds are being collected at Madison for the erection of a new church to be known as Westminster. About $10,000 will be invested in Sunday school and club rooms, which will be erected first. Westminster Sunday school, organized a year and a half ago by Christ church, has been meeting in a hall which it has outgrown.

New Jersey

Work on the erection of the memorial hall to Dr. Charles Knox, long head of Bloomfield Theological School, is expected to begin in June. It will cost about $65,000.

Rev. John McDowell of Park church, Newark, by special request, has been conducting private interviews with seniors in Princeton University on the claims of the ministry.

Special services marked the reopening and dedication of Morris Plains church. Among those who took part were Dr. W. W. Holloway, Rev. Franklin B. Dwight, Rev. William Russell Bennett and Rev. Minot C. Morgan.

New Mexico

Rev. C. A. Foreman has entered upon his work as associate pastor of the First church, Albuquerque. Rev. H. A. Cooper, with whom he is associated, is superintendent of the Southwestern Presbyterian Sanitarium and will devote considerable of his time to this work. A union evangelistic campaign is now being conducted under the leadership of Evangelist Honeywell and party.

Florida

First church, St. Petersburg, has called Dr. G. E. Moorehouse, who has been stated supply. He was installed April 16. The Sabbath school

EDUCATIONAL EDUCATIONAL

Iowa

Where Shall I Go to College Next Year?

"Choose no college that has not proved itself possessed of the power to make of its students scholarly men and manly scholars."

PARSONS COLLEGE offers the following advantages:

1. Daily contact with professors; no inexperienced tutors.
2. Ranked by the State Board of Education in Class A. Five years' state certificate on graduation.
3. Splendid equipment, buildings new and modern; its campus one of the most beautiful in the state.
4. Fairfield is a city of homes, with healthful, refined Christian atmosphere.
5. Moderate expense for what is offered; abundant opportunity for self-help.
6. Proper physical training under efficient instructors.
7. High standard of scholarship; assistance given to those desiring positions.
8. The young women, except by special arrangement, are accommodated at Ballard Hall, and are under the supervision of the Dean of Women.
9. Courses lead to the degrees Bachelor of Arts, Bachelor of Philosophy, Bachelor of Science and Bachelor of Music.
10. High class academy, with its own teaching force, furnishes opportunity for students to prepare for Freshman Class.
11. Conservatory of Music is department of the College, with efficient instructors. Courses lead to degree Bachelor of Music, Diploma in Music and Certificate in Music.

Catalogue:

WILLIS E. PARSONS, D. D., President,
Fairfield, Iowa.

Nebraska

NEBRASKA
BELLEVUE COLLEGE
BELLEVUE, NEBRASKA
The Historic Presbyterian College of the Missouri Valley
Beautiful and healthful location, connected with Omaha by trolley, the Burlington Railroad and a Scenic Boulevard.

THE COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES
Granting the Bachelor's Degree

THE CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
All branches of Music taught by Specialists

THE NORMAL SCHOOL
Courses leading to State Certificates

COEDUCATIONAL
Moderate Expenses

ACADEMY
A High Grade Preparatory School, fitting for any College or University

S. W. STOOKEY, LL.D., President

Georgia

AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE
DECATUR (6 Miles From Atlanta) GEORGIA
Letters—Philosophy—Science—Home Economics
B. A. Graduates, from this college, are admitted, without examination, as candidates for the M. A. degree in the leading universities of the North and East
No Preparatory Department Dormitory Capacity Limited to 300
For Catalog and Bulletin of Views, address the President
F. H. GAINES, D. D. LL. D.

Indiana

WABASH COLLEGE
CRAWFORDSVILLE, INDIANA—80th YEAR
Opening Day September 16th. A college of liberal culture for young men. Modern equipment. Strong teaching force. Moderate expenses. For particulars address GEORGE L. MACKINTOSH, Pres.

Iowa

Highland Park College
DES MOINES, IOWA

Liberal Arts
Normal
Engineering
Pharmacy
Oratory
Music
Commerce
Home Study

For the man or woman with limited time and money. Thorough courses with opportunities for practical work while learning. Ambitious students can earn part or all expenses. Expert specialists teach; students advance rapidly. Successful graduates everywhere. Large, well equipped plant. School all year. Board, $1.75 to $2.75 per week. Tuition in Preparatory, College, Normal and Business Courses, $18 per quarter. Write today for catalogue, stating which course interests you. Address

DR. GEORGE P. MAGILL, President.

Minnesota

Macalester College
ST. PAUL, :: MINN.
Leading coeducational college in the Northwest.
Write for catalog.

Wisconsin

RIPON COLLEGE
RIPON :: :: WISCONSIN

EDUCATIONAL

Ohio

Glendale College

GLENDALE, : OHIO

Suburban to Cincinnati on C. H. & D. R. R., also Trolley.

The sixtieth year of this residence school for young women begins September 17th, 1913, with a faculty of specialists, an equipment ample for the subjects offered, and buildings, perfect in sanitation and the conditions of health, separating all noises of practice, etc., from the students' residence. The home life is natural and happy.

A strong School of Music. Many former music students have gone directly to positions of responsibility and remuneration. Frequent recitals give confidence and ease of manner. Good practice pianos.

Art taught according to best methods. Good Studios. Extensive course in Art History.

Expression, Domestic Science, Physical Culture. Special arrangements for girls of twelve to fourteen years of age. Terms $360, boarding and tuition, per year.

Write for Catalogue

Miss R. J. DeVore, President

Pennsylvania

The Montrose Bible Conference Association

Rev. R. A. TORREY, D.D., Director

AUGUST 1st TO 10th, 1913

A Summer School for Ministers. Students and Christian Workers

Rev. R. A. Torrey, Los Angeles; Rev. A. C. Dixon, London, Eng.; Rev. Prof. W. N. Griffith Thomas, Toronto, Can.: Rev. John McInnis, Halifax, N. S.; Rev. R. V. Miller, Henderson, N. C.; Rev. Geo. G. Mahy, Philadelphia, Pa.; John R Clements, Binghamton, N. Y.; and others. Write for announcement.

WM. C. GAMBLE, Executive Secretary,
28 Maple Street, Montrose, Pa

BEECHWOOD A Cultural and Practical School
FOR YOUNG WOMEN AT JENKINTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA
College Preparatory, College Departments—Conservatory of Music, Arts, Arts and Crafts, Domestic Arts and Sciences.
M. H. Reaser, Ph.D., :: :: :: President

Professors, Teachers and Others

Join Archaeological and Geological Exploration Expedition on Horseback under the distinguished Geologist, Professor James Perrin Smith of Stanford University, from the Cliff-Dwellings in S. W. Colorado by Great Natural Bridges in S. E. Utah, thence down Colorado River and through Grand Canyon, Arizona—the expedition covering the region of the World's Greatest Natural Wonders, July 9 to August 23. For particulars and Reservations address R. R. Smith, Cortez, Colorado.

The Great Natural Bridges

in UTAH—the greatest in the world—OPEN TO VISITORS, men and women, in JULY and AUGUST. Travel by team. Complete arrangements for comfort and pleasure. Address W. R. LEWIS, Lewis, Colorado.

Get this one idea (7)

Christian weekly as a regular factor in the home life. For thereby the words of the great Christian teachers of the world are brought beneath the eyes of youth. And the paper is a witness to the family's fundamental and enduring interest in the kingdom of heaven.

The Continent

is so crowded that classes have been held under the trees outside all winter and the church so crowded that at times people have been turned away. Plans are now being made for the erection of a large and handsome house of worship.

District of Columbia

Central church, Washington, Rev. James H. Taylor pastor, has been chosen by President Wilson as his church home.

Recent Evangelistic Activities

Evangelists Hart and Magann of Fairbury, Ill., began a union tabernacle meeting at Herrin, Ill., April 27. The large tabernacle was crowded from the first night.

The largest number of members received at one time in the history of Pataskala (Ohio) church followed evangelistic services held by Rev. Ira E. Hicks, Rev. David Kerr is pastor.

Evangelist Frank A. Miller of Elgin, Ill., has just returned from three successful campaigns in Ohio at Barberton, Andover and Sonora. Mr. Miller now is in the midst of meetings at South Vigo, Ind.

Dr. M. H. Lyon and party have recently closed a successful series of meetings at Canonsburg, Pa. A tabernacle seating 5,000 was often crowded in a town of only double that number. The meetings drew largely from the near-by territory.

A large influence for righteousness has pervaded Cornwall, N. Y., following a month of special services in the Protestant churches under the auspices of Dr. John H. Elliott, Oak Park, Ill. The meetings were very largely attended.

A large increase in interest in the Wednesday evening prayer meeting has been one of the results of special meetings at Rolla, N. D., by Dr. F. E. Smiley. Interest in the services caused the dance hall and moving-picture theater to close.

At Hornell, N. Y., 2,834 people promised to start the Christian life as a result of a union campaign by the churches under Dr. Henry Stough, who held meetings for several weeks. Enthusiastic union prayer meetings are being held by the churches which cooperated in this movement. A civic league was one of the results of the campaign.

An extended evangelistic campaign closed recently in Orwell (Ohio) church. Cottage prayer meetings were held in both Presbyterian and Methodist homes in the afternoon with services by Evangelists Brown and Southworth in the evening. Rev. Henry E. Nicklen is pastor. A number of rural churches in the vicinity of Orwell were also visited by the evangelists.

Clergy and Laity

Rev. John W. Ross, pastor of Calvary church, Buffalo, N. Y., recently spoke before the advertising club of Cleveland, Ohio.

Dr. George S. Payson has been for forty years pastor of Mount Washington church at Inwood, the northernmost part of Manhattan island.

Rev. Samuel F. Bacon, a veteran of Philadelphia Presbytery, was enabled on a recent Sunday to preach on the occasion of his 89th birthday. He was licensed to preach sixty-five years ago.

C. M. Priestley, senior elder of First church, Princeton, Ill., May 5 celebrated his ninetieth birthday. He has been a strong Presbyterian leader in that state and has been an elder for sixty years and clerk of session for forty-six years in succession.

Miss Margaret A. Miller, for sixty years a teacher in the Sunday school in Congregational churches in Paterson, N. J., died May 5 at the age of 85. She is believed to have been the oldest Sunday school teacher in the United States both in age and in length of service.

Ministerial Obituary

Rev. Richard Pughe

A graduate of McCormick Seminary, 1894, Rev. Richard Pughe died in North Bend, Wis., April 14. He is survived by a widow and two daughters, and was 52 years old.

EDUCATIONAL

Ohio

Alumnae Hall (one of the three main buildings) Western College

"The Best in Best Things"

OXFORD, OHIO. THE WESTERN COLLEGE FOR WOMEN FOUNDED 1853

Ranked with Leading Eastern Colleges.

The broad culture, the beauty, the stimulating atmosphere of The Western College are attractive to ambitious women. A capable fuculty; strong curriculum; fine religious influence. Three hundred fifty acres, —a beautiful campus and garden; a farm that supplies the freshest of dairy, fruit and vegetable products to the tables. Western graduates are immediately eligible to best positions. High standards in every department,—Academic, Art and Music. Domestic Science a special feature. Golf links, tennis; outdoor gymnastics, and gymnasium.

Illustrated literature sent on request

Mary A. Sawyer, A.M., Litt. D., Dean

BOX 45 OXFORD, OHIO

OXFORD College for Women

Founded 1830

"For Culture, Charm—College Atmosphere"

University town one hour from Cincinnati;
Overflowing attendance of loyal students.
High ideals, sound scholarship, delightful home life and social privileges.
Standard four year course. A. B. Degree.

Bachelor of Music Degree. Art, Expression, Normal Domestic Science. A few scholarships available. Tuition $355.00.

Write for "Seven Points"—Oxford College.

JANE SHERZER, Ph.D. (Berlin), President. Box 2, Oxford, O.

The University of Wooster

Synodical College of Ohio
CO-EDUCATIONAL

The Department of Biblical Instruction is known as the

FLORENCE H. SEVERANCE
Bible and Missionary Training School

YOUNG MEN are trained to become directors of Religious Education, Sabbath School Workers, Assistants to Pastors, Y. M. C. A. Secretaries. Prospective Medical Missionaries may receive their religious training at Wooster before entering a Medical School.

YOUNG WOMEN are trained to become Foreign Missionaries, Home Missionaries, City Missionaries, Pastors' Assistants, Church Visitors, Sabbath School Workers, Y. W. C. A. Secretaries.

Students may take this work in connection with the COLLEGE COURSE or may take the THREE YEARS TRAINING COURSE. For full information address

REV. CHALMERS MARTIN, D.D. Wooster, Ohio
Ask for Catalogue A.

Missouri

Missouri Valley College

MARSHALL, MISSOURI

College, Music Conservatory, Academy

Co-educational; four modern buildings; modern laboratories; library; museum; beautiful athletic grounds; forty acres in campus; all buildings heated from one heating plant; lighted by electricity; standards high; location ideal; Marshall and Saline County are "dry"; most beautiful and prosperous city. Opens September 8, 1913. Write for catalog.

WILLIAM HENRY BLACK, President, 405 College Street, Marshall, Missouri.

MACKENZIE SCHOOL

DOBBS FERRY-ON-HUDSON, N. Y.

Preparation for all the leading colleges. Correspondence and conference invited.

Financial Situation

